"I HAVE always been a great admirer of speculations, as well as of your manner of treating them. I have always thought the most useful reason; and to make the most entertaining, I always thought of human wit: others perhaps make us wiser, but that end, but makes us less so; that the oracle pronounces to all men living, because of human nature for the inquiry into which as mankind, as it is of more consequence to nature and measures of settling the distances of the times of their circumference."

"One good effect that may be drawn from a near observation of the human mind, we shall cease to wonder at, when we are used to reckon what nothing is produced without serving the nature and the mind shall be able to trace the conception to its death. at the proceedings of the mind, we know the one was affected by the other by a furious ardour, and men follow their passions with heat, or as any other reason must be employed, but they must ever remain."

"The strange and absurdity of men's actions, and the manner in which they proceed immediately from the mind, emits no such truth necessarily arise from the mind as the winds move it, and they too gentle, they guide it in and furious, they overtake in the same manner is the mind by the passions; reason of pilot, and can never if she be not wanting, the passions will never complying with them; rejection; and if a man's hand, he then betrays the mind."

"As nature has framed beings as it were in a placed as the middle link. Hence he participates in an admirable tie, which in the of passions; and as a of brute part of his creature."

ked; if love, speak him of predominate, e. Hence it ned, that as angel or the transmigrate old be no unal species of that tyrants, tured, might all passions ll; constitu- reason, and the strength hich are ever ouragement, as man, who, pat, was very he made on an hour in capers: and ng the retire- doubt but we passions they I remember should enter- ours, that so n emergency e reason be passions, and ign that may e same time r break their ble, and con-too slow and necessary it e gales of the agnating and to the health nimal spirits p it in life, ssible for the ir assistance. being; they e with us; to e; to others strong for the gment.

ty nice pro- and passion; the strongest eaker under- asions; and ld not be too er. Young unruly, give derable; the is a fault, if but surely, hardly have ore be very late the pas- m, which is o be without makes a man rity used in ect, it breaks nly destroys ly improve.

And surely it is a mighty mistake that the passion should be so entirely subdued: for little irregularities are sometimes not only to be borne with but to be cultivated too, since they are frequently attended with the greatest perfections. All great geniuses have faults mixed with their virtues, as resemble the flaming bush which has thorns among lights.

"Since therefore the passions are the principle of human actions, we must endeavour to manage them so as to retain their vigour, yet keep them under strict command; we must govern them rather like free subjects than slaves, lest, while we intend to make them obedient, they become abject, and unfit for those great purposes to which they were designed. For my part I must confess I could never have any regard to that sect of philosophers who so much insisted upon an absolute indifference and vacancy from all passion: for it seems to me a thing very inconsistent, for a man to divest himself of humanity in order to acquire tranquillity of mind; and to eradicate the very principles of action, because it is possible they may produce ill effects.

"I am, Sir, your affectionate Admirer, Z. "T. A."

No. 409.] THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1712

—Munus contingere cuncta lepore.—Lucr. l. 588.
To grace each subject with salivating wit.

GRATIAN very often recommends fine taste as the utmost perfection of an accomplished man.

As this word arises very often in conversation, I shall endeavour to give some account of it, and to lay down rules how we may know whether we are possessed of it, and how we may acquire that fine taste of writing which is so much talked of among the polite world.

Most languages make use of this metaphor, to express that faculty of the mind which distinguishes all the most concealed faults and nicest perfection in writing. We may be sure this metaphor would not have been so general in all tongues, had there not been a very great conformity between that mental taste, which is the subject of this paper, and the sensitive taste, which gives us a relish of every different flavour that affects the palate. Accordingly we find there are as many degrees of refinement in the intellectual faculty as in the senses which is marked out by this common denomination.

I knew a person who possessed the one in a great a perfection, that, after having tasted ten different kinds of tea, he would distinguish, without seeing the colour of it, the particular sort which was offered him; and not only so, but any two out of them that were mixed together in an equal proportion; nay, he has carried the experiment so far as, upon tasting the composition of three different sorts, to name the parcels from whence the three several ingredients were taken. A man of a fine taste in writing will discern, after the same manner, not only the general beauties and imperfections of an author, but discover the several ways of thinking and expressing himself, which diversify him from all other authors, with the several foreign influences of thought and language, and the particular manner from whom they were borrowed.

After having thus far explained what is generally meant by a fine taste in writing, and shown the propriety of the metaphor which is used as an casian, I think I may define it to be "that faculty the soul, which discerns the beauties of an author in pleasure, and the imperfections with dislike." A man would know whether he is possessed of this faculty, I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages and countries, or those works among the moderns which have the sanction of the siter part of our contemporaries. If, upon the perusal of such writings, he does not find himself delighted in an extraordinary manner, or if, upon adding the admired passages in such authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he is not right to conclude, not (as is too usual among tasteless readers) that the author wants those perfections which have been admired in him, but that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them.

He should, in the second place, be very careful to observe, whether he tastes the distinguishing perfections, or, if I may be allowed to call them so, the specific qualities of the author whom he peruses; whether he is particularly pleased with Livy for his manner of telling a story, with Sallust for his entering into those internal principles of action which rise from the characters and manners of the persons he describes, or with Tacitus for displaying those outward motives of safety and interest which give birth to the whole series of transactions which he relates.

He may likewise consider, how differently he is affected by the same thought which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by a person of an ordinary genius; for here is as much difference in apprehending a thought clothed in Cicero's language, and that of a common author, as in seeing an object by the light of a taper, or by the light of the sun.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the acquirement of such a taste as that I am here speaking of. The faculty must in some degree be born with us; and it very often happens, that those who have other qualities in perfection, are wholly void of this. One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age has assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Æneas's voyage by the map; as I question not but many a modern compiler of history would be delighted with little more than that divine author than the bare matters of fact.

But, notwithstanding this faculty must in some measure be born with us, there are several methods of cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain, and of little use to the person that possesses it. The most natural method for this purpose is to be conversant among the writings of the most polite authors. A man who has any relish for fine writing, either discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions, from the masterly strokes of a great author, every time he peruses him; besides that he naturally wears himself into the same manner of speaking and thinking.

Conversation with men of a polite genius is another method for improving our natural taste. It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider anything in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights. Every man, besides those general observations which are to be made upon an author, forms several reflections that are peculiar to his own manner of thinking; so that conversation will naturally furnish us with hints which we did not attend to, and make us enjoy other men's parts and reflections as well as our own. This is the best reason I can give for the observation which several have made, that the way of writing in the periods of time they did at Rome and Greece about the time of that Corneille, Molière, Racine, Bruyère, &c. was written so well, and that they have been friends and

It is likewise a form to himself to be well versed in both ancient and modern, he could wish that he had besides the mechanical little taste may be the very spirit of us the several in the mind Thus, although that the united other points of roughly explained something more elevates and astuteness of mind to besides Longinus

Our general turns of wit, a manner of enlarging the mind been carefully among the ancients, favoured, in several Gothic taste which I entertained the essay upon wit, several of those in the different time to show consists. I afterwards force which lies to affect the mind pieces as have fiction to record the world, or perhaps particularized the beauties which shall next Saturday Pleasures of the shall consider suggest to the many passages and verse. As entirely new, I with candour.

No. 410.]

Du
Nec magis con
Quæ, cum am Harum videre
Quam inhon
Quo pacto ex
Nosse omnia

When they are ab and when at sup pick the choices verty at home, crasts dipped in against wenching WILL HONEY

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the town only by way last rainy night, he, was driven into the escaped also a lady and to foot. Will as, that she saluted e, and turning im-said, she supposed Roger de Coverley: and follow than Sir with "Madam, the she dressed in a black without ribands; her whole in an agree-dresses being often town, at once con-sension to modesty.
 y air, "Your friend, rised to see a woman ut I dismissed my t down to my coun-es take up too much admit any other ex-Mr. Honeycomb

honour of setting her was gone to call a otman returned with re appeared nothing with Mr. Honeycomb vern at the gate for he impertinence she place. Mr. Honey-ar, determined the Roger, as the better leading her through th his hat, and gal-ce through rows of ukey in the state she ringing up the rear.
 upon the fair one to er declaring she had couple of chickens, drank a full bottle Man's Wish to Sir
 oom for some time ving billet, which he to her friend Will it to Sir Andrew to the club:—

ry gentleman, but I es you had at the wn to the country, but your singing, let y-street, Covent-gar-ged by your humble DE COVERLEY."

l stand the raillery t to put a stop to it, he following letter, e board:—

of one of the chaplish verse inserted ve ventured to send the Proverbs in a t worthy appearing will be a sufficient stant Reader,

 "A. B."

My son, th' instruction that my words impart, Grave on the living tablet of thy heart:
 And all the wholesome precepts that I give,
 Observe with strictest reverence, and live.

Let all thy homage be to Wisdom paid; Seek her protection, and implore her aid;
 That she may keep thy soul from harm secure,
 And turn thy footsteps from the harlot's door,
 Who with rum'd charms lures the unwary lad,
 And soothes with flattery their souls to sin.

Once from my window, as I cast mine eye On those that pass'd in giddy numbers by,
 A youth among the foolish youths I spy'd, Who took not sacred wisdom for his guide.

Just as the sun withdrew his cooler light,
 And evening soft led on the shades of night, He stole in covert twilight to his fate,
 And pass'd the corner near the harlot's gate

When lo, a woman comes!— Loose her attire, and such her glaring dress, So aptly did the harlot's mind express:

Subtle she is, and practis'd in the arts By which the wanton conquers headless hearts: Stubborn and loud she is; she haunts her home; Varying her place and form, she hovers to roam;
 Now she's within, now in the street dash stray, Now at each corner stands, and waits her prey.
 The youth she seizes; and laying now aside All modesty, the female's justest pride, She said with an embrace, "Here at my house Peace-offerings are, this day I paid my vows.
 I therefore came abroad to meet my dear,
 And lo, in happy hour, I find thee here.

My chamber I've adorn'd, and o'er my bed Are cov'ring of the richest tapestry spread; With linen it is deck'd from Egypt brought,
 And carvings by the curious artist wrought:
 It wants no glad perfume Arabia yields In all her citron groves and spicy fields; Here all her store of richest odours meet, I'll lay thee in a wilderness of sweets; Whatever to the sense can grateful be I have collected there—I want but thee.
 My husband's gone a journey far away, Much gold he took abroad, and long will stay.
 He named for his return a distant day."

Upon her tongue did such smooth mischief dwell, And from her lips such welcome flattery fell,
 Th' unguarded youth, in silken fetters ty'd, Reas'd his reason, and with ease comply'd.
 Thus does the ox to his own slaughter go,
 And thus is senseless of th' impending blow;
 Thus flies the simple bird into the snare, That skilful fowlers for his life prepare.
 But let my sons attend. Attend may they Whom youthful vigour may to sin betray; Let them false charmers fly, and guard their heart Against the wily wanton's pleasing art;
 With care direct their steps, nor turn astray To tread the paths of her deceitful way; Lest they too late of her fell pow'r complain,
 And fall, where many nighters have been slain.

No. 411.] SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1711

PAPER L.

ON THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION CONTENTS.

The perfection of our sight above our other senses. The sources of the imagination arise originally from sight. pleasures of the imagination divided under two heads, pleasures of the imagination in some respects equal of the understanding. The extent of the pleasure imagination. The advantages a man receives from of these pleasures. In what respect they are prefer-those of the understanding.

Avia Pleridum parago loca, nullum Trita solo: juvat integre abscondere Atque haurire ———— Lich. I.

In wild unclear'd, to Mænor a retreat, O'er ground untrod before, I deviant roam;
 And deep-enamour'd into latent springs Presume to peep at coy virgin Nymphs.

Our sight is the most perfect and most delicate of all our senses. It fills the mind with the variety of ideas, converses with its objects at the greatest distance, and continues the longest tion without being tired or satiated with its proper enjoyments. The sense of feeling can indeed give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours; but at the same time it is very much straitened, and confined in its operations to the number, bulk, and distance of its particular objects. Our sight seems designed to supply all these defects, and may be considered as a more delicate and diffusive kind of touch, that spreads itself over an infinite multitude of bodies, comprehends the largest figures, and brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe.

It is this sense which furnishes the imagination with its ideas; so that by "the pleasures of the imagination," or "fancy" (which I shall use promiscuously), I here mean such as arise from visible objects, either when we have them actually in our view, or when we call up their ideas into our minds by painting, statues, descriptions, or any the like occasion. We cannot indeed have a single image in the fancy that did not make its first entrance through the sight; but we have the power of retaining, altering, and compounding those images which we have once received, into all the varieties of picture and vision that are most agreeable to the imagination: for by this faculty, a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature.

There are few words in the English language which are employed in a more loose and uncircumscribed sense than those of the fancy and the imagination. I therefore thought it necessary to fix and determine the notion of these two words, as I intend to make use of them in the thread of my following speculations, that the reader may conceive rightly what is the subject which I proceed upon. I must therefore desire him to remember, that by "the pleasures of the imagination," I mean only such pleasures as arise originally from sight, and that I divide these pleasures into two kinds: my design being first of all to discourse of those primary pleasures of the imagination, which entirely proceed from such objects as are before our eyes; and in the next place to speak of those secondary pleasures of the imagination which flow from the ideas of visible objects, when the objects are not actually before the eye, but are called up into our memories, or formed into agreeable visions of things that are either absent or fictitious.

The pleasures of the imagination, taken in their full extent, are not so gross as those of sense, nor so refined as those of the understanding. The last are indeed more preferable, because they are founded on some new knowledge or improvement in the mind of man; yet it must be confessed, that those of the imagination are as great and as transporting as the other. A beautiful prospect delights the soul as much as a demonstration; and a description in Homer has charmed more readers than a chapter in Aristotle. Besides, the pleasures of the imagination have this advantage above those of the understanding, that they are more obvious and more easy to be acquired. It is but opening the eye, and the scene enters. The colours paint themselves on the fancy, with very little attention of thought or application of mind in the beholder. We are struck, we know not how, with the symmetry of any thing we see, and immediately assent to the beauty of an object, without inquiring into the particular causes and occasions of it.

A man of a many pleasure receiving. He find an agree meets with a and often feels of fields and possession. It in every thing uncultivated pa sures; so that another light, charms, that co of mankind.

There are id be idle and in sures that are take is at the e and their very or folly. A m make the spher as possible, tha and find in the would not blus of the imagin bent of thought employments, to sink into tha are apt to acc but, like a geu them from slot upon any labor

We might I fancy are mor the understand thinking, and the brain. De painting, or pe body as well a clear and brig disperse grief a spirits in pleas reason, Sir Fra has not thou reader a poem dissuades him and advises him with splendid fables and cou

I have in settled the not tion which are king, and end recommend to pleasures. I several source derived.—O.

No. 412.]

ON THE P

Three sources of survey of outv imagination. How what is b How what is What other ac tening of those

—Divis

The work

I SHALL S

the gaiety or variety of colours, in the disposition of parts, in the arrangement of bodies, or in a just mixture of all together. Among these kinds of beauty the eye takes most delight in. We nowhere meet with a more glorious show in nature, than what appears in the rising and setting of the sun, wholly made up of these different stains of light and shade. For this reason we find the poets, who address themselves to the imagination, borrowing more of their epithets from colours, than any other topic.

The fancy delights in every thing that is great, or beautiful, and is still more pleased with the kinds of these perfections in the same object, capable of receiving a new satisfaction by the change of another sense. Thus, any concord, as the music of birds, or a fall of waters, awakens every moment the mind of the beholder, and makes him more attentive to the several beauties of the place that lie before him. Thus, if we see a fragrant smell, or perfume, they excite the pleasures of the imagination, and make the colours and verdure of the landscape appear more agreeable; for the ideas of both senses mix together, and are pleasanter together, when they enter the mind separately: as the colours of a picture, when they are well set off one another, and receive an additional beauty from the advantage of their situation, on the occasion of admiring them.

One of the final causes that is great may be the pleasure of our being has so formed in it, but Himself can never be proper happiness. Because of our happiness must be of his being, that he may wish for such a contentment, naturally delight in the great or unlimited. Our pleasing motion of the consideration of any deal of room in the fancy improve into the highest devotion when we cannot neither circumscribed by the comprehended by the being.

He has annexed a new any thing that is new, encourage us in the pleasure engage us to search into it; for every new idea it, as rewards any pains, sition, and consequently us upon fresh discoveries.

He has made every own species pleasant, tempted to multiply them with inhabitants; for wherever nature is crowded, the monster (the result of the breed is incapable of producing a new order of all animals were allured species, generation would earth unpeopled.

In the last place, he has made so many objects beautiful in all other objects, render the whole creation more agreeable. He has given almost every of raising an agreeable that it is impossible for coldness or indifference beauties without a necessity. Things would be to the eye, if we saw figures and motions; and for their exciting in us are different from any themselves (for such are not to add supernumerary and make it more agreeable. We are every where entertained and apparitions: we dwell in the heavens and in the visionary beauty poured out: but what a rough should we be entertained disappear, and the severe shade vanish? In show delightfully lost and be- sion, and we walk about a romance, who sees be meadows; and, at the sight of birds, and the pur- the finishing of some so breaks up, and the disc- a barren heath, or in a

113.] TUESDAY, JUNE 24, 1712.

PAPER III

THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION.

CONTENTS.

The necessary cause of our being pleased with what is new, or beautiful, unknown. Why the final cause is more useful. The final cause of our being pleased with what is great. The final cause of our being pleased with what is new. The final cause of our being pleased with what is beautiful in our own species. The final cause of our being pleased with what is beautiful in the last, vis est notissima— OVID, Met. ix. 207. The cause is secret, but the effect is known.—ADDISON

In yesterday's paper we considered how that which is great, new, or beautiful is apt to excite the imagination with pleasure, we must own it is impossible for us to assign the necessary cause of this pleasure, because we know neither the nature of an idea, nor the substance of a human mind might help us to discover the conformity or disagreement of the one to the other; therefore, for want of such a light, all that we can do in speculations of this kind, is to reflect on the operations of the soul that are most agreeable, and range, under their proper heads, what is most pleasing to the mind, without being able to set out the several necessary and efficient causes whence the pleasure or displeasure arises lie more bare and open to our observation, as there are often a greater variety that produce the same effect; and these, though they are altogether so satisfactory, are generally more so than the other, as they give us greater

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

y be the state in respect of
; though ining and beau-possible the but perhaps onal cause, as pressions of s acquainted ich is at pre-the inquirers at light and ion, are only at have any h which has modern philo-speculations ould see the in the eighth e's Essay on is reprinted ator in folio.

ue 24, 1712.

or discourses, e world with ded to, may it more easy sures of the n reason and ore a worthy e powers of dge of them, griefs, by a
could not inurse; but if this letter in ervice to the obliging, as me, Sir, to
I am partly a good than hope for the f it were not h you sages first purpose o himself, is after that is must also be gain is not s very being be a gainer some other, government.
' and is so e of her ma-nate in the ther advan-
hing can be than to find eir good for-vice, or lay-e of serving low circum-
ner of exeripts for half ne fortunate set forth at rd instant.
esign which gives me hopes of your favour to it, and that is no Tully advises, to git, that the benefit is made diffusive as possible. Every one that has half guinea is put into the possibility, from that sum-sum, to raise himself an easy fortune: when the little parcels of wealth are, as it were, thus throw back into the redonation of Providence, we are expect that some who live under hardships or ocurity may be produced to the world in the figure they deserve by this means. I doubt not but th last argument will have force with you; and I ca not add another to it, but what your severity will fear, very little regard, which is, that I am,

"Sir, your greatest Admirer,
"RICHARD STEELE."

No. 414.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25, 1712.

PAPER IV.

ON THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION.

CONTENTS.

The works of nature more pleasant to the imagination than those of art. The works of nature still more pleasant, the more they resemble those of art. The works of an art pleasant, the more they resemble those of nature. Our kitchen plantations and gardens considered in the foregoing light.

—Alterius sic

Altera poscit opem res, et conjurat amice.

Hon. Ars Poet. v. 418.

But mutually they need each other's help.—ROSCONIA.

If we consider the works of nature and art as they are qualified to entertain the imagination, we shall find the last very defective, in comparison of the former; for though they may sometimes appear a beautiful or strange, they can have nothing in them of that vastness and immensity, which afford a great an entertainment to the mind of the beholder.
The one may be as polite and delicate as the other, but can never show herself so august and magnificent in the design. There is something more bold and masterly in the rough careless strokes of nature than in the nice touches and embellishments of art.
The beauties of the most stately garden or palace lie in a narrow compass; the imagination immediately runs them over, and requires something else to gratify her; but in the wide fields of nature, the sight wanders up and down without confinement, and is fed with an infinite variety of images, without any certain stint or number. For this reason we always find the poet in love with the country life, when nature appears in the greatest perfection, and furnishes out all those scenes that are most apt to delight the imagination.

Scriptorum chorus omnis amat nemus, et fugit urbes.

Hon. 2 Ep. c. 77.

—To grottoes and to groves we run,

To ease and silence, every Muse's son.—POPE.

Hic secura quies, et nescia fallere vita,

Spelunce, vivique lacus: hic frigida Tempe,

Dives opum varieturum: hic latius otia fundis, Mugitusque bonum, mollesque sub arbore somni.

Virg. Georg. ii. 487.

Here easy quiet, a secure retreat,

A harmless life that knows not how to cheat,

With home-bred plenty the rich owner bleats,

And rural pleasures crown his happiness,

Unvex'd with quarrels, undisturb'd with noise,

The country king his peaceful realm enjoys:

Cool grots and living lakes, the flow'ry pride

Of meads, and streams that through the valley glide;

And shady groves that easy sleep invite,

And, after toilsome days, a sweet repose at night.—DANIEL

But though there are several of those wild scenes that are more delightful than any artificial shows, yet we find the works of nature still more pleasant, the more they resemble those of art: for in this case our pleasure rises from a double principle; from the agreeableness of the objects to the eye, and from their similitude to other objects. We are pleased as well with comparing their beauties, as with surveying them, and can represent them to our minds, either as copies or originals. Hence it is that we take delight in a prospect which is well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers; in those accidental landscapes of trees, clouds, and cities, that are sometimes found in the veins of marble; in the curious fret-work of rocks and grottos: and, in a word, in any thing that hath such a variety or regularity as may seem the effect of design in what we call the works of chance.

If the products of nature rise in value according as they more or less resemble those of art, we may be sure that artificial works receive a greater advantage from their resemblance of such as are natural; because here the similitude is not only pleasant, but the pattern more perfect. The prettiest landscape I ever saw, was one drawn on the walls of a dark room, which stood opposite on one side to a navigable river, and on the other to a park. The experiment is very common in optics. Here you might discover the waves and fluctuations of the water in strong and proper colours, with the picture of a ship entering at one end, and sailing by degrees through the whole piece. On another there appeared the green shadows of trees, waving to and fro with the wind, and herds of deer among them in miniature, leaping about upon the wall. I must confess the novelty of such a sight may be one occasion of its pleasantness to the imagination; but certainly its chief reason is its nearest resemblance to nature, as it does not only, like other pictures, give the colour and figure, but the motion of the things it represents.

We have before observed, that there is generally in nature something more grand and august than what we meet with in the curiosities of art. When, therefore, we see this imitated in any measure, it gives us a nobler and more exalted kind of pleasure than what we receive from the nicer and more accurate productions of art. On this account our English gardens are not so entertaining to the fancy as those in France and Italy, where we see a large extent of ground covered over with an agreeable mixture of garden and forest, which represent every where an artificial rudeness, much more charming than that neatness and elegance which we meet with in those of our own country. It might indeed be of ill consequence to the public, as well as unprofitable to private persons, to alienate so much ground from pasturage and the plough, in many parts of a country that is so well peopled, and cultivated to a far greater advantage. But why may not a whole estate be thrown into a kind of garden by frequent plantations, that may turn as much to the profit as the pleasure of the owner? A marsh overgrown with willows, or a mountain shaded with oaks, are not only more beautiful, but more beneficial, than when they lie bare and unadorned. Fields of corn make a pleasant prospect; and if the walks were a little taken care of that lie between them, if the natural embroidery of the meadows were helped and improved by some small additions of art, and the several rows of hedges set off by trees and flowers that the soil was capable of receiving, a man might make a pretty landscape of his own possessions.

Writers who tell us the ignorant plantations of the rule and line may place trees. They choose rather this nature, and which they direct it seems, in the particular strikes the imagination covering what. Our British gardeners humouring nature as possible. Of ramids. We see plant and bush regular in my opinion rather look upon fusion of bouquet and trim cannot but fan finitely more de of the most fashionable modellers of gardens to dispose of, it all the beautiful thrive a plan that in taking off the able plants, were stocked.—O.

No. 415.]

ON THE P

Of architecture, architecture re Greatness of b ancient accounts advantages for world, and in which are still affects the im on this subject greatness of m that pleases the beautiful, or ne

Add to e

Witness e Their coal

HAVING already by the works of in general but they mutually forming such to delight the paper throw ticular art, which any other, to the imagination subject of this of architecture gard to the light have placed it maxims which have laid down less treatises Greatness is considered as

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

silt. As for among the superior to

of which an lations to be scious moun-
the walls of s temple to eight several and on the ratory? I ne huge rock nia, with the of tributary lake, which me as a new the several is conveyed.
pon some of cannot find ss it be that sent. There for building world, than arth was expasturage, er of hands es to employ and sciences mpers; and,
ce was abso-
put himself e find Semi-field, and yet emies. It is t peace, and he could aca prodigious her climate and winters, e half a year e benefits of earth, that it d of mortar, mentioned in structure of ortar."

s, which an-en made of er might find at covered a temples dis-visions. astern pieces
e even in the t of it would e wall itself oblest build-tries of the at work on not only that the building, ut that such me, open the nverse with thing that is erence on the h the natural

der greatness.

of manner in architecture, which has such force upon the imagination, that a small building, where it appears, shall give the mind nobler ideas than one of twenty times the bulk, where the manner is ordinary or little. Thus, perhaps, a man would have been more astonished with the majestic air that appeared in one of Lysippus's statues of Alexander, though no bigger than the life, than he might have been with mount Athos, had it been cut into the figure of the hero, according to the proposal of Phidias,* with a river in one hand, and a city in the other.

Let any one reflect on the disposition of mind he finds in himself at his first entrance into the Pantheon at Rome, and how his imagination is filled with something great and amazing; and, at the same time, consider how little, in proportion, he is affected with the inside of a Gothic cathedral, though it be five times larger than the other; which can arise from nothing else but the greatness of the manner in the one, and the meanness in the other.

I have seen an observation upon this subject in a French author, which very much pleased me. It is in Monsieur Preart's Parallel of the ancient and modern Architecture. I shall give it the reader with the same terms of art which he has made use of. "I am observing," says he, "a thing which, in my opinion, is very curious, whence it proceeds, that in the same quantity of superficies, the one manner seems great and magnificent, and the other poor and trifling; the reason is fine and uncommon. I say, then, that to introduce into architecture this grandeur of manner, we ought so to proceed, that the division of the principal members of the order may consist but of few parts, that they be all great and of a bold and ample relief, and swelling; and that the eye beholding nothing little and mean, the imagination may be more vigorously touched and affected with the work that stands before it. For example: in a cornice, if the gola or cymation or the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentils make a noble show by their graceful projections, I we see none of that ordinary confusion which is the result of those little cavities, quarter rounds of the astragal, and I know not how many other intermingled particulars, which produce no effect in great and massy works, and which very unprofitably take up place to the prejudice of the principal member, it is most certain that this manner will appear solemn and great; as, on the contrary, that I will have but a poor and mean effect, where there is a redundancy of those smaller ornaments, which divide and scatter the angles of the sight into such a multitude of rays, so pressed together that the whole will appear but a confusion."

Among all the figures in architecture, there are none that have a greater air than the concave as the convex; and we find in the ancient and modern architecture, as well in the remote parts of China as in countries nearer home, that round pillars and vaulted roofs make a great part of those buildings which are designed for pomp and magnificence. The reason I take to be, because in these figures we generally see more of the body than in those of other kinds. There are, indeed, figures of bodies where the eye may take in two-thirds of the surface, but, as in such bodies, the sight must split on several angles, it does not take in one uniform idea but several ideas of the same kind. Look upon it a dome, your eye half surrounds it; look inside, and at one glance you have all the of it; the entire concavity falls into your eye, the sight being as the centre that collects into it the lines of the whole circle: in a square pillar, the sight often takes fourth part of the surface; and in a square must move up and down to the different ore it is master of all the inward surface. reason, the fancy is infinitely more struck view of the open air and skies, that passes an arch, than what comes through a square, her figure. The figure of the rainbow does tribute less to its magnificence than the its beauty, as it is very poetically described on of Sirach: "Look upon the rainbow, a Him that made it; very beautiful is it in ness; it encompasses the heavens with a circle, and the hands of the Most High ded it."

* Dinocrates.

g thus spoken of that greatness which affects I in architecture, I might next show the that arises in the imagination from what new and beautiful in this art; but as every has naturally a greater taste of these two ns in every building which offers itself to, than of that which I have hitherto con- I shall not trouble my readers with any re- upon it. It is sufficient for my present to observe, that there is nothing in this t which pleases the imagination, but as it uncommon, or beautiful.—O.

416.] FRIDAY, JUNE 27, 1712.

PAPER VI.

THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION.

CONTENTS.

ary pleasures of the imagination. The several of these pleasures (statuary, painting, description, de) compared together. The final cause of our pleasure from these several sources. Of descriptions cular. The power of words over the imagination. a reader is more pleased with descriptions than r hoc simile est oculis, quod mente videmus.

Lucr. ix. 754.

what we see with our minds, bears similitude to se with our eyes.

irst divided the pleasures of the imagination as arise from objects that are actually be- eyes, or that once entered in at our eyes, afterward called up into the mind either y its own operations, or on occasion of some- without us, as statues or descriptions. We eady considered the first division, and shall enter on the other, which, for distinction have called "The Secondary Pleasures of gination." When I say the ideas we re- ma statues, descriptions, or such-like occa- re the same that were once actually in our ; must not be understood that we had once a very place, action, or person, that are e described. It is sufficient that we have es, persons, or actions in general, which eemblance, or at least some remote analogy, at we find represented; since it is in the f the imagination, when it is once stocked ular ideas, to enlarge, compound, and at her own pleasure.

g the different kinds of representation, statuary is the most natu- likest the object that is of a common instance: take an image in his ha- fingers the different furn- chisel, and he will easil- a man, or beast, may- should he draw his hand smooth and uniform, he- gine how the several p- of a human body shoul- of canvass, that has in- larity. Description runs it represents than pain- real resemblance to its- syllables are wholly void- guages, but words are- people or nation. For- necessities quickly put- writing is probably of- ing; particularly we are- the Spaniards first ar- sent to the Emperor of- news of his country del- pencil, which was a mo- writing, though at the s- fect, because it is impo- nexions of speech, or t- junction or an adverb. I- to represent visible obj- ideas annexed to them, description in music.

be confused imperfect- in the imagination by- notes; and we find that- able, sometimes to set t- hurry of a battle, to ov- lancholy scenes and a- funerals, or to lull the- groves and elysiums.

In all these instances the imagination proced- mind which compares the- ginal objects with the- statue, picture, descript- them. It is impossible reason why this operat- with so much pleasure, the same occasion; but- entertainments derived for it is this that not o- tuary, painting, and de- light in all the actions- this that makes the se- which consists, as I l- affinity of ideas: and- that raises the little as- in the different sorts o- sists in the affinity of le- tic; or of syllables, as- or of words, as in pun- sentence or poem, as v- cause, probably of ann- tion of the mind, was- in our searches after tr- one thing from another- twixt our ideas, depend- them together, and ob- agreement that appear- nature.

But I shall here con- of the imagination wh-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

vation, and application to great a force is more lively

The reader and pointed y the aspect seem which seem to get ed, the most rous tones, s, which more jects themselves of these reason, proof any object, the original descriptions
s he places either we did ght when we ect, our view three, change it, but may f it, it only to affect the examined, how no are in a d know no ney, the description. We which are their ; or, if not, g here another cohesivity, ner from the than in any-vera, it is in a the reason ation, a man n, and hence y that he can to be almost nd expressive mal strength ng from con-

be wanted, it ith respect to t did not in-perfectly clear.

A man who g, then, in descriptions, in autobiography, and confused
about the variety of his n.—C

28, 1712

NATION

A nation, and on the other hand, it is what is d in the y perfect

Quintus, Melpomene, semel Nascentur alacris luteine videris, Nec non labor isthmus Harabunt pugile. Non equis impiger, &c Sed qua Tibur aqua fertile perfluit, Et apisse lacum cuncta mra, Fingunt. Et do carmine nobiliem —HOR. 103 li. 1.
He on whose birth the lyre is given Of numbers and of death, never grace The Isthmian garland, or be seen First in the faded Olympic race, But nam the strongest not working flow Rich Tibur's fertile fields along,
And shady groves, whose haunts than know The master of the Muse's song —ATTREBUT.

We may observe, that any single circumstance of what we have formerly seen or felt raises up a whole scene of imagery, and awakens numberless pictures before sight in the imagination; such a picture of snow or colour is able to fill the mind, on a sudden, with the picture of the fields or gardens where we first met with it, and to bring up into view all the variety of images that once attended it. Our imagination takes the hint, and leads us unexpectedly into cities or the cities, plains or meadows. We may farther observe, when the fancy thus reflects on the scenes that have passed in it formerly, those which were at first pleasant to behold appear more so upon reflection, and that the memory heightens the delightfulness of the original. A Cartesian would account for both these instances in the following manner —

The set of ideas which we received from such a prospect of garden, having entered the mind at the same time, have a set of traces, belonging to them in the brain, bordering very near upon one another; when, therefore, any one of these ideas arises in the imagination, and consequently dispatches a flux of animal spirits to its proper trace, these spirits, in the violence of their motion, run not only into the trace to which they were more particularly directed, but into several of those that lie about it. By this means, they awaken other ideas of the same set, which immediately determine a new dispatch of spirits, that in the same manner open other neighbouring traces, till at last the whole set of them is brought up, and the whole prospect or garden flows into the imagination. But because the pleasure was more from these places far surmounted, and overcame the little disagreeableness we found in them, that this reason there was at first a wider passage into the pleasure traces, and, on the contrary, a narrower one in those which belonged to the disagreeable ideas, that they were quickly stopt up and rendered incapable of receiving any animal spirits, and consequently of exciting any unpleasant sensations in the memory.

It would be in vain to enquire whether the power of raising any thing so strongly proceeds from an greater perfection in the soul, or from any new feature in the train of one man than of another. But this is certain, that a noble writer should be furnished with this faculty in its full strength and vigour, and to be able to receive lively ideas from outward objects, not to turn them long, and to range them to a variety of processes, in such figures and representations, as are most likely to hit the fancy of the reader. A poet should take as much pains in forming his imagination, as a philosopher in cultivating his judgment. He must gain a due habit of reflecting on his ideas, and be thoroughly conversant in the various scenery of a country life.

When he is tired with country inquiries, if he would go beyond the sea, and the lower kind of poetry, he ought to acquaint himself with the poem

THE SPECTATOR.

significance of courts. He should be very used in every thing that is noble and stately productions of art, whether it appear in painting; in the great works of architecture in their present glory, or in the ruins of which flourished in former ages.

advantages as these help to open a man's mind, and to enlarge his imagination, and will have their influence on all kinds of writing, the author knows how to make right use of them. Among those of the learned languages who excel in the most perfect in their several kinds are Homer, Virgil, and Ovid. The first employs his imagination wonderfully with what is second with what is beautiful, and the last is strange. Reading the Iliad, is like passing through a country uninhabited, where the eye is entertained with a thousand savage prospects, vast deserts, wide uncultivated marshes, steep, misshapen rocks and precipices. On the contrary, the Æneid is like a well-ordered garden; it is impossible to find out any part under to cast our eyes upon a single spot that does not produce some beautiful plant or flower. As we are in the Metamorphoses, we are as if we were in an enchanted ground, and see nothing but magic lying around us.

Virgil is in his province, when he is describing a multitude, a hero or a god. Virgil is never so pleased as when he is in his Elysium, to paint out an entertaining picture. Homer's descriptions generally mark out what is great; Virgil's are agreeable. Nothing can be more magnificent than the figure Jupiter makes in the first Iliad, charming than that of Venus in the first the imagination may be seen. He describes a miracle, and gives us the sight of some of it. His art consists in his description, before the first of the new one perfectly where entertains us with what is before, and shows us the end of the Metamorphoses.

If I were to name a poet in all these arts of writing, I think Milton may pass for the best. Lost falls short of the respect, it proceeds rather in a language in which it is weak of genius in the author. English is like a stately palace, one may see architecture of one of marble, though the nature. But to consider the present subject; What is more beautiful than the battle of angels, the stature and behaviour of the angels? What more beautiful than the Heaven, Angels, Adam, strange than the creation of the metamorphoses of the gods, surprising adventures their search after Paradise? What have furnished a poet with the imagination, as no other those scenes in more strange

No. 418.] MONDAY

PAPER

ON THE PLEASURES

CONTINUED

Why any thing that is unpleasant to the imagination when well described receives a more exquisite pleasure than what is great, new, or beautiful, if what is described is agreeable to the passions. Why terror and grief are pleasurable by description. A particular description of a scene in fiction have to please the imagination are allowed them.

—ferat et rubus asper a

The rugged thorn shall be

THE pleasures of the imagination are of a wider nature than those it has within not only what is great, but any thing that is disagreeable to us in an apt description we must inquire after a pleasure which is nothing else but which compares the ideas with the ideas that arise in the mind; and why this operation is attended with so much pleasure. For this reason, of a dunghill is pleasurable, an image be represented to the mind; though, perhaps, properly called the pleasure of the fancy, because we are with the image that is compared with the aptness of the image.

But if the description of like, and awful bends his sable brows as ambrosial curls, and gives the nod, sp of fate, and sanction of the god: down with trembling the dread signal took, Jupiter to the centre shook.—POPE.

averterns rosea cervice refulsit, æque comæ divinum vertice odorem s: pedes vestis defluxit ad imos, cessu patuit dea.—VIRG. Æn. l. 406 having said, she turn'd and made appear refulgent, and dishevel'd hair; flowing from her shoulders, reach'd the ground, sly spread ambrosial scents around: of train descends her sweeping gown, her graceful walk the queen of love is known.

DAYDEN.

persons are most of them godlike and terrible, has scarce admitted any into his poem but beautiful, and has taken particular care of his hero so.

—Lumenque juvenem
m, et laetos oculis afflarat honores.

VIRG. Æn. l. 594.

his rolling eyes a sparkling grace, he'd a youthful vigour on his face.—DRYDEN.

Homer fills his readers with sublime ideas, and has raised the imagination of all the ages that have come after him. I shall only mention, who immediately takes fire at the description of any passage in the Iliad or Odyssey, rises above himself when he has Homer. Virgil has drawn together, into his most pleasing scenes his subject is capable of, and in his Georgics has given us a picture of the most delightful landscapes that can be of fields and woods, herds of cattle, and of bees.

his Metamorphoses, has shown us how

ATOR—Nos. 61 & 62.

agination, the or beautiful, not only de-son with the
the original
ore charmed man of hell: ect in their and sulphur tion, as the weets in the which recom-

e rest; and s as are apt
f the reader, sions. For, enlightened, iversal, and
s. Thus in cture of any the pleasure that is beau-be softened he two lead-ts of poetry d pity. And ow it comes unpleasant hen excited ge that we s are apt to or the like in the mind ends them. ld take description, fear or grief
on?

of this plea-so properly as from the ime of read-objects, we n no danger
same time, more fright-
is the plea-own safety.
description on that we

En. viii. 264.

rise,

quish'd eyes.
DRYDEN.

lighted with past, or in which would f we saw it

of torments, cidents, our in the grief give us, as in, &c.—Lucc.

from the secret comparison which we make between ourselves and the person who suffers. Such representations teach us to set a just value upon our own condition, and make us prize our good fortune which exempts us from the like calamities. This is, however, such a kind of pleasure as we are incapable of receiving when we see a person actually lying under the tortures that we meet with in a description; because, in this case, the object presents itself upon our senses, and bears so hard upon us that it does not give us time or leisure to reflect of ourselves. Our thoughts are so intent upon the miseries of the sufferer, that we cannot turn them upon our own happiness. Whereas, on the contrary, we consider the misfortunes we read in history or poetry, either as past or as fictitious: so that the reflection upon ourselves rises in us insensibly and overhears the sorrow we conceive for the sufferings of the afflicted.

But because the mind of man requires something more perfect in matter than what it finds there, and can never meet with any sight in nature which sufficiently answers its highest ideas of pleasantness or, in other words, because the imagination is apt to itself things more great, strange, or beautiful, than the eye ever saw, and is still sensible of some defect in what it has seen; on this account it is the part of a poet to humour the imagination in our own notions, by mending and perfecting nature where he describes a reality, and by adding greater beauties than are put together in nature, where he describes a fiction.

He is not obliged to attend her in the slow advances which she makes from one season to another or to observe her conduct in the successive production of plants and flowers. He may draw out his description all the beauties of the spring autumn, and make the whole year contribute something to render it the more agreeable. His rose-trees, weath'ers, and jessamines, may blow together, and the birds be conversant at the same time with lilies, violets, and anemones. His soil is not restrained to every part of a set of plants, but is proper either for oaks or myrtles, and adapts itself to the product of every climate. Oranges may grow wild in it, which may be met with in every hedge; and if he thinks it proper to have a grove of spears, he can quickly command sun enough to raise it. If all this will not furnish out an agreeable scene, he can make several new species of flowers, with new scents and higher colours than any that grow in the gardens of nature. His concerts of birds may be as full and harmonious and his woods as thick and gloomy as he pleases. He is at no more expense in a long vista than a short one, and can as easily throw his cascades from a precipice of half a mile high, as from one of twenty yards. He has his choice of the winds, and can turn the course of his river in all the variety of meanders that are most delightful to the reader's imagination. In a word, he has the modelling of Nature in his own hands, and may give her what charms he pleases, provided he does not reform her too much, and run into absurdities by endeavouring to excel.—O.

No. 419.] TUESDAY, JULY 1, 1712.

PAPER IX.

ON THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION.
CONTENTS.

Of that kind of poetry which Mr. Dryden calls "the fairy way of writing." How a poet should be qualified for it. To passures of the imagination, that arise from it. In this respect why the moderns excel the ancients. Why the English excel the moderns. Who the best among the English, Of emblematical persons.

—gentis gratissimus error.—Hon. 2 Ep. il. 140.
The sweet delusion of a raptur'd mind.

There is a kind of writing, wherein the poet quite loses sight of nature, and entertains his reader's imagination with the characters and actions of such persons as have many of them no existence at what he bestows on them. Such are fairies, fitches, magicians, demons, and departed spirits. 'his Mr. Dryden calls "the fairy way of writing," which is indeed more difficult than any other that depends on the poet's fancy, because he has no pattern to follow in it, and must work altogether out of his own invention.

There is a very odd turn of thought required for this sort of writing; and it is impossible for a poet to succeed in it, who has not a particular cast of fancy, and an imagination naturally fruitful and substititious. Besides this, he ought to be very well versed in legends and fables, antiquated romances, and the traditions of nurses and old women, that he may fall in with our natural prejudices, and humour our notions which we have imbibed in our infancy. or otherwise he will be apt to make his fairies talk like people of his own species, and not like other sorts of beings, who converse with different objects, and think in a different manner from that of mankind.

*Sylvia deducti caveant, me Iudice, famuli, Ne velut ignavi trivialis, ac pueri forentes.
Aut stultum teneris juvenescant versibus*——
Hon. Ars Poet. v. 244.

Let not the wood-born satyr fondly sport With serious verses, as if bred at court.—FRANCIS do not say with Mr. Bays in the Rehearsal, that spirits must not be confined to speak sense: but it is certain their sense ought to be a little discoloured, so that it may seem particular, and proper to the person and condition of the speaker.

These descriptions raise a pleasing kind of horror in the mind of the reader, and amuse his imagination with the strangeness and novelty of the persons who are represented in them. They bring up into our memory the stories we have heard in our childhood, and favour those secret terrors and apprehensions to which the mind of man is naturally subject. We are pleased with surveying the different habits and behaviours of foreign countries: how much more must we be delighted and surprised when we are led, as it were, into a new creation, and see the customs and manners of another species! Men of wild fancies, and philosophical dispositions, object to this kind of poetry, that it has not probability enough to effect the imagination. But to this it may be answered, that we are sure in general, there are many intellectual beings in the world besides ourselves, and several species of spirits, who are subject to different laws and economies from those of mankind: when we see, therefore, any of these represented naturally, we cannot look upon the representation as altogether impossible, nay, many are prepossessed with such false opinions, as dispose them to believe these particular delusions; at least we have all heard so many pleasing relations in favour of them, that we do not care for seeing through a falsehood, and willingly give ourselves up to so agreeable an imposture.

The ancients have not much of this poetry among them; for, indeed, almost the whole substance of it owes its original to the later ages, when we amuse mankind in their duty. Our more reverence enlightened by the witchcraft, prodigies, and ghosts in it; the every large coming to it; and the with who had no

Among all the much the best, but be that we about or that the general sort of poetry.

ful, and very often melancholy of the nation, to many others are not so

Among the comparably excelled gance of fancy, thoroughly qualified part of him capable of to support him genius. There solemn, in the spe and the like may bear thinking the by which to judge there are such probable they should sent them.

There is another we sometimes meet author represents vice, under a vision or an actor in his descriptions of Hume, Virgil, and of Spenser, who has a whole creation of Spenser, who has tations of this emblematical part therefore only we see how many imagination, as nature for its own, shows us being, and represented with the several shape and character

I shall, in my general, how other please the imagination conclude this essay

No. 420.] W

ON THE PLE

What authors please do with fiction. If the authors of the The bounds and defects are essential

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

agunto.
Poet. v. 100.
they will.
Роскомон.

borrow their cts, and join ere are others closely, and ch are histogeographers, e objects of a

a historian to nt his battles eyes the di-men, to lead s and events bject unfold-g upon us in a pleasing raise our ex-parties con-shows more n; but I am to please the as, perhaps, have written g in so lively n admirable cumstances es a kind of ariety of pas-several parts

re none who ion than the we consider e discoveries her of their not a little with millions
th are not othing very ar reason, in and meteors.
at once, and ghbourhood, nt, to see so nother, and azing pomp mplate those ht as far as n abroad al-finds its cas-ct, and puts

But if we stars as so ch of them and still dis-at are sunk of ether, so telescopes, and worlds, nd magnifi-

than to en-ation of the ects bear to man to the circle it describes round the sun, that circle to the sphere the fixed stars, the sphere of the fixed stars to t circuit of the whole creation, the whole creation self to the infinite space that is every where diffu about it; or when the imagination works downwa and considers the bulk of a human body in respe of an animal a hundred times less than a mite, t particular limbs of such an animal, the differe springs that actuate the limbs, the spirits which s the springs a-going, and the proportionable minut ness of these several parts, before they have arriv at their full growth and perfection; but if, after a this, we take the least particle of these animal sp rits, and consider its capacity of being wrought int a world that shall contain within those narrow d mensions a heaven and earth, stars and planets, an every different species of living creatures, in th same analogy and proportion they bear to each oth in our own universe; such a speculation, by reaso of its nicety, appears ridiculous to those who ha not turned their thoughts that way, though at th same time it is founded on no less than the evidenc of a demonstration. Nay, we may yet carry it fu ther, and discover in the smallest particle of thi little world a new inexhausted fund of matter, ca pable of being spun out into another universe.

I have dwelt the longer on this subject, because think it may show us the proper limits, as well a the defectiveness of our imagination; how it is co fined to a very small quantity of space, and imme diately stopped in its operation, when it endeavour to take in any thing that is very great or very little Let a man try to conceive the different bulk of a animal, which is twenty, from another which is hundred times less than a mite, or to compare i his thoughts a length of a thousand diameters of th earth, with that of a million; and he will quickl find that he has no different measures in his mind adjusted to such extraordinary degrees of grandeur or minuteness. The understanding, indeed, open an infinite space on every side of us; but the ima gination, after a few faint efforts is immediately a stand, and finds herself swallowed up in the im mensity of the void that surrounds it: our reason can pursue a particle of matter through an infinit variety of divisions; but the fancy soon loses sigh of it, and feels in itself a kind of chasm, that want to be filled with matter of a more sensible bulk. We can neither widen nor contract the faculty to th dimensions of either extreme. The object is too big for our capacity, when we would comprehend the circumference of a world; and dwindles into nothing when we endeavour after the idea of an atom

It is possible this defect of imagination may no be in the soul itself, but as it acts in conjunction with the body. Perhaps there may not be room i the brain for such a variety of impressions, or th animal spirits may be incapable of figuring them in such a manner as is necessary to excite so very large or very minute ideas. However it be, we may well suppose that beings of a higher nature very much excel us in this respect, as it is probable the soul of man will be infinitely more perfect here after in this faculty, as well as in all the rest; inso much that, perhaps, the imagination will be able to keep pace with the understanding, and to form in itself distinct ideas of all the different modes and quantities of space.—O.

No. 421.] THURSDAY JULY 3, 1712.

PAPER XI.

ON THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION.

CONTENTS.

How those please the imagination who treat of subjects abstracted from matter, by allusions taken from it. What allusions most pleasing to the imagination. Great writers, how faulty in this respect. Of the art of imagining in general. The imagination capable of pain as well as pleasure. In what degree the imagination is capable either of pain or pleasure.

Ignotis errare locis, ignota videre

Flumina gaudebat; studio minuente laborem.

OVID, MET. VI. 294.

He sought fresh fountains in a foreign soil;

The pleasure lessen'd the attending toil.—ADDISON.

THE pleasures of the imagination are not wholly confined to such particular authors as are conversant in material objects, but are often to be met with among the polite masters of morality, criticism, and other speculations abstracted from matter, who, though they do not directly treat of the visible parts of nature, often draw from them their similitudes, metaphors, and allegories. By these allusions, a truth in the understanding is, as it were, reflected by the imagination; we are able to see something like colour and shape in a notion, and to discover a scheme of thoughts traced out upon matter. And here the mind receives a great deal of satisfaction, and has two of its faculties gratified at the same time, while the fancy is busy in copying after the understanding, and transcribing ideas out of the intellectual world into the material.

The great art of a writer shows itself in the choice of pleasing allusions, which are generally to be taken from the great or beautiful works of art or nature; for, though whatever is new or uncommon is apt to delight the imagination, the chief design of an allusion being to illustrate and explain the passages of an author, it should be always borrowed from what is more known and common than the passages which are to be explained.

Allegories, when well chosen, are like so many tracks of light in a discourse, that make every thing about them clear and beautiful. A noble metaphor, when it is placed to an advantage, casts a kind of glory round it, and darts a lustre through a whole sentence. These different kinds of allusion are but so many different manners of similitude; and that they may please the imagination, the likeness ought to be very exact or very agreeable, as we love to see a picture where the resemblance is just, or the posture and air graceful. But we often find eminent writers very faulty in this respect: great scholars are apt to fetch their comparisons and allusions from the sciences in which they are most conversant, so that a man may see the compass of their learning in a treatise on the most indifferent subject. I have read a discourse upon love, which none but a profound chymist could understand, and have heard many a sermon that should only have been preached before a congregation of Cartesians. On the contrary, your men of business usually have recourse to such instances as are too mean and familiar. They are for drawing the reader into a game of chess or tennis, or for leading him from shop to shop, in the cant of particular trades and employments. It is certain, there may be found an infinite variety of very agreeable allusions in both these kinds; but, for the generality, the most entertaining ones lie in the works of nature, which are obvious to than what is to

It is this tale gives an embe one man's c another's. It is the very lif Where it shin served several thing else to r other beauties and insipid, if something in of existence, o several objects
It makes addi variety to God beautify and a the universe, o shows and app part of it.

We have no those pleasures perhaps, it wou their proper h are apt to fill imagination is the brain is hu ordered by dre with wild dism sand hideous n

*Eumenidum Et solem genu
Aut Agamem
Armata fac Cum fugit, u*

Like Pentheu
He saw two Or mad Ores
Full in his fa
And shook he Flies o'er the
The Furies g

There is no
that of a distr troubled, and Babylon in ru
But to quit so consider by v advantage thi over the soul o happiness or from the imag

We have a man has over ease he conve great a power who knows all who can infuse ideas with te thinks fit! He out the help before us, and assistance of transport the glorious vision present conce spectres and for annihilation a curse.—In torture the sou hell of any imagination ers, I shall contents of 1712.

erga te.
ULL. EPIST.
leisure, but o' ves greater false notion t, certainly.

society, to n you con-
are well in-be more mely sharp pressions to ood quality rds making e that which be exerted four gentle-ndition. To of him you is a degree ardonable of whether he is ot then take
t. It is no
s to have an one man at self in much and derision, silence disied with that no wit at all n rallies the ms his ridic-

are in your wit, that you which is in itnds what you nger for do-thing. The s lavish, and voked to re-at has been fall in with The good wriwith him. If riends enjoy e is in their h inimitable
he other day, er who gave any, "That of a general n a composed ly to the con-of him. It is make a man n advantage, in the original tion arranged in gs of the sever-

and express the satisfaction he has in his own deal-self, till he is very ridiculous; but in this case the man is made a fool by his own consent, and not exposed as such whether he will or no. I take it, therefore, that, to make raillery agreeable, a man must either not know he is rallied, or think never the worse of himself if he sees he is.

Acetius is of a quite contrary genius, and is more generally admired than Callisthenes, but not with justice. Acetius has no regard to the modesty or weakness of the person he rallies; but if his quality or humility gives him any superiority to the man he would fall upon, he has no mercy in making the onset. He can be pleased to see his best friend out of countenance, while the laugh is loud in his own applause. His raillery always puts the company into little divisions and separate interests, while that of Callisthenes cements it, and makes every man not only better pleased with himself, but also with all the rest in the conversation.

To rally well, it is absolutely necessary that kindness must run through all you say; and you must ever preserve the character of a friend to support your pretensions to be free with a man. Acetius ought to be banished human society, because he raises his mirth upon giving pain to the person upon whom he is pleasant. Nothing but the malevolence which is too general towards those who excel could make his company tolerated; but they with whom he converses are sure to see some man sacrificed wherever he is admitted; and all the credit he has for wit, is owing to the gratification it gives to other men's ill-nature.

Minutius has a wit that conciliates a man's love at the same time that it is exerted against his fault.
He has an art of keeping the person he rallies in countenance, by insinuating that he himself is guilt of the same imperfection. This he does with a much address, that he seems rather to bewail himself, than fall upon his friend.

It is really monstrous to see how unaccountably prevails among men to take the liberty of displeasing each other. One would think sometimes that the contention is who shall be most disagreeable. Allusion, to past follies, hints which revive what a man has a mind to forget for ever, and deserves that a the rest of the world should, are commonly brought forth even in company of men of distinction. They do not thrust with the skill of fencers, but cut us with the barbarity of butchers. It is, methinks, below the character of men of humanity and good manner: to be capable of mirth while there is an of the company in pain and disorder. They will have the true taste of conversation, enjoy themselves in a communication of each other's excellencies, and not in a triumph over their imperfec-tions. Fortius would have been reckoned a wit, there had never been a fool in the world; he want not to be a beauty, but has that natural pleasure in observing perfection in others, that his own faults are overlooked out of gratitude by all his acquaintance.

After these several characters of men who succeed or fail in raillery, it may not be amiss to reflect a little further what one takes to be the most agreeable kind of it; and that to me appears what the satire is directed against vice, with an air contempt of the fault, but no ill-will to the criminal.
Mr. Congreve's Doris is a master-piece in this kind. It is the character of a woman utterly abandoned; but her impudence, by the finest piece raillery, is made only generosity:—

Peculiar therefore is her way, Whether by nature taught I shall not undertake to say,
Or by experience bought;

But who e'er might obtain'd her grace She can next day disown, And stare upon the strange man's face,
As one she ne'er had known.

So well she can the truth disguise, Such artful wonder frame,
The lover or distrusts his eyes,
Or thinks 'twas all a dream.

Some censure this as lewd or low,
Who are to bounty blind;
For to forget what we bestow Bespeaks a noble mind.

T.

[No. 423.] SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1712.

Nuper idoneus.—Hon. 3 Od. xxvi. 1.

Once fit myself.

I look upon myself as a kind of guardian to the and am always watchful to observe any thing concerns their interest. The present paper be employed in the service of a very fine young man; and the admonitions I give her may not be useful to the rest of the sex. Gloriana shall be the name of the heroine in to-day's entertainment; and when I have told you that she is rich, young, and beautiful, you will believe she not want admirers. She has had since she to town about twenty-five of those lovers who their addresses by way of jointure and settlement: these come and go with great indifference on sides; and as beauteous as she is, a line in a deed had exception enough against it, to outweigh lustre of her eyes, the readiness of her understanding, and the merit of her general character.
Among the crowd of such cool adorers, she has who are very assiduous in their attendance.
There is something so extraordinary and artful in manner of application, that I think it but common justice to alarm her in it. I have done it in the following letter:—

MADAM,

I have for some time taken notice of two gentlemen who attend you in all public places, both of whom have also easy access to you at your own house. But the matter is adjusted between them; Damon, who so passionately addresses you, has sign upon you; but Strephon, who seems to be erent to you, is the man who is, as they have said it, to have you. The plot was laid over a glass of wine; and Strephon, when he first thought of it, proposed to Damon to be his rival. The secret of his breaking of it to him, I was so placed nigh; that I could not avoid hearing. 'Damon ' said he, with a deep sigh, 'I have long languished for that miracle of beauty, Gloriana: and I will be very steadfastly my rival, I shall certainly obtain her. Do not,' continued he, 'be led at this overture; for I go upon the knowledge of the temper of the woman, rather than any other, that I should profit by an opposition of your affections to those of your humble servant. Gloriana has very good sense, a quick relish of the sa-tisfactions of life, and will not give herself, as the majority of women do, to the arms of a man to whom she is indifferent. As she is a sensible woman, excesses of rapture and adoration will not move her affection; but he that has her must be the object of desire, not her pity. The way to this end I take to be, that a man agreeable, without woman he loves. Neas to sigh and die for great respect toward thoughts as a lover the most amiable shall be received with Damon, who has his all, easily fell into serve, that wherever You see he carries dress and manner, a contrary of Strepho ceeded so far, that Strephon, and turn

They meet and con and the letter which day was a contrivanc When you saw the turned away with a tintence!' you gave without mortifying
'

"What I am con
the disposal of your are doing, and exam contradicts you in c who has a value for one that loves you.
his behaviour the sensibly obtains you disinterested in the these corresponden Strephon makes his Damon has tired yo are very discreet, y escape the toils so to be disagreeable in without it. All the fully watched, and gence gives your lov will please, Madam take all the necessa is amiable to you be

"I am, Madam,

"Strephon makes graces; for most v little spirit of pride good effects of both of courtship. He re Damon in the follow speed."

"All goes well:
dare say hates me if visit.

The comparison o languishment strike pect of very agreeab former, and abhorre one like the latter. pleased with another advancing yourself playing into each o I cannot tell how stand such a siege.
afraid is irretrieva many opportunities that all which is le now she is advised, and beginning again

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ed for him.
be avoided.
r, they have an occasion-one to the
at a distance lots for the which concern that, while I
T.

1712.

quas.
I Ep xi 3a rings
rings.

June 24.

choose his ch to blame, nt, take such s own; and re a man is necessity of ill e-r only as possible.
eat what has how ver, I ception, but action. Not he season of all sorts of ss and pleasimproper to at a stock of country life others, and is so only to d retirement.
out the cont them con-
Exchange,
offee-houses,
which serve ated occur-at there the within them-a to consider e they leave

ere very well you gave us f the rather e not to live ly is such a who cannot character; loon of others volence with ry one, even how seldom monly meet
and changes hour and influences all ence between t pleasure of yet any man world will be almost persuaded to believe the contrary; for h can we suppose people should be so industrious make themselves uneasy? What can engage the to entertain and foment jealousies of one another upon every the least occasion? Yet so it is, the are people who (as it should seem) delight in be-troublesome and vexatious, who (as Tully speak modi sunt alacritas et litigandum, 'have a certa cheerfulness in wrangling.' And thus it happens that there are very few families in which there a not bonds and animosities, though it is every one interest, there more particularly, to avoid them, b cause there (as I would willingly hope) no one giv another uneasiness without feeling some share of i —But I am gone beyond what I designed, and ha almost forgot what I chiefly proposed; which wa barely to tell you how hardly we, who pass most our time in town, dispense with a long vacation i the country; how uneasy we grow to ourselves, an to one another, when our conversation is confined inasmuch that, by Michaelmas, it is odds but w come to downright squabbling, and make as fre with one another to our faces as we do with the re of the world behind their backs. After I have tel you this, I am to desire that you would now and give us a lesson of good-humour, a family-piece which, since we are all very fond of you, I hope m have some influence upon us.

After these plain observations, give me leave give you a hint of what a set of company of my a quaintance, who are now gone into the country, ar have the use of an absent nobleman's seat, ha settled among themselves, to avoid the inconven iences above mentioned. They are a collection ten or twelve, of the same good inclination towar each other, but of very different talents and inclin tions; from hence they hope that the variety of the tempers will only create variety of pleasures. B as there always will arise, among the same peopl either for want of diversity of objects, or the ill causes, a certain satiety, which may grow into a humour or discontent, there is a large wing of th house which they design to employ in the nature an infirmary. Whoever says a peevish thing, says any thing which betrays a sourness or indis sition to company, is immediately to be conveyed his chambers in the infirmary; from whence he not to be relieved, till by his manner of submissio and the sentiments expressed in his petition for th purpose, he appears to the majority of the compa to be again fit for society. You are to understan that all ill-natured words or uneasy gestures a sufficient cause for banishment; speaking imp tently to servants, making a man repeat what says, or any thing that betrays inattention or di humour, are also criminal without reprieve. But is provided, that whoever observes the ill-natur fit coming upon himself, and voluntarily retur shall be received at his return from the infirma with the highest marks of esteem. By these a other wholesome methods, it is expected that, if th cannot cure one another, yet at least they ha taken care that the ill-humour of one shall not troublesome to the rest of the company. There a many other rules which the society have establish for the preservation of their ease and tranquili the effects of which, with the incidents that ar among them, shall be communicated to you fre time to time, for the public good, by T "Sir, your most humble Servant,

"H. O."

No. 425.] TUESDAY, JULY 8, 1712.

Prigora mite-cant Zephyris: ver proterit astaslinteritura, simulPomifer autumnus fruges effuderit, et moxBrama recurrit iners.—Hos. 4 Od. vii. 9.The cold grows soft with western gales,The summer over spring prevails,But yields to autumn's fruitful rain,As this to winter storms and hail:Each loss the hasting moon repairs again.

SIR W. TEMPLE.

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“THERE is hardly any thing gives me a more sensible delight than the enjoyment of a cool still evening after the uneasiness of a hot sultry day. Such a one I passed not long ago, which made me rejoice when the hour was come for the sun to set, at I might enjoy the freshness of the evening in my garden, which then affords me the pleasantest hours I pass in the whole four-and-twenty. I immediately rose from my couch, and went down into

You descend at first by twelve stone steps into a large square divided into four grass-plots, in each of which is a statue of white marble. This is separated from a large parterre by a low wall; and from hence, through a pair of iron gates, you are led to a long broad walk of the finest turf, set on each side with tall yews, and on either hand bordered by a canal, which on the right divides the walk from a wilderness parted into a variety of alleys and arbours, and on the left from a kind of amphitheatre, which the receptacle of a great number of oranges and apples. The moon shone bright, and seemed then most agreeably to supply the place of the sun, lighting me with as much light as was necessary to cover a thousand pleasing objects, and at the same time divested of all power of heat. The reflection it in the water, the fanning of the wind rustling the leaves, the singing of the thrush and nightingale, and the coolness of the walks, all conspired to make me lay aside all displeasing thoughts, and brought me into such a tranquillity of mind, as is, I believe, the next happiness to that of hereafter. In this sweet retirement I naturally fell into the repetition of some lines out of a poem of Milton's, which entitles Il Penseroso, the ideas of which were justly suited to my present wanderings of thought.

Sweet bird! that shunn'st the noise of folly,Most musical! most melancholy!Thee, chauntress, oft, the woods among,I woo to hear thy ev'ning song:And missing thee I walk unseenOn the dry smooth-shaven green,To behold the wand'ring moon,Riding near her highest noon;Like one that hath been led astrayThrough the heaven's wide pathless way;And oft, as if her head she bow'd,Stooping through a fleecy cloud.Then let some strange mysterious dreamWave with its wings in airy stream,Of lively portraiture display'dSoftly on my eyelids laid:And, as I wake, sweet music breatheAbove, about, or underneath,Sent by spirits to mortals' good,Or the unseen genius of the wood.

I reflected then upon the sweet vicissitudes of life and day, on the charming disposition of the seasons, and their return again in a perpetual circle: oh! said I, that I could from these my declining years return again to my first spring of youth and vigour; but that, alas! is impossible! all that remains within my power is to soften the inconveniences I feel, with an easy contented mind, and the enjoyment affords me. In a bank of flowers, whether it were my present thought the genius of the world reduced into the various scenes of life whilst I then say write down, and “The first part towards me was a shape, though by exact proportion a little more time ever, there was such satisfaction in the desirable form than in a flowing man of flowers: he had a narcissus in his sprang up under at his approach. I tumnus on the occasion. After this, I was reflected with a desire to see a man come sword drawn. It was Mars, who the attendants of softer appearance ornament but he his own cestus, with a globe, which she in her left hand she had followed the Graces one another: they moved to the second ground alternately the three Months. March advanced in his look a lour month which was as he came forward more mild and gentle looked with so soft not not but lame way for April. It was imaginable, and he him: his look was immediately returned remained fixed in a by Cupid, with his let fly an arrow: heard a confused ecstasies, and tendancy, and as many all which the wind had reached my man advance in age; his complexion hair black, and beneath his shoulder hung loosely upon step after the Spring cool fountains which particularly well fanned him with visions who walked near the most agreeable fingers of roses, and the other was Venus

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ht whilst it and tales and Ceres danced a d cynobals.
he retained ing; but the orous treat,
st to faint,
star levelled n, and made little under which were number of he had gart e the col ar
I thought ne for going ich he fore side with a from a horn Pomona fol d, with Bac ompanied by vans. Sc looks to pro ery of these I sought with ne from the s in this di ade, found flowed close e of an old he had was his eyes were with a great in furs, but at his limbs the ground,
nself had it and Necess him on each s was one of he advanced he most de part of his satisfactio nt, and jests
; but as he ape so little as bald, and d deformed.
represent a dagger all d Su-priou all, the most thae and the shape, etc was stoane hand and an Behind Ne
with a lamp l, and when rugged brow as almost to ess of Choie assed on ther distinction to only note or
—
dy, with being less deprecating, as they discovered more or less haste towards the grateful return of Spring."—Z.

No. 426.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 9, 1712.

—Quid non mortalia pectora cogis, Aurea sacra famas?—VIRG. Æn. iii. 66.

O cursed labour of pernicious gold!
What bonds of faith can impious lucre hold.—DANIEL

A very agreeable friend of mine, the other day, carrying me in his coach into the country to dinner, fell into discourse concerning the "care of parents due to their children," and the "piety of children towards their parents." He was reflecting upon the succession of particular virtues and qualities there might be preserved from one generation to another, if these regards were reciprocally held in veneration; but as he never fails to mix an air of mirth and good-humour with his good sense and reasoning, he entered into the following relation:—

"I will not be confident in what century, or under what reign it happened, that this want of mutual confidence and right understanding between father and son was fatal to the family of the Valentines in Germany. Basilus-Valentinus was a person who had arrived at the utmost perfection in the hermetic art, and initiated his son Alexandrinus in the same mysteries: but, as you know they are not to be attained but by the painful, the pious, the chaste, and pure of heart. Basilus did not open to him, because of his youth, and the deviations too natural to it, the greatest secrets of which he was master, as well knowing that the operation would fall in the hands of a man so liable to errors in life as Alexandrinus. But believing, from a certain disposition of mind as well as body, his dissolution was drawing nigh, he called Alexandrinus to him, and as he lay on a couch, erect-against which his son was seated, and prepared by sending out servant one after another, and admonition to examine that no one overheard them, he revealed the most important of his secrets with the solemnity and language of an adept. 'My son,' said he, 'many have been the watchings, long the lucubrations, constant the labours of thy father, not only to gain a great and plentiful estate to his posterity, but also to take care that he should have no posterity. Be not amazed my child; I do not mean that thou shalt be taken from me, but that I will never leave thee, and consequently cannot be said to have posterity. Behold my dearest Alexandrinus, the effect of what was propagated in nine months. We are not to contradict Nature, but to follow and to help her; just as long as an infant is in the womb of its parent, so long are these medicines of revivification in preparing. Observe this small phial and this little gallipot—in this anguent, in the other a liquor. In these, my child, are collected such powers, as shall revive the springs of life when they are yet but just ceased, and give new strength, new spirits, and in a word, will restore all the organs and sense of the human body to as great a duration as it has before enjoyed from its birth to the day of the appointment of these my medicines. But, my beloved son, care must be taken to apply them within ten hours after the breath is out of the body, while yet the clay is warm with its late life, and yet capable of resurrection. I find my frame grown crazy with perpetual toil and meditation; and I conjure you as soon as I am dead, to anoint me with this anguent; and when you see me begin to move, put into my lips this inestimable liquor, else the lot of the ointment will be ineffectual. By this means you will give me life as I have you, and we will say that hour mutually lay aside the authority of having bestowed life on each other, live as brethren, and prepare new medicines against such another period of time as will demand another application of the same restoratives.' In a few days after these wonderful ingredients were delivered to Alexandrinus, Basilus departed this life. But such was the pious sorrow of the son at the loss of so excellent a father, and the first transports of grief had so wholly disabled him from all manner of business, that he never thought of the medicines till the time to which his father had limited their efficacy was expired. To all the truth, Alexandrinus was a man of wit and leisure, and considered his father had lived out his natural time; his life was long and uniform, suitable to the regularity of it; but that he himself, poor sinner, wanted a new life, to repent of a very bad one hitherto, and, in the examination of his heart, resolved to go on as he did with this natural ending of his, but to repent very faithfully, and spend crypiously the life to which he should be restored by application of these rarities, when time should come, to his own person.

"It has been observed, that Providence frequently punishes the self-love of men, who would do immorally for their own offspring, with children very much below their characters and qualifications; inasmuch that they only transmit their names to be borne by those who give daily proofs of the vanity of the labour and ambition of their progenitors.

"It happened thus in the family of Basilus; for Alexandrinus began to enjoy his ample fortune in all the extremities of household expense, furniture, and indent equipage; and this he pursued till the day of his own departure began, as he grew sensible, to approach. As Basilus was punished with a son very unlike him, Alexandrinus was visited with one of his own disposition. It is natural that ill men should be suspicious; and Alexandrinus, besides the jealousy, had proofs of the vicious disposition of his son Renatus, for that was his name.

"Alexandrinus, as I observed, having very good reasons for thinking it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man living, protected to make sure work, and hope for his success depending from the avarice, not the bounty of his benefactor.

"With this thought he called Renatus to his bedside, and bespoke him in the most pathetic gesture and accent. 'As much, my son, as you have been addicted to vanity and pleasure, as I also have been before you,* you nor I could escape the fame of the good effects of the profound knowledge of our progenitor, the renowned Basilus. His symbol is very well known to the philosophic world; and I will never forget the venerable air of his countenance, when he let me into the profound mysteries of the smaragdine table of Hermes. "It is true," said he, "and far removed from all colour of deities; that which is inferior is like that which is superior, by which are acquired and perfected all the traces of a certain work. The father is the sun, the mother the moon, the wind is in the womb, the earth is the nurse of it, and mother of all perfection. All this must be received with modesty and wisdom." The chymical people carry, in all their religion, a whimsical sort of piety which is ordinary to great lovers of money, and is no more but deceiving themselves of manner, and some affinity to recommend them to hear his father such a mixture serving his attention child, and this life state so much as the German empire. shall not return, assumed a countenance if within an hour whole body, and which he had from converted into pressure to you the between these two father recommended vehemence and hand in profession bit off him, but to provide for his young

"Well, Alexandrinus, body (as our term) tonness of his breadth of his business value of his When he knew he began the work the corpse all over the body stirred the phial."—T.

No. 427.] T

Quantum a rerum turbata sejungas.—We should be as far from speaking

It is a certain to defamation. cent can have no arises from a neg self, and an im Else why should beauty displease to scandal never him, without off of it? A lady tacked somewhat has been very deal of heat and madam, spare me speak ill of nob be ill spoken of. in the number among the mult parable follower is as natural a fo body. It is true shadow cannot from around you, the idle, and the most pleased with the town to the di Were it not for are numbers of p their own houses lips in conversat the other day to and at these wo

* The word "neither" seems omitted here, though it is not in the original publication in folio, or in the edit in 8vo. of 1712.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

atch is brokeading. " Put of merit has news not to have given action before od tidings is al-bearer, as alas! how that state of at is the sub-ever been, spirits. The g Alexander officer, " Sir, r, and not to defending his handsomely, any who have or; there are l to him for are naturally any good to to spread re-as scandalning received itself so un-any report to t, you would be any thing

y whence he o forget who e of so little k it worth his I know, you against the zen." When ishes among and how does e in pain for e! There is and formerly d dissonance, y turned all private many means of a e title of the d, for many hood of gosunprovoked constitution, and decrepit being always tentive from receptacle of but for the ory. There hich is, that livelier me-he was very his, that she hates every serve to vent to disappoint y thing that natter itself;
whole town,
uisitely rest-
th all about n sarcastic re-des.

her, and sometimes in a freak will instantly chan-her habitation. To indulge this humour, she is l about the grounds belonging to the same house is in; and the persons to whom she is to return being in the plot, are ready to receive her at h own chamber again. At stated times the gentl woman at whose house she supposes she is at t time, is sent for to quarrel with, according to h common custom. When they have a mind to dri the jest, she is immediately urged to that degre that she will board in a family with which she h never yet been; and away she will go this instar and tell them all that the rest have been saying them. By this means, she has been an inhabit of every house in the place, without stirring fro the same habitation: and the many stories whi every body furnishes her with, to favour that decei make her the general intelligencer of the town all that can be said by one woman against anothe Thus groundless stories die away, and sometime truths are smothered under the general word, whe they have a mind to discountenance a thing, " Oh this is in my Lady Bluemantle's Memoirs."

Whoever receives impressions to the disadvantag of others, without examination, is to be ~~but~~ in other credit for intelligence than this good Lad Bluemantle, who is subjected to have her ears imposed upon for want of other helps to better info-mation. Add to this, that other scandal-learn-suspend the use of these faculties which she has;
rather than apply them to do justice to their neighbours; and I think, for the service of my fair readers, to acquaint them, that there is a voluntary Lad Bluemantle at every visit in town.—T.

No. 428.] FRIDAY, JULY 11, 1712.

Occupet extremum scilicet.—Hon. Ars. Poet. v. 47
The devil take the hindmost.—ENGLISH PROVERB

It is an impertinent and an unreasonable fan-in conversation, for one man to take up all the di-course. It may possibly be objected to me myself that I am guilty in this kind, in entertaining the town every day, and not giving so many able persons, wh have it more in their power, and as much in the inclination, an opportunity to oblige mankind with their thoughts. " Besides," said one whom I love heard the other day, " why must this paper turn altogether upon topics of learning and morality?
Why should it pretend only to wit, humour, or til-like—things which are useful only to amuse men: literature and superior education? I would hat it consist also of all things which may be necessar or useful to any part of society; and the mechan-art should have their place as well as the liberal The ways of gain, husbandry, and thrift, will serv a greater number of people, than discourses upo what was well said or done by such a philosopher here, general, or poet."—I no sooner heard th critic talk of my works, but I minuted what he ha said; and from that instant resolved to enlarge th plan of my speculations, by giving notice to all pe-sons of all orders, and each sex, that if they a pleased to send me discourses, with their names at places of abode to them, so that I can be satisfie the writings are authentic, such their labours sh be faithfully inserted in this paper. It will be much more consequence to a youth, in his apprenticeship, to know by what rules and arts such a o became sheriff of London, than to see the sign-one of his own quality with a hen's heart in the hand. The world, indeed, is enchanted with romantic and improbable achievements, when the plain path to respective greatness and success, in the way of life a man is in, is wholly overlooked. Is it possible that a young man at present could pass his time better than in reading the history of stocks, and knowing by what secret springs they have such sudden ascents and falls in the same day? Could he be better conducted in his way to wealth, which is the great article of life, than in a treatise dated from Change-alley by an able proficient there? Nothing certainly can be more useful, than to be well instructed in his hopes and fears; to be diffident when others exult; and with a secret joy buy when others think it their interest to sell. I invite all persons, who have any thing to say for the profitable information of the public, to take their turns in my paper; they are welcome, from the late noble inventor of the longitude, to the humble author of strops for razors. If to carry ships in safety, to give help to people tossed in a troubled sea, without knowing to what shore they bear, what rocks to avoid, or what coast to pray for in their extremity, be a worthy labour, and an invention that deserves a statue; at the same time, he who has found means to let the instrument, which is to make your visage less horrid and your person more smug, easy in the operation, is worthy of some kind of good reception. If things of high moment meet with renown, those of little consideration, since of any consideration, are not to be despised. In order that no merit may lie hid, and no art unimproved, I repeat it, that I call artificers, as well as philosophers, to my assistance in the public service. It would be of great use if we had an exact history of the successes of every great shop within the city-walls, what tracts of land have been purchased by a constant attendance within a walk of thirty foot. If it could also be noted in the equipage of those who are ascended from the successful trade of their ancestors into figure and equipage, such accounts would quicken industry in the pursuit of such acquisitions, and discountenance luxury in the enjoyment of them.

To diversify these kinds of informations, the industry of the female world is not to be unobserved. She to whose household virtues it is owing, that men do honour to her husband, should be recorded with veneration; she who has wasted his labours, with infamy. When we are come into domestic life in this manner, to awaken caution and attendance to the main point, it would not be amiss to give now and then a touch of tragedy, and describe that most dreadful of all human conditions, the case of bankruptcy: how plenty, credit, cheerfulness, full hopes, and easy possessions, are in an instant turned into poverty, faint aspects, diffidence, sorrow, and misery; how the man, who with an open hand the day before could minister to the extremities of others, is shunned to-day by the friend of his bosom. It would be useful to show how just this is on the negligent, how lamentable on the industrious. A paper written by a merchant might give this island a true sense of the worth and importance of his character: it might be visible, from what he could say, that no soldier entering a breach adventures more for honour, than the trader does for wealth to his country. In both cases, the adventurers have their own advantage; but I know no cases wherein every body else is a sharer in the success.

It is objected by readers of history, that the battles in those narrations are scarce ever to be understood. This misfortune is to be ascribed to the ignorance of historians in giving the forms of fighting from, as we say, the front. But in the discourse I now invite, to and it is necessary using terms of familiar to their readers. I propose, in the circumstances, a proposal; and a well acquainted with sort of intelligible chain and must take off impertinence of those whose circumstances; several arts, professions, it cannot be a vision and instruction appeared.—T.

No. 429.]

Vocibus—
From cheating
To real estate

"MR. SP.

"Since I gave my company which I have received, I have received a great deal of information of an infirmity has had a particular relation to persons, who had a great deal of accord, and not the reasons of it in memorials.

"The Memorial

"Humbly

"That, considering I have been accompanied with me, gone into exile.

"She is sensible of insufferable creature.

"That she does again, she might be thought to be a good address or comfort of the common.

"That she does one person should other.

"Lastly, that a particular person is an admiration.

"She therefore place might be the same manner did but report made them so.

"There appears a memorial very me, that the a much that this praised, was a trap to purchase the table unan-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

Lydia Le...

of quality :

nor ill.

any.

be her apart-merry with them if he

Lady Lydia

Iden. I : of

at he is too gs matter of minster-hall, ned, only be-serted it was to anything.

orget him, if himself he wld

be sufficient ly, infirmary, in smith who h

on.

elf, by abstr-

company.

room as if he

with a matted thout being s, and helps

t with mode-

alth he is op-

our.

get the word

on his care

thout his sad

t.

Exp.

the infirmary.

cept that he scours, con-

sick.

the sun, but into this un-

is sick.

o, by his own and therefore to it.

That he is conscious there is nothing more improper than such a complaint in good company; in that they must pity, whether they think the complainant ill or not; and that the complainant may make a silly figure, whether he is pitted or not.

Your petitioner humbly prays, that he may have time to know how he does, and he will make his appearance.'

The valetudinarian was likewise easily excused and this society, being resolved not only to make their business to pass their time agreeably for the present season, but also to commence such habits in themselves as may be of use in their future conduct in general, are very ready to give into a fancy of real incapacity to join with their measures, in order to have no humourist, proud man, imperious or sufficient fellow, break in upon their happiness. Great evils seldom happen to disturb company; but indulgence in particularities of humour is the secret of making half our time hang in suspense, or waste away under real disclosures.

Among other things, it is carefully provided that there may not be disagreeable familiarities, as one is to appear in the public rooms undressed, or enter abruptly into each other's apartment without intimation. Every one has hitherto been so careful in his behaviour, that there has but one offender, in ten days' time, been sent into the infirmary, and that was for throwing away his cards at whist.

He has offered his submission in the following terms —

The humble Petition of Jeffrey Hotspur, Esq.

Sheweth,

Though the petitioner swore, stamped, and threw down his cards, he has an imaginable respect to the ladies, and the whole company.

That he humbly desires it may be considered in the case of gaming, there are many motives which provoke to disorder.

That the desire of gain, and the desire of victory are both thwarted in losing.

That all conversations in the world, have indulged human infirmity in this case.

Your petitioner therefore most humbly prays that he may be restored to the company; and he hopes to bear ill-fortune with a good grace for the future, and to demean himself so as to be no more than cheerful when he wins, than grave when he loses.' —T.

No. 430.] MONDAY, JULY 14, 1712.

Quare peregrinum, vicina rauca reclamat.

Hier. 1 Ep. xvii. 62.

—The crowd replies,

Go seek a stranger to relieve thy lies.—CRASH.

" Sir,

"As you are Spectator-general, you may with authority censure whatever looks ill, and is offensive to the sight; the worst nuisance of this kind, we think, is the scandalous appearance of poor in parts of this wealthy city. Such miserable objects affect the compassionate beholder with dismal ideas, discompose the cheerfulness of his mind, and deprive him of the measure that he might otherwise take in surveying the grandeur of our metropolis. Who can, without remorse, see a disabled sailor, the purveyor of our luxury, destitute of necessities? Who can behold an honest soldier, that brave withstood the enemy, prostrate and in want among his friends? It were endless to mention all the variety of wretchedness, and the numberless poor that not only singly, but in companies, implore your charity. Spectacles of this nature every where occur; and it is unaccountable that, amongst the many lamentable cries that infest this town, your comptroller-general should not take notice of the most shocking, viz. those of the needy and afflicted. I cannot but think he waved it merely out of good breeding, choosing rather to stifle his resentment than upbraid his countrymen with inhumanity; however, let not charity be sacrificed to popularity; and if his ears were deaf to their complaints, let not your eyes overlook their persons. There are, I know, many impostors among them. Lameness and blindness are certainly very often acted; but can those who have their sight and limbs employ them better than in knowing whether they are counterfeited or not? I know not which of the two misapplies his senses most, he who pretends himself blind to move compassion, or he who beholds a miserable object without pitying it. But in order to remove such impediments, I wish, Mr. Spectator, you would give us a discourse upon beggars, that we may not pass by true objects of charity, or give to impostors. I looked out of my window the other morning earlier than ordinary, and saw a blind beggar, an hour before the passage he stands in is frequented with a needle and a thread thriftilly mending his stockings. My astonishment was still greater, when I beheld a lame fellow, whose legs were too big to walk, within an hour after bring him a pot of ale. I will not mention the shakings, distortions, and convulsions, which many of them practise to gain at alms; but sure I am they ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate. They, it seems, relieve their posts according to their talents. There is the voice of an old woman never begins to beg till nine in the evening; and then she is destitute of lodging, turned out for want of rent, and has the same ill fortune every night in the year. You should employ an officer to hear the distress of each beggar that is constant at a particular place, who is ever in the same tone, and succeeds because his audience is continually changing, though he does not alter his lamentation. If we have nothing else for our money, let us have more invention to be cheated with. All which is submitted to your spectatorial vigilance; and

"I am, Sir,

"Your most humble Servant."

"Sir, 1777, 1778

"I was last Sunday highly transported at our parish church; the gentleman in the pulpit pleaded movingly in behalf of the poor children, and they for themselves much more forcibly by singing a hymn; and I had the happiness to be a contributor to this little religious institution of innocents, and I am sure I never disposed of my money more to my satisfaction and advantage. The inward joy I find in myself, and the good-will I bear to mankind, make me heartily wish these pious works may be encouraged, that the present promoters may reap the delight, and posterity the benefit, of them. But whilst we are building this beautiful edifice, let not the old ruins remain in view to sully the prospect. Whilst we are cultivating and improving this young hopeful offspring, let not the ancient and helpless creatures be shamefully neglected. The crowds of poor, or pretended poor, in every place, are a great reproach to us, and eclipse the glory of all other charity. It is the utmost reproach to a poor man and his family. I hope you will consider us the history of gradations towards London and V

"I am,

"Mr. S.

"I beg you very great indignation, though, I think, Sir, the strange people take in of some husbands some wives. I only fit for me before both. I fault I speak you must know young ladies of countenance and she did not a discourse upon and said she hour; then felt creature, who her husband's to him; which cries Lucina, But lest I should write against, correct such m

For h

And v

"I

T.

No. 431.]

Quid dulcius hoc cuique liberi? What is there in

I HAVE lately seen several unhappy felicities of our families of children conduct of parents which led to the and girl to the give the reader in which time taining him w all that was re of their life a head of this p tion, "What own children present make in the educat

"Mr. S.

"I am now year, and do satisfaction still the time day of my ma very great es the vices of "

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

give me the as put to a eived orders have no re-fifteen I was d, out of my poverty and ried, and I ou the under-er, we both han we were re of liberty,
I am now a gentleman.
Servant,
NTFREE."

's, who is a ing me, till ich time my school, with
I had been been there achen, I saw two or three ndful, went two months pennyworth but one day my teeth, it the spitting huess on my till I had pipe. I for-pipes three l with thirty-belonged to erness. He ing of pipes, soon tired of x of our last e black wax leman. Two bits, a certain d among the lly delighted carce, I fast-wall, which I in that time ds our neighhappiest creaconscience, I in my chamilling to stir, ome. I then ll to scran-
I am certain,
dding-dinner,
fe was in the called down.
ade me call e blessing I e, turns him-r this (point-added he, 'is was a plumplooks as if ' My goverred my father l told him I ther, and that I was almost eaten up with the green-sickness, he orders being never to cross me. But this magnified but little with my father, who presently, in a kind of pet, paying for my board, took me home with him. I had not been long at home, but one Sunday at church (I shall never forget it) I saw a young neighbouring gentleman that pleased me hugely. I liked him of all men I ever saw in my life, and began to wish I could be as pleasing to him. The very next day he came, with his father, a visitant to our house: we were left alone together with directions on both sides to be in love with one another and in three weeks' time we were married. I regained my former health and complexion, and am now as happy as the day is long. Now, Mr. Spectator, I desire you would find out some name for these craving damsels, whether dignified or distinguished under some or all of the following denominations to wit, 'Trash-eaters, Oatmeal-chewers, Pipo-champers, Chalk-lickers, Wax-nibblers, Coal-scranchers, Wall-peelers, or Gravel-diggers;' and, good Sir, do your utmost endeavour to prevent (by exposing) this unaccountable folly, so prevailing among the young ones of our sex, who may not meet with such sudden good luck, as,

"Sir, your constant Reader, and very humble Servant,

"SABINA GREEN,

"NOW SABINA REATFREE."

T.

No. 432.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 16, 1772.

Inter strepit anser olores.—VINO. ECL. IX. 26.
He gabbles like a goose amidst the swan-like quire.—DARWIN

"MR. SPECTATOR, Oxford, July 14.

"ACCORDING to a late invitation in one of your papers to every man who pleases to write, I have sent you the following short dissertation against the vice of being prejudiced.

"Your most humble Servant."

"Man is a sociable creature, and a lover of glory whence it is, that when several persons are united in the same society, they are studious to lessen the reputation of others, in order to raise their own. The wise are content to guide the springs in silence and rejoice in secret at their regular progress. To prate and triumph is the part allotted to the trifling and superficial. The geese were providentially ordained to save the Capitol. Hence it is, that the invention of marks and devices to distinguish parties is owing to the beaux and belles of this island. Hats, moulded into different cocks and pinnacles have long bid mutual defiance; patches have been set against patches in battle array; stocks have risen or fallen in proportion to head-dresses; and peace or war been expected, as the white or the red hood hath prevailed. These are the standard-bears in our contending armies, the dwarfs and squires who carry the impresses of the giants or knights not born to fight themselves, but to prepare the way for the ensuing combat.

"It is a matter of wonder to reflect how far men of weak understanding, and strong fancy, are hurried by their prejudices, even to the believing that the whole body of the adverse party are a band of villains and demons. Foreigners complain that the English are the proudest nation under heaven. Perhaps they too have their share; but be that as it will, general charges against bodies of men is a fault I am writing against. It must be owned, our shame, that our common people, and most who have not travelled, have an irrational contempt for the language, dress, customs, and even the shape and minds of other nations. Some men, otherwise of sense, have wondered that a great genius should spring out of Ireland; and think you mad in affirming that fine odes have been written in Lapland.

"This spirit of rivalry, which heretofore reigned in the two universities, is extinct, and almost overgrown by the spirit of college and college. In parishes and schools, the thirst of glory still obtains. At the seasons of football and cock-fighting, these little republics resume their national hatred to each other. My servant in the country is verily persuaded, that the parish of the enemy hath not one honest man in it.

"I always hated satires against woman, and satires against man; I am apt to suspect a stranger who laughs at the religion of the faculty; my spleen rises at a dull rogue, who is severe upon mayors and aldermen; and was never better pleased than with a piece of justice executed upon the body of a Templar, who was very arch upon parsons.

"The necessities of mankind require various employments; and whoever excels in his province is worthy of praise. All men are not educated after the same manner, nor have all the same talents. Those who are deficient deserve our compassion, and have a title to our assistance. All cannot be bred in the same place; but in all places there arise, at different times, such persons as do honour to their society, which may raise envy in little souls, but are admired and cherished by generous spirits.

"It is certainly a great happiness to be educated in societies of great and eminent men. Their instructions and examples are of extraordinary advantage. It is highly proper to instil such a reverence of the governing persons, and concern for the honour of the place, as may spur the growing members to worthy pursuits and honest emulation; but to swell young minds with vain thoughts of the dignity of their own brotherhood, by debasing and vilifying all others, doth them a real injury. By this means I have found that their efforts have become languid, and their prattle irksome, as thinking it sufficient praise that they are children of so illustrious and ample a family. I should think it a surer as well as more generous method, to set before the eyes of youth such persons as have made a noble progress in fraternities less talked of; which seems tacitly to reproach their sloth, who loll so heavily in the seats of mighty improvement. Active spirits hereby would enlarge their notions; whereas, by a servile imitation of one, or perhaps two, admired men, in their own body, they can only gain a secondary and derivative kind of fame. These copies of men, like those of authors or painters, run into affectations of some oddness, which perhaps was not disagreeable in the original, but sits ungracefully on the narrow-souled transcriber.

"By such early corrections of vanity, while boys are growing into men, they will gradually learn not to censure superficially; but imbibe those principles of general kindness and humanity, which alone can make them easy to themselves, and beloved by others.

"Reflections of this nature have expunged all prejudices out of my heart; inasmuch, that though I am a firm Protestant, I hope to see the pope and cardinals without violent emotions; and though I am naturally grave, I expect to meet good company at Paris.

"I am, Sir, your obedient Servant."

Spectator—Nos. 63 & 64.

"Mr. Spectator,
"I find you by your corre-
most things; v at present, in th My wife has ta spoke one wor the family, sin must a man do a great obligati

"Mr. Spectator,
"When you in inserting th humble Servan

"Dear Sir,
"It is but th of knowing to received the so it did not com not but think i jest, that offer tulate myself of something f am told, that t lady to make opinion to be such time as I take leave to fool elect,
T.

No. 433.]

Perlege M
Et frou

To banish
Read Ho

THE moral w males, is of a customs, fashio no place in it
cies no females creatures from deavours to ple fines them out natural to them themselves, no approve in the those plans wh the female wor be an unhappy he conversant v

Women, on selves in every of reasonable c
and confused;
appearing amia move, and smil ture of their fac with snares an such animals a were there not it is the male that produces a motions, a soft their complexio As this mut tends to the im observe that m
and brutal natu

being big with child, could not attend the airs, as so great an exigency of state requires that I can give no manner of credit to him; it seems to contradict a fundamental maxim of government which I have before mentioned.
It gives the most probable reason of this error; for he affirms that the general was to be bed, or (as others say) miscarried, the night before the battle: however it was, this error obliged them to call in the male to their assistance; but notwithstanding their efforts to repulse the victorious enemy, continued for many years before they could bring it to a happy conclusion.

campaigns which both sexes passed together and so well acquainted with one another, at the end of the war they did not care for parting the beginning of it they lodged in separate quarters; afterward, as they grew more familiar, they shared their tents promiscuously.

At this time, the armies being checkered with women, they polished apace. The men used to draw their fellow-soldiers into their quarters, and dress their tents with flowers and boughs for decoration. If they chanced to like one more than another, they would be cutting her name in the wall, or chalking out her figure upon the wall, and giving her in a kind of rapturous language, degrees improved into verse and sonnet.
Here, as the first rudiments of architecture, and poetry, among this savage people. Advantage over the enemy, both sexes used together, and make a clattering with their swords and shields, for joy, which in a few years produced several regular tunes and set dances.

As the two armies romped on these occasions, they often complained of the thick bushy beards of their confederates, who thereupon used to prune themselves into such figures as were most pleasing to their female friends and as they had taken any spoils from the enemy, they would make a present of every thing that was showy to the women whom they most admired, and frequently dress the necks, or heads, or the dresses of their mistresses, with any thing which they appeared gay or pretty. The women observed that the men took delight in looking upon them when they were adorned with such trappings and gawds, set their heads at work to find out decorations, and to outshine one another in all the ornaments of war, or the like solemn meetings. On the other hand, the men observing how the women's dresses were set upon finery, begun to embellish their own, and look as agreeably as they could in the eyes of their associates. In short, after a few years conversing together, the women had learned to dress, and the men to ogle; the women grew more lively.

As they had thus insensibly formed one another, upon the finishing of the war, which concluded with an entire conquest of their common country, the colonels in one army married the colonels of the other; the captains in the same manner married the captains to their wives: the whole body of soldiers were matched after the example of their leaders. By this means the two republics incorporated with one another, and became one flourishing and polite government in the middle of the world which they inhabited.—C.

No. 435.] SATURDAY

Nec duo sunt, et forma duplex Nec puer, ut possint? neutrum

Both bodies in a single bod A single body with a doub

Most of the papers I have seen are on subjects that never vary and immutable. Of the serious essays and discourses, and of the sort of speculations, which are in the papers, that take their rise from caprice, and of the kind upon myself as one set of behaviour of my countrymen, and to mark down every custom, or affected form of appearance in the world, are my speculations. The more I write, the more I swell, but I observed that I had not time to muster up them. I had intelligence of a very first time it appeared might here mention several gent subjects, upon which papers. By this means I those irregularities which that I am afraid posterity cient idea of them to me were in no little vogue written. They will be and customs I attacked of my own, and that they not be so whimsical as For this reason, when I several volumes of specu-lated years hence, I con-of old plate, where the the fashion lost.

Among the several fashions already taken notice of, I keeps its ground. I ob-dress themselves in a habit and a perwig, or at least or riband, in imitation of posite sex. As in my account of the mixture of wealth, I shall here take two sexes in one person dislike of this immoderate but, in contempt of said, I am informed that great city are still very female cavaliers.

I remember when I was de Coverley's about the equestrian lady of this plains which lay at a was at that time walking friend; and as his ten-see so strange a sight, who came by us, what try fellow replied, "I your worship's presence produced a great deal of where we had a story of his tenants, who met on the highway, was a Coverley-hall? The male part of the queri-upon the second ques-Coverley was a married

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

changed his note into prodites appeared in Ju-gation should we have excellent satirist! He in her riding-habit as a faur. He would have ing waters, to expatiate digy. He would have ta or Lucretia, to see had transformed them-er treating the sex with all along made use of ring them off from any h they have sometimes however, absolutely ne-tion between the two of the smallest en-

 makes upon the other.
 all not hear any more I am sure my she-dis-y daily lectures, have if they are capable of us dress. This I should t I lately met one of Hyde-park, who looked assurance, and cocked general key to the been I see them singular conclude it is not with-therefore question not ge fashion is to smite eholders. Now to set I would fain have them ether we are not more e entirely female, than y see every day in our let them reflect upon how they would be af-an on horseback in his and at the same time t a night-ride.

fashion was first of all country which has inrope with its levity. I of a whole people, hav-ult with those general kingdoms or common-e of cruelty, which ane compares to that of man people had all but ad them at a blow. I that as liveliness and manner the qualificane same habits and cusoffence to that people hose of our own coun-quishing character, as his our national virtue y for which our British others in the universe, e object that the eye of JULY 21, 1712.

culgi ler.—Juv. Sat. iii. 36. y popularly kill.—DRYDEN. able curiosity, I could not forbear going on Wednesday last to a no small renown for the gallantry of the of Britons, namely, to the Bear-garden, at in-the-Hole: where (as a whitish-brown p into my hands in the street, informed m was to be a trial of skill exhibited betw masters of the noble science of defence, the clock precisely. I was not a little cha the solemnity of the challenge, which ran t

"I, James Miller, serjeant (lately come frontiers of Portugal), master of the nobl of defence, hearing in most places wher been of the great fame of Timothy Buck, of master of the said science, do invite him to and exercise at the several weapons followi

"Back sword,	Single falchion
"Sword and dagger,	Case of falchion
"Sword and buckler,	Quarter staff."

If the generous ardour in James Miller to the reputation of Timothy Buck had somet sembling the old heroes of romance, Timot returned answer in the same paper with spirit, adding a little indignation at bei langed, and seeming to condescend to fig Miller, not in regard to Miller himself, bu as the fame went out, he had fought Park ventry. The acceptance of the combat ran words:

"I, Timothy Buck, of Clare-market, mast noble science of defence, hearing he did Parkes* of Coventry, will not fail (God wi meet this fair inviter at the time and p pointed, desiring a clear stage and no Vivat Regina."

I shall not here look back on the spectacl Greeks and Romans of this kind, but mus this custom took its rise from the ages of errantry; from those who loved one woman that they hated all men and women else; fr who would fight you, whether you were or of their mind; from those who demanded bat of their contemporaries, both for adm mistress or discommending her. I cannot but lament, that the terrible part of the anc is preserved, when the amorous side of gotten. We have retained the barbarity, the gallantry of the old combatants. I co methinks, these gentlemen had consulted a promulgation of the conflict. I was obl fair young maid, whom I understood to Elizabeth Preston, daughter of the Keepe garden, with a glass of water; who I imagin have been, for form's sake, the general re tive of the lady fought for, and from her be proper Amaryllis on these occasions. It we run better in the challenge, "I, James Mi jeant, who have travelled parts abroad, a last from the frontiers of Portugal, for th Elizabeth Preston, do assert that the said I

* On a large tomb in the great church-yard of C the following inscription.

"To the memory of Mr. John Sparkes, a native of he was a man of a mild disposition, a gladiator by who, after having fought 356 battles in the princip Europe with honour and applause, at length quietly sheathed his sword, and with Christian resignation, to the grand victor in the 52d year of his age.

Anno salutis Aemanae

His friend, Serjeant Miller, here mentioned, a m athletic accomplishments, was advanced afterwards of a captain in the British army, and did nobly Scotland under the Duke of Cumberland in 1743.

the fairest of women." Then the answer; "I Timothy Buck, who have stayed in Great Britain during all the war in foreign parts for the sake of Susannah Page, do deny that Elizabeth Preston is so fair as the said Susannah Page. Let Susannah Page look on, and I desire of James Miller no favour."

This would give the battle quite another turn; and a proper station for the ladies, whose complexion as disputed by the sword, would animate the discontents with a more gallant incentive than the expectation of money from the spectators; though I could not have that neglected, but thrown to that air one whose lover was approved by the donor.

Yet, considering the thing wants such amendments, it was carried with great order. James Miller came on first, preceded by two disabled drummers, to show, I suppose, that the prospect of maimed bodies did not in the least deter him. There ascended with the daring Miller a gentleman, whose name I could not learn, with a dogged air, unsatisfied that he was not principal. This son of danger lowered at the whole assembly, and, weighing himself as he marched around from side to side, with a stiff knee and shoulder, he gave intimations of the purpose he smothered till he saw the issue of this encounter. Miller had a blue ribband around the sword arm; which ornament I conceive to be the remain of that custom of wearing a mistress's favour on such occasions of old.

Miller is a man of six foot eight inches in height, of a kind but bold aspect, well-fashioned, and ready of his limbs, and such a readiness as spoke his ease in them was obtained from a habit of motion in military exercise.

The expectation of the spectators was now almost at its height; and the crowd pressing in, several active persons thought they were placed rather according to their fortune than their merit, and took in their heads to prefer themselves from the open area or pit to the galleries. This dispute between assert and property brought many to the ground, and raised others in proportion to the highest seats of turf, for the space of ten minutes, till Timothy Buck came on, and the whole assembly, giving up their disputes, turned their eyes upon the champions. Then it was that every man's affection turned to be or the other irresistibly. A judicious gentleman near me said, "I could, methinks, be Miller's second, but I had rather have Buck for mine." Miller had an audacious look that took the eye; Buck, in perfect composure, that engaged the judgment. Buck came on in a plain coat, and kept all his air till the instant of engaging; at which time he unbuttoned his shirt, his arm adorned with a bandage of red ribband. No one can describe the sudden concern in the whole assembly; the most tumultuous crowd in nature was as still and as much engaged as if all their lives depended on the first blow. The combatants met in the middle of the stage, and balking hands, as removing all malice, they retired with much grace to the extremities of it; from thence they immediately faced about, and approached each other, Miller with a heart full of resolution, Buck with a watchful untroubled countenance: Buck regarding principally his own defence, Miller chiefly thoughtful of annoying his opponent. It is not easy to describe the many escapes and imperceptible defences between two men of quick wits and ready limbs; but Miller's heat laid him open to the rebuke of the calm Buck, by a large wound on the forehead. Much effusion of blood covered his eyes in a moment; he was undoubtedly disabled by the stroke of fighting; his eyes were covered with a flood of tears; he came up, he came disabled him; he was wounded into a warm stroke on the gallery, during and for my part being mostly an unhappy circumstance; a clash of sword concerned he to satisfy her; he was exposed to it, and sewed; Miller declared a fortnight fighting, clearing himself, but Buck denied it, and, that champion.

There is so countable on so take a painful counters. Is of delight? or exercise of pity, able that the skill, the pope would have expected that people's and thought that they had) liable so easily think Tully speaks one would expect abused in his time of it under its fought before spectaculum et in haud scio annon ferro depugnabam nulla, potestem disciplina." thought barbarous but it is so as it when only criminals might receive is impossible that should fortify us

No. 437.]

Tune impune hunc Imperitos rerum, Solicitando et per Ae meretricios an

Shall you escape with men of a liberal and by force of marry harlots?

THE other day
with that pale air times see in your row and private age and sickness she was gay, air

light, I easily forgave her she so severely pays for Flavilla, of whom I am a sullen fool with wealth, lost upon the dolt, who in any thing. Their painful or insipid. The in his absence are not eyes, to the grief and sensation. This poor creature, which, under the se, would have made the into the arms of this Sempronia. Sempronia ts herself in an affluent endship with rich young ful fortunes at their own friends upon worthless her side she insnares in of great estates into the for this purpose, she is ts which can make her sits; she knows all that is well acquainted with busy-bodies, depeudants, rsons of condition in the of a good sum of money, on of Flavilla's mother, r the daughter; and the apparently, in point of could expect, has gained uent attendance of the rather see their children han the happiest of the onspicuous state of life. acquainted with a wo- ances, that she believes ble to her, and advan- l get her, her next step e, whose condition has d wants a sum, yet, in suitable to her. If such ately adorns a worthless hinks convenient, and od humour and sobriety is settled, no importu- e omitted, to hasten the he general, indeed, she ace, that she marries a h, and a moneyless girl hen she has no manner y, when she has a mind one of an estate: she it, that he is illiterate, but makes those imper- uth of his wealth; and with a very grave face, ion with negligence in ren. Exception being e an ignorant booby of e was putting off for a she, "you know there know they have estates, is loaded with presents, ance, and admired by first taste of life, as a breeding. But sure to iniquities, than to raise le as taking away life; g it lastingly unhappy. her fortune, is not so ill as giving the whole and herself to an husband. But Sempronia can administ tion to an unhappy fair at home, by least an agreeable gallant elsewhere. She preach the general condition of all the pe married world, and tell an inexperienced woman, the methods of softening her affl laugh at her simplicity and want of know an "Oh! my dear, you will know better.

The wickedness of Sempronia, one wo should be superlative; but I cannot but e of some parents equal to it: I mean such the greatest endowments and qualificatio bargains. A parent who forces a child o and ingenious* spirit into the arms of a blockhead, obliges her to a crime too od name. It is in a degree the unnatural v of rational and brutal beings. Yet what i common, as the bestowing an accomplish with such a disparity? And I could man who lead miserable lives for want of kno their parents of this maxim, that good a good nature always go together. That w tributed to fools, and called good-nature, inability of observing what is faulty, wh in marriage, into a suspicion of every thin from a consciousness of that inability.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am entirely of your opinion with n the equestrian females, who affect both t iine and feminine air at the same time; a forbear making a presentment against ano of them, who grow very numerous and and since our language is not very capab compound words, I must be contented to only 'the naked-shouldered.' These be not contented to make lovers wherever the but they must make rivals at the same tim you to see Gatty walk the park at high would expect those who followed her and met her would immediately draw their s her. I hope, Sir, you will provide for t that women may stick to their faces for further mischief, and not allow any b traders in beauty to expose more than t of the neck, unless you please to allow t game to those who are very defective in t of the countenance. I can say, to my s present practice is very unfair, when to los death; and it may be said of our beauties, poet did of bullets,

They kill and wound, like Parthians, as they

"I submit this to your animadversion; for the little while I have left,

"Your humble Servant, the langu "Pur

"P. S. Suppose you mended my le made a simile about the 'porcupine;' but that also."

T.

No. 438.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 23

—Animum rege, qui, nisi pareat, Imperat — Hor: l Ep. ii. 62.

—Curb thy soul,
And check thy rage, which must be rul'd or rais'd.

It is a very common expression that v is very good-natured, but very passionate.

* Ingenuous

indeed, is very good-natured, to allow people so much quarter: but I think a man deserves the least indulgence imaginable.

It is said, it is soon over; that is, all the he does is quickly dispatched, which, I have no great recommendation to favour. I know one of these good-natured passionate in a mixed company, even to his own wife, such things as the most inveterate enemy would not have spoken, even in imagination. It is certain that quick sensibility is incompatible with a ready understanding; but why not that good understanding call to itself all on such occasions, to master that sudden impulse to anger? One of the greatest souls now in the world* is the most subject by nature to anger, so famous, from a conquest of himself that he is the known example when you talk of command of a man's self. To contain it of anger, is the worthiest discipline we can give to ourselves. When a man has made any progress in this way, a frivolous fellow in a passion is to him contemptible as a froward child. It ought to be the study of every man for his own quiet and satisfaction.

When he stands combustible and ready to upon every thing that touches him, life is as to himself as it is to all about him. Syncroplus, of all men living, the most ridiculous is ever offending and begging pardon. If he enters the room without what he was sent for, "That blockhead," begins he—"Gentlemen, your pardon, but servants now-a-days"—Long plates are laid, they are thrown into the fire; the room; his wife stands by in pain for which he sees in her face, and answers as if he heard all she was thinking:—"Why? what is it? Why don't you take care to give orders?" His friends sit down to a tasteless study of every thing, every minute expecting insults from his impertinent passions. In a word, to eat with, or visit Syncroplus, is no other thing to see him exercise his family, exercise his patience, and his own anger.

Monstrous that the shame and confusion in his good-natured angry man must needs be to his friends, while he thus lays about him, does he him so much reflection, as to create an argument. This is the most scandalous disuse of imagination: all the harmless part of him is less than that of a bull-dog, they are tame no more than they are not offended. One of these tured angry men shall, in an instant, assemble so many allusions to secret circumstances as are enough to dissolve the peace of all his friends, while he is acquainted with in a word of an hour, and yet the next moment be the tured man in the whole world. If you would reason in its purity, without mixture of reason, it is represented in a mad hero, drawn by a poet. Nat. Lee makes his Alexander say "I begone! and give a whirlwind room, Will blow you up like dust! Avaunt!

I see but meanly represents my toil.
All discord!
I revenge! disdain and indignation!
My swollen breast, make way for fire and tempest.
Rain is burst, debate and reason quenched; Storm is up, and my hot bleeding heart With the rack; while passions, like the wind, Up to heaven, and put out all the stars.

A passionate fellow in town talks half the day

* Lord Somers.

with as little consideration much out of his power.

The next disagreeable gentleman, is one of anger, and he is what a peevish fellow. A peevish fellow in himself for being out of his capacity for delight in who are happier than he. In shaws, or other well-known thing that is said or done should be physic mixed with these fellows eat in good anger passes, forsooth, that will not admit of none above the character of a man's livery ought to be things among men of pass the censure, and eye of reason.

No man ought to be in humour, whim, or passion any who do not wait upon the peevish fellow is to deal mightily in what those sort of people eat those below them, yet their talk to their servants. You are a fine fellow; piece;" and the like.

ing, the storming, the species and subordinating, cured, by knowing they and how pitiful is the forced! But I am in the scene of anger and to have ever known, which writing, and I overheard at a French bookseller's shop a very learned man and though a person of in understanding any himself. The composition whimsical perplexity of is perfectly new. After said the seller to the bookseller long asked you to send the French sermons I said the chapman, "but cannot find it; it is not to whom I lent it,

"Then, Sir, here is the home that, and please friend," replied he, "not to know that one of your library as in your shop you have lost the first will be paid."—"Sir, you are a young man, learn by this little loss, sities, which you must." "Yes, Sir, but I'll be not lost now, for I said me."—"Friend, your book is lost; and I for a prosperous life, that make you mad, if you." "Sir, there is in this you have the book."—"book; but your passion to be informed that I tion of yourself to the d

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

tell you, that an impatient ever any thing many things your temper pain; there-
book is lost, itself.—T.*

24, 1712.

ector.
Metam. xii. 57.
devise;
as situated in rforated with gave her the the heavens, structure of it anner, that it in the whole
says the poet,
bbub of low,
st spent and general ren-

egard to the as Ovid's paiverse. The gh the whole complaint that ews-gatherers their several eir respective with the dis-kingdom or loyed. The sible and un-gs and rulers ose voluntary ars of a great ecret methods prudent cauthy thought, amber; for a od that which lers to make y should take

anner, that it
whose life and man who is hat of a spy,
He can have conscience, to s, where the f vindicating to carry that true. There not hear and he naturally e, aggravates e, and misre-

m. allant, afterward
d; and the sub-ey a volume of the last to which star would

presents what is indiffesent. Nor is it to be desired but that such ignominious wretches let their private passions into these their clandestine informations, and often wreak their particular spite or malice against the person whom they are set to watch. It is a pleasant scene enough, which an Italian author describes between a spy and a cardinal who employed him. The cardinal is represented as minuting down every thing that is told him: The spy begins with a low voice, "Such a one, then, vocate, whispered to one of his friends, within my hearing, that your eminence was a very great patron;" and, after having given his patron's name, take it down, adds, that another called him a most cenary rascal in a public conversation. The cardinal replies, "Very well," and bids him go on. The spy proceeds, and loads him with reports of the same nature, till the cardinal rises in great wrath, calls him an impudent scoundrel, and bids him out of the room.

It is observed of great and heroic minds, that they have not only shown a particular disregard to those unmerited reproaches which have been cast upon them, but have been altogether free from that impertinent curiosity of inquiring after them, or the poor revenge of resenting them. The histories of Alexander and Caesar are full of this kind of instances. Vulgar souls are of a quite contrary character. Dionysius, the tyrant of Sicily, held a dungeon which was a very curious piece of architecture; and of which, as I am informed, there is still to be seen some remains in that island. It was called Dionysius's Ear, and built with several fine windings and labyrinths, in the form of a ear. The structure of it made it a kind of whispering place, but such a one as gathered the voice of him who spoke into a funnel which was placed at the very top of it. The tyrant used to lodge all his state criminals, or those whom he supposed to be engaged together in any evil designs upon him, in this dungeon. He had at the same time an apartment over it, where he used to apply himself to the funnel, and by that means overheard every thing that was whispered in the dungeon. I believe one may venture to affirm, that a Caesar or an Alexander would rather have died by the treason, than have used such disingenuous means for the detecting of it.

A man who in ordinary life is very inquisitive after every thing which is spoken ill of him, passes his time but very indifferently. He is wounded by every arrow that is shot at him, and puts it in the paper of every insignificant enemy to disquiet him. Nay, he will suffer from what has been said of him, when it is forgotten by those who said or heard it. For this reason I could never bear one of those officious friends, that would be telling every malice in port, every idle censure, that passed upon me. The tongue of man is so petulant, and his thoughts so variable, that one should not lay too great stress upon any present speeches and opinions. Truth and obloquy proceed very frequently out of the same mouth upon the same person, and upon the same occasion. A generous enemy will sometimes bestow commendations, as the dearest friend will sometimes refrain from speaking ill. The mind will be indifferent in either of those respects, giving his opinion at random, and praises or disapproves as he finds himself in humour.

I shall conclude this essay with part of a character, which is finely drawn by the Marquis of Chester in the first book of his History, and which gives dively picture of a great man teasing himself with an absurd curiosity.

He had not that application and submission, and reverence for the queen, as might have been expected from his wisdom and breeding; and often crossed her preferences and desires with more rudeness than was natural to him. Yet he was imperiously solicitous to know what her majesty said of him in private, and what resentments she had towards him. And when by some confidants, who ad their ends upon him from those offices, he was informed of some bitter expressions falling from her majesty, he was so exceedingly afflicted and tormented with the sense of it, that sometimes by passionate complaints and representations to the king, sometimes by more dutiful addresses and expostulations with the queen in bewailing his misfortune, he frequently exposed himself, and left his condition worse than it was before, and the éclaircissement commonly ended in the discovery of the persons upon whom he had received his most secret intelligence."—C.

No. 440.] FRIDAY, JULY 25, 1712.

Vivere si recte nescia, decede peritis.—HOR. 2 Ep. li. 213 Learn to live well, or fairly make your will.—POPE.

I have already given my reader an account of a set of merry fellows who are passing their summer together in the country, being provided of a great house, where there is not only a convenient apartment for every particular person, but a large infirmary for the reception of such of them as are any way indisposed or out of humour. Having lately received a letter from the secretary of this society, in order of the whole fraternity, which acquaints me with their behaviour during the last week, I shall now make a present of it to the public.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"We are glad to find that you approve the establishment which we have here made for the retrieving of good manners and agreeable conversation, and shall use our best endeavours so to improve ourselves in this our summer retirement, that we may next winter serve as patterns to the town. But to be sure that this our institution may be no less advantageous to the public than to ourselves, we shall communicate to you one week of our proceedings, leaving you at the same time, if you see any thing faulty in them, to favour us with your admonitions; or you must know, Sir, that it has been proposed amongst us to choose you for our visitor; to which I must further add, that one of the college having declared last week he did not like the Spectator of the day, and not being able to assign any just reason for such his dislike, he was sent to the infirmary nemine contradicente.

"On Monday the assembly was in very good humour, having received some recruits of French claret last morning: when, unluckily, towards the middle of the dinner, one of the company swore at his servant in a very rough manner for having put too much water in his wine. Upon which the president of the day, who is always the mouth of the company, after having convinced him of the impertinence of his passion, and the insult it had made upon the company, ordered his man to take him from the table, and convey him to the infirmary. There was no more sent away that day; this was a gentleman, who is reckoned by some persons one of the greatest wits, and by others one of the greatest

boobies about the character: but a very true one, himself, being brought him himself well upon the wit and laughter might have served had it been due for two or three hopes of recovery, briskest fellows infirmary for having merry. But indulged himself, struing it as a duty to retire into the lions. He was and mirth returned, that he should noise of it, and of the patients, never with him the

"On Tuesday one of the company upon which another, what he did into some warm order to keep them both from infirmary. Not telling us he knew we should have him to be removed in the apartment.

"On Wednesday a letter written in colour twice or three retire into the sented, but despatched, till such of the company, table, and discovering fault with refusing to laugh president told him an uneasy seat, and himself better. A very honest fellow him; his neighbour at the same time ing the same name have to a cat. For the whole, the president sent off.

"On Thursday This was a gentleman understanding. in dispute with a modest elocution answer of his a ordinary, and once have enforced to length driven to more clamorous, the greater impetuosity with a loud thud immediately ordered with water-gruel sufficiently weak.

"On Friday saving only, the

to be released from thing for one another's ed many excuses from selves in an unsociable shut themselves up, never so full as on this es to account for, till, served that it was an at of most of my friends leisure of writing you conclude without assures of our college, as well ment as those who are able servants, though

JULY 26 1712.

—Hon. 3 Od. iii. 7.

ature round him break,
f'd.
er the mighty crack, a falling world.—ASON.

self, is a very helpless

He is subject every mities and misfortunes, all sides; and may be-less casualties, which he prevented had he fore-re are obnoxious to so under the care of One nd has in his hands the that is capable of ano knows the assistance always ready to bestow h such a creature bears ed a Being, is a firm regs and conveniences of him for deliverance out ulties as may befall us. es in this disposition of k and melancholy views o considers himself abto the Supreme Being.

reflects upon his own
, he comforts himself those divine attributes safety and his welfare. ht made up by the Oms support. He is not strength, when he knows

In short, the person Supreme Being is powers wisdom, happy by his benefit of every divine insufficiency in the ful-easy to us, we are com-him, who is thus able to divine goodness having ty, notwithstanding we le had it been forbidwhich might be made use to us, I shall only take s, that we are promised at their trust in him.

But, without considering the supernaturing which accompanies this duty, we may that it has a natural tendency to its own rein other words, that this firm trust and coin the great Disposer of all things, contrib-much to the getting clear of any affliction, bearing it manfully. A person who be-has his succour at hand, and that he act sight of his friend, often exerts himself be-abilities, and does wonders that are not to be by one who is not animated with such a coof success. I could produce instances from of generals, who, out of a belief that they der the protection of some invisible assisnot only encourage their soldiers to do their but have acted themselves beyond what they have done had they not been inspired by a lief. I might in the same manner show he trust in the assistance of an Almighty Be-rally produces patience, hope, cheerfulness other dispositions of the mind that allevi-calamities which we are not able to remove

The practice of this virtue administers a fort to the mind of man in times of pos-affliction, but most of all in the hour When the soul is hovering in the last mo-its separation, when it is just entering on state of existence, to converse with scenes, jects, and companions, that are altogether what can support her under such trementhought, such fears, such anxiety, such assions, but the casting of all her cares upon first gave her being, who has conducted her one stage of it, and will be always with guide and comfort her in her progress eternity?

David has very beautifully represented this reliance on God Almighty in his twenty-third which is a kind of pastoral hymn, and in those allusions which are usual in that writing. As the poetry is very exquisite, present my reader with the following translation of it:—

I.

The Lord my pasture shall prepare,
And feed me with a shepherd's care;
His presence shall my wants supply,
And guard me with a watchful eye;
My noon-day walks he shall attend,
And all my midnight hours defend.

II.

When in the sultry glebe I faint, Or on the thirsty mountain pant:
To fertile vales and dewy meads, My weary, wand'ring steps he leads;
Where peaceful rivers, soft and slow, Amid the verdant landscape flow.

III.

Though in the paths of death I tread, With gloomy horrors overspread, My steadfast heart shall know no ill, For thou, O Lord, art with me still;
Thy friendly crook shall give me aid,
And guide me through the dreadful shade.

IV.

Though in a bare and rugged way, Through deserts, lonely wilds I stray, Thy bounty shall my pains beguile;
The barren wilderness shall smile.
With sudden greens and herbage crown'd,
And streams shall murmur all around.

C.

No. 442.] MONDAY, JULY 28, 1712.

max indocti doctique.—Hos. 2 Ep. l. 117

Those who cannot write, and those who can, me, and scrawl, and scribble, to a man.—POPE.

not know whether I enough explained myself world, when I invited all men to be assistant to this my work of speculation; for I have acquainted my readers, that besides the let- d valuable hints I have from time to time d from my correspondents, I have by me curious and extraordinary papers sent with a (as no one will doubt when they are pub- that they might be printed entire, and with- alteration, by way of Spectator. I must ledge also, that I myself, being the first pro- of the paper, thought I had a right to make my own, by dressing them in my own style, ing out what would not appear like mine, adding whatever might be proper to adapt o the character and genius of my paper, hich it was almost impossible these could correspond, it being certain that hardly m think alike; and, therefore, so many i many Spectators. Besides, I must own akness for glory is such, that, if I con- that only, I might be so far swayed by it, at to wish that no one could write a Spec- sides myself; nor can I deny, but upon the usal of those papers, I felt some secret in- ns of ill-will towards the persons who wrote This was the impression I had upon the iding them; but upon a late review (more ake of entertainment than use), regarding ith another eye than I had done at first (for erting them as well as I could to my own thought I had utterly disabled them from ending me again as Spectators), I found moved by a passion very different from that ; sensibly touched with pity, the softest and enerous of all passions, when I reflected cruel disappointment the neglect of those must needs have been to the writers who atly longed to see them appear in print, , no doubt, triumphed to themselves in the f having a share with me in the applause of lic; a pleasure so great, that none but those e experienced it can have a sense of it. In aner of viewing those papers, I really found d done them justice, there being something mely natural and peculiarly good in some , that I will appeal to the world whether it sible to alter a word in them without doing manifest hurt and violence; and whether e ever appear rightly, and as they ought, but own native dress and colours. And therefore I should not only wrong them, but deprive ld of a considerable satisfaction, should I ger delay the making them public.

I have published a few of these Spectators, not but I shall find the success of them to not surpass, that of the best of my own. An should take all methods to humble himself inion he has of his own performances. When pers appear to the world, I doubt not but I be followed by many others; and I shall ne, though I myself shall have left me but few days to appear in public; but, pre- the general weal and advantage to any com- ns of myself, I am resolved for the future sh any Spectator that deserves it entire, and any alteration; assuring the world (if there can be need of it) that the authors think fit to add them.

I think the best way and useful design will themes of all kinds of preamble of the extrage that may accrue invite all manner of citizens, courtiers, ge- try, and all beaux, rak- housewives, and all female, and however d true wits, whole or ha- natural, acquired, ge- persons of all sorts of whether the severe, th- the agreeable, the t- the serene or cloudy, wardly or easy, the d- and of what manners o- the ambitious or hum- ful, ingenuous or base- public-spirited or self- or circumstance soever- serable, happy or un- poor (whether so thro- of more), healthy or si- whether tall or short- trade, occupation, pro- tion, party, persuasion- soever; who have ev- their business or diver- thy to impart on these- to their several and re- and, as the subjects- humours, or circumst- fitable to the public b- or experience in the- utmost on them by such- receive the inexpress- of seeing their essays- the rest of mankind.

I will not prepos- expectation of the ext- must redound to the- the different thoughts- of persons, according- education, professions- ditions, &c. shall be- clearest and most gen- selves would wish to h-

The thesis proposed- adventurers to write Sp- subject all persons a- thoughts within ten da-

No. 443.] TUES

Sublatam ex oculis quar-Snatch'd from our sight, And fondly would recall

CAMILLA* T

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I TAKE it extreme- conspicuous persons of cognizance, though ou- Britain. I little thou- life, that I should ever- of dear England; but * Mrs. Tofts, who played that name.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

to the intaly are so ars in Eng-but a gene-ance of the te, I behold
s inclining, e, as dying tice to my ature cries, in the per-with the me, I live e has been alted mienties in this ect and ge-
The Itable I have p to me the of disallow-
of hissing, know any ice in sighs, ice with the ften put in en country-es together

ense,
ace;

when I am Hunt. But
a know the ers his ap-creature!
e she moves ave no bois-
, and break dare. Mr. aste, to tell that I know
, but leave your own
were always

FAMILIA. than ever I instant, of edge of that ding world, ood lectures cts on their alse notions ents impose is in a good oper terms.

or copies to selves. Let dence courage. Let not good fortune be imposed on the world for good management, nor poverty be called folly; impute not always bankruptcy to extravagance, nor an estate to foresight. Niggardiness is not good husbandry, nor generosity profusion.

"Honestus is a well-meaning and judicious trader, both in substantial goods, and trades with his own stock, hushes his money to the best advantage, without taking all the advantages of the necessities of his workmen, or grinding the face of the poor. Fortunatus is stocked with ignorance, and consequently with self-opinion; the quality of his goods cannot but be suitable to that of his judgment. Honestus pleases discerning people, and keeps their custom by good usage; makes modest profit by modest means, to the decent support of his family; whilst Fortunatus, blustering always, pushes on, performing much and performing little; with obsequiousness offensive to people of sense, strikes at all, catches much the greater part, and raises a considerable fortune by imposition on others, to the discouragement and ruin of those who trade in the same way.

"I give here but loose hints, and beg you to be very circumspect in the province you have now undertaken: if you perform it successfully, it will be a very great good; for nothing is more wanting than that mechanic industry were set forth with the freedom and greatness of mind which ought always to accompany a man of a liberal education.

"Your humble Servant.

"From my shop under the Royal Exchange July 24."

"R. C.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

July 24, 1712.

"Notwithstanding the repeated censures that your spectatorial wisdom has passed upon people more remarkable for impudence than wit, there are yet some remaining, who pass with the giddy part of mankind for sufficient sharers of the latter, who have nothing but the former qualification to recommend them. Another timely animadversion is absolutely necessary: be pleased, therefore, once for all, to let these gentlemen know, that there is neither mirth nor good-humour in hooting a young fellow out of countenance; nor that it will ever constitute a wit, to conclude a tart piece of buffoonery with a 'What makes you blush?' Pray please to inform them again, that to speak what they know is shocking proceeds from ill-nature and a sterility of brain; especially when the subject will not admit of rallery, and their discourse has no pretences to satire: but what is in their design to disoblige I should be very glad, too, if you would take notice that a daily repetition of the same overbearing insolence is yet more insupportable, and a confirmation of very extraordinary madness. The sudden publication of this may have an effect upon a not too offender of this kind, whose reformation would redound very much to the satisfaction and quiet of

"Your most humble Servant.
"F. R."

T.

No. 411: WEDNESDAY, JULY 30, 1712.

Parturient montes—HON. AGR. POET. v. 129.
The mountain labours?

It gives me much despair in the design on it * Former motto.

Quid dignum tanto feret hic promissor hiatu?
HON. AGR. POET. v. 130

Great cry and little wool.—ENGLISH PROVERB

forming the world by my speculations, when I find there always arise, from one generation to another, successive cheats and bubbles, as naturally as beasts of prey, and those which are to be their food. There is hardly a man in the world, one would think, so ignorant, as not to know that the ordinary quack-doctors, who publish their great abilities in little brown billets, distributed to all who pass by, are to a man impostors and murderers; yet such is the credulity of the vulgar, and the impudence of those professors, that the affair still goes on, and new promises, of what was never done before, are made every day. What aggravates the jest is, that even this promise has been made as long as the memory of man can trace it, yet nothing performed, and yet still prevails. As I was passing along to-day, a paper given into my hand, by a fellow without a nose, tells us as follows what good news is come to town, to wit, that there is now a certain cure for the French disease, by a gentleman just come from his travels.

"In Russel-court, over-against the Cannon-ball, at the Surgeons'-arms in Drury-lane, is lately come from his travels, a surgeon who hath practised surgery and physic both by sea and land, these twenty-four years. He (by the blessing) cures the yellow-jaundice, green-sickness, scurvy, dropsy, surfeits, long sea-voyages, campaigns, and women's miscarriages, lying-in, &c. as some people that has been lame these thirty years can testify; in short, he cureth all diseases incident to men, women, or children."

If a man could be so indolent as to look upon this havoc of the human species, which is made by vice and ignorance, it would be a good ridiculous work to comment upon the declaration of this accomplished traveller. There is something unaccountably taking among the vulgar in those who come from a great way off. Ignorant people of quality, as many there are of such, dote excessively this way; many instances of which every man will suggest to himself, without any enumeration of them. The ignorants of lower order, who cannot, like the upper ones, be profuse of their money to those recommended by coming from a distance, are no less complaisant than the others, for they venture their lives from the same admiration.

"The doctor is lately come from his travels," and has "practised both by sea and land," and therefore cures "the green-sickness, long sea-voyages, campaigns, and lying-in." Both by sea and land! I will not answer for the distempers called sea-voyages and campaigns; but I dare say those of green-sickness and lying-in might be as well taken care of if the doctor stayed ashore. But the art of managing mankind is only to make them stare a little, to keep up their astonishment, to let nothing be familiar to them, but ever to have something in their sleeve, in which they must think you are deeper than they are. There is an ingenious fellow, a barber of my acquaintance, who, besides his broken fiddle and a dried sea-monster, has a twine-cord, strained with two nails at each end, over his window, and the words "rainy, dry, wet," and so forth, written to denote the weather, according to the rising or falling of the cord. We very great scholars are not apt to wonder at this: but I observed a very honest fellow, a chance customer, who sat in the chair before me to be shaved, fix his eye upon this miraculous performance during the operation upon his chin and face. When those and his head also were clearances, he looked grubbing in his eyes at the twine, and altered his mind to a silver sixpence, keep up the appearance only the skeleton tented with a were talking of money of some lame." When the fellow took on came to the th and went off sufficiency.

persons, who at their birth, their lives. A business the p of your ability tor in Mouse-curing cataract bill sets forth. His patients muster-roll, w perial majesty with great suc should be a d by declaring both bursten? the Harp, in that assevera first conception is granted. uncommon in You may be times, let it be sentence in m when I observ eye upon my What a prodig have here take tor, I must m what he seems promise to the man—to wit, two till six, h to bleed for the

No. 445.]

Tanji non ea, a

You say, Lupe
I'm not worth so

This is the will probably that few of our above all other sist under the proaching pea have this new it is qualified lic, will make * Aug. 1, 1712, and every single "Have you seen worth a halfpenn are jumbled together dead sick. The —Swift's Works,

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

amp, and the little, will, I of those than led to us the past. A fac- n, calls this e fall of the h, there was, s, inscribed, he title sold hat abut a et, inscribed, n the same several inge- leave of the ive over so, rhaps under le. Be that e, to give an acquaint my act, in this own heart, s an author ent which is y hours, or my spe-ula- ic. The ar- on the first rmed by my every single ot be able to desirous my heap as pos- comply with together in ead for the the greater ompense for eaders, it is ery paper s d equivalent, vise any one it, does not e better man s not believe mirth or in-

motive which

I cons- der e support of ies who are I fear they er, on such dness, which upbrai me- g my utmost try receives s, I shall o d a member. t man should rejudicial to by the same rson to co- hose labours into his own mies, I must reader, that slots on both sides : men of such poor narrow souls, that they a: not capable of thinking on any thing but with a eye to whig or tory. During the course of th paper I have been accused by these despicable wretches of trimming, time-serving, personal reflection, secret satire, and the like. Now, though in these my compositions, it is visible to any reader of common sense that I consider nothing but m subject, which is always of an indifferent nature how is it possible for me to write so clear of party as not to be open to the censures of those who will applying every sentence, and finding out person and things in it, which it has no regard to?

Several paltry scribblers and declaimers have done me the honour to be dull upon me in reflections of this nature ; but, notwithstanding my name has been sometimes trampled by this contemptible tribe of men, I have hitherto avoided all animae versions upon them. The truth of it is, I am afraid of making them appear considerable by taking notice of them ; for they are like those imperceptible insects which are discovered by the microscope, and cannot be made the subject of observation without being magnified.

Having mentioned those few who have shown themselves the enemies of this paper, I should be very ungrateful to the public did I not at the same time testify my gratitude to those who are its friends, in which number I may reckon many of the most distinguished persons, of all conditions, parties, and professions, in the isle of Great Britain. I am no so vain as to think this approbation is so much due to the performance as to the design. There is and ever will be, justice enough in the world to afford patronage and protection for those who endeavour to advance truth and virtue, without regard to the passions and prejudices of any particular cause or faction. If I have any other merit in me, it is that I have new pointed all the batteries of ridicule. They have been generally planted against persons who have appeared serious rather than absurd ; or at best, have aimed rather at what is unfashionable than what is vicious. For my own part, I have endeavoured to make nothing ridiculous that is not in some measure criminal. I have set up the immoral man as the object of derision. In short, if I have not formed a new weapon against vice and irreligion I have at least shown how that weapon may be put to a right use, which has so often fought the battles of impiety and profaneness.—C.

No. 116.] FRIDAY, AUGUST 1, 1712.

Quid decuit, quid non, quo virtus, quo ferat error

Hon. Ars. Pict. ver. 308.

What fit, what not; what excellent, or ill.—Roscommon

SINCE two or three writers of comedy, who are now living, have taken their farewell of the stage those who succeed them, finding themselves incapable of rising up to their wit, humour, and good sense have only imitated them in some of those loose unguarded strokes, in which they complied with the corrupt taste of the more vicious part of their audience. When persons of a low genius attempt this kind of writing, they know no difference between being merry and being lewd. It is with an eye to some of these degenerate compositions that I have written the following discourse.

Were our English stage but half so virtuous : that of the Greeks or Romans, we should quickly see the influence of it in the behaviour of all the oliter part of mankind. It would not be fashionable to ridicule religion, or its professors: the man of pleasure would not be the complete gentleman; idleness would be out of countenance; and every quality which is ornamental to human nature would meet with that esteem which is due to it.

If the English stage were under the same regulations the Athenian was formerly, it would have the same effect that had, in recommending the religion, the government, and public worship, of its country. Were our plays subject to proper inspections and limitations, we might not only pass away several of our vacant hours in the highest entertainments, but should always rise from them wiser and better than we sat down to them.

It is one of the most unaccountable things in our age, that the lewdness of our theatre should be so much complained of, so well exposed, and so little dressed. It is to be hoped, that some time or other we may be at leisure to restrain the licentiousness of the theatre, and make it contribute its assistance to the advancement of morality, and to the reformation of the age. As matters stand at present, multitudes are shut out from this noble diversion, by reason of those abuses and corruptions that accompany it. A father is often afraid that his daughter should be ruined by those entertainments which were invented for the accomplishment and refining of human nature. The Athenian and Roman plays were written with such a regard to morality, that Socrates used to frequent the one, and Cicero the other.

It happened once indeed, that Cato dropped into the Roman theatre when the Floralia were to be represented; and as, in that performance, which was a kind of religious ceremony, there were several indecent parts to be acted, the people refused to see them whilst Cato was present. Martial, on this hint, made the following epigram, which we must suppose was applied to some grave friend of his, that had been accidentally present at some such entertainment:

*Nosces Jocosæ dulces cum sacrum Floræ, Festosque huius, et licentiam vulgi.
Cur in theatrum, Cato severè, venisti?
An ideo tantum veneras, ut exires?—1 Epig. 3.*
Why dost thou come, great censor of thy age,
To see the loose diversions of the stage?
With awful countenance, and brow severe,
What in the name of goodness dost thou here?
See the mixt crowd! how giddy, lewd, and vain!
Didst thou come in but to go out again.

An accident of this nature might happen once in an age among the Greeks or Romans, but they were too wise and good to let the constant nightly entertainment be of such a nature, that people of the most sense and virtue could not be at it. Whatever vices are represented upon the stage, they ought to be so marked and branded by the poet, as not to appear either laudable or amiable in the person who is tainted with them. But if we look into the English comedies above mentioned, we would think they were formed upon a quite contrary maxim, and that this rule, though it held good upon the heathen stage, was not to be regarded in Christian theatres. There is another rule likewise, which was observed by authors of antiquity, and which these modern geniuses have no regard to, and that was, never to choose an improper subject for ridicule. Now a subject is improper for ridicule, if it is apt to stir up horror and commiseration rather than laughter. For this reason, we do not find any comedy, in so polite an author as Terence, raised upon the violations of the marriage-bed. The falsehood of the wife or husband in comedies; but a subject looked upon in subjects for comedy, the basis of most man appears up in order to be a grave, or elder fate. Knights justices of the purpose. I have these capacities as frequently a creature, common as the ancient parasite, or a va

At the same that the two audience. We see the whole play proper opportunities are disappointed, plished gentleman person that is indifferent to him rally a composition do not know what invention, depraving mankind, but many poets cannot find a man who is that is not a joke.

I have some of ethics out of under the title diverted from been executed acquaintance. history of a young tions of the world rected himself conversation by fine gentleman vail upon him the novel, I will be question not but the drama, as

No. 447.] S

Long ex
And wha

THERE is a better turn of in the mouths cond nature." anew, and to altogether different Dr. Plot, in his an idiot, that o'clock, and at the hour of the clock being continued to strike of it, in the s was entire. T of this story, mechanical effect that it has a mind.

I shall in the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

nature, and us into very e take notice y in making n who is ad- ok but little ts so strong himself up so of his being. grow upon a a the one or for relishing me disused. r take snuff, e without it; y particular ves, in pro- tow upon it. becomes at oyments are d grows fond and is drawn hich she has st indifferent ll by custom ancis Bacon at our taste things which es particular quors, which st taste, but, enerally re- ed after the ated herself nt, not only conceives a l have heard e produced,* te studies of ged to search withstanding dry and irk- ble pleasure ng of Virgil st I have not gs easy, but ough others t is possible om it, with part of this ty of human oralities. In discouraged n, in which ssities, may be very dis- application painful, but end to every goras is said a that philo- nation I have a, nam con- upon that nt, and cus- Men whose se their own way of life, are inexcusable if they do not pursue that which their judgment tells them is the most laudable. The voice of reason is more to be regarded than the bent of any present inclination; since, by the rule above mentioned, inclination will at length come over to reason, though we can but force reason to comply with inclination.

In the third place, this observation may teach the most sensual and irreligious man to overlook the hardships and difficulties which are apt to discourage him from the prosecution of a virtuous life. "The gods," said Hesiod, "have placed labour before virtue; the way to her is at first rough and difficult but grows more smooth and easy the further you advance in it." The man who proceeds in it with steadiness and resolution, will in a little time find that "her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are peace."

To enforce this consideration, we may further observe, that the practice of religion will not only be attended with that pleasure which naturally accompanies those actions to which we are habituated, but with those supernumerary joys of heart that rise from the consciousness of such a pleasure, from the satisfaction of acting up to the dictates of reason and from the prospect of a happy immortality.

In the fourth place, we may learn from this observation which we have made on the mind of man to take particular care, when we are once settled in a regular course of life, how we too frequently indulge ourselves in any of the most innocent diversions and entertainments; since the mind may insensibly fall off from the relish of virtuous actions and, by degrees, exchange that pleasure which it takes in the performance of its duty, for delight of a much more inferior and unprofitable nature.

The last use which I shall make of this remarkable property in human nature, of being delighted with those actions to which it is accustomed, is to show how absolutely necessary it is for us to gain habits of virtue in this life, if we would enjoy the pleasures of the next. The state of bliss we call heaven will not be capable of affecting those minds which are not thus qualified for it; we must, in this world, gain a relish of truth and virtue, if we would be able to taste that knowledge and perfection, which are to make us happy in the next. The seeds of those spiritual joys and raptures, which are to rise up and flourish in the soul to all eternity, must be planted in her during this her present state of probation. In short, heaven is not to be looked upon only as the reward, but as the natural effect of a religious life.

On the other hand, those evil spirits, who, by long custom, have contracted in the body habits of lust and sensuality, malice and revenge, and aversion to every thing that is good, just, or laudable, are naturally seasoned and prepared for pain and misery. Their torments have already taken root in them; they cannot be happy when divested of the body unless we may suppose that Providence will in some manner create them anew, and work a miracle in the rectification of their faculties. They may, indeed, taste a kind of malignant pleasure in those actions to which they are accustomed, whilst in this life; but when they are removed from all those objects which are here apt to gratify them, they will naturally become their own tormentors, and cherish in themselves those painful habits of mind which are called, in Scripture phrase, "the worm which never dies." This notion of heaven and hell is very conformable to the light of nature, that it is d by several of the most exalted heathens. en finely improved by many eminent di- be last age, as in particular by Archbishop and Dr. Sherlock : but there is none who f such noble speculations upon it as Dr. the first book of his Christian Life, which f the finest and most rational schemes of that is written in our tongue, or in any That excellent author has shown how every r custom and habit of virtue will, in its re, produce the heaven, or a state of hap- n him who shall hereafter practise it ; as, ntrary, how every custom or habit of vice c natural hell of him in whom it subsists.—C.

[18.] MONDAY, AUGUST 4, 1712.

hoc aliquid quandoque audebis.—Juv. Sat. li. 82. to greater baseness you proceed.

first steps towards ill are very carefully to ed, for men insensibly go on when they are red, and do not keep up a lively abhorrence at unworthiness. There is a certain frie- lishness that people indulge themselves in, ght to be had in greater detestation than only meets with. What I mean is a neglect ses made on small and indifferent occasions, parties of pleasure, entertainments, and : meetings out of curiosity, in men of like to be in each other's company. There are uses to which one may assign this light in-

Jack Sippet never keeps the hour he has d to come to a friend's to dinner ; but he is- nificant fellow, who does it out of vanity. I never, he knows, make any figure in com- d by giving a little disturbance at his entry, efore takes care to drop in when he thinks ust seated. He takes his place after having sed every body, and desires there may be nony ; then does he begin to call himself est fellow, in disappointing so many places as invited to elsewhere. It is the fop's name houses of better cheer, and to ac- count that he chose yours out of ten dinners : was obliged to be at that day. The last ad the fortune to eat with him, he was ima- now very fat he should have been, had he l he had ever been invited to. But it is im- t to dwell upon the manners of such a wretch s all whom he disappoints, though his cir- ces constrain them to be civil to him. But s those that every one would be glad to see, : into the same detestable habit. It is a s thing that any one can be at ease, and a set of people, who have a kindness for that moment waiting out of respect to him, sing to taste their food or conversation with out impatience. One of these promisers es shall make his excuses for not coming at ate that half the company have only to la- it they have neglected matters of moment him whom they find a trifler. They imme- nent of the value they had for him ; and stment repeated, makes company never de- m his promise any more ; so that he often t the middle of a meal, where he is secretly by the persons with whom he eats, and cursed rrvants, whose dinner is delayed by his pro- their master's entertainment. It is won- bet men guilty this way could never have, 'that the wiling time, the gathering tu- ATOR—Nos. 65 & 66.

gether, and waiting a most awkwardly passed four-and-twenty hours, they would reflect upon such a suspension of ag offending this way has the honesty of his mind mon swearing is a kin makes the soul unattent while it utters it at the wordy orator, while he speech to the people, f thinks," said he, "I am cypress tree ; it has all givable in its branches alas ! it bears no fruit."

Though the expectati- nent promisers is th even after failures, is a still promising on. I b the insignificant liar, the builder, and treated th (though they are to be false ones), but perso- purely to recommend th but indeed I cannot let in the most minute circ- a censure. If a man pay only sums above a contract with different how long can we supp- This man will as long business, as he will in difficulty makes assigna- whether he keeps or no

I am the more sever- have been so unfortuna- minal myself. Sir And- my friends who are se- meanest consideration- virtue that way, have o- take shame upon myse- particularly for the gre- sort, that when as ag- men and ladies as ever- sooth, Mr. Spectator, t- of merit, like a booby a- meeting, and came th- every fool who is negl- as great a loss as I had- pany will never meet v- various parts of the wo- compunction that I de- places to be called a tr-

This fault is sometime- desirable people are fea- reserved by denials ; b- hension of that imputa- childish impotence of m- all who are so kind to- such soft creatures into- return overtures of goo- first steps in the brea- much more important t- man who scruples not- things, would not suff- great pain for failures- thinks every little offe- a disparagement. We- we ourselves disapprove- be sure of our integrity- I remember a falseho-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

and the same opportunity more than po ing in the they are the man in the both home good faculty address pre d in the oth smart. The ceiving Tru
at the same commitments at the epistolary seev not also eance to their own assigna ness. Tru would break without any with letter characters in one, and the of the great great p on at the ex

At the time in many stud have the habit
You are one of expect you
I know. Say have enough of any one I, therefore its from you yes? I can possibly find more at no re in an en ade when in virtue you give him, that to be treated and in your the up to The end
on to you.

175-1772

1772-1775

re the p e special guarantee is the the p in a
in l the tan opportunity
e. I
not
the le

to single out some characters of noids, wives, at rows, which deserve the imitation of the se See who shall bear this small illustrious number be comes shall be the amiable Fidelity.

Let us enter upon the particular parts of h one after, it is necessary to preface, that she is d only cent of a decept, rather, whose life is bas up in 1775. This gentleman has used Fidelity to her credit with all the tenderness imaginable, an has viewed her growing perfections with the pa tality of a parent, that soon thought her accu plished above the children of all other men, he never thought she was come to the utmost imple ment of which she herself was capable. This fi ness has had very happy effects upon his own fi ness: for she reads, the duties, she sings, most singer and lute to the utmost perfection; and if lady's use of all these excellencies is to divert the ment in his easy chair, when he is out of the pri of a clerical despotism. Fidelity is now in the twenty third year of her age; but the appli of many lovers, her vigorous time of life, her qu sense of all that is truly gallant and elegant in th employment of a plentiful fortune, are not able draw her from the side of her good old father. Ce taining it, that there is no kind of affection so pa and so gentle as that of a father to a daughter. H lady's never both with and without regard to L sex. In love to our wives there is desire, too sins there is ambition; but in that to our daught there is something which there are no works to c press. Her life is designed wholly domestic; an she is so ready a friend and companion, that eve thing that passes about a man is accompanied w the idea of her presence. Her sex also is natu so much exposed to hazard, both as to fortune an innocence, that there is perhaps a new case friendship arising from that consideration also. N but fathers can have a true sense of these soft pleasures and sensations; but my familiarity w the father of Fidelity makes me let drop the wor which I have heard him speak, and observe of his tenderness towards her.

Fidelity, on her part, as I was going to say, as i compassed as she is, with all her beauty, wit, a and reason employs her whole time in care and tenderness upon her father. How have I be enamored to see one of the most beautiful wom the age has produced, on her knees, helping out old man's dapper! Her filial regard to him is wh she makes her diversion, her business, and her glo When she was asked by a friend of her deca in that, to what of the courtship of her son, s answered that she had a great respect and gr to her for the exertion in behalf of one so near her, but that during her father's life, she would n not attempt to exert any thing that she afterward would endeavor to make his remain as happy and easy as could be expected in such a situation. The lady admonished her o pains of me with a smile; which I must now with frankness that always attends marriage, a that of Fidelity. Marital, there are to be sure v great seductions to be expected in the course of a married man, when one tenderly loves h I have known satisfaction in the reduction o and I have known a good man's pains, whose w it is upon my possibility about him, that I my eyes and the loose gradations of passion the same exertions of duty. I know not what seductions who would be allowed, and what I s to be feared) I know not whether I, a wife, should as officious as I am at present about my The happy father has her declaration that marry during his life, and the pleasure that resolution not uneasy to her. Were at filial affection in its utmost beauty, he have a more lively idea of it than in bedelia serving her father at his hours of his, and rest.

The general crowd of female youth are con- in glasses, preparing for balls, assemblies, for a young lady who could be regarded foremost in those places, either for her fortune, or conversation, and yet con- these entertainments, to sweeten the heavy decrepit parent, is a resignation truly bedelia performs the duty of a nurse with duty of a bride; nor does she neglect her cause of her attendance on him, when he to receive company, to whom she may appearance.

who gives him up her youth, does not great sacrifice to add to it the spoiling s. Her care and exactness in her habit er father of the alacrity of her mind; and all women the best foundation for affecting of a seeming negligence. What adds to imment of the good old man is, that Fi- merit and fortune cannot be overlooked ry lovers, reads over the accounts of her plays on her spinet the gayest airs (and, e doing so, you would think her formed liantry) to intimate to him the pleasures s for his sake.

to think themselves the patterns of good- id gallantry would be astonished to hear e intervals when the old gentleman is d can bear company, there are at his the most regular order, assemblies of e highest merit; where there is conver- out mention of the faults of the absent, e between men and women without pas- the highest subjects of morality treated d and accidental discourse; all which is e genius of Fidelia, who at once makes way to another world easy, and herself being an honour to his name in this.

SPECTATOR,

he other day at the Bear-garden, in hopes a your short face; but not being so for- just tell you by way of letter, that there among the gladiators which has escaped torial penetration. For, being in a box use near that renowned seat of honour tioned, I overheard two masters of the eing to quarrel on the next opportunity. happen in the company of a set of the of basket-hilts, who were to meet that When this was settled, one asked the ill you give cuts or receive?" The other Receive.' It was replied, 'Are you a an?' 'No, provided you cut no more, er than we agree.' I thought it my duty you with this, that the people may not eney for fighting, and be cheated.

"Your humble Servant,

"SCARBARD RUSTY."

No. 450.] WEDNESDAY

Querenda po

Virtus post humos.

Get money.

And then let virtue fol

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"ALL men, through di same common thing, mo owe the politician, the m may, to be free with you, are beholden for our Spect that could we look into o see money engraved in e moving characters than e can reflect upon the men doubtful pursuit of her, ad their quiet to her, but m racters of self-preservation originally the brightest) a defaced; and that those was only valuable as a me so brightened, that the c tion, like a less light set almost imperceptible? T upper hand of what all m most dear, viz. security; e had here put a stop to common honesty fell a sac way scholastic men talk o world; but I, a tradesman account of this matter in e own life. I think it prop acquaint my readers, that the world, which was in wanted money; having b good stock in the tobacco-t and by the continual suc- vidence to bless my endea rived at what they call a discourse in the manner phers, by speaking fine thi as they pretend, from the account it vain; having n the writings of such men, of the invention of the brai lation, than of sound judg vation. I will readily gra what the wits call natural the utmost those curious themselves, and is, indeed for they are but lamenta I pray, is natural? That w And what are pleasing an thought, or conceit, dress language, to make you sm being what you never in wonder why you had not; fit only for boys or willy w

"It is not my present readers in the methods o may be the work of anothe the real and solid advanta in my long and manifold the advantages of so worth (for who does not know of being warm or living at e pre-eminence are their i but only to instance the g us under the severest cala

* A cant word used by comm

link, ought to be imputed to the evenness and serenity of my temper, which never would admit of any impetuosities of any sort: and I can remember that in my youth and prime of manhood, when my blood ran brisker, I took greater pleasure in religious exercises than at present, or many years past, and that my devotion sensibly declined as age, which is dull and unwieldy, came upon me.

"I have, I hope, here proved, that the love of money prevents all immorality and vice; which, if you will not allow, you must, that the pursuit of it obliges men to the same kind of life as they would allow if they were really virtuous; which is all I have to say at present, only recommending to you, that you would think of it, and turn ready wit into ready money as fast as you can. I conclude,

"Your Servant,

T.

"EPHRAIM WEED."

No. 451.] THURSDAY, AUGUST 7, 1712.

Jam savius apertam

In ralem verti cepti jocus, et per honestas Ire domos impune minax—Hex 2 Ep. i 148.

Times corrupt and nature ill inclin'd

Prodac'd the point that left the sting behind:

Till, friend with friend, and families at strife,

Triumphant malice rag'd thro' a private life.—POPE.

There is nothing so scandalous to a government, and detestable in the eyes of all good men, as defamatory papers and pamphlets; but at the same time there is nothing so difficult to tame as a satirical author. An angry writer who cannot appear in print, naturally vents his spleen in libels and lampoons. A gay old woman, says the fable, seeing all her wrinkles represented in a large looking-glass, threw it upon the ground in a passion, and broke it into a thousand pieces; but as she was afterward surveying the fragments with a spiteful kind of jealousy, she could not forbear uttering herself in the following soliloquy. "What have I got by this revengeful blow of mine? I have only multiplied my deformity, and see a hundred ugly faces, where before I saw but one."

It has been proposed, to oblige every person that writes a book, or a paper, to swear himself the author of it, and enter down in a public register his name and place of abode.

This indeed would have effectually suppressed all printed scandal, which generally appears under borrowed names, or under none at all. But it is to be feared that such an expedient would not only destroy scandal, but learning. It would operate promiscuously, and root up the corn and tares together. Not to mention some of the most celebrated works of piety, which have proceeded from anonymous authors, who have made it their merit to convey to us so great a charity in secret; there are few works of genius that come out at first with the author's name. The writer generally makes a trial of them in the world before he owns them: and, I believe, very few, who are capable of writing, would set pen to paper, if they knew beforehand that they must publish their productions but on such conditions. For my own part, I must declare, the papers I present the public are like fairy favours, which shall not no longer than while the author is concealed.

That which makes it particularly difficult to restrain these sons of calumny and defamation is, that all sides are equally guilty of it, and that every seditious scribbler is countenanced by great names, whose interests he propagates by such vile and infamous methods. A ministry who have on an author the same falsehood and in the same manner the name upon as their right government set a sure upon one of his court to the tion of a competitor to this race of government, and a proceeding worthy in history, and the abhorrence of worthily, and that he scorned to mention.

I cannot think to imagine what respect to any party in him the sentiment of a gentleman, cannot be and ungenerous among us at present national crime, governments that upon the finest particular persons with the appearance of evil mind, and the family, like other and distribution of private person. The monument of Cicero, capital punishment, lampoon, which other, was to be far from being of ribaldry, and the wit; and he who variety of phrases, est pen. By the ruined, the high order cheap and noblest virtues the contempt of a foreigner, who tions, or one when our present—should, I say, of the greatest tion, who are not are given them writings which a nation of monuments.

As this cruel sion of all truth the utmost detest who have either honour of their earnestly recommended who deal in these those who take for the first, I have and have not studied and assassin. value upon a good cannot but think one, would destroy the same secrecy.

As for persons and dispersing of

of the first Valentinian person not with one by cause I would of this matter,
ords of Mont freedom of ng and judgdisperses a chief than the of the pleaof a defamathe sight of point. This on we are af-witty thought which we con-noisdefamed.

e cases; for orality is not a man is not ny more than y, when they d, every one us sin. The tinuance; it l may be im-ee our neighcease imme-epleased with ad to see him es; and then the writer of the words of a excommuniced Castorius, er works; beays been the tion of those age over the re in reading m? It is an prove an ac-d; that is, if them. There en advising a mitted. The ing subjected d to the same
e, that those ory libels, so ers of them,
them; for, if ves, it is beg, or because es to confirm

8, 1712.

apud Lillium.

men which I their general lf-a-dozen in-ly upon this y all of them d, and very often in the same words; but their way of cooking it is so different, that there is no citizen, who has an eye to the public good, that can leave the coffee-house with peace of mind, before he has given every one of them a reading. These several dishes of news are so very agreeable to the palate of my countrymen, that they are not only pleased with them when they are served up hot, but when they are again set cold before them, by those penetrating politicians who oblige the public with their reflections and observations upon every piece of intelligence that is sent us from abroad. The text is given us by one set of writers, and the comment by another.

But notwithstanding we have the same tale told us in so many different papers, and, if occasion requires, in so many articles of the same paper; notwithstanding, in a scarcity of foreign posts, we have the same story repeated by different advices from Paris, Brussels, the Hague, and from every great town in Europe; notwithstanding the multitude of annotations, explanations, reflections, and various readings, which it passes through, our time lies heavy on our hands till the arrival of a fresh mail; we long to receive further particulars, to hear what will be the next step, or what will be the consequences of that which has been already taken. A westerly wind keeps the whole town in suspense, and puts a stop to conversation.

This general curiosity has been raised and inflamed by our late wars, and, if rightly directed, might be of good use to a person who has had a thirst awakened in him. Why should not a man, who takes delight in reading every thing that is new, apply himself to history, travels, and other writings of the same kind, where he will find perpetual fuel for his curiosity, and meet with much more pleasure and improvement than in these papers of the week? An honest tradesman, who languishes a whole summer in expectation of a battle, and perhaps is baulked at last, may but meet with half-a-dozen in a day. He may read the news of a whole campaign in less time than he can bestow upon the products of any single great fight, conquests, and revolutions, lie thick together. The reader's curiosity is raised and satisfied every moment, and his passions disappointed or gratified, without being detained in a state of uncertainty from day to day, or lying at the mercy of the sea and wind; in short, the mind is not kept in perpetual gape after knowledge, nor is furnished with that eternal thirst which is the passion of all our modern newsmongers and coffee-house politicians.

All matters of fact, which a man did not find before, are news to him; and I do not see how the haberdasher in Cheapside is more concerned in the present quarrel of the Cantons, than he would be of the League. At least, I believe, every man will allow me it is of more importance to an Englishman to know the history of his ancestors than that of his contemporaries who live upon the banks of the Nile or the Borysthenes. As for those who, in another mind, I shall recommend to them the following letter from a projector who is willing to turn a penny by this remarkable criticism upon countrymen.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"You must have observed, that men who sit in coffee-houses, and delight in news, are pleased with every thing that is matter of fact, and are not so much

have not heard before. A victory, or a defeat, is equally agreeable to them. The shutting of a cardinal's mouth pleases them one post, and the opening of it another. They are glad to hear the French court is removed to Marli, and are afterward as much delighted with its return to Versailles. They read the advertisements with the same curiosity as the articles of public news; and are as pleased to hear of a piebald horse that is strayed out of a field near Islington, as of a whole troop that have been engaged in any foreign adventure. In short, they have a relish for every thing that is news, let the matter of it be what it will; or, to speak more properly, they are men of a voracious appetite, but no taste. Now, Sir, since the great fountain of news, I mean the war, is very near being dried up; and since these gentlemen have contracted such an insatiable thirst after it; I have taken their case and my own into consideration, and have thought of a project which may turn to the advantage of us both. I have thoughts of publishing a daily paper, which shall comprehend in it all the most remarkable occurrences in every little town, village, and hamlet, that lie within ten miles of London, or, in other words, within the verge of the penny-post. I have pitched upon this scene of intelligence for two reasons; first, because the carriage of letters will be very cheap; and, secondly, because I may receive them every day. By this means, my readers will have their news fresh and fresh, and many worthy citizens, who cannot sleep with any satisfaction at present, for want of being informed how the world goes, may go to bed contentedly, it being my design to put out my paper every night at nine o'clock precisely. I have already established correspondences in these several places, and received very good intelligence.

"By my last advices from Knightsbridge I hear that a horse was clapped into the pound on the third instant, and that he was not released when the letters came away.

"We are informed from Paukrige,* that a dozen weddings were lately celebrated in the mother-church of that place, but are referred to their next letters for the names of the parties concerned.

"Letters from Brompton advise, that the widow Blight had received several visits from John Mildew, which affords great matter of speculation in those parts.

"By a fisherman who lately touched at Hammer-smith, there is advice from Putney, that a certain person well known in that place is like to lose his election for church-warden; but this being boat-news, we cannot give entire credit to it.

"Letters from Paddington bring little more than that William Squeak, the sow-gelder, passed through that place the fifth instant.

"They advise from Fulham, that things remained there in the same state they were. They had intelligence, just as the letters came away, of a tub of excellent ale just set abroad at Parson's Green; but this wanted confirmation.

"I have here, Sir, given you a specimen of the news with which I intend to entertain the town, and which, when drawn up regularly in the form of a newspaper, will, I doubt not, be very acceptable to many of those public-spirited readers, who take more delight in acquainting themselves with other people's business than their own. I hope a paper of this kind, which lets us know what is done near home, may be met with advice, and amendments for the future, may justly find that you shortly trust the means of respect,

C.

No. 453.

No.

Per.

No.

My.

THERE is a mind that is inwardly rewarded, but attends to no positive recompense, would indeed accompany.

If gratitude more from does not proceed from those bene Every blessing may be de the great.

If gratitude naturally mind of a creature, where gratitude, us every time we expect.

Most of direct hymns the celebration of perfection works of extant, we true, that wonder the turned the sider that infinitely possibly e with every give an of conception.

Plutarch hymn to delight in cruelty at present at had a tributary, by hymn, he with the s It was ine of those f without a

The Jews were the true God, * Paukrige, then a fashionable place for weddings.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

No. 454.] MONDAY, AUGUST 11, 1712.

Sine me, vacuum tempus ne quod dem mihi.Laboris.Tua. Heaut. act. i. sc. 1.

Give me leave to allow myself no respite from labour.

It is an inexpressible pleasure to know a little of the world, and be of no character or significance in it.

To be ever unconcerned, and ever looking on new objects with an endless curiosity, is a delight known only to those who are turned for speculation: nay they who enjoy it must value things only as they are the objects of speculation, without drawing any worldly advantage to themselves from them, but just as they are what contribute to their amusement, or the improvement of the mind. I lay one night last week at Richmond; and being restless, not out of dissatisfaction, but a certain busy inclination which sometimes has, I rose at four in the morning, and took boat for London, with a resolution to rove by boat and coach for the next four-and-twenty hours till the many objects I must needs meet with should tire my imagination, and give me an inclination to a repose more profound than I was at that time capable of. I beg people's pardon for an odd humour I am guilty of, and was often that day, which is saluting any person whom I like, whether I know him or not. This is a particularity would be tolerated in me, if they considered that the greatest pleasure I know I receive at my eyes, and that I am obliged to an agreeable person for coming abroad into my view, as another is for a visit of conversation at their own houses.

The hours of the day and night are taken up in the cities of London and Westminster, by people of different from each other as those who are born in different centuries. Men of six o'clock give way to those of nine, they of nine to the generation of twelve; and they of twelve disappear, and make room for the fashionable world, who have made ten o'clock the noon of the day.

When we first put off from shore, we soon fell in with a fleet of gardeners, bound for the several market ports of London; and it was the most pleasing scene imaginable to see the cheerfulness with which those industrious people plied their way to a certain sale of their goods. The banks on each side are as well peopled, and beautified with as agreeable plantations, as any spot on the earth; but the Thames itself, loaded with the product of each shore, added very much to the landscape. It was very easy to observe by their sailing, and the countenances of the ruddy virgins, who were supercargoes, the parts of the town to which they were bound. There was an air in the purveyors for Covent-garden, who frequently converse with morning rakes, very unlike the seeming sobriety of those bound for Stocks-market.

Nothing remarkable happened in our voyage; but I landed with ten sail of apricot-boats, at Strand-bridge, after having put in at Nine-Elms, and taken in melons, consigned by Mr. Cuffe, of that place to Sarah Sewell and Company, at their stall in Covent-garden. We arrived at Strand-bridge at six of the clock, and were unloading; when the hackney-coachmen of the foregoing night took their leave of each other at the Dark-house, to go to bed before the day was too far spent. Chimney-sweepers passed by us as we made up to the market, and some railery happened between one of the Irish wenches and those black men about the Devil and Eve, with allusion to their several professions.

would not believe any place more entertaining than Covent-garden; where I strolled from one fruit-shop to another, with crowds of agreeable young women round me, who were purchasing fruit for their respective families. It was almost eight of the clock before I could leave that variety of objects. I took each and followed a young lady, who tripped into another just before me, attended by her maid. I saw immediately she was of the family of the Vain-ives. There are a set of these, who, of all things, affect the play of Blindman's-buff, and leading men to love for they know not whom, who are fled they know not where. This sort of woman is usually a noisy slattern; she hangs on her clothes, plays her head, varies her posture, and changes place incessantly, and all with an appearance of striving at the same time to hide herself, and yet give you to understand she is in humour to laugh at you. You must have often seen the coachmen make signs with their fingers, as they drive by each other, to intimate how much they have got that day. They can carry on that language to give intelligence where they are driving. In an instant my coachman took his wink to pursue; and the lady's driver gave the hint that he was going through Long-acre towards St. James's; while he whipped up James-street, we drove for King-street, to save the pass at St. Martin's-lane. The coachmen took care to meet, jostle, and threaten each other for way, and be entangled at the end of Newport-street and Long-acre. The sight, you must believe, brought down the lady's coach-door, and obliged her, with her mask off, to acquire into the bustle,—when she sees the man she would avoid. The tackle of the coach-window is so bad she cannot draw it up again, and she drives on sometimes wholly discovered, and sometimes half escaped, according to the accident of carriages in her way. One of these ladies keeps her seat in a hackney-coach, as well as the best rider does on a managed horse. The laced shoe on her left foot, with a careless gesture, just appearing on the opposite cushion, held her both firm, and in a proper attitude to receive the next jolt.

As she was an excellent coach-woman, many were the glances at each other which we had for an hour and a half, in all parts of the town, by the skill of our drivers; till at last my lady was conveniently out, with notice from her coachman to ours to make off, and he should hear where she went. This chase was now at an end; and the fellow who drove her came to us, and discovered that he was ordered to come again in an hour, for that she was a silk-worm. I was surprised with this phrase, but found it was a jest among the hackney fraternity for their best customers, women who ramble twice or thrice a week from shop to shop, to turn over all the goods in town without buying anything. The silk-worms are, it seems, indulged by the tradesmen; for, though they never buy, they are ever talking of new silks, laces, and ribands, and serve the owners in getting them customers, as their common dunners are in making them pay.

The day of people of fashion began now to break, and carts and hacks were mingled with equipages of gold and vanity; when I resolved to walk it, out of cheapness; but my unhappy curiosity is such, that I find it always my interest to take coach; for some odd adventure among beggars, ballad-singers, or the like, detains and throws me into expense. It happened so immediately: for at the corner of Warwick-street, as I was listening to a new fellow, a ragged rascal, a beggar who knew me, came up to me, good company. I was extremely poor, and of drink, except charity to give him house and save his choly face, that All the mob had to take the jest point, and let me along, it was a so prettily checked scene still filling satisfaction in my and gay signs, public structure contented faces came into the world of trade, men in the crowd hopes and bargained them, in attention deed, looked up walked the Excellence made me that was made, tion in my shops of agreeable pretty hands but utmost eagerness patches, pins, and was an amusement indulged myself, me, to ask what only "To look down which opened the several voice in a confused reflection that could but of one a little with a kind of all the hurry of In these, or not have lost my pleasure man, according to the necessity of our nation broth, or chop could had no pretence being men, exquaintance.

I went afterwards had dined with before, give bill could not but be lodged in, and as would never seemingly in the they live. But the city, came garden, and passing the discourse believed each other of cards, dice, last subject kept possession of the to himself, and roused me from led by a light, private economy of the charge, that depended trivial day with

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

came to my out was it a to my power off to a state of great use their names div of the breath once the cut ones of a tree, &c. with a an increase

12. 1712.

me n in trees, &c.
the flowers
the flowers
ann to the aste the flowers in garland, &c. nts in a e with a ion in the ulture, now ost, for want skill. "You book, they red to grow often staying ng of a pture of the rom the city ary print & udes, and it is vious, perhap ut in trees, & nd of every n in a tree, & after a tree leaves, when vers to a tree and the tree gins to grow

uch as green,
to the taste, d by the sun
all the flowers ces, &c. &c.
These fruits, and are of a ristant in on the inter-found about the vegetable growth, smug en always in motion, the Greek and Latin evergreens, the Sy-caminus, the English oak, the Scotch thistle, &c. the shore of the, the prickly German and Dutch hedge, the Polish and Russian nettle, besides a variety of exotic, imported from Asia, Africa, and America. I saw several barren plants, some of which were without any hopes of flower, or fruit.

The leaves of some were fragrant and well-shaped, others ill-scented and irregular. I wondered at the ill-taste of some botanists, who spent two whole days in the contemplation of some within Egyptian, Coptic, Arabian, or Chinese leaves, which they made it their business to collect, instead of to observe the several leaves of some one tree. The flowers offered a most diverting contemplation, in a wonderful variety of figures, colours, and scents; however, most of them withered soon, and to turn out a trifle. Some professed florists were to be seen in constant study and employment, and despite all that, and now and then a few fan-tied people spent all their time in the cultivation of a single bouquet of a nation. But the most agreeable amusement seems to be the well-choosing, having, and binding together, these flowers in pleasing nosegays, to present to ladies. The scent of Italian flowers is observed, like their other perfections, to be too strong, and to hurt the brain; that of the French very much more agreeable, yet faint and languid; German and northern flowers have little or no smell, but are strong and pleasant. The ancients had great skill in well-choosing, colour, and scent, and to make it their choice flowers, which flourished in this city, and what a few of the moderns can effect These are becoming rough, and agreeable in the case, and are often fitly adorned with an entertaining and agreeable mixture of them seems to be consequence. It rarely happens to find a plant vigorous enough to have like an orange-tree, at one time all its shining leaves, fragrant flowers, and plentiful refreshing fruit.

" Sit, yours," &c.

Dear Sir,

August 6, 1712.

You have given us, in your Spectator of Saturday last, a very excellent discourse upon the Greek diet, and its wonderful efficacy in making every thing pleasant to us. I cannot deny but the Discourse above two pennyworth of instruction from your paper, and in the general was very well pleased with it: but I am, without a compliment, sincerely troubled that I cannot exactly be of your opinion that it makes every thing pleasant to us. In short I have the honour to be yoked to a young lady, who is, in plain English, for her standing, a very constant fool. She began to break her mind, very truly, both to me and to her servants, about tw months after our nuptials: and, though I have been accustomed to this manner of hers these three years, yet I do not know what is the matter with me, but I am no more delighted with it than I was at the very first. I have advised with her relations about, and they all tell me that her mother and her grandmother before her were both taken much after the same manner; so that, since it runs in the blood, I have but small hopes of her recovery.
I shall be glad to have a little of your advice in the matter. I would not willingly trouble you to entertain how it may be a pleasure to me; if you will but put me in a way that I may bear it with imference, I shall rest satisfied.

" Dear Sir,

" Your very humble Servant.

I must do the poor girl the justice to let that this match was none of her own (or indeed of mine either); in consideration, I avoid giving her the least provocation indeed we live better together than like do who hated one another when they joined. To evade the sin against parents, I st to extenuate it, my dear rails at my mother, and I curse hers for making the

S. SPECTATOR, August 8, 1712.

the theme you lately gave out extremely, and be as glad to handle it as any man living. I myself no better qualified to write about an about my wife; for, to tell you a secret, desire may go no further, I am master of those subjects.

"Yours,

"PILL GARLICK."

S. SPECTATOR,

are you will print this in italic, so as it may ally taken notice of. It is designed only ish all persons, who speak either at the t, or any public assembly whatsoever, how ver their ignorance in the use of similes. e, in the pulpit itself, as well as in other ch gross abuses in this kind, that I give ing to all I know. I shall bring them for e before your spectatorial authority. On is, one, who shall be nameless, reproving his congregation for standing at prayers, ed to say, "One would think, like the eleu had no knees." Now I myself saw an in Bartholomew-fair, kneel down to take k the ingenious Mr. William Penkethman.

"Your most humble Servant."

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13, 1712.

Hi in celeberrimis locis proponuntur, hinc ne perire scilicet conceditur.

TULL.

whose conduct is publicly arraigned, is not suffered to withdraw quietly

, in his tragedy of Venice Preserved, has the misery of a man whose effects are in of the law with great spirit. The bitter- ing the scorn and laughter of base minds, sh of being insulted by men hardened be- sense of shame or pity, and the injury of fortune being wasted, under pretence of re excellently aggravated in the following Pierre to Jaffier:

and this very moment by thy doors, found them guarded by a troop of villains; sons of public rapine were destroying.
I told me, by the sentence of the law, I had commission to seize all thy fortune; more, Friuli's cruel hand had signed it I stood a ruffian with a horrid face, ing it o'er a pile of massy plate, bled into a heap for public sale.
I was another making villanous jests y undoing. He had ta'en possession of thy ancient most domestic ornaments; hangings intermix'd and wrought with gold; very bed, which on thy wedding night I'd thee to the arms of Belvidera, scene of all thy joys, was violated by coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains, thrown amongst the common lumber.

g indeed can be more unhappy than the of bankruptcy. The calamity which hap- by ill fortune, or by the injury of others, has in it some consolation; own misbehaviour, or ex- exquisite sorrow. Whe an ample fortune, but e life, his pretence to foot creditors, he cannot bu state of the dead, with that the last office is pe instead of his friends.

world does not only take tune, but even of every lation to it. All his in- interpretations put upon has favoured in his form of their obligations to proaches of his enemy that it should be so; there is a pride mixed creditor; and there are their own by the downfa he discharged to the con- selves and their credit who was lately master of the direction of others; good sense, and skill in son of his present misfo in the disposition of any an infant or a lunatic is and accommodation; bu out any mitigation in r which it arrived, is calcu- cept there be a remaind discharge of his credit of rewarding those by w this labour was transferr to look on and see oth what terms and conditi chased; and all this us of trustees to dispose o to divide and tear them.

There is something sa good minds; for this rea been extremely tender man who has right on h- ture of resentment again and modest men, thoug artifice, and have it in t- selves, are slow in the and are ever constrained- sures. They are carefu not only persons injur longer would be a mean others before they proce hands upon their hearts have at their mercy the l- have it to say to their e they were merciful whe rather than when it w- spared a man, they dest common calamity of hu- sure to our very enemies the least injury, are cau justice.

Let any one who is o human life reflect upon who wants mercy has a t- kind. There is a natu- which is good in his ver enemy to the world. H- to himself in all his acti- quity but from the pun- it. The law of the lan-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

his attorney, when the heart of instruments is sealed, according to their power, they are affected for such who are, but merely to be valued better things and with great men, who has him in his bet-ace to retrieve and make apod by the best being unfortun can do or the generality out: you have to get what reason, as well in pain to see a man inca-ough a poor us, and talk ere nearer to ved with pre- with partial- you, who are me, who am favour which d to make up used towards have an eye and the rest of There is a a destructive rich without the conversa-ugh they bor-be accounted follows us ac- you are what y towards my ne, if it ever es.

riend
Servant."
sion that did of kindness, a have heart e. I assure ily at all di- which I have has so lately countenance ou, but shall sum at com- now I could at a love for gain to help you; for I do not care whether they say of me-oh I am dead, that I had a hundred or fifty thousand pounds more than I wanted when I was living.

T. "Your obliged humble Servant

No. 457. THURSDAY, AUGUST 14, 1712.

—Multa et præclara monumenta.—Hon. S. Sed. M. S.
Seeming to promise something wondrous great.

I SHALL this day lay before my readers a letter written by the same hand with that of last Friday which contained proposals for a printed newspaper that should take in the whole circle of the penny-press

"Sir,

"The kind reception you gave my last Friday letter, in which I broached my project of a new paper, encourages me to lay before you two or three more; for, you must know, Sir, that we look upon you to be the Lowndes* of the learned world; we cannot think any scheme practicable or rational before you have approved of it, though all the money we raise by it is on our own funds, and for our private use.

"I have often thought that a news-letter, written every post, and sent about the kingdom, after the same manner as that of Mr. Dyer, Mr. Dawkes, or any other epistolary historian might be highly gratifying to the public, as well as beneficial to the author. By whispers I mean those pieces of news which are communicated as secrets, and which bring a double pleasure to the hearer; first, as they are private history; and, in the next place, as they have always in them a touch of scandal. These are the two chief qualifications in an article of news, which recommend it, in a more than ordinary manner, to the ears of the curious. Sickness of persons in high posts, twilight visits paid and received by ministers of state, clandestine courtships and marriages, secret amours, losses at play applications for places, with their respective successes or repulses, are the materials in which I chiefly intend to deal. I have two persons, that as each of them the representative of a species, who are to furnish me with those whispers which I mean to convey to my correspondents. The first of these is Peter Hush, descended from the ancient family of the Hushes. The other is the old Lady Blad who has a very numerous tribe of daughters in the two great cities of London and Westminster. Peter Hush has a whispering-hole in most of the great coffee-houses about town. If you are alone with him in a wide room, he carries you up into a corner of it, and speaks in your ear. I have seen Peter seat himself in a company of seven or eight persons whom he never saw before in his life; and, after having looked about to see there was no one that overheard him, has communicated to them in a low voice, and under the seal of secrecy, the death of a great man in the country, who was, perhaps, a few hours before the very moment this account was given to him. If upon your entering a coffee-house you see a circle of heads bending over the table, and lying close to one another, it is ten to one but my friend Peter is among them. I have known Peter publishing the whisper of the day by eight o'clock in the morning at Garraway's, by twelve at Wall's, and before two at the Smyrna. When Peter has the * Secretary at this time of the Treasury, and director of the Mint.

ly launched a secret, I have been very well to hear people whispering it to one another -hand, and spreading it about as their own ; must know, Sir, the great incentive to whisthe ambition which every one has of being in the secret, and being looked upon as a has access to greater people than one would

After having given you this account of ush, I proceed to that virtuous lady, the old ast, who is to communicate to me the prisactions of the crimp-table, with all the f the fair sex. The Lady Blast, you must nd, has such a particular malignity in her that it blights like an easterly wind, and very reputation it breathes upon. She has lar knack at making private weddings, and er married about five women of quality to men. Her whisper can make an innocent oman big with child, or fill a healthful dow with distempers that are not to be She can turn a visit into an intrigue, and salute into an assignation. She can beggar per, and degrade the noble. In short, she per men base or foolish, jealous or ill-nat, if occasion requires can tell you the slips real grandmothers, and traduce the memory coachmen that have been in their graves se hundred years. By these and the like question not but I shall furnish out a very news-letter. If you approve my project, gin to whisper by the very next post, and not but every one of my customers will be pleased with me, when he considers that ce of news I send him is a word in his ear, um into a secret.

ing given you a sketch of this project, I he next place, suggest to you another for y pamphlet, which I shall likewise submit ectoratorial wisdom. I need not tell you, there are several authors in France, Ger-Holland, as well as in our own country, ib every month what they call, An Account orks of the Learned, in which they give racts of all such books as are printed in of Europe. Now, Sir, it is my design to very month, An Account of the Works of rned. Several late productions of my ymen, who many of them make a very gure in the illiterate world, encourage me dertaking. I may in this work possibly iew of several pieces which have appeared eign accounts above mentioned, though it not to have been taken notice of in h bear such a title. I may likewise take eration such pieces as appear, from time nder the names of those gentlemen who t one another in public assemblies by the e learned gentlemen.' Our party-authors fird me a great variety of subjects, not the editors, commentators, and others, ter men of no learning, or, what is as knowledge. I shall not enlarge upon but, if you think any thing can be made it set about it with all the pains and ap-at so useful a work deserves.

"Most worthy Sir," &c.

ael de la Roche, 38 vols. 8vo. in Engl. under different titles. In Fr. 8 tomes, 24mo.

No. 458.] FRIDA

— Puder
False modesty.

I COULD not but sn yesterday given me of who, being invited to a was not used to drink, refuse his glass in his grew so flustered, that table into his own hand company, and flung a head who treated him. to reflect upon the ill and to remember the quoted by Plutarch, that an ill education, who be any thing." This false, betrayed both sex most abandoned impudicusable to reason, became rather than itself, and remorse, not only like of crime is over, but even committed.

Nothing is more amiable than nothing is more contemptible than one guards virtue, the other is ashamed to do as the rules of right reason require to do anything that is of his company. True modesty is criminal, false modesty is honorable. The latter is of instinct; the former is prescribed by the rules of reason.

We may conclude that vicious which engages - a is ill or indiscreet, or w ing anything that is of many men, in the com sums of money which th are bound for persons friendship for, give rec men whom they are not places on those whom th such a manner as they th and all this merely becau dence to resist solicitation

Nor does this false mod-actions as are indiscreet, are highly criminal. Wh timorous, because he wo in a game at dice: "I c am exceeding timorous, thing." On the contrary, complies with every thin doing what may look sing he is engaged. He falls lets himself go to every ac unjustifiable in itself, so present party. This, thou mon, is one of the most human nature, that men speaking or acting in a di ner, but that one who is in ashamed of governing his reason and virtue.

In the second place, we desty, as it restrains a man and laudable. My reader gest to him many instances that a man cannot be perfect in his scheme of morality, who does not strengthen and support it with that of the Christian faith.

Besides this, I shall lay down two or three other maxims, which I think we may deduce from what has been said :

First, That we should be particularly cautious of making any thing an article of faith, which does not contribute to the confirmation or improvement of morality.

Secondly, That no article of faith can be true and authentic, which weakens or subverts the practical part of religion, or what I have hitherto called morality.

Thirdly, That the greatest friend of morality and natural religion cannot possibly apprehend any danger from embracing Christianity, as it is preserved pure and uncorrupt in the doctrines of our national church.

There is likewise another maxim which I think may be drawn from the foregoing considerations, which is this, that we should, in all dubious points, consider any ill consequences that may arise from them, supposing they should be erroneous, before we give up our assent to them.

For example, In that disputable point of persecuting men for conscience' sake, besides the embittering their minds with hatred, indignation, and all the vehemence of resentment, and insnaring them to profess what they do not believe, we cut them off from the pleasures and advantages of society, afflict their bodies, distress their fortunes, hurt their reputations, ruin their families, make their lives painful, or put an end to them. Sure when I see such dreadful consequences rising from a principle, I would be as fully convinced of the truth of it, as of a mathematical demonstration, before I would venture to act upon it, or make it a part of my religion.

In this case the injury done our neighbour is plain and evident: the principle that puts us upon doing it, of a dubious and disputable nature. Morality seems highly violated by the one; and whether or no a zeal for what a man thinks the true system of faith may justify it, is very uncertain. I cannot but think, if our religion produces charity as well as malice, it will not be for showing itself by such cruel instances. But to conclude with the words of an excellent author, "We have just enough of religion to make us hate, but not enough to make us love, one another."—C.

No. 460.] MONDAY, AUGUST 18, 1712.

Decipimur specie recti.—HOR. Ars Poet. v. 25.

Deceived by a seeming excellence.—ROSCOMMON.

Our defects and follies are too often unknown to us; nay, they are so far from being known to us, that they pass for demonstrations of our worth. This makes us easy in the midst of them, fond to show them, fond to improve them, and to be esteemed for them. Then it is that a thousand unaccountable conceits, gay inventions, and extravagant actions, must afford us pleasures, and display us to others in the colours which we ourselves take a fancy to glory in. Indeed there is something so amusing for the time in the state of vanity and ill-grounded satisfaction, that even the wiser world has chosen an apt word to describe its enchantments, and called it "The Paradise of Fools."

Perhaps the latter part of this reflection may seem a false thought, what I have given business to let that I have been Methought flowery, and on top of it resid Opinion with cery, and were the love of the tude from eve lead towards most assuming Error, without softer nature whence, as sh their own pra government.

When we h summit where taining severa voice was plea spoke. She see every one thou valuable in hin she promised a we drawn to where it was to that all the wa praising thems another for tho conspicuous in others for wan of them.

At last we a of which Error woven, and the to darken hin whitish robe, w pear to us with as she has a lig ties of nature t provided himse do something i lusions. This himself, bid the ment to appea eyes on that p observed a th mountains in a off, and the pa

The foundat a set of curling gical contrivan was painted li breeze that pl The walks wer of pillars wer and the top of far the resemb

At the gate ter, nor wait thought his me forward. In t that roved am cording to the Honour, that t of his ancestor tation, that ma and Gallantry end of the hal tered with all

LITTLE'S ESSAYISTS.

[illegible][illegible]

When I was asked to prepare a paper on the subject of "The Play System as a School," I earnestly recommended that it be given first consideration.

Yours very humble Servant

[R.] TUESDAY, AUGUST 19, 1712.

[ad non ego credulus illis.—VIRG. Ecl. ix. 24.

discern their flattery from their praise.—DARBY.

want of time to substitute something else in of them, I am at present obliged to publish ents above my desert in the following letters. small satisfaction to have given occasion to a men to employ their thoughts upon sacred from the approbation of such pieces of they have seen in my Saturday's papers. over publish verse on that day but what is by the same hand? yet shall I not accommodate writings with eulogiums, but leave them for themselves.

"FOR THE SPECTATOR.

MR. SPECTATOR,

I very much promote the interests of virtue, ou reform the taste of a profane age; and us to be entertained with divine poems, s are distinguished by so many thousand huand split into so many different sects and yet persons of every party, sect, and hure fond of conforming their taste to yours. transfuse your own relish of a poem into all others according to their capacity to receive; on you recommend the pious passion that the verse, we seem to feel the devotion, and and pleased inwardly, that we have souls of relishing what the Spectator approves. on reading the hymns that you have pub-some late papers, I had a mind to try yes-whether I could write one. The cxvth psalm to me an admirable ode, and I began to turn ur language. As I was describing the jour-Israel from Egypt, and added the Divine e amongst them, I perceived a beauty in this which was entirely new to me, and which I g to lose; and that is, that the poet utterly the presence of God in the beginning of it, her lets a possessive pronoun go without a ive, than he will so much as mention any divinity there. 'Judah was his sanctuary, tel his dominion or kingdom.' The reason ms evident, and this conduct necessary; for, ad appeared before, there could be no wonder mountains should leap and the sea retire; e, that this convulsion of nature may be in with due surprise, his name is not men-ill afterward: and then with a very agreeable thought, God is introduced at once in all his . This is what I have attempted to imitate salation without paraphrase, and to preserve ould of the spirit of the sacred author. the following essay be not too incorrigible, upon it a few brightenings from your genius, may learn how to write better, or to write no our daily admirer, and humble Servant," &c.

PSALM CXIV.

I.

When Israel, freed from Pharaoh's hand, Left the proud tyrant and his land,
The tribes with cheerful homage own Their King, and Judah was his throne

II.

When the deep their journey lay,
When the deep divides to make them way:
When streams of Jordan saw, and fled By his backward current to their head.

By Addison.

SPECTATOR—Nos. 67 & 68.

The mountains did Like lambs the hills
Not Sinai on her Conscious of sov

What power could Make Jordan back
Why did ye leap,
And whence the f

Let every mount Retire, and know
The King of Israe Tremble, thou can

He thunders—and
The rock to stand Fountains spring with And fires and sea

"MR. SPECTATOR

"There are those who putting a halfpenny va rest of our daily writer conversation, and strive the account of this said you, I would insist upon for the superior merit invention. Give me le tice, and say in your b self, which is, that your a more necessary part before you appeared; i ionable, and impudence since you have put the Profaneness, lewdness, qualifications; and a n tleman, though he is ne

"I would have you Sibyls, if they deny them know, that those the same rate after two as when there was the v of us who will give you acquaint your nonconf not have it, except the under three-pence. I bring in the 'Date Of grace. The writings three coffee-houses wh hope you will make us with their characters w

"I am y

"P. S. I have lately blackening for shoes, p pomatum for the hands your constant custom inments will as much ad paper does the inward

T.

No. 462.] WEDNESDAY

Nil ego prætulim juco Nothing so grateful as a p

PEOPLE are not a which pleasantry in with whom a man of faults are generally ov ance; and a certain attends all his actions,

By D

up, when fancy is let loose to play, dreams repeat the wishes of the day.
 Though farther toll his tired limbs refuse, Trembling hither still the chase pursues.
 Judge abed dispenses still the laws, Sleeps again o'er the unfinish'd cause.
 Tiring racer hears his chariot roll, Sees the vain whip, and churs the fancied goal.
 To the Muses, in the silent night, He wonted chimes of jangling verse delight.

I am lately entertaining myself with comparing the balance, in which Jupiter is represented as weighing the fates of Hector and Achilles, with that of Virgil, wherein that deity is introduced as weighing the fates of Turnus and Æneas. I considered how the same way of thinking prevails in the eastern parts of the world, as in those images of Scripture, wherein we are told, that the great king of Babylon, the day before his fall, had been "weighed in the balance, and been found wanting." In other places of the holy writings, Almighty is described as weighing the actions in scales, making the weight for the balancing of the clouds; and as weighing the actions of men, and laying them together in a balance. Milton, as I observed in a former paper, had an eye to these foregoing instances in that beautiful passage, wherein he represents the archangel and evil spirit as addressing themselves for the last part by the balance which appeared to them, and weighed the consequences of their choice.

Great, to prevent such horrid fray, Upheld in heav'n his golden scales, yet seen I, Astrea and the Scorpion sign;
 In all things created first he weigh'd, Adulterous round earth, with balanc'd air, Perpetual, now ponders all events,
 And realms; in these he put two weights, One each of purring and of fight, For quick up flew, and kick'd the beam; Gabriel spying, thus bespoke the fiend:
 "I know thy strength, and thou know'st mine;
 'Tis our own, but giv'n. What folly then At what arms can do, since thine no more Heaven permits; nor mine, though doubled now Spite thee as mine! For proof look up, And thy lot in yon celestial sign, Thou art weigh'd, and shewn how light, how weak, Resist!" The fiend look'd up, and knew His scaled scale aloft; nor more: but fled In haste, and with him fled the shades of night.

Several amusing thoughts, having taken possession of my mind some time before I went to bed, were mingling themselves with my ordinary ideas in my imagination a very odd kind of way, methought, replaced in my study, and in my elbow chair, where I had indulged myself in speculations with my lamp burning by me. Whilst I was here meditating on subjects of morality, and considering the many virtues and vices, as materials for those essays with which I daily entertain the public, methought, a pair of golden scales hanging on the wall of the same metal, over the table that I sat at; when, on a sudden, there were several weights thrown down on each side of the balance. I found, upon examining these weights, that they were of the value of every thing that is in estimation among men. I made an essay of them, by weighing of wisdom in one scale, and that of folly in another; upon which, the latter, to show its native lightness, immediately flew up and out of the beam.

Therefore I proceed, I must inform my reader, that the weights did not exert their natural gravity till they were laid in the beam. I could not much that I could not stir the opposite balance, though assisted by the Stars, and the Earth. Upon emptying the scales, and honours, with Pomp and weights of the like nature, I accidentally into the other, to my surprise, it proved so exactly kept the balance in as to glittering weight was insupportable with the word "Vanity," several other weights which exact counterpoises to it. I tried, as Avarice and Ambition, with some others.

There were likewise several other weights of the same figure, and seen to be of the same weight, but were entirely out of the scales; as Religion and Learning, Wit and Devotion, Gravity and Modesty.

I observed one particular side; and, upon applying it, I found on one side "Men," and underneath the other side was written, "Gods," and underneath, "Intrinsic value of this world." I observed, for it was more than I imagined, for it was Good-fortune, and many much more ponderous in the scale.

There is a saying of an ounce of mother-wit is worth a pound of sense. I was sensible of the truth of the difference between the scale of Learning and that of Learning. I made upon these two weights a field of discoveries; for, of the Natural Parts was Learning, I observed it was times heavier than it did seem, and it was falling into the same scale of observation upon Faith, standing the latter outweight it received a thousand times from its conjunction with Faith. This odd observation in other particulars, as Philosophy and Religion, Zeal and Charity, depth of Style, with innumeral to be mentioned in this.

As a dream seldom is without impertinence, I made several other experiments, by one of which I observed was very often heard, and by another, that as I weighed down a whole world, one of the Spectators by the scales, and flung the other. The reader will have rewarded with the sexes my interest to

to be excused
ent. Having ands, I could principles of rning; but, as neutral paper, nder this head
the weights, it in capital nd, though I speculation,
her. I shall was sorry to resolved for m, not to dearances, but towards them lue.—C.

22, 1712.

5. well

NORRIS.

meet with any author, that is ever met with utiful saying alth, and vir-verbal trans-
ho have their
ho have their man's obser-
of rich men, hat are over-eans of their more natural its are lost in he wise man:
en within it,
and besieged

Now there-e, by his wis-remembered dom is better man's wisdom ed."

the most advan-visdom. Pon the supply-oying our su-another case, dy eye upon umph."

they are apt of man, one of these grow-m that which ience, indus-good quali-
good-nature, are as often contrary, poverty is apt to betray a man into envy, riches in arrogance. Poverty is too often attended with frau-vicious compliance, repining, murmur, and disco-tent; riches expose a man to pride and luxury, foolish elation of heart and too great a fondness for the present world. In short, the middle condition is most eligible to the man who would improve himself in virtue; as I have before shown, it is the true advantageous for the gaining of knowledge. It was upon this consideration that Agur founded his prayer, which, for the wisdom of it, is recorded in holy writ. "Two things have I required of thee; deny me them not before I die. Remove far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me: lest I be full and deny thee, and say, Why is the Lord or lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of my God in vain."

I shall fill the remaining part of my paper with a very pretty allegory, which is wrought into a play by Aristophanes, the Greek comedian. It seems originally designed as a satire upon the rich, though in some parts of it, it is, like the foregoing discourse, a kind of comparison between wealth and poverty.

Chremylus, who was an old and a good man, and withal exceeding poor, being desirous to leave some riches to his son, consults the oracle of Apollo upon the subject. The oracle bids him follow the first man he should see upon his going out of the temple.
The person he chanced to see was to appearance an old blind sordid man, but, upon his following him from place to place, he at last found, by his own confession, that he was Plutus the god of riches and that he was just come out of the house of a miser. Plutus further told him, that when he was a boy, he used to declare, that as soon as he came to age he would distribute wealth to no one but vir-tuous and just men; upon which Jupiter, considering the pernicious consequences of such a resolution, took his sight away from him, and left him to stroll about the world in the blind condition where Chremylus beheld him. With much ado Chremylus prevailed upon him to go to his house, where he met an old woman in a tattered raiment, who had been his guest for many years, and whose name was Poverty. The old woman refusing to turn out so easily, as he would have her, he threatened to banish her not only from his own house, but out of all Greece if she made any more words upon the matter. Poverty on this occasion pleads her cause very notably and represents to her old landlord, that, should she be driven out of the country, all their trades, arts, and sciences, would be driven out with her; and that, if every one was rich, they would never be supplied with those pomps, ornaments, and conveniences of life, which made riches desirable. She likewise represented to him the several advantages which she bestowed upon her votaries in regard to their shape, their health, and their activity, by preserving them from gout, dropsies, uncleanliness, and intemperance. But whatever she had to say for herself, she was at last forced to troop off. Chremylus immediately considered how he might restore Plutus to his sight; and, in order to it, conveyed him to the temple of Esculapius, who was famous for cures and miracles of this nature. By this means the deity recovered his eyes, and began to make right use of them, by enriching every one that was distinguished by piety towards the gods, and justice towards men; and at the same time by taking away his gifts from the impious and undeserving. This produces several merry incidents, till in the last act

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

those of God. One is of nature. Faith and the mind of every real impression of divine object on which he casts has made the best art, in the formation of and these are arguments cannot forbear attend- and hurry of human could a man live under with works of art and reward be brought up several glories of the immediately pronounce being as we define God by beautiful strokes of exalted strain: "The God; and the firmament. One day telleth to another. There is ; but their voices are and is gone out into all the ends of the world." manner of thinking further ode, the reader may find one:—

high,
sky,
ining frame,
sim:
lay to day,
display,
and hand.

s prevail,
ndrous tale,
earth
rth:
und her burn,
turn,
roll,
pole to pole.

lence all trial ball?
e nor sound
e found?
olence,
oice;
oice.
is divine."

AUGUST 25, 1712.

it dea.—VING. Æn. i. 409. queen of love is known.
DRAIDEN.

of Virgil, is lost in the in the place on which by a lady in a habit for m, whether he has seen woman dressed as she owing the sport in the loyed, according to the hero answers with the appearance she made; on as she inquired for; her to be of the deities, a stranger. Her form, manifested she was more e was certainly a goddess her known to be the goddess of beauty till she moved. All the ch an agreeable person are then in their highest tion, every limb and feature appears with its tive grace. It is from this observation that not help being so passionate an admirer as good dancing. As all art is an imitation of this is an imitation of nature in its highest excellence and at a time when she is most agreeable business of dancing is to display beauty; that reason all distortions and mimicries, are what raise aversion instead of pleasure things that are in themselves excellent, are tended with imposture and false imitation, as in poetry there are labouring fools who wigrams and acrostics, there are pretenders and who think merely to do what others cannot excel. Such creatures should be rewarded who had acquired a knack of throwing a corn through the eye of a needle, with a to keep his hands in use. The dancers on our are very faulty in this kind; and what the by writhing themselves into such postures would be a pain for any of the spectators to see and yet hope to please those spectators, is ligible. Mr. Prince has a genius, if he w encouraged, would prompt him to better than all the dances he invents, you see he keeps the characters he represents. He does not please by making his performers move in a in which no one else ever did, but by motion to the characters he represents. He gives to and lubbards clumsy graces; that is, he mak practise what they would think graces; and seen dances of his, which might give hints to be useful to a comic writer. These performers have pleased the taste of such as have not enough to know their excellence, because in nature; and the distorted motions of others offended those who could not form reasons selves for their displeasure, from their being tradition to nature.

When one considers the inexpressible ad there is in arriving at some excellence in this is monstrous to behold it so much neglected following letter has in it something very new this subject:—

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a widower with but one daughter; by nature much inclined to be a romp; and no way of educating her, but commanding woman, whom I entertained, to take care to be very watchful in her care and attendance her. I am a man of business, and obliged much abroad. The neighbours have told in my absence our maid has let in the servants in the neighbourhood to junketing, a girl played and romped even in the street. you the plain truth, I caught her once, a years old, at chuck-farthing among the boys put me upon new thoughts about my child determined to place her at a boarding-school at the same time gave a very discreet young woman her maintenance at the same place to be her companion. I took little notice of from time to time, but saw her now and then healthy, out of harm's way, and was satisfied by much importunity, I was lately prevailed to go to one of their balls. I cannot express the anxiety my silly heart was in, when I romp, now fifteen, taken out: I never felt of a father upon me so strongly in my w and I could not have suffered more had my name been at stake. My girl came on with the coming modesty I had ever seen, and casting that eye, as if she feared me more than all eyes, I gave a nod, which I think gave her spirit she assumed upon it: but she rose with that dignity of aspect. My romp, now the ice-cream person of her sex, assumed a majesty, commanded the highest respect; and when I turned to me, and saw my face in rapture, she with the prettiest smile, and I saw in all her motion she exulted in her father's satisfaction.

Spectator, will, better than I can tell you, to yourself all the different beauties and of aspect in an accomplished young woman, worth all her beauties with a design to please so much as her father. My girl's lover can now half the satisfaction that I did in her.

I could not possibly have imagined that improvement could have been wrought by that I always held in itself ridiculous and futile. There is, I am convinced, no method to give young women a sense of their due and dignity; and I am sure there can be no expeditious way to communicate that value to them. As for the dippant, insipidly gay, and wanton, whom you behold among dancers, no praise is more to be attributed to the perverse of the performers, than imputed to the art itself: my part, my child has danced herself into it; and I have as great an honour for her I had for her mother, from whom she derived her good qualities which appeared in her dance when she was dancing; for my girl, I say it myself, showed in one quarter of an hour the principles of a modest virgin, a tender, a generous friend, a kind mother, and an obedient mistress. I'll strain hard but I will procure her a husband suitable to her merit. I am avert in the admiration of what I thought when you recommended; and if you please my house on Thursday next, I make a ball for my daughter, and you shall see her dance, or, if I do her that honour, dance with her.

"I am, Sir, your humble Servant,

"PHILOPATER."

Some time ago spoken of a treatise written by Weaver on this subject, which is now, I understand, ready to be published. This work sets this in a very plain and advantageous light; and convinced from it, that if the art was under regulations, it would be a mechanic way of doing insensibly, in minds not capable of receiving it so well by any other rules, a sense of good-g and virtue.

Any one to see Mariamne* dance, let him be so sensual a brute, I defy him to entertain thoughts but of the highest respect and esteem for her. I was showed last week a picture in a closet, for which she had a hundred dresses, that she could clap on round the face one to demonstrate the force of habits in the eyes of the same countenance. Motion, and of posture and aspect, has an effect no less great on the person of Mariamne when she is extremely pretty, and as silly as she is. This idiot has a very good ear, and a most delicate shape; but the folly of the thing is such, as makes so impertinently, and affects to please so silly, that while she is from head to foot. For as this art is thought to be a dancer that had not a be a truth, I shall leave that maxim, what esteem impertinents as fly, he round, and jump over to play a thousand pranks better than a man, instead of what the human forming.

It may perhaps appear a mighty lover, at least much pains to recommend mankind look upon to of the soberer part of not enough considered son only disesteem it. tification, say, that I vice of honour and virtue can pretend to give el sibly be proved, that pleasure, and virtue in delights of a free fortune tions, this truth would support it; but it would that there is a strict aff are truly laudable and sentiment of the soul to of the body.—T.

No. 467.] TUESDAY

— Quodcumque me
Seu tibi par poterant
Sive minus; certeque Hoc tibi: ne tanto

What'er my Muse
Whether the nicenes Applaud my lays, or To thee I sing, and
By adding to my page

THE love of praise is in the mind of every extraordinary are most affected with that particle of the divine kind from the inferior giving himself is most pleasing: the other part, the acknowledgment of our faults, the adoration of his perfect observation, that we do not when we cease to extant two orations of the greatest and best performers, who, no doubt, faction, what even the and at so large a distance out admiration. Cæsar the breath of praise, was long enough for himself Others have sacrificed was not to begin fill themselves to purchase commence till they merit and superior ex but, whilst living, to reputation, is the last can hope for here. abroad with confusion, (as punishments are more for the deterring * Probably Mrs. Bicknell.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

frequent, whether originals or copies of the malignancy in the ridicule. However, it is variety, something of the dark and y, perhaps, be what is good, what is blame-worthy what you do this with ing to do some sign, to give a rough all the how only draw in silence the the undesigned honours he dignity and vestis. 'Tis here that ves and billows r a haven: he every virtue, mankind has em. Thus in is no less glo- reality a more edentary inac- in hurry and er, like bodies of their motion hich often va- then still re- sic worth that or assistance, most bear the nk it laudable hich most en- illius has too g good ever to at reason he id frugality at dreams should ooks with dis- h as the time- ence; he will s in the high- he will be the hilst they who re and patron- of his life and t of the reach proper and be- a level with d-nature is a those who are t. One may y of Theron, art, ned heart. a gaining the nor steer with two contend-

ing parties. 'Tis his peculiar happiness that, when he espouses neither with an intemperate zeal, he not only admired, but, what is a more rare and usual felicity, he is beloved and caressed by his friends, and I never yet saw any person, of whatever age or sex, but was immediately struck with the merit of Manilius. There are many who are acceptable to some particular persons, whilst the rest of mankind look upon them with coldness and indifference; but he is the first whose entire good fortune it is ever please and to be pleased, wherever he comes to be admired, and wherever he is absent to be lamented. His merit fares like the pictures of Raphael, which are either seen with admiration by all, or at least one dare own that he has no taste for a composition which has received so universal an applause. Flattery and malice find it against their interest to insulter and obloquy. 'Tis as hard for an enemy to detract from, as for a friend to add to, his praise. An attempt upon his reputation is a sure lesson of one's own; and there is but one way to injure him, which is to refuse him his just commendation and be obstinately silent.

It is below him to catch the sight with any care of dress; his outward garb is but the emblem of his mind. It is genteel, plain, and unaffected; he knows that gold and embroidery can add nothing to the opinion which all have of his merit, and thus he gives a lustre to the plainest dress, whilst 'tis impossible the richest should communicate any to him. He is still the principal figure in the room. He first engages your eye, as if there were some point of light which shone stronger upon him than on any other person.

He puts me in mind of a story of the famous Borg d'Amboise, who, at an assembly at court, when every one appeared with the utmost magnificence, relying on his own superior behaviour, instead of adorning himself like the rest, put on that day, plain suit of clothes, and dressed all his servants in the most costly gay habits he could procure. The event was, that the eyes of the whole court were fixed upon him; all the rest looked like his attendants, while he alone had the air of a person of quality and distinction.

Like Aristippus, whatever shape or condition he appears in, it still sits free and easy upon him; he is in some part of his character, 'tis true, he differs from him; for as he is altogether equal to the largeness of his present circumstances, the rectitude of his judgment has so far corrected the inclination of his ambition, that he will not trouble himself with either the desires or pursuits of any thing beyond his present enjoyments.

A thousand obliging things flow from him upon every occasion; and they were always so just and natural, that it is impossible to think he was at the least pains to look for them. One would think it was the demon of good thoughts that discovered to him those treasures, which he must have blinded others from seeing, they lay so directly in their way. Nothing can equal the pleasure that is taken in hearing him speak, but the satisfaction one receives in the civility and attention he pays to the discourse of others. His looks are a silent commendation of what is good and praiseworthy, and a secret reproof to what is licentious and extravagant. He knows how to appear free and open without danger of intrusion, and to be cautious without seeming reserve. The gravity of his conversation is always enlivened with his wit and humour, and the gaiety of it is tempered with something that is instructive, as well rely, agreeable. Thus, with him you are sure not be merry at the expense of your reason, nor serious with the loss of your good-humour; but, by a happy mixture of his temper, they either go together, perpetually succeed each other. In fine, his sole behaviour is equally distant from constraint and negligence, and he commands your respect while he gains your heart.

There is in his whole carriage such an engaging sweetness, that one cannot persuade one's self he is ever actuated by those rougher passions, which, wherever they find place, seldom fail of showing themselves in the outward demeanour of the person they belong to; but his constitution is a just temperature between indolence on one hand, and violence on the other. He is mild and gentle, wherever his affairs will give him leave to follow his own inclinations; but yet never failing to exert himself with vigour and resolution in the service of his race, his country, or his friend.—Z.

No. 468.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 27, 1712.

Est homo ingeniosus, acutus, acer, et qui plurimum et salis habere et felix, nec gaudioris minus.—PLIN. Epist.

He was an ingenious, pleasant fellow, and one who had a great deal of wit and satire, with an equal share of good-humour.

My paper is, in a kind, a letter of news, but it regards rather what passes in the world of conversation than that of business. I am very sorry that I have at present a circumstance before me, which is of very great importance to all who have a relish for gaiety, wit, mirth, or humour; I mean the death of our Dick Estcourt. I have been obliged to him for many hours of jollity, that it is but a small recompense, though all I can give him, to pass a moment or two in sadness for the loss of so agreeable a man. Poor Estcourt! the last time I saw him, we were plotting to show the town his great capacity for acting in its full light, by introducing him as dictating to a set of young players, in what manner to speak this sentence, and utter the other passion. He had so exquisite a discerning of what was defective in any object before him, that in an instant he could show you the ridiculous side of what would pass for serious and just, even to men of no ill judgment, before he had pointed at the failure. He was no less skilful in the knowledge of beauty; and I dare say, there is no one who knew him well, but can repeat more well-turned compliments, as well as smart epigrams of Mr. Estcourt's, than of any other man in England. This was easily to be observed in his admirable faculty of telling a story, in which he could throw in natural and unexpected incidents to take his court to one part, and rally the other part of the company. Then he would vary the usage he gave them, according as he saw them bear kind or sharp language. He had the knack to raise up a sensitive temper, and mortify an impertinently gay one, with the most agreeable skill imaginable. There were thousand things which crowd into my memory, which make me too much concerned to tell on about now. Hamlet holding up the skull which the grave-digger threw to him, with an account that it was the head of the king's jester, falls into very pleasing reflections, and cries out to his companion, "Alas, poor Yorick!" I knew him, Horatio, a fellow of infinite jest, of most exquisite fancy; he hath borne even his hack a thousand times: and now how abashed in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at the thought of those lips that I have kissed I know not how oft. Were his bolts? your song were wont to set to mock your own get you to my lips paint an inch of Make her laugh It is an insolence as much as in to his circumstance praise faintly the and say, It is v he is, or the like ledge the value of exaltation. It is be ascribed, than judgment upon a most blameless raise this man a foot of contribut was as easy and cellent talents have it, that to all the seeming him to the hear sense, who could tified to let him play after his own him to mimicry it be at their expense show the form of the company at interrupting him the character of

What was of companion was, sons and sentiment their faces, and in his narration ing, and this was men of the best wherein were re understanding. of self-love to a mimicked, as none but the va who were incapable dreaded him; to pleasing; and any indifferent ing got over and the air he could It is indeed to than any philos that my person different to me v manner, my spe Estcourt I chiefly piness of thinking what argues a de

It has as much ture, to have it good player: but for former actors them, and judg before, rather than a man of his wit absence of com the character of an air of ineptid racter of Pounce to dispute his cap education, and have been trained up in the of knowledge and virtue.

It has been observed, that men of learning who business, discharge it generally with greater than men of the world. The chief reason take to be as follows: A man that has spent in reading, has been used to find virtue and vice stigmatized. A man that has his time in the world, has often seen vice ant, and virtue discountenanced. Extortion, and injustice, which are branded with in-books, often give a man a figure in the world; veral qualities, which are celebrated in au-is generosity, ingenuity, and good-nature, ish and ruin him. This cannot but have a onable effect on men whose tempers and es are equally good and vicious.

It would be at least this advantage in em-men of learning and parts in business; that prosperity would sit more gracefully on them, we should not see many worthless persons into the greatest figures of life.—C.

470.] FRIDAY, AUGUST 29, 1712.

ripe est difficile habere nugas, stultus labor est ineptiarum.—MART. 2 Epig. lxxxvi. folly only, and defect of sense. as trifles into things of consequence.

I have been very often disappointed of late years, on examining the new edition of a classic I have found above half the volume taken various readings. When I have expected with a learned note upon a doubtful passage in poet, I have only been informed, that such ancient manuscripts for an et write an some other notable discovery of the like see. Indeed, when a different reading gives rent sense, or a new elegance in an author, r does very well in taking notice of it; but only entertains us with the several ways of the same word, and gathers together the blunders and mistakes of twenty or thirty transcribers, they only take up the time of ied reader, and puzzle the minds of the I have often fancied with myself how in old Latin author would be, should he veral absurdities in sense and grammar, r imputed to him by some or other of these eadings. In one he speaks nonsense; in nakes use of a word that was never heard ndeed there is scarce a solecism in writing best author is not guilty of, if we may be to read him in the words of some manu-rich the laborious editor has thought fit to in the prosecution of his work.

ion not but the ladies and pretty fellows ry curious to understand what it is that I a hitherto talking of. I shall therefore a notion of this practice, by endeavour-te after several persons who make an emi-e in the republic of letters. To this end, pse that the following song is an old ode, resent to the public in a new edition, with I various readings which I find of it in for-ns, and in ancient manuscripts. Those who ish the various readings, will perhaps find ant in the song, which never before ap-print.

love was fickle once and changing, or e'er would settle in my heart; in beauty still to beauty ranging, every face I found a dart.

'Twas first a chance An eye then gave Till by her wit
And all my for But now a long a
For Belvidera
Hourly I sigh, and Nor hope to find
For here the false
After a thousand
Does new surpris
And finds varie

VARIOUS

Stanza the first, ve
The and in some ma but that in the Cotton tinet letters.

Verse the second.
it ever would; but as I have restored it to its g that synaeresis which rant transcribers.

Ibid. In my heart.]
heart.

Verse the fourth. I manuscript for I reads the hallucination of the mistook the dash of the Stanza the second.

stroke.] Scioppius, Sa the read a; but I have

Verse the third. T scripts have it his wit, But as I find Corinna in other authors, I can

Stanza the third, ver ing anguish.] The Ger
ing passion, but the rhy

Verse the second, I not all the manuscrip Belvidera into Pelvidera ral of the ancient comi by which means the et visible, and Pelvidera v looks in her glass; as in son, if she had all the here ascribes to her.

Verse the third. H guish.] Some for the v othera nightly; the last side.

Verse the fourth. T Stevens reads wanted cu

Stanza the fourth, v thousand beauties.] In a hundred beauties, by scribers, who probably not taste enough to kn was ten times a greater mistress than a hundred Verse the fourth. And of the ancient manuscri so many of them concur am very much in doubt place. There are but tw to the reading as I have the rhyme, and secondly served by it. It might oscitancy of transcriber work the sooner, used to and seeing the figure I f the pen, as is customar perhaps mistook the das d out of them to the learned, matter of so

T 30, 1712.

of life.

sufficient emts of pain or thick enough
stant action,
its faculties.
fect, that the ays have ma-
with certan
, and antici-

call the me-hen we have is like those re filled with they may ru-

her vacant f thought by faculties that come. These ward into fuughts objects time. We fore they are forward, or those retired d earth shall the existence time, whose aper, confine goes by the

nd transient,
ing, were he gives him a possibly come pe for every Linus, "bee hoped for,
to give us," e, and keeps and indolent ood humour, t cheers and nd to it. It ch rise from

of the least, ring us from enjoyments.
When he s among his left for him-
"Hope." from prizing d turned all able that he reader will it to himself

ch many of he heathens

upon the tradition of the fall of man) shows us how deplorable a state they thought the present life, without hope. To set forth the utmost condition of misery, they tell us, that our forefather, according to the pagan theology, had a great vessel presented him by Pandora. Upon his lifting up the lid of it, says the fable, there flew out all the calamities and distempers incident to men, from which, till that time, they had been altogether exempt. Hope, who had been enclosed in the cup with so much bad company, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of it, that it was shut down upon her.

I shall make but two reflections upon what I have hitherto said. First, that no kind of life is so happy as that which is full of hope, especially when the hope is well grounded, and when the object of it is of an exalted kind, and in its nature proper to make the person happy who enjoys it. This proposition must be very evident to those who consider how few are the present enjoyments of the most happy man, and how insufficient to give him an entire satisfaction and acquiescence in them.

My next observation is this, that a religious life is that which most abounds in a well-grounded hope, and such a one as is fixed on objects that are capable of making us entirely happy. This hope in a religious man is much more sure and certain than the hope of any temporal blessing, as it is strengthened not only by reason, but by faith. It has at the same time its eye perpetually fixed on that state, which implies in the very notion of it the most full and the most complete happiness.

I have before shown how the influence of hope in general sweetens life, and makes our present condition supportable, if not pleasing; but a religious hope has still greater advantages. It does not only bear up the mind under her sufferings, but makes her rejoice in them, as they may be the instruments of procuring her the great and ultimate end of all her hope.

Religious hope has likewise this advantage above any other kind of hope, that it is able to revive the dying man, and to fill his mind not only with rest, comfort and refreshment, but sometimes with rapture and transport. He triumphs in his agonies, whilst the soul springs forward with delight to the great object which she has always had in view, and leaves the body with an expectation of being reunited to her in a glorious and joyful resurrection.

I shall conclude this essay with those emphatical expressions of a lively hope, which the Psalmist made use of in the midst of those dangers and adversities which surrounded him; for the following passage had its present and personal, as well as its future and prophetic sense. "I have set the Lord always before me. Because he is at my right hand I shall not be moved. Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth. My flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption. Thou wilt shew me the path of life: in thy presence is fulness of joy, at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore."—C.

No. 472.] MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1712.

Voluptas

Solamenque mali

This only solace his hard fortune behead

Vine. Act. III. 66.

Barthol.

I RECEIVED some time ago a proposal, which had a preface to it, wherein the author the innumerable objects of charity in a nation admonished the rich, who were afflicted with a distemper of body, particularly to regard in the same species of affliction, and condescendence to them, since it is impossible all who are presented to them. The poor had been relieved from a malady in his eyes, a operation performed by Sir William Read, a man of condition, had taken a resolution to maintain three poor blind men during their gratitudes for that great blessing. This is so very great and unfrequent, that one might think an establishment for all the poor under the sun would be easily accomplished, with the addition of a few others to those wealthy who are in the same amity. However, the thought of the promise from a very good motive; and the part of ourselves out, as called to particular assistance, would be a pretty cement of society. It is the ordinary foundation for men's commerce with each other, and becoming that they agree in the same sort of pleasure; it may also be some reason for amity, that under one common distress. If all the rich came in the gout, from a life of ease, pleasure, luxury, would help those few who have it previous life of pleasure, and add a few of the poor men, who are become lame from uncleanliness, falls, or other accidents of age or sickness, would such gouty persons administer assistance to men disabled like themselves, the consciousness of such a behaviour, would be the pious, cordial, and anodyne, in the feverish, tormenting vicissitudes of that miserable life. The same may be said of all other, both of intellectual evils. These classes of charity certainly bring down blessings upon an people; and if men were not petrified with the cold of this world, against all sense of the common ought to be among them, it would not be reasonable to bill for a poor man in the agony aggravated by want and poverty, to draw the alderman after this form:—

MR. BASIL PLENTY.

"I have the gout and stone, with sixty thousand sterling; I have the gout and stone, with one farthing; I shall pray for you, and I would pay the bearer twenty shillings for relief from,

"Sir, your humble Servant, GATE, 1712. "LAZARUS HOPEFUL.

His own imagination will suggest to him the absurdness of such correspondences, and diminish into a thousand forms; but I shall close my letter upon the subject of blindness. My wing letter seems to be written by a man who is returned to his study after a suspension of ability to do so. The benefit he reports to have received, may well claim the hand-comium he can give the operator.

SPECTATOR, I began lately on your admirable discourses of the Imagination, I began to consider of our senses we are obliged for the most violent institution in favour of blind people, and that, seem to have originated from this paper, certainly the principles of humanity stated in it greatest, and most important; and I soon concluded. That is the sovereign of the arts and sciences, that of the uncultivated mind, it extinguishes the fine spirit of the great vulgar and the obliging benefactress of transporting sensations, serious and wonderful perspective, we owe the amazing magnitude, and motion of revolutions about their centre and motion, the sun, to the fixed stars, and with solid reasons to the sun, moving on its own vortex or turbillion, and to its dependent planets to this. But the inquiry stopped here, but made an immense expanse to divide the blended fires and different worlds, in their peculiar equipages pursue this track any foundation to go on to new bounded space with end.

"The sight informs power to give breath to and the painter's pencil with moving figures as Music indeed may please Jubal, by the different anvil, discovered by the pleased the antediluvian has not only reduced the order and harmony, but the most distant parts of of sound. To the sight discoveries of philosophy of poetry that transport Homer, Milton, and Virgil.

"As the sight has power to supply us with the most sure. Let love, let fraternal piety, and conjugal sight bestows on a meeting would be endless to enumerate advantages of sight; every hour he makes use of it, joys them.

"Thus, as our great are derived from the sight more curious in the form than of the organs of the pendulous machine is corner, of muscles, membrations are admirably dis perspicuity of the human light; the rays are regular; the black lining prevents their being so wonderful indeed to consider eye is fitted to take in an instant, and at the same of their position, figure against our dangers, all the visible objects, we construct and delight.

* Mr. Weaver ascribes

So, as a man the peasant gown should wear, So, as a man, his face be of rough, his look severe,
And are great Cato in his robe and dress; Must be his virtue—and his mind express.—CYPRIAN

TO THE SPECTATOR.

‘SIR,

‘ I am now in the country, and employ most of my time in reading, or thinking upon what I have read. Your paper comes constantly down to me, and it affects me so much, that I find my thoughts run to your way: and I recommend to you a subject upon which you have not yet touched, and that is, the satisfaction some men seem to take in their imperfections: I think one may call it glorying in their insufficiency. A certain great author is of opinion it is the contrary to envy, though perhaps may proceed from it. Nothing is so common as to hear men of this sort, speaking of themselves, add to their own merit (as they think) by impairing it, in praising themselves for their defects, freely allowing they commit some few frivolous errors, in order to be esteemed persons of uncommon talents and great qualifications. They are generally professing an inconsiderable neglect of dancing, fencing, and riding, as well as an unjust contempt for travelling, and the modern languages: as for their part, say they, they never vacillate or troubled their head about them. This paradoxical satire on themselves certainly is worthy our attention. I have known one of these gentlemen think himself obliged to forget the way of an appointment, and sometimes even that you spoke to him; and when you see them, they hope to sell person them, for they have the worst memory in the world. One of them started up the other day in some confusion, and said, ‘ Now I think on’t, I am to meet Mr. Mortman, the attorney, about some business, but whether it is to-day or to-morrow, I am I cannot tell. Now, to my certain knowledge, he knew it’s time to a moment, and was there a moment ago. These forgetful persons have, to heighten their crime, generally the best memories of any people, as I have heard cut by their remembering sometimes through inadvertency. Two or three of them that I know can say most of our modern tragedies by heart. I asked a gentleman the other day that is famous for a good career (at which acquisition he is out of countenance, imagining it may detract from some of his more essential qualifications) to help me to something that was near him; but he excused himself, and blushing told me, ‘ O! altho’ he could never give in his life; though it can be proved upon him that he cuts up, disjuncts, and increases, with an incomparable dexterity. I would not be understood as if I thought it laudable for a man of equality and fortune to rival the acquisitions of artificers, and endeavour to excel in little handy qualities: but I argue only against being ashamed at what is really praise worthy. As these pretences to ignorance show themselves several ways, you will encounter a man of this tenor per ashamed to be clean, and setting up for wit, only from negligence in his habits. Now I am upon this head, I cannot help observing at once a very different folly proceeding from the same cause. As those above-mentioned arise from affecting an equality with men of greater talents from having the same faults, there are others that would come at a parallel with those above them, by possessing little advantages which they want. I heard a young man not long ago, who has somewhat himself in his ignorance of Greek, Hebrew, and the Orientals: at the same time that he published his aversion to those languages, he said that age of them was rather a diminution than an increase of a man's character: though at the same time I know he languishes and repines he is not of them himself. Whenever I take any persons thus detracting from what they pretend, I tell them I will complain to you. I am sure you will not allow it an exact a thing, that he who contemns it is in it. "I am, Sir,

"Your most humble Servant,
"S. P."

SPECTATOR, I am a man of a very good estate, and am beloved. I hope you will allow, when the subject is honest, there may be, without just innocence, some toying by the way. Editions are perhaps too distant and foreign occasions: but however that is, I am so you that I have writ some verses to your offence. You professed authors are a curse upon us, who write like gentlemen: but your friend to love, you will insert my poem. Imagine how much service it would do your fair one, as well as reputation with all to have something of mine in the Spectator was, that I snatched a kiss, and excuse me as follows:—

I.
See from yonder flowers
The bee flies loaded to its cell:
You perceive what it devours?
Do they impair'd in show or smell?

II.
Though I rob'd you of a kiss, Sweeter than their ambrosial dew.
Are you angry at my bias?
Is it all impoverish'd you?

III.
By this cunning I contrive, Spite of your unkind reserve, Keep my famish'd love alive,
Which you inhumanly would starve.

I am, Sir, your humble Servant,
"TIMOTHY STANZA."

August 23, 1712.

A little time upon my hands, I could not find it better than in writing an

Spectator, which I now do, and am, Sir,
"Your humble Servant,
"BOB SHORT.

You approve of my style, I am likely to become your correspondent. I desire of it. I design it for that way of writing the judicious 'the familiar.'—T.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 3, 1712.

grosus, et inconcinna.—Hos. l. Ep. xviii. 6. le, and inelegant.

SPECTATOR, I am of the number of those that have lately left the centre of business and pleasure, my country where I am arises rather a society than the solitude of it. To be receive and return visits from and to a bores, who, through diversity of age as, can neither be entertaining nor serious, is a vile loss of time, and a slavery man should deliver himself, if possible: I lose the remaining part of my life, because they have thrown theirs? It is to me an in- be tormented with the noise who are warm in their expression of that pleasure which their more delicate taste of. I do and abhor that damnable the necessity of a bumper, for though it is pretended are used only to inspire gaiety that cheerfulness which will circulation. If at these meetings stranger either to fill his g inclination, or to make his has been sufficiently obliged entertainments would be a sense, and consequently worse than at present they are.

guests are known to measure by their glass, proper exhortations these to push their fortune; but where it is unseemly modest stranger, this drenched lowed with the same necessity in the horn for that prevailing circumstance, that your guest in the same degree.

"To attend without in five-barred gates, double doors to survey the orator with difficulty but absolute tolerable terms with him; burstings out into laughter ments the most requisite, have not that command necessary to be good company would publish this letter, and once for a queer fellow, as strous to me, that we who calm conversation, should roarers; but they think the hours, may come into our room that they and their dogs but "Your institution of clubs in which you constantly employ the metaphorically defective serviceable to the busy mankind, nor entertaining relative. There should certainly be established a club of conversations I have described private, as also the public and be excluded, all others should be the same with the should be admitted into this except he had broken his broken rib or two might at the least opposition. The person have broken his neck, and once or twice: for the more shall have met with, the attention flow and keep up; and vigorous invalids had finished collar-bone, this naturally story of the ribs. Besides, the of their falls and fractures will diversify their relations. In other club of such men, who well in maiming themselves constant pursuit of these ac-

* A horn is used to admit

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

have said, to hunters; for the full speed of, and not of able mention of all others, od, has been he have over- used through- tion that the Great Bri- ave been re- ave met with er the names ular fineries uishing mark es, the mean- expressed in fine observers to hate such happy that I it I love them many pockets urs, or make ouses. There expectation, s my flights observes my rdingly. His bt of me, has y desired not its his parts; n the several ien he makes a time he and only, for we ing informed try where I ould pass it, above the ob-should be as r very agree- ive with me; ther at school n and exert ge. There be employed d be impossi- r's chamber, d communi- ith, with our justness of od-humoured r out of that hich makes n a quarter g gentlemen, heads to vi- s in the same of happiness, pubic, and es to observe rprised with risk in swill-

4.

ing bumpers, upon this occasion, that it is better to trouble others with my impertinences, than to be troubled myself with theirs. The necessity of an if firmity makes me resolve to fall into that project and as we should be but five, the terrors of an un- luntary separation, which our number caused as we admit of, would make us exert ourselves in oppo- tion to all the particulars mentioned in your infor- mation of that equitable confinement. This my way of life I know would subject me to the imputations of morose, covetous, and singular fellow. These and a- other hard words, with all manner of insipid jest and all other reproach, would be matter of merrit to me and my friends; besides, I would destroy the application of the epithets morose and covetous by a yearly relief of my undeserv'dly necessitous neighbours, and by treating my friends and country with a humanity that should express the utmost to lie rather on my side; and as for the well sin- gular, I was always of opinion every man must be so, to be what one would desire him.

"Your very humble Servant, J. B."*

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"ABOUT two years ago I was called upon by the younger part of a country family, by my mother's side related to me, to visit Mr. Campbell; the same man; for they told me that that was exactly who brought them to town, having heard wandering in Essex. I, who always wanted faith in matters of this kind, was not easily prevailed on to go; but lest they should take it ill, I went with them, when to my surprise, Mr. Campbell related all their past life; in short, had he not been pretreated, such discovery would have come out as would have been the next design of their coming to town, viz. to buy wedding-clothes. Our names—though he never heard of us before—and we endeavoured to conceal—were as familiar to him as to ourselves. I am sure, Mr. Spectator, he is a very learned and wise man. Being impatient to know my fortune having paid my respects to a family Justice, he told me (after his manner) among several other things, that in a year and nine months I should be ill of a new fever, be given over by my physician but should with much difficulty recover; that the first time I took the air afterward, I should be dressed to by a young gentleman of a plentiful fortune, good sense, and a generous spirit. Mr. Spectator, he is the purest man in the world, for all he has to come to pass, and I am the happiest she in town I have been in quest of Mr. Campbell these three months, and cannot find him out. Now, since you are a dumb man too, I thought you might correspond, and be able to tell me something; for I think myself highly obliged to make his fortune, he has mine. It is very possible your worship, who has spies all over this town, can inform me how

* This letter was probably written by Swift's father-in-law and friend, the Rev. Mr. Richard Parker. This distinguished scholar was for many years vicar of Kington, Northumberland, a living in the gift of Mersey. He and Steele lived in the most cordial harmony. He was the rural sports of Northumberland, he was the change of visits with most of the hospitable gentlemen and neighbourhood who, invigorated by their diversified and copious meals, and were apt to be voluble in conversation and over-impetuous with their guests, to join in their own vitality.

† Duncan Campbell announced himself to the public as a Scotch highlander, gifted with the second sight. He pretended to be, deaf and dumb, and succeeded in gaining a fortune to himself by practising for some years on the credulity of the vulgar in the ignorant credence of a false letter.

send to him. If you can, I beseech you be as speedy as possible, and you will highly oblige

"Your constant Reader and Admirer, "DULCIBELLA THANKLEY."

Ordered, That the inspector I employ about wonders inquire at the Golden-Lion, opposite to the Half-Moon tavern in Drury-lane, into the merit of this silent sage, and report accordingly.—T.

No. 475.] THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1712.

—Quæ res in se neque consilium, neque modum Habet ullum, eam consilio regere non potes.

TER. Eun. act. 1. sc. 1.

The thing that in itself has neither measure nor consideration, counsel cannot rule.

It is an old observation, which has been made of politicians who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign, than promote his real service, that they accommodate their counsels to his inclinations, and advise him to such actions only as his heart is naturally set upon. The privy-councillor of one in love must observe the same conduct, unless he would forfeit the friendship of the person who desires his advice. I have known several odd cases of this nature. Hipparchus was going to marry a common woman; but being resolved to do nothing without the advice of his friend Philander, he consulted him upon the occasion. Philander told him his mind freely, and represented his mistress to him in such strong colours, that the next morning he received a challenge for his pains, and before twelve o'clock was run through the body by the man who had asked his advice. Celia was more prudent on the like occasion. She desired Leonilla to give her opinion freely upon the young fellow who made his addresses to her. Leonilla, to oblige her, told her with great frankness, that she looked upon him as one of the most worthless.—Celia, foreseeing what a character she was to expect, begged her not to go on, for that she had been privately married to him above a fortnight. The truth of it is, a woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding-clothes. When she has made her own choice, for form's sake, she sends a congé d'élire to her friends.

If we look into the secret springs and motives that set people at work on these occasions, and put them upon asking advice which they never intend to take; I look upon it to be none of the least, that they are incapable of keeping a secret which is so very pleasing to them. A girl longs to tell her confidante, that she hopes to be married in a little time; and, in order to talk of the pretty fellow that dwells so much in her thoughts, asks her very gravely what she would advise her to do in a case of so much difficulty. Why else should Melissa, who had not a thousand pounds in the world, go into every quarter of the town to ask her acquaintance, whether they would advise her to take Tom Townly, that made his addresses to her with an estate of five thousand a year? It is very pleasant, on this occasion, to hear the lady propose her doubts; and to see the pains she is at to get over them.

I must not here omit a practice that is in use among the vainer part of our own sex, who will often ask a friend's advice in relation to a fortune whom they are never like to come at. Will Honeycomb, who is now on the verge of threescore, took me aside not long since, and asked me in his most serious look, whether I would advise him to marry my Lady Betty of the greatest full in the face which he immedately jewels and estate nothing in a man's approbation. I told him if he mine. This is knowledge, without ever of

I have been ing letter, while young female seems to have ripe for asking her good-will, have with her the letter to the answer to it.

"Mr. Sp.

"Now, Sir, prettiest gentle but not too tall. His mouth is the prettiest that I laughing, for he did but see how sand pretty fan you would like can talk Latin but see him dance Mr. Shapely b that, you know reasonable as because he has that is better tured, ingenious some man; and ties ever since he has black eyes, if he had tears i reasonable, tha him. I have a der me of, and of August next the world as so But every bod Shapely's enem me your advice and if you advise I heartily wish

"Sir, you C. "He

No. 476.] F

Method

AMONG my public, there ar larity and meth wildness of those of essays. As of the discour paper. In the that I have sev troubling myse they may seem disposed under

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ist kind, as
When I read method, I
with a great
other in the en I read a plantation, res, so as to are struck one a whole r something n you have rfect notion mands the idea of it a nly support-ho are often se to throw ader, rather

h in respect to the first.
n a man has any thoughts r themselves his thoughts
, and better en they are one another e thrown to
There is ale same seneader in one other. For ht in a me-
test beauty, ting receive picture. The al discoure-
er. He com-n with plea-

ry conversa-
ould talk to a thousand y sensible of my honest in ten which where, at-not entirelv of the scutleate himself, he becomes how to me-
row a phrase
y of words," f leaves.

nt immetho-nder my obke him very ent to raise bity that he a great deal sets up for a to blame in s shrewd in-er world. In is parts will alf a dozen ever fails to occasion of

it. Though the matter in debate be about Douay & Denam, it is ten to one but half his discourse runs upon the unreasonableness of bigotry and priest-craft. This makes Mr. Puzzle the admiration of all those who have less sense than himself, and the contempt of all those who have more. There is none but town whom Tom drags so much as my friend Will Dry. Will, who is acquainted with Tom's logic, when he finds him running off the question, cuts him short with a "What then? We allow all this to be true; but what is it to our present purpose?" I have known Tom eloquent half an hour together, and tripping, as he thought, in the superiority of the argument, when he has been napped on a sudden by Mr. Dry's despatching him to ten the company what it was that he endeavoured to prove. In short, Dry is a man of a clear methodical head, but few words, and gains the same advantages over Puzzle, that a small body of regular troops would gain over a numberless undisciplined militia.

No. 177.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1712.

— — — — — Au me fait amities Heureux Andre, et Voire pour

Etrange perles d'Amour

Que d'eau substat et aue — Hec. 2 Od. iv. 5.

— — — — — Does any fancy cheat

My mind when pleas'd with the deceit?

I seem to hear, I seem to move,

And wander through the happy grove,

Where smother'd springs flow, and murm'ring breeze

Wanders through the waving trees — CHAUCER

— — — — — Sir,

"HAvING lately read your essay on The Pleasures of the Imagination, I was so taken with your thoughts upon some of our English gardens, that I cannot forbear troubling you with a letter upon that subject. I am one, you must know, who am looked upon as a humourist in gardening. I have several acres about my house, which I call my garden, and which a skillful gardener would not know what to call. It is a confusion of kitchen and parterre, orchard and flower-garden, which he so mix'd and interwoven with one another, that if a foreigner who had seen nothing of our country, should be convey'd into my garden at his first landing, he would look upon it as a natural wilderness, and one of the uncultivated parts of our country. My flowers grow up in several parts of the garden in the greatest luxuriance and profusion. I am so far from being fond of any particular one, by reason of its rarity, that if I meet with any one in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. By this means, when a stranger walks with me, he is surpris'd to see several large spots of ground covered with ten thousand different colours, and has often singled out flowers that he might have met with under a common hedge, in a field, or in a meadow, as some of the greatest beauties of the place. The only method I observe in this particular, is to range in the same quarter the products of the same season, that they may make their appearance together, and compose a picture of the greatest variety. There is the same irregularity in my plantations, which run into a great wilderness as their natures will permit. I take in none that do not naturally rejoice in the soil, and am pleas'd, when I am walking in a labyrinth of my own raising, not to know whether the next tree I shall meet with is an apple or an oak, an elm or a pear-tree. My kitchen has likewise its particular quarters assigned it; for besides the whole

luxury which that place abounds with, I have always thought a kitchen-garden a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery, or artificial green-house. I love to see every thing in its perfection; and am more pleased to survey my rows of coleworts and abbages, with a thousand nameless pot-herbs, springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats, or withering in an air and soil that are not adapted to them. I must not omit, that there is a fountain rising in the upper part of my garden, which forms a little wandering rill, and administers to the pleasure as well as the plenty of the place. I have so conducted it, that it visits most of my plantations: and have taken particular care to let it run in the same manner as it would do in an open field, so that it generally passes through banks of violets and primroses, plats of willow, or other plants, that seem to be of its own producing. There is another circumstance in which I am very particular, or, as my neighbours call me, very whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds of the country, by offering them the conveniency of springs and shades, solitude and shelter, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests in the spring, or drive them from their usual haunts in fruit-time; I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. By this means, I have always the music of the season in its perfection, and am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks, and shooting before my eye across the several little glades and alleys that I pass through. I think there are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonneteers in this art; contrivers of bowers and grottos, treillages and cascades, are romance writers. Wise and London are our heroic poets; and if, as a critic, I may single out any passage of their works to commend, I shall take notice of that part in the upper garden at Kensington, which was at first nothing but a gravel-pit. It must have been a fine genius for gardening that could have thought of forming such an unsightly hollow into so beautiful an area, and to have hit the eye with so uncommon and agreeable a scene as that which it is now wrought into. To give this particular spot of ground the greater effect, they have made a very pleasing contrast; for, as on one side of the walk you see this hollow basin, with its several little plantations, lying so conveniently under the eye of the beholder, on the other side of it there appears a seeming mount, made up of trees, rising one higher than another, in proportion as they approach the centre. A spectator, who has not heard this account of it, would think this circular mount was not only a real one, but that it had been actually scooped out of that hollow space which I have before mentioned. I never yet met with any one, who has walked in this garden, who was not struck with that part of it which I have here mentioned. As for myself, you will find, by the account which I have already given you, that my compositions in gardening are altogether after the Pindaric manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature; without affecting the nicer elegances of art. What I am now going to mention, will perhaps deserve your attention more than any thing I have yet said. I find that, in the discourse which I spoke of at the beginning of my letter, you are against filling an English garden with evergreens; and indeed I am so of your opinion, that I can by no means think the verdure of a garden shoots out annually in summer season. I have seen many who are like me, who have never thought of evergreens, which should cover their leaves. You see the sunshine and the fresh parts of the year in November and any in the finest. I think there could walk in such a garden. In the summer it is a kind of garden sensible of the sun every where me solitude, and a barren prospect cheerful in a spring trees that smile give us a view of that which I have so far indicated have set apart a portion of it. The vines. The last with many other grow so thick in lively scene, with which they verdure of the heart of the bell you have some papers. It is the several kind green spot, and branches and for I have before single leaf for

C.

No. 478.] M

Quem penes

Fashion, sold

"Mr. Sp

"It happened had many thing me to walk with nice in his wa shown; which his humour still been staring at

and led me into ing them.

"I fancied it

who enters into

For the masses, however, now the eyes of the beholders. And to do it must not be done in a way that they may be persuaded with all an eagerness. There must be a deep disappointment, who shall be a goodly which will be a great disappointment with a competent knowledge of the nature of the thing, so that by this means the place will be a good one. Here is a great deal of it for some body who has a great deal of it.

[illegible]

Secondly, that whereas some of our young gentlemen and travel give us great reason to suspect that they only go abroad to make or improve a bad yet serious project of this nature may be a means to keep them at home; which is in effect the best of security in any in the kingdom. All the more influence of fashion in Europe, which was formerly the sole of France, may be made to the advantage, that it may become as common to Frenchmen to come to England for their education, as it has been for Englishmen to go to France for it.

Thursday. What as several great scholars, who might have been, then were useful to the world, have spent their time in striving to describe the dress of the ancients from dark hints, which they are fain to conjecture and support with much learning, it is like to henceforth happen that they shall be freed from the tedious and the world from these useless volumes. This project will be a registry, to which perfectly may have recourse, for the clearing such obscure passages as tend that way in authors; and therefore we shall not in the future submit ourselves to the tormenting of etymology, which might persuade the sage to come that the forthcoming was worn for the purposes of the labor, who for warmth,

And, finally, Who are they, who are old themselves, but often a very young man at the extravagance of youth and the adolescence in which their children are still steeped, so that this old humor will be much suppressed, when we can have recourse to the fashions of their times, produce them in our vintages, and be able to show that it might have been as late as Queen Elizabeth's time only to wash it down with a bottle, as it is now to buy cravats or new hats and garters.

“We are also to have it taken notice of, that we should show a particular respect to the persons, who may induce them to perfect their knowledge which is very proper. As, for example, gentlemen, we have conceived the method of teaching in the English language. There is a book that is put into their hands, with a looking-glass at the end of it, standing up in the middle of it; then on one side of the glass, is written one, above another, patch-bags, sugar-bags, and little bottles; on the other, patches, sugars, bottles, combs, and brushes, beyond these words, are the knots, whose points are hidden in the patches and bags, and are to stand out interchangeably from the sides, and they meet at the top, and form a semicircular device that, over the rest of the figures; beneath all, the writing is to run in this pretty sounding manner:—

Adesite, O quotquot sunt, Veneres, Gratia, Cupidines.

En vobis adsunt in promptu

Faces, vincula, epicula;

Hinc eligite, sumite, regite.

All ye Venuses, Graces, and Cupids attend:

See prepared to your hands,

Harps, torches, and hands:

Your weapons here choose, and your empire extend.

"I am, Sir, your most humble Servant,

A. B."

The proposal of my correspondent I cannot but look upon as an ingenious method of placing persons (whose parts make them ambitious to exert themselves in frivolous things) in a rank by themselves. In order to this, I would propose that there be a board of directors of the fashionable society; and, because it is a matter of too much weight for a private man to determine alone, I should be highly obliged to my correspondents if they would give in lists of persons qualified for this trust. If the chief coffee-houses, the conversations of which places are carried on by persons, each of whom has his little number of followers and admirers, would name from among themselves two or three to be inserted, they should be put up with great faithfulness. Old beaux are to be represented in the first place; but as that sect, with relation to dress, is almost extinct, it will, I fear, be absolutely necessary to take in all time-servers, properly so deemed; that is, such as, without any conviction of conscience, or view of interest, change with the world, and that merely from a terror of being out of fashion. Such also, who from facility of temper, and too much obsequiousness, are vicious against their will, and follow leaders whom they do not approve, for want of courage to go their own way, are capable persons for this superintendency. Those who are loath to grow old, or would do any thing contrary to the course and order of things, out of fondness to be in fashion, are proper candidates. To conclude, those who are in fashion without apparent merit, must be supposed to have latent qualities, which would appear in a post of direction; and therefore are to be regarded in forming these lists. Any, who shall be pleased according to these, or what further qualification may occur to himself, to send a list, is desired to do it within fourteen days after this date.

N.B. The place of the physician to this society, according to the last-mentioned qualification, is already engaged.

T.

No. 479.] TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1712.

—Dare jura maritis.—Hon. Ars Poet. 398.

To regulate the matrimonial life.

MANY are the epistles I every day receive from husbands who complain of vanity, pride, but, above all, ill-nature in their wives. I cannot tell how it is, but I think I see in all their letters that the cause of their uneasiness is in themselves; and indeed I have hardly ever observed the married condition unhappy, but from want of judgment or temper in the man. The truth is, we generally make love in a style and with sentiments very unfit for ordinary life: they are half theatrical, half romantic. By this means, we raise our imaginations to what is not to be expected in human life; and because we did not beforehand think of the creature we are enamoured of, as subject to dishumour, age, sickness, impatience, or sullenness, but altogether considered her as the object of joy; human nature itself is often imputed to her as her particular imperfection, or defect.

I take it to be a common occurrence of domestic, or married life, that a disposition is supported but by and as Nature fancies or appoints, took a young man a consideration than and thought of to administer desire flags, w and her merit difference, di man who bri and beholds v mities of hun even at the be and new rela himself accor ture of his cir prepared to steward for p tions ready fo Such a man e instead of ang he is not dis their mirth a that he think intricate affa whom all his next room: c put on his pe for the noise brats; and th the comforts and drives to

According every circum or pleasure. is supported b and friendsh gaged in this common cour of fortune, in some delight

He that si studies to im pleasure from married man, and false gal every thing a cannot, indee ing such pleas but I speak of are involved I cannot inde her husband spoke since he I was prevail band; and hi head, when th papa would co the father, has drowning him just four yea him, and brin vation of two upon the chil and I told the of his coming was a certain hour of them, the great aged very well the savings of little entertainment. I was mark on the no no night and triumph in a natured my thing but ce the whole from the re- ove his own out there are with what a y in phosore re a host to or a strong, es; but one at the sight these are his w's me spe id rather to h women of by pative ounts to the sk I owned part of his fee constantly tions may ceptions of a fied with ould give with him, that a not back, ty and when e me or to be festive. At he sure sub- are believ'd. Those who have an ambition to appear in courts, ying out in a have either an opinion that their person or their ta s very much, but are partly or formed for the service or oma at life in a s of gain, or what they call hon-our, to take up- on the passage of themselves whatever the generosity of their master show will be may you see of applying dantes, to us, of a single m very per but a great th, the most has a mas y coming to R. and they afford to be en a s, dis- a m, the cir- d r, e I ge a v nation state with and without the affection satis- fied. It is the completest image of heaven and hell, as are capable of receiving in this life.—F.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

No. 489. WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 10, 1712.

Reposant empalant, s'extenuant honores Fatis, et a seipso, sicut iterum a quo rotundas Hoc 2 Sat. vii. 35.
He Sir, is pos'd to grandeur, pride, or self,
And to the self, and greater of himself Not to be free by fears and fancies hur'd, But to be free the interests of the world,
And where the world turns to, to be able and whole, He says, the worst fear of his soul.—Pitt

THE other day, looking over those old manuseri- pt which I have formerly given some account, and which relate to the character of the mighty Pharamond of France, and the close friendship between him and his friend Eucrate, I found among the letters, which had been in the custody of the latter, an epistle from a country gentleman to Pharamond, wherein he excuses himself from coming to court. The gentleman it seems, was contented with his condition, he had formerly been in the king's service; but at the writing the following letter had, from leisure and reflection, quite another sense of things than that which he had in the more active part of his life.

My dear Mr. Country to Pharamond.

DREAD SIR,

I have from your own hand (enclosed under the cover of Mr. Eucrate, of your majesty's bed-chamber) a letter which invites me to court. I understand this great honour to be done me more out of respect and inclination to me, rather than regard to your own service; for which reason I beg leave to lay before your majesty my reasons for declining to depart from home; and will not doubt but as your majesty is desirous my attendance was to make me happy at court, when you think that will not be effected by my removal, you will permit me to stay where I am. Those who have an ambition to appear in courts, ying out in a have either an opinion that their person or their ta s very much, but are partly or formed for the service or oma at life in a s of gain, or what they call hon-our, to take up- on the passage of themselves whatever the generosity of their master show will be may you see of applying dantes, to us, of a single m very per but a great th, the most has a mas y coming to R. and they afford to be en a s, dis- a m, the cir- d r, e I ge a v are all of them mean, both in their person and fortune. The estate my eldest son is heir to, than he can enjoy with a good grace. My will not carry me so far as to impose upon the advancement of persons (merely for the sake of related to me) into high distinctions, for their own sakes, as well as that of the affect of obscurity. I wish my generous son it is in your power to give honours and were also to give talents suitable to them; the noble Pharamond would reward the youth with abilities to do him service in who accept of favour without merit, supply themselves in it at the expense of your majesty. I have to tell you, Sir, this is the reason that country hear so often repeated the word. That part of your law which is reserved for the readier service and good of the people, men are eternally buzzing in our ears, for their own follies and miscarriages. It would be to the high favour you have done me, should let Eucrate send me word how often, at cases, you allow a constable to insist on a reprieve. From the highest to the lowest of your dominions, something of their own they would exempt from examination, under the word prerogative. I would fain, Pharamond, see one of your officers assert authority by good and gracious actions. When I help the afflicted, to rescue the innocent, the stranger? Uncommon methods, undertaken to attain worthy ends, would be power invidious. You see, Sir, I talk of the freedom your noble nature approves in you admit to your conversation. I return to your majesty's letter, I humbly think all distinctions are useful to men, only to act in public; and it would be a disgrace for a man to be a lord in his closet. It is honourable to a man apart from the reflection upon worthy actions; and it is honour in a consciousness of well-deserved. I have but little relish for any outward reward; since what gives him distinction, cannot come within the observation of others. Thus all the words of lordship, and grace, are only repetitions to a man that is ordered him to be called so; but not that there is any thing in himself, that the man, who applies to him, those ideas, creation of his master.

most noble Pharamond, all honours and your own approbation: I triumph in your gift, I refuse them as they are the observation of others. Indulge me, master, in this chastity of renown; let me live in the favour of Pharamond; and look the applause of the people.

"I am, in all duty and loyalty,

"Your majesty's most obedient Subject and Servant,
"JEAN CHEZLEY."

not tell with what disadvantages men of and great modesty come into the world; measures their diffidence of themselves, offending, often oblige them to take; pity it is that their greatest virtues and it should soonest recommend them, are made in the way of their preferment. in, is my case; I was bred at a country school, where I learned the fortunes of my family for profession of the polite science, infamy and want. I am in times of vacancy and made myself master of, though the progress I have gained me reputation enough, yet my mind suggests to me upon that foundation I am

"The person I have in mind has it in his nature, as I advance me, by recommendation, is going beyond sea in a post, the printing this letter would want confidence to speak of your power to refuse making

"September 9, 1712.

T.

No. 481.] THURSDAY

—Uti non Compositus melius cum B Acres procurant—

Who shall decide when do And soundest casuists doubt

It is sometimes pleasant to see different notions which differ in the same thing. If men of low value on things which are in a higher station of these esteem which are in of an inferior rank. Consider, particular, very much astonished those solemn contests and among the great upon the ceremony; and wonder to the consequence should be the circumstances, which they trifling and insignificant, with a porter's decision in plays, which is founded upon a virtuous woman's marrying the first was yet living. The supposed to have been dead after a long absence, raised the tragic part of the play, the nurse and the porter confounded that would ensue in such a case, the matter may be easily decided judiciously by the old proverb, "be still living." "the man may There is nothing in my time surprised and confounded the countrymen, as the present Count Rechteren and Monsie plays the wise heads of so all the affairs of Europe in Upon my going into a country, lending an ear to the next passed with a circle of friends, them, after having read of it, broke out into the "I am afraid," says he, "this is the footmen at Utrecht with Christendom. I wish the bottom of it. His holiness fomenting a division, as the lately experienced to their d'ye-call-him's domestics with modulation, I do not know ended but by a religious war that by him, ould scorn to le; here's all use Monsieur

e. If Count
e after it, all this bustle;
is not care to gue hitherto,

that he was of our Chris-serious con-
so saucy and
and that he in the treaty judice to the

he table, and French king,
matter right,
did not resent lone to Mon-rs he, "what him? but beow," says he,
dd for a sub-
and his sovebliged in hoilities; and if med head, as are under his call them to upon a new oved by most y, who had de-Austria, fell gesty, as en-at their betwthe punish-

To which he addicted to ut to it at the walking, the pecially if they
The little nth, declaring would oblige d tolerate the fore he would calling Mon-arm, and one led, had not a who seems to he law, taken as his opinion, onsieur Mes-

in this affair.
ld have made fronted, and done him jusom them, or ught the most akes a mouth t of it for his anager, upon ght have had it as the case now stands; if you will have my opinion; I think they ought to bring it to reference."

I heard a great deal more of this conference, but I must confess with little edification; for all I could learn at last from these honest gentlemen was, that the matter in debate was of too high a nature for sad heads as theirs, or mine, to comprehend.—O.

No. 482.] FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1712.

Floriferis ut apes in salibus omnia libant.—LAVINIA.

As from the sweetest flower the lab'ring bee Extracts her precious sweets.—CAREW.

WHEN I have published any single paper that falls in with the popular taste, and pleases more than ordinary, it always brings me in a great return of letters. My Tuesday's discourse, wherein I gave several admonitions to the fraternity of the hen-pecked, has already produced me very many correspondents; the reason I cannot guess at, unless I be, that such a discourse is of general use, and every married man's money. An honest tradesman, who dates his letter from Chesapside, sends me thanks the name of a club, who, he tells me, meet as often as their wives will give them leave, and stay together till they are sent for home. He informs me that my paper has administered great consolation to their whole club, and desires me to give some further account of Socrates, and to acquaint them in whose reign he lived, whether he was a citizen or a courtier, whether he buried Xantippe, with many other particulars: for that, by his sayings, he appears to have been a very wise man, and a good Christian. Another, who writes himself Benjamin Bamboo, tells me that, being coupled with a shrew, he had con-voured to tame her by such lawful means as those which I mentioned in my last Tuesday's paper, and that in his wrath he had often gone further than Bracton allows in those cases; but that for the future he was resolved to bear it like a man of temper and learning, and consider her only as one who lives in his house to teach him philosophy. Tom Dapperwit says, that he agrees with me in that whole discourse, excepting only the last sentence, where I affirm the married state to be either a heaven or a hell. Tom has been at the charge of a penmanship this occasion to tell me, that by his experience it is neither one nor the other, but rather that middle kind of state, commonly known by the name of purgatory.

The fair sex have likewise obliged me with their reflections upon the same discourse. A lady, who calls herself Euterpe, and seems a woman of letters, asks me whether I am for establishing the Salut law in every family, and why it is not fit that a woman who has discretion and learning should sit at the helm, when the husband is weak and illiterate? Another, of a quite contrary character, introduces herself Xantippe, and tells me that she follows the example of her namesake; for being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world, she is forced to take their affairs into her own hands, and to spirit him up now and then, that he may not grow musty, and unfit for conversation.

After this abridgement of some letters which are come to my hands upon this occasion, I shall publish one of them at large.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"You have given us a lively picture of that kind of husband who comes under the denomination of the hen-pecked; but I do not remember that you we ever touched upon one that is of the quite different character, and who, in several places of England, goes by the name of 'a cot-quean.' I have a misfortune to be joined for life with one of this character, who in reality is more a woman than I am. He was bred up under the tuition of a tender mother, till she had made him as good a housewife himself. He could preserve apricots, and make lyes, before he had been two years out of the nursery. He was never suffered to go abroad, for fear catching cold; when he should have been hunting down a buck, he was by his mother's side learning how to season it, or put it in crust; and was making paper boats with his sisters, at an age when her young gentlemen are crossing the seas, or travelling into foreign countries. He has the whitest skin that you ever saw in your life, and raises paste thicker than any woman in England. These qualifications make him a sad husband. He is perpetually in the kitchen, and has a thousand squabbles with a cook-maid. He is better acquainted with the shilling than his steward's accounts. I fret to death when I hear him find fault with a dish that is not dressed to his liking, and instructing his friends at dine with him in the best pickle for a walnut, and sauce for a haunch of venison. With all this he is a very good-natured husband, and never fell out with me in his life but once, upon the over-roasting of a dish of wild fowl. At the same time I must own, I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly sometimes, than of such an effeminate busy nature, in a province that does not belong to him. Since you have given us the character of a wife who wears the breeches, pray give something of a husband that wears the petticoat. Why should not a female character be as ridiculous in a man, as a male character in one of the sex?

"I am," &c.

O.

No. 483.] SATURDAY, SEPT. 13, 1712.

Mos deus interit, nisi dignus vindice nodus Inciderit.—HON. ARS POET. VER. 191.

*Never presume to make a god appear.
But for a business worthy of a god.*—ROSCOMMON.

WE cannot be guilty of a greater act of uncharitableness than to interpret the afflictions which befall our neighbours as punishments and judgments. It aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he sets upon himself as the mark of Divine vengeance, and abates the compassion of those towards him who regard him in so dreadful a light. This humour, of turning every misfortune into a judgment, proceeds from wrong notions of religion, which in its own nature produces good-will towards men, and puts the best construction upon every accident that befalls us. In this case, therefore, it is not religion that coarsens a man's temper, but it is his temper that lowers his religion. People of gloomy uncheerful imaginations, or of envious malignant tempers, whatever kind of life they are engaged in, will discover their natural tincture of mind in all their thoughts, words, and actions. As the finest wines are often the taste of the soil, so even the most religious thoughts often draw something that is particular from the constitution of the mind in which they arise. When folly or superstition strike in with the natural depravity of temper, it is not in the way even of religion itself, to preserve the character of the person who is possessed with it from appearing highly absurd and ridiculous.

An old London gentlewoman, whom I shall conceal under the name of a discoverer of judgments, can tell you, when her house on fire, or when she was afflicted with an unfortunate child by the small-pox, that when she was looking on it in the good fortune that it had escaped, and she was her mother used to say, Her usual remarks were, I have no estates, but never saw a flaw in their own can give you the less; why such a loss in his youth; why no marriage; why no particular spot of greatness with a back-sword of weapon. She thought that can befall any one, she hears of a murder that has been committed, the guilt of the murderer, whether a thief, or the assassin, or a Christian, that is tried, and whatever judgment.

The very desolation of life, is sufficient to fill in a pomp and circumstance, to amuse and terrify the soul. Plutarch as impertinently mentioned, though makes the folly of most historians, who fall into this error, success, unforeseen if they had been made acquainted with the world, several of our own revelations of the English monks in peace, who had power or wealth in those times past, and race generally for Forest, where the and monasteries. I cannot but think you would think kings of Israel or actually inspired of Providence, judgments, or blindness, idolatry, or the vices.

I cannot but think upon misfortunes in regard to the presumptuous in inflict them. It is retribution here persons are very sons prosperous; nature of a Being good in all his vices such a promiscuous of good and evil, and the degree another. We could fall from providence; nor is the unexpressed virtue in itself will make bare, or punishment, or punishment, that there is a mixture of both gments to any several consist First, that, giv or affliction. is a judgment times happen virtue. When e of the Athe- empest: upon as a just judg- pious a man look upon the e distress, and was on board involved in the ne accident- ties under any ok upon it a- nature, rather suffers.

check our pre- on upon a nas- or us to know- ings. How- ortunes, which rity of the per- how many to- ences, save us into the effort- to pronounce- but for a man it in part, and piece of reason- Clitobus, who athens (for we- both Greeks he immortal- in this mat- a lady who- s chariot to- ty, the peri- to have dra- mother was s duty; that, b- upon them, th- ing upon wh- e, and the r- This was s- ed into a ju- others after- less have b- historian was

BER 15, 1712.
st, at possibm, commend-

ome illustriouwith occasion-mendation.

in their congress through any profession, none seem to have a good title to the protection of the men of eminent merit, as the modest man; not so much because his modesty is a certain indication of his merit, as because it is a certain obstacle to the producing of it. Now, as of all professions this virtue is thought to be more particularly unnecessary in that of the law than in any other, I shall only apply myself to the relief of such who follow this profession with this disadvantage. What aggravates the matter is, that those persons who, the better to prepare themselves for this study, have made some progress in others, have by addicting themselves to letters, increased their natural modesty, and consequently heightened the obstruction to this sort of preferment: so that even one of these may emphatically be said to be such; one who laboureth and taketh pains, and is still the more behind. It may be a matter worth discussing then, why that which made a youth so amiable to the ancients, should make him appear so ridiculous to the moderns; and why, in our days, there should be neglect, and even oppression, of young beginners instead of that protection which was the pride of the others? In the profession spoken of, it is obvious that every one whose attendance is required at Westminster-hall with what difficulty a youth of any modesty has been permitted to make an observation that could in no wise detract from the merit of his colleagues, and is absolutely necessary for the advancing of his own. I have often seen one of these modestly protected in his utterance of something very pertinent, but even plundered of his question, and by strong argument shouldered out of his rank, unable to have recovered with much difficulty and confusion. Now, as great part of the business of this profession must be dispatched by one that perhaps —As to the death.

Mrs. Anne, nee, nee quantum Cascellius, Antist.

Hoc, Ars Pet. 1711.

—As to the death, powerful eloquence.

As to the death, powerful eloquence. —Redeem.

I cannot conceive the injustice done to the public in the men of reputation in this calling would introduce such of the young ones into business, were application to this study will let them into the secret of it, as much as their modesty will hinder them in the practice. I say, it would be laying an everlasting obligation upon a young man, to be indebted to his tutor only as a mate, till by this constant application he is enabled to support the good opinion conceived of him in his betters, his complexions settled, so well settled, that the litigious of the world may be secure of his obstreperous aid. If he might be indulged to speak in the style of a lawyer, I would say, that any one about thirty years of age might make a commendation to the court with as much elegance and propriety as the most aged advocates in the hall.

I cannot advance the merit of modesty by argument, I say, so powerfully, as by inquiring into the sentiments the greatest among the ancient and different ages entertained upon this virtue. Now, to look back to the days of Solon, we shall find that youth a necessary consequence to a shame-faced man. Plato, the greatest lawyer and most elegant wit of the age, lived in several of his epistles very strenuous in recommending to the public, so to speak, of his own profession, and every of them makes it become an advice, upon condition that some one of these his favourites might be joined to him, in order to produce the merit of such whose modesty otherwise would have suppressed ay seem very marvellous to a saucy modern. multum sanguinis, multum verecundie, multum pudoris in ore; to have the 'face first full of blood, then the countenance dashed with modesty. When the whole aspect as of one dying with fear, as a man begins to speak;' should be esteemed fitting the necessary qualifications of a fine orator. Shakspeare also has expressed himself in some favourable strain of modesty, when he says, —In the modesty of fearful duty I read as much as from the rattling tongue Of juncy and audacious eloquence—.

Now, since these authors have professed themselves for the modest man, even in the utmost compass of speech and countenance, why should an audacious utterance and a resolute vociferation thunder successfully in our courts of justice? And should that confidence of speech and behaviour, which seems to acknowledge no superior, and to defy contradiction, prevail over that deference and relation with which the modest man implores that favourable opinion which the other seems to command? As the case at present stands, the best consolation that I can administer, to those who cannot get that stroke of business (as the phrase is) which deserve, is to reckon every particular acquisition of knowledge in this study as a real increase of fortune; and fully to believe, that one day imaginary gain will certainly be made out, by mere substantial. I wish you would talk to us on this head; you will oblige, Sir,

"Your most humble Servant."

The author of this letter is certainly a man of good sense; but I am perhaps particular in my opinion on this occasion: for I have observed that, under the notion of modesty, men have indulged themselves in a spiritless sheepishness, and been for ever to themselves, their families, their friends, and country. When a man has taken care to prepare nothing but what he may justly aim at, and execute as well as any other, without injustice to other; it is ever want of breeding, or countenance to be brow-beaten, or elbowed out of his honest opinion. I have said often, modesty must be an act of the will, and yet it always implies self-denial: if a man has an ardent desire to do what is laudable for him to perform, and from an unmanly bashfulness shrinks away, and lets his merit languish in obscurity, he ought not to be angry at the world that an unskilful actor succeeds in his part, because he is not confident to come upon the stage himself.

The generosity my correspondent mentions of merit cannot be enough applauded. To cherish the merit of merit, and hasten its maturity, was a work by a noble Roman, and a liberal scholar. That man which is described in the letter, is to all the world the greatest charm imaginable; but then the man must proceed, and show a latent resolution in himself: for the admiration of his modesty is from the manifestation of his merit. I must say we live in an age wherein a few empty blunders carry away the praise of speaking, while a multitude of fellows overstocked with knowledge are despised by them: I say overstocked, because they are only so, as to their service of mankind, if their very store they raise to themselves ideas of respect and greatness of the occasion, and I expect what, to disable themselves from explaining their thoughts. I must confess, when I have observed Frankair rise up with a commanding voice, and a torrent of handsome words, talk a mile off the purpose, and be a subject of ten times more envy than he was before; were envying his understanding, it has done me no harm; but it soon empties the fountains of his eloquence. In the realms of the universe, the universal sense of this is a false sense of this; it is a ridiculous error in man to make his beauty his merit, and the finest quality of himself. Were the nurseries of learning their distance; but modesty in our young men, cease at Oxford, and the study of eloquence

No. 485.] THE

Nihil tam formidum est, quam idolo.—QUIN. CURT. I.
The strongest things are in danger from the weak.

"MR. SPECTATOR

"My Lord Clare has done more than I thought to be able to do; a greater error, than I am qualified with too much to be therefore incapable of malice, of folly, in the weakest that makes a strange reflection of the his which is generally of or executing any of those whom it exert appear very plain, says, 'It is as sports that he might the numerous circumstances displeasure of this adds further, that 'weighty, but a fool both.' It is impossible upon this matter sagacity bestirs him in the probable and reason will fortify regular efforts; but concludes, with such a regular course of those prodigious machinations may be extended to fortunes arise from seem of very little extravagances does the loss of a handkerchief does Desdemona's tendency in regard to all the enterprise examined, some, inable enough to occur them any apprehension will be found to be rather than any error, which natural berations. If you

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

eding gracious to several
; and upon this maxim, erson must arise from the f his capacity to do you and that this calling his st give him inclination, er wants strength, or op-There is nobody so weak aggravate, or make some emy; there are very few to hear them; and it is ority of mankind to level ghbours. Besides, in all at party which has the nder this prejudice, that ed, upon account of his injury, when perhaps he d be tedious to enumerate d particular friends have contemptible.

France, so formidable to more be secured against illac, than Villiers, duke against that of Felton. erson so destitute, but can fe or a pistol, if he finds That things and persons such powerful revolutions the greatest, seems a profile and abate the pride of to engage the humanity ors to all below them, by et, that the stronger de-

"I am, Sir, very humble Servant."

temple, Paper-buildings.

oom you some time ago, ered sooner, had you in-that part of this island I ppertinence; but, having dge of that matter, this onger serviceable. My ll be the subject of this the Spectator's doctrine lay, began from that sea-service of the fair in served at the beginning a new night-gown, either

Both equally gorgeous end of the month I did knowledge of his contriment has since suggested ow, that all new clothes is imagination into a counter gentleman than he was riety and reflection, and y and amour. Inflamed thinking, and full of the did this mercurial youth of captivating. At first room, only now and then in his night-gown, and re which expresses the guishment. It was plea-is loveliness, sometimes y with a sideface, with a nes being so generous as fulness of its beauty; at throwing back his peris ears. You know he is the mob call a handsome jolly man; which appearance cannot intives in this part of the town. Being eby daily success, he leaves his room wit-tion to extend his conquests; and I hahended him in his night-gown smiting iof this neighbourhood.

"This I, being of an amorous complwith indignation, and had thoughts of pu-wig in these parts; into which, being a distance from the earth, I might have thrliberal mixture of white horse-hair, wi-make a fairer and consequently a handpearance, while my situation would against any discoveries. But the passhandsome gentleman seems to be so fixed of the building, that it will be extremely divert it to mine; so that I am resolved to to the complexion of my own eyebrow, as me an immense black wig of the same so-ture with that of my rival. Now, though shall not, perhaps, lessen the number of th-of his complexion, I shall have a fair ch-vide the passengers by the irresistible fore-

"I expect sudden dispatches from you vice of the family you are in now, how to self upon this so delicate a conjuncture; comfortable resolutions in favour of the black man against the handsome fair one

"I am, Sir, your humble servan

"N. B. He who writ this is a black ma-of stairs; the gentleman of whom he wr-and one pair of stairs."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I only say, that it is impossible for how much I am

"Yours,

"ROBIN SI

"P. S. I shall think it a little hard, if take as much notice of this epistle, as y the ingenious Mr. Short's. I am not a the world see which is the deeper man of

ADVERTISEMENT.

London, Septer

Whereas a young woman on horseb-equestrian habit, on the 13th instant in th met the Spectator within a mile and a l town, and, flying in the face of justice, pul-hat, in which there was a feather, with the air of a young officer, saying at the s "Your servant, Mr. Spec., or words to pose; this is to give notice, that if any discover the name and place of abode of t fender, so as she can be brought to just formant shall have all fitting encouragem

No. 486.] WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17

Aud, ne est operæ premium, procedere recte Qui muchis non vultus— Hæc I Sa

INITIATED.

All you who think the city ne'er can thrive Till every cuckold-maker's head alive, Attend----- R

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"THERE are very many of my acquaint-lowers of Socrates, with more particular that part of his philosophy which we, a selves, call his domestics; under which tion, or title, we include all the conjugasufferings. We have indeed, with very j served, the honour you do the whole fraternity the hen-pecked, in placing that illustrious our head; and it does in a very great measure the railery of pert rogues, who have no age above us, but in that they are single. When you look about into the crowd of mankind you will find the fair sex reigns with greater power over lovers than husbands. You shall hardly see in a thousand who is wholly exempt from dominion, and those that are so are capable of life, and breathe and walk about the insignificant. But I am going to desire rather favour in behalf of our harmless brood, and hope you will show in a true light married hen-pecked, as well as you have done to us, who submit to the conduct of our I am very particularly acquainted with one under entire submission to a kind girl, as he is; and though he knows I have been witness the ill usage he has received from her, and ability to resist her tyranny, he still pretends a jest of me for a little more than ordinary business to my spouse. No longer than Tuesday he took me with him to visit his mistress; having, it seems, been a little in disgrace thought by bringing me with him she would on herself, and insensibly fall into general ease with him; and so he might break the save himself all the ordinary compunctions rifications she used to make him suffer because would be reconciled, after any act of rebellion part. When we came into the room we received with the utmost coldness; and when I asked me as Mr. Such-a-one, his very good he just had patience to suffer my salutation; and he himself, with a very gay air, offered to see, she gave him a thundering box on the head him pitiful, poor-spirited wretch—how see her face? His wig and hat fell on different parts of the floor. She seized the wig too him to recover it, and, kicking it down threw herself into an opposite room, pulling after her with a force that you would have the hinges would have given way. We own, you must think, with no very good success; and, as we sneaked off, and were some together, he confessed to me, that her as thus highly raised, because he did not to fight a gentleman who had said she was was: 'but,' says he, 'a kind letter or two, pieces, will put her in humour again.' I am why he did not part with her; he once loved her with all the tenderness imaginable and she had too many charms to be abandoned a little quickness of spirit. Thus does pitimate hen-pecked overlook the hussy's regard to his very life and fame, in putting upon an infamous dispute about her reputation has he the confidence to laugh at me, I obey my poor dear in keeping out of way, and not staying too late from my own pass through the hazards of a town full of and debauchees. You, that are a philosopher, would urge in our behalf, that, when we bear toward woman, our patience is preserved, in that that a breach with her might be a disadvantage to children who are descended from us, and discern makes us tolerate a thousand frailties they should redound dishonour upon cent. This and the like circumstances, try with them the most valuable regards of life, may be mentioned for our long-suffering; but, in the case usage from one to another but from a base passion and which it would be

"These sort of feelings some have been conspicuous, they have carried a circle of death, and, to and happiness of their honourably near to them their paramours. When in the grave! Sure to a vengeance! But, less frequent instances there so common as to that he cannot get to quote a half line out of his weakness is natural have nothing to say to pretend to be free all the married patients.

"I have known one haughty dominion over has at the same time been the Straits, a merchant man in Hampshire, and managed by one she kept man (as the phrase is usually, every post, letters. He would sit in his night as grave giving an account that there was nothing had heard of such a set of lovers was; and how descend so low, after some of them? For the same to, and of every one of tary and his lady went.

"To be short, Mr. S never make the figure of young men growing up can bring it about that as infamous a character. But, of all that I have me to Betty Duall: she the kept-mistress of a with the latter during. The husband asks no quarter furnished with riches to support, and the lover is in his haven, when the other most eminently victorious ought to stand recorded in which she lives, who time two abused, and two

No. 487.] THURSDAY

—Cum prostrata sopor Urget membra quies, et While sleep oppresses the Plays without weight, and THOUGH there are many ten on dreams, they have only as revelations of distant parts of the world to happen in future periods I shall consider this dreams may give us some lency of a human soul, independency on matter. In the first place, our

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the human soul; deep to deepen, and enlivened and worn active part in varied. When these and necessary able to to which it is several faculties partner is. In this case amusements of her manner she has laid an instance of natural to the engaged from starded in her action with a dy in its model to observe she exerts premeditated languages that

The grave epartees and painful action aims it works not sensible instance, I dreams that rs; in which hat the mind suggestions assage out of inious author ning and his at more than of the body l. It is the on; and our ancies of our was the wa- ne planetary piece of that ceticious, nor f company; ple, comedy, and laugh

Were my u fruitful, I nd this time s; but our d of our ab- et the story, a confused

Thus it is our of their themselves; ed from the like herself, lity."

place, that er strength wake. Joy ions of pain Devotion, e mentioned

has hinted, is in a very particular manner heightened and inflamed, when it rises in the soul at a time that the body is thus laid at rest. Every man's experience will inform him in this matter, though it is very probable, that this may happen differently in different constitutions. I shall conclude this here with the two following problems, which I shall leave to the solution of my reader. Supposing a man always happy in his dreams and miserable in his waking thoughts, and that his life was equally divided between them: whether would he be more happy or miserable? Were a man a king in his dreams, and a beggar awake, and dreamt as consequently, and in as continued unbroken scheme as he thinks when awake: whether he would be in reality a king or a beggar? or, rather, whether he would not be both?

There is another circumstance, which methinks gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul in regard to what passes in dreams: I mean the innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Were that active and watchful being only conscious of her own existence at such time, what a painful solicitude would our hours of sleep be! Were the soul sensible of her being alone in her sleeping moments, after the same manner that she is sensible of it while awake, the time would hang very heavy on her, as it often actually does when she dreams that she is in such a solitude

Semperque relinqui
Sola sibi, semper longam incommittata videtur Ire viam— VINO. ALA. IV. 474.

She seems alone
To wander in her sleep through ways unknown, Guideless and dark— DAYTON.

But this observation I only make by the way. What I would here remark, is that wonderful power in the soul, of producing her own company on these occasions. She converses with numberless beings of her own creation, and is transported into ten thousand scenes of her own raising. She is herself the theatre, the actors, and the beholder. This puts me in mind of a saying which I am infinitely pleased with, and which Plutarch ascribes to Heraclitus, that all men whilst they are awake are in one common world; but that each of them, when he is asleep, is in a world of his own. The waking man is conversant in the world of nature; when he sleeps he retires to a private world that is particular to himself. There seems something in this consideration that intimates to us a natural grandeur and perfection in the soul, which is rather to be admired than explained.

I must not omit that argument for the excellency of the soul which I have seen quoted out of Tertullian, namely its power of divining in dreams. There have been several such divinations made, none can question who believes the holy writings, or who has but the least degree of a common historical faith; there being innumerable instances of this nature in several authors, both ancient and modern, sacred and profane. Whether such dark presages, and visions of the night, proceed from any latent power in the soul, during this her state of abstraction, or from any communication with the Supreme Being, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a great dispute among the learned: the matter of fact is, I think, incontestable, and has been looked upon as such by the greatest writers, who have been never suspected either of superstition or enthusiasm.

I do not suppose that the soul in these instances is entirely loose and unfettered from the body: it is if she is not so far sunk and immersed in or entangled and perplexed in her operations, such motions of blood and spirits, as when the machine is in its waking hours. The union is slackened enough to give the play. The soul seems gathered within and recovers that spring which is broke and when she operates more in concert with calculations I have here made, if they are true, they are at least strong intimations, of the excellency of a human soul, but of its dependence on the body; and if they do not at least confirm these two great points, established by many other reasons that her unanswerable.—O.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1712.

Deo? parvo. Quanti ergo? octo assibus. Eheu!
Hon. 2 Sat. III. 156.

Cost? Not much, upon my word. pray? Why, Two-pence. Two-pence, O Lord!
CREECH.

By several letters which I receive daily, of my readers would be better pleased to have for my paper than two-pence. One T. W.* tells me that I have deprived him of the best part of his breakfast; for that, since my paper, he is forced every morning to drink of coffee by itself, without the addition of the Spectator, that used to be better than Eugenius informs me, very obligingly, that he thought he should have disliked any more of my paper, but that of late there have been words in every one of them which he has not liked, viz. "Price Two-pence." I have a letter from a soap-boiler, who writes to me very affectionately upon the necessity of setting a higher price on my paper, since the late tax has been laid on it, and desiring me, when I write next on it, to speak a word or two upon the price of Castile soap. But there is none of my correspondents, who writes with a greater sense, and elegance of expression, than Philomedes, who advises me to value my paper at six-pence, and promises that he will engage for above a hundred of his acquaintance who shall take it in at that price.

From the female world are likewise come great quantities, upon the same occasion; naturally bear a great deference to this species, I am very glad to find that those who are my conduct, in this particular, are more numerous than those who condemn it. Many of our daughters have drawn me up a long remonstrance, in which they set their father having refused to take in the paper, since the additional price was set upon it, and he had not been unanimous to bate him the article of butter in the tea-table account, the Spectator might be served up to them as usual. Upon this the old gentlemen, pleased, it seems, with their desire of themselves, has granted them the conti-as Walker, head-master of the Charter-house school, who had been. The head-master 49 years, and died June 12, 1728, in the 84th year of his age.

nuance both of the Spectator and butter, having given part of the table shall be set forth of the customary bill of fare, and of the falcation. I thought myself particular, as it does not concern man; and if the young lady, on this account, will acquiesce in inserting it at length in our paper, I sires it.

I should be very glad that that might alleviate the expense brings to any of my readers must propose two points. First, that if they return particular in their ordinary expense up the halfpenny a day with consideration. Let a lady riband to her morning's dress: let a family burn more than the usual number, the Spectator without detriment.

In the next place, if my price of buying my paper with patience, and they may buy out the burthen of a tax, when they are sold, the stick, are delights for some time they come to trifles, and are every ordinary truth of it is, they have a good appearance, from several times, time, place, and person, which are not taken early; but it is to consider, whether it is half a year behindhand with the lite part of the world, than his circumstances. My ten thousand of the third he is ready to publish, having large an edition both of the As he is a person whose business, he thinks the present to be made to perriages, visiting days, and as several other books are rals. He has printed the volume, that many of them upon a single plate; and of Spectators would be as ment to the ladies as a sal

I shall conclude this paper sent to the writer of the Spectator my thanks to the

"SIR,

"Having heard the fellow commended, I wonder the place in any of your papers our poet-laureat should not show the opinion he entertains of the notion he proceeds I make bold to convey it to has yet come to your hands

ON THE SP

BY MR.

—Alasque et id Nascitur—Hon.

You rise another

When first the Tattler to Great Britain for her cease Robbed of his spiritually Till the Spectator rose, a setting view'd,

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

joys renew'd,
sun to name,
the same,
sense are freed,
judgment read,
myself succeed.

SEPT. 20, 1712.

troubled flood.

concerning the Plea-ind, among the three ich you have disco-his has suggested to ects that I have ever s my imagination so cannot see the heav-
of waters, even in a astonishment; but pest, so that the horit foaming billows and ssible to describe the n such a prospect. A o sails upon it, is, I e can see in motion, agination one of the can arise from great-ossible for me to sur-without thinking on t, and made a proper h an object naturally an Almighty Being, nce as much as a me-imagination prompts greatness of the sen-idea of a Being who e nor space.
yages upon the sea, I ns, and on that occa-
on the descriptions of nber Longinus highly cause the poet has not es upon the occasion, s, whom he mentions, as gathered together he most apt to terrify eally happen in the the same reason that ption of a ship in a as made, before any They that go down to ess in great waters;
d, and his wonders in leth and raiseth the p the waves thereof.
they go down again
ed because of trouble. gger like a drunken nd. Then they cry and he bringeth them eth the storm a calm, still. Then they are so he bringeth them more comfortable, as of the Psalmist, than other poets, where ing a storm, and an-seqq.

other as laying it! Were we only to consid-sublime in this piece of poetry, what can be than the idea it gives us of the Supreme Beinraising a tumult among the elements, and recothem out of their confusion; thus troubling a calming nature?"

"Great painters do not only give us land of gardens, groves, and meadows, but very oft ploy their pencils upon sea-pieces. I could wi-would follow their example. If this small may deserve a place among your works, I sh-company it with a divine ode made by a gent upon the conclusion of his travels."

I.

How are thy servants blest! O Lord How sure is their defence!
Eternal wisdom is their guide, Their help Omnipotence.

II.

In foreign realms and lands remote, Supported by thy care, Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt, And breath'd in tainted air

III.

Thy mercy sweeten'd every soil, Made every region please:
The hoary Alpine hills it warm'd, And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas.

IV.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think, How with affrighted eyes, Thou saw'st at the wide extended deep In all its horrors rise!

V.

Confusion dwelt in ev'ry face,
And fear in ev'ry heart;
When waves on waves, and gulfs in gulfs, O'ercame the pilot's art.

VI.

Yet then from all my griefs, O Lord, Thy mercy set me free.
Whilst, in the confidence of prayer,
My soul took hold on thee.

VII.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung, High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save.

VIII.

The storm was laid, the winds retir'd, Obedient to thy will;
The sea that roar'd at thy command,
At thy command was still.

IX.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death, Thy goodness I'll adore,
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more.

X.

My life, if thou preserv'st at my life, Thy sacrifice shall be:
And death, if death must be my doom, Shall join my soul to thee.

O.

No. 490.] MONDAY, SEPT. 22, 1711

Domus et placens uxor.—Hos. 2 Od. xiv. 21.

Thy house and pleasing wife.—CÆCÆ.

I HAVE very long entertained an ambition to the word wife the most agreeable and del-name in nature. If it be not so in itself, a wiser part of mankind, from the beginning world to this day, has consented in an error. our unhappiness in England has been, that loose men, of genius for pleasure, have turne

Their condition is an endless source of new tions. The married man can say, "If I ceptable to all the world beside, there is a I entirely love, that will receive me with transport, and think herself obliged to double ness and caresses of me from the gloom with e sees me overcast. I need not dissemble ow of my heart to be agreeable there; that row quickens her affection."

passion towards each other, when once well enters into the very constitution, and the kindness as easily and silently as the blood in the veins. When this affection is enjoyed in the most degree, unskillful eyes see nothing of it ; but it is subject to be changed, and has an end that may make it end in distaste, it is apt to turn into rage, or overflow into fondness, before it is the end of the world.

der and Viramira are amorous and young, have been married these two years; yet do they distinguish each other in company, that in conversation with the dear things you are still sort of cross-purposes. Whenever you address yourself in ordinary discourse to Viramira, she reads another way, and the answer is made near Uxander. If you tell a merry tale, the jest is still directed to her dear; and when I do commend you, she says to him, as if he said it, "That is, my dear, so pretty."—This in mind of what I have somewhere read in red memoirs of the famous Cervantes; where, next Sancho Pança is putting some necessary question concerning Rosinante, his supper, or, next, the knight of the sorrowful countenance improving the harmless lowly hints of his poetical conceit, rapture, and flight, in commend of the dear Dulcinea of his affections.

On the other side, Dictamnus and Moria are ever ing; and you may observe them, all the time in company, in a state of impatience. As and Viramira wish you all gone, that they at freedom for dalliance; Dictamnus and nit your absence, that they may speak their erpretations on each other's words and according the time you were with them.

ertain that the greater part of the evils at this condition of life arises from fashion. e in this case is turned the wrong way : and, if expecting more happiness than we shall find in it, we are laughed into a prepossession, shall be disappointed if we hope for lasting ours.

With all persons who are capable of action, marriage is the rule, and the highest good. The epistles full of affection to his wife, or speaks of all the hints of this kind of ancient date, I am sure, Martial, in honour of his patria. Commentators after his wedding-night tired to the bathing-room it seems, came in upon him into the water. To his occasion we owe the fact showed my friend Will has translated it as follows the original. I expect better than the Latin was

When my bright consort Asham'd and wanton, Fled to the streams, I
To my fond eyes she She blush'd; I smil'd
Thus through the glass
Thus through the amb
I saw new charms, an Kisses I snatch'd—the

My friend would not count could be given of the word consort; which serve for a mistress as manly turn to the epigram and all other such persuaded but that the a virtuous young woman grow into friendship, a higher pleasure than Without this happens, who has entered into the tudes of life he might friend. But when the serious as well as joyous unknown to friendship each kind of love with the highest praise to friendship is no disputing that position take its place between

Hard is the doubt, an When all three kinds
And do dispar the be Whether shall weigh
The dear affection us
Or raging fire of love Or zeal of friends con But, of them all, the Methinks, the gentle
For natural affection
And quenched is wit
But faithful friendship
And them with maste Through thoughts as For as the soul doth
And all the service of So love of soul doth
No less than perfect a

T.

No. 491.] TUESDAY

—Digna satis fortuna
A just reverse of fortune

It is common with me to exercise my mind with myself for my daily labor in this loitering way of mine to be food to the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

is are stories, authority. The justice; and signal is over- which is the ob- nence for re- venge actions f the history. reader from om any thing surnamed The ons now swal- heaped many Rhysault, a wars against t part of Zea- hat dukedom. ngular huma- no other real ion enough to us master for , without any cution of jus- is advantage, his chief town mmand. He nt, before he of exquisite wealthy mer- and govern- arm constitu- , and not un- favour. He ctions which uty, but was honours, and vards them in much of the the language r part of that tter a passion touched. He n be gratified auty, without ith which they is a vice inse- ssession of a ut allaying a ly followed by eing resolved Danvelt, left at her house; tion too well, snare her into airing of sue- d and impris- an informa- ondence with he town into esired effect; velt, the day is execution, erson's house, ment, threw es, beseeched a dissembled thought and her she must her whether led out of his onition aloud,

"If you will save your husband, you must give an account of all you know without prevarication for every body is satisfied he was too fond of you be able to hide from you the names of the rest the conspirators, or any other particulars whatsoever." He went to his closet, and soon after a lady was sent for to an audience. The governor knew his distance when matters of state were to be debated; and the governor, laying aside the air which he had appeared in public, began to be supplicant, to rally an affliction, which it was her power easily to remove, and relieve an innocent man from his imprisonment. She easily perceived his intention; and bathed in tears, began to depict so wicked a design. Lust, like ambition, took all the faculties of the mind and body into its vice and subjection. Her becoming tears, her kindest anguish, the wringing of her hands, and many changes of her posture and figure in the vehemence of speaking, were but so many attitudes in which he beheld her beauty, and further increased his desire. All humanity was lost in this one appetite, and he signified to her in so plain terms, that he was unhappy till he had possessed her, and nothing less should be the price of her husband's life; and she must, before the following noon, pronounce the death, or enlargement, of Danvelt. After this notification, when he was Sapphira enough again distracted, to make the subject of their discourse to common eyes appear different from what it was, he called servants to conduct her to the gate. Loaded with insupportable affliction, she immediately repairs to her husband; and having signified to his gaolers that she had a proposal to make to her husband from the governor, she was left alone with him, revealed to him all that had passed, and represented the endless conflict that was in between love to his person and fidelity to his bed. It is easy to imagine the sharp affliction the honest pair was in upon such an incident, in that not used to any but ordinary occurrences. The man was bridled by shame from speaking what his fear prompted, upon so near an approach of death; but let fall words that signified to her, he should not think her polluted, though she had not yet confessed to him that the governor had violated her person, since he knew her will had no part in the action. She parted from him with this unique permission to save a life he had not resolution enough to resign for the safety of his honour.

The next morning the unhappy Sapphira attended the governor, and being led into a remote apartment, submitted to his desires. Rhysault commended her charms, claimed her familiarity, and what had passed between them, and with an air of gaiety, in the language of a gallant, bid her return and take her husband out of prison: "But," continued he, "my fair one must not be offended that I have taken care he should not be an interruption to our future assignations." These last words foreboded what she found when she came in the morning her husband executed by the order of Rhysault.

It was remarkable that the woman, who was full of tears and lamentations during the whole course of her affliction, uttered neither sigh nor complaint but stood fixed with grief at this consummation of her misfortunes. She betook herself to her chamber and after having in solitude paid her devotion to Him who is the avenger of innocence, she repaired privately to court. Her person, and a certain grandeur of sorrow, negligent of form, gained her passage into the presence of the duke her sovereign.

on as she came into the presence, she broke into the following words: "Behold, O mighty one, a wretch weary of life, though it has always spent with innocence and virtue. It is not in power to redress my injuries, but it is to expose them. And if the protection of the dishonour, and the punishment of oppressors is a task for a prince, I bring the Duke of Burgundy to matter for doing honour to his own great and wiping the infamy off of mine."

When she had spoken this, she delivered the paper reciting her story. He read it with emotions that indignation and pity could raise since jealous of his honour in the behaviour of officers, and prosperity of his subjects.

On an appointed day, Rhysault was sent for, and, in the presence of a few of the council, attended by Sapphira. The prince asking, "Do you now that lady?" Rhysault, as soon as he recovered his surprise, told the duke he would obey, if his highness would please to think that reason. The duke seemed contented with this, and stood by during the immediate solemnity of the ceremony. At the conclusion of it Rhysault, "Thus far you have done as I am aided by my authority: I shall not be satisfied for kind usage of her, without you sign a gift of her whole estate to her after your decease." To the performance of this also the duke was a witness. These two acts were executed, the duke turned to the lady, and told her, "It now remains for me to be in quiet possession of what your husband has bountifully bestowed on you;" and ordered the immediate execution of Rhysault.—T.

492.] WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 24, 1712.

Id est boni moris, levitate extinguitur.—SENECA.
Of behaviour is the bane of all that is good and virtuous.

Tunbridge, Sept. 18.

DEAR MR. SPECTATOR,
I am a young woman of eighteen years of age, do assure you a maid of unspotted reputation, and upon a very careful carriage in all my words, and actions. At the same time I must tell you, that it is with much constraint to flesh blood that my behaviour is so strictly irreproachable; for I am naturally addicted to mirth, to a free air, to motion, and gadding. Now, gives me a great deal of anxiety, and is some straglement in the pursuit of virtue, is, that the women who run into greater freedoms with men are more taken notice of than I am. There are such unthinking sots, that they do not prefer who restrains all her passions and affections, keeps much within the bounds of what is lawful, and who goes to the utmost verge of innocence, and parleys at the very brink of vice, whether she shall be a wife or a mistress. But I must leave to your spectral wisdom, who, I find, have very much of your time in the study of whether this is not a most unreasonable project. I have read somewhere that Hobbes of Mersbury asserts, that continent persons have of what they contain than those who give a vent to their desires. According to this rule, let us be equal age, equal wit, and equal good-nature, in the woman of prudence, and her of wantonness, what stores has he to expect who takes the first? What refuse must he be contented with who bores the latter? Well, but I sat down to write to you to vent my pert creatures who are in this place, while poor are wholly unregarded.

"Every one of the your sex. This is a singular manner of civility. Glycera has time in her ordinary is unwilling to enter the room before her takes advantage of the has introduced a very shoulders, and shrink in this mode carry before them. Dulcinea this air, adds the passion when she is in a variety in throwing her the room, and letting a lucky decency about this way of sitting indeed she does it as an actress fall down decency in her posture pretty carcasses are at the theatre, it will plumps into a chair. that is very cunning young and unbred, are almost twice he is to come into conversation successfully out of her other is in the secret looks round to see what "It would take up of your papers, to end of the younger company not omit Dulcinea's dolent imaginable, but as the busiest virgin art of staring at a young got him, and inflame. When she sees she has his head upon it, she and labours to observe her eyes half shut. her first struck, is to or be wholly disgraced more execution than the women here, with glances, attentive haughtiness, haughty countenances. After I have said this fight thus regularly, set of familiar romps common rules, and in way of showing more Mr. Spectator, are these careless pretty again; and it is to be it is all harmless free you must have seen their men visitants.

one can name the colourings; and she tells her and full of roguery; her sister shall tell her cannot tell what colour diversion there are so much for fear of should untie; for the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the lady is band, before
I may can note these and bring us no help for it;
ettes are too
the merit of a slow thing.
tions, when a
is: no other we must go show all the I stand so measures for as the fellows nien, can look oll, can start, ust do it, and ne in England.
r spectatorial

Servant,
MOHAIR."

25, 1712.

ice, ne mor
n. 1 Ep. xviii. 76:
n:
wn.—ANON.

ulation to con-
at pass round abuse people

It is indeed
ing the testi-mended, the

"The bearer
d be an act of nds; whether for I have no ration to him to that." As a point of ho-othing a man sing a worth-

ests of a man en indeed are trespass often

now, that the and give each the lady shall and give her a ence it is that e same face a

Good-breeding reat measure consideration

upon their su-speaking the are mortgaged

e of importua very useful commendations.

pettors of this ession to ma-
se gentlemen

s, and supply forming how
l. They will

Such a one,
e of these undortakers has your business in hand, you may I sick, absent in town, or country; and this shall shall be worried, or you prevail. I remember have been shown a gentleman some years ago, and punished a whole people for their facility in giving their credentials. This person had belonged to regiment which did duty in the West Indies, and by the mortality of the place, happened to be the manding-officer in the colony. He oppressed his subjects with great frankness, till he became un-ble that he was heartily hated by every man under his command. When he had carried his point be thus detestable, in a pretended fit of dishonour and feigned uneasiness of living where he found was so universally unacceptable, he communicated to the chief inhabitants a design he had to return to England, provided they would give him ample testimonials of their approbation. The planters ran into it to a man, and, in proportion to his deservthe quite contrary, the words justice, generosity and courage, were inserted in his commission, omitting the general good-liking of people of all conditions in the colony. The gentleman returned for England, and within a few months after came back to them their governor, on the strength of their own testimonials.

Such a rebuke as this cannot indeed happen to easy recommenders, in the ordinary course of things from one hand to another; but how would a man bear to have it said to him, "The person I had into confidence on the credit you gave him, has proved false, unjust, and has not answered any way the character you gave me of him?"

I cannot but conceive very good hopes of the rake Jack Toper of the Temple, for an honest scrupulousness in this point. A friend of his meeting with a servant that had formerly lived with Jack, and having a mind to take him, sent to him to know what faults the fellow had, since he could not give such a careless fellow as he was. His answer was as follows:—

"Sir,

"Thomas that lived with me was turned away because he was too good for me. You know I live in taverns; he is an orderly sober rascal, and thinks much to sleep in an entry until two in the morning.
He told me one day, when he was dressing me, that he wondered I was not dead before now, since I went to dinner in the evening, and went to supper at two in the morning. We were coming down Essex-street one night a little flustered, and I was giving him the word to alarm the watch; he had the impudence to tell me it was against the law.
You that are married, and live one day after another the same way, and so on the whole week, I dare say will like him, and he will be glad to have his meat in due season. The fellow is certainly very honest. My service to your lady. Yours,

"J. T."

Now this was very fair dealing. Jack knew very well, that though the love of order made a man very awkward in his equipage, it was a valuable quality among the queer people who live by rule, and had too much good sense and good-nature to let the fellow starve, because he was not fit to attend his vivacities.

I shall end this discourse with a letter of recommendation from Horace to Claudius Nero. You will see in that letter a slowness to ask a favour, strong reason for being unable to deny his request.

lord any longer, and that it is a service to the person to whom he recommends, to comply with what is asked; all which are necessary circumstances, both in justice and good-breeding, if a man would ask so as to have reason to complain of a denial; and indeed a man should not in strictness ask otherwise. In hopes the authority of Horace, who perfectly understood how to live with great men, may have a good effect towards amending this facility in a people of condition, and the confidence of those who apply to them without merit, I have translated the epistle.

"TO CLAUDIUS NERO.

"SIR,
 "Septimius, who waits upon you with this, is very well acquainted with the place you are pleased to allow me in your friendship. For when he betrays me to recommend him to your notice, in such a manner as to be received by you, who are delicate in the choice of your friends and domestics, he knows our intimacy, and understands my ability to serve him better than I do myself. I have defended myself against his ambition to be yours, as long as I possibly could; but fearing the imputation of hiding my power in you out of mean and selfish considerations, I am at last prevailed upon to give you this trouble. Thus to avoid the appearance of a greater fault, I have put on this confidence. You can forgive this transgression of modesty in behalf of a friend, receive this gentleman into your interests and friendship, and take it from me that he is an honest and a brave man."

No. 494.] FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1712.

Agritudinem laudare, unam rem maxime detestabilem, quorum est tantum philosophorum.—CICERO.

What kind of philosophy is it to extol melancholy, the most detestable thing in nature?

ABOUT an age ago it was the fashion in England for every one that would be thought religious, to throw as much sanctity as possible into his face, and particular to abstain from all appearances of mirth and pleasantry, which were looked upon as marks of a carnal mind. The saint was of a sorrowful countenance, and generally eaten up with spleen and melancholy. A gentleman, who was truly a great ornament to the learned world, has related me more than once with an account of the reception which he met with from a very famous dependent minister, who was head of a college* in those times. This gentleman was then a young adventurer in the republic of letters, and just fitted out for the university with a good cargo of Latin and Greek. His friends were resolved that he should try his fortune at an election which was drawing near in the college, of which the independent minister whom I have before mentioned was governor. In his youth, according to custom, waited on him in order to be examined. He was received at the door by a servant who was one of that gloomy generation that were then in fashion. He conducted him, with great silence and seriousness, to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day, and had only a single candle burning in it. After a short stay in this melancholy apartment, he was led into a chamber hung with black, for some time he stood at length the better from an inner darkness upon his head, and patience. The year increased, when progress he had made how he abounded stood him in little only of the state number of the conversion; upon of the day it had when completed med up with one was prepared for bred up by honest wits at the solemnally by the last upon making his ing, he could not examination, as terrors of it.

Notwithstanding religion is pretty many persons with heart, mistaken understanding, love of life, and give melancholy. Scruples cut the sensation, and all are not only inn made for reprobnied those who proper title of it.

Sombrius is one thinks himself of solate. He looks breach of his heart startles him like is advanced to a and eyes; descri head; show him self. All the little vanities. Mirth is scandalized at hood for being pl a marriage-feast, clusion of a merry rest of the compa brius is a religio himself very pro tianity was unde

I would by no racters with hyp that being a vice knows the secrets discover in another amount to a dea there are many e down by this ha deserve our con think, however, t ther such a behav religious life, by state, that exting ens the face of n being itself.

I have, in form dency there is to the most lovely, virtuous person, in so unambiguously by Moses to arise, when by people from ends the joy, the naturally spring spices bringing, and delicious unisons into the a.* de a discourse s a God, does owns his be- m to be cruel, nature. "For ther it should ny such man is ill-natured, nan is distin- the faculty of nirth, and na- siness of vir- ind, but to re- train, but was the heart of our pleasures, ries to expa- sive Being, r own nature, art, that they ord, the true omposes, the behaviour, all hange fills the rupted cheer- please others, 27, 1712.

* The gentleman here alluded to was Anthony Henley, who died much lamented in Aug. 1711.

† The head of a college was Dr. Thomas Goodwin, S.T.P., a student of Magdalen College in Oxford, and one of the assembly of divines who sat at Westminster.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

4 Od. iv. 57.
brow.

ion.

I, am obliged e none whom ose who have ir characters, I have often : race of peo- met with in have passed they are, in- trading parts instruments erse with one it together in like the pegs ough they are lutely necesmon-beaten his people in 12mo.

three views. First, with regard to their num- secondly, their dispersion; and thirdly, their ad- rence to their religion: and afterward endeavor show, first, what natural reasons, and, secondly, what providential reasons, may be assigned for the three remarkable particulars.

The Jews are looked upon by many to be as numerous at present, as they were formerly in the land of Canaan.

This is wonderful, considering the dreadful slaughter made of them under some of the Roman emperors, which historians describe by the death of an hundred thousands in a war; and the innumerable massacres and persecutions they have undergone in Turkey, as well as in all Christian nations in the world. The rabbins, to express the great loss which has been sometimes made of them, tell after their usual manner of hyperbole, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed, as carried rocks of a hundred yards in circumference above three miles into the sea.

Their dispersion is the second remarkable particular in this people. They swarm over all the East and are settled in the remotest parts of China. They are spread through most of the nations in Europe and Africa, and many families of them are established in the West Indies; not to mention the nations bordering on Prester-John's country, as discovered in the inner parts of America, if we may give any credit to their own writers.

Their firm adherence to their religion is no less remarkable than their numbers and dispersion, especially considering it as persecuted or contemned over the face of the whole earth. This is likewise the more remarkable, if we consider the frequent apostasies of this people, when they lived under the kings in the land of promise, and within sight of their temple.

If in the next place we examine what may be the natural reasons for these three particulars which we find in the Jews, and which are not to be found in any other religion or people, I can, in the first place, attribute their numbers to nothing but their constant employment, their abstinence, their exemption from wars, and above all, their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty, as hoping the Messiah may descend from them.

The dispersion of the Jews into all the nations of the earth is the second remarkable particular of that people, though not so hard to be accounted for. They were always in rebellions and tumults while they had the temple and holy city in view, for which reason they have often been driven out of their old habitations in the land of promise. They have also often been banished out of most other places where they have settled, which must very much disperse and scatter a people, and oblige them to seek a livelihood where they can find it. Besides, the whole people is now a race of such merchants as are wanderers by profession, and, at the same time, are in most, if not all places, incapable of either lands or offices that might engage them to make any part of the world their home.

This dispersion would probably have lost their religion, had it not been secured by the strength of its constitution: for they are to live all in a body, and generally within the same enclosure; to marry among themselves, and to eat no meats that are not killed or preserved their own way. This shuts them out from all table conversation, and the most agreeable intercourses of life; and, by consequence, sacludes them from the most probable means of conversion.

If, in the last place, we consider what providential reasons may be assigned for these three particulars, we shall find that their numbers, dispersion, and adherence to their religion, have furnished every age, and every nation of the world, with the strongest arguments for the Christian faith, not only as these very particulars are foretold of them, but as they themselves are the depositories of these, and all the other prophecies, which tend to their own confusion. Their number furnishes us with a sufficient cloud of witnesses that attest the truth of the old Bible. Their dispersion spreads these witnesses through all parts of the world. The adherence to their religion makes their testimony unquestionable. Had the whole body of Jews been converted to Christianity, we should certainly have thought all the prophecies of the Old Testament, that relate to the coming and history of our blessed Saviour, urged by Christians, and have looked upon them, with the prophecies of the Sibyls, as made many years after the events they pretended to foretel.—O.

[Co. 496.] MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1712.

Quoniam pariter uti his decuit, aut etiam amplius, Quod illa ætas magis ad hæc idonea est.

TERRE. Heaut. act. i. sc. 1.

Four men ought to have shared in these things, because youth is best suited to the enjoyment of them.

“MR. SPECTATOR,

THOSE ancients who were the most accurate in their remarks on the genius and temper of mankind, by considering the various bent and scope of our actions, throughout the progress of life, have with great exactness allotted inclinations and objects of desire particular to every stage, according to the different circumstances of our conversation and fortune through the several periods of it. Hence they were disposed easily to excuse those excesses which might possibly arise from a too eager pursuit of the affections more immediately proper to each state. They indulged the levity of childhood with tenderness, overlooked the gaiety of youth with good nature, tempered the forward ambition and impatience of ripened manhood with discretion, and kindly imputed the tenacious avarice of old men to their want of relish of any other enjoyment. Such allowances as these were no less advantageous to common society than obliging to particular persons; for, by maintaining a decency and regularity in the course of life, they supported the dignity of human nature, which then suffers the greatest violence when the order of things is inverted; and in nothing is it more remarkably vilified and ridiculous, than when feebleness preposterously attempts to adorn itself with that outward pomp and lustre, which serve only to set off the bloom of youth with better advantage. I was incessantly carried into reflections of this nature, by just now meeting Paulino (who is in his climacteric) bedecked with the utmost splendour of dress and equipage, and giving an unbounded loose to all manner of pleasure, whilst his only son is debarr'd all innocent diversion, and may be seen frequently solacing himself in the Mall with no other attendance than one antiquated servant of his father's for a companion and director.

It is a monstrous want of reflection, that a man cannot consider, that when he cannot resign the pleasures of life, he is under a necessity of making a task to resist it. The skill there is in it, to want no lawful fortune, and to be contented with it. The first step is, to deny in young men all excesses, has been of great quality and necessity. Narrowness of many youths, to commence chearful, and to allow his son to do evil, which as he is former. But to much among a deny them what suitable to their lamentable instance, young man do father of him to fine gentlemen endure, in his who was his seeing him out of the father took when that fine hands, it would knew how to rusticity and is, that a man the having no even with ex recommend this am, Sir,

“MR. SPECTATOR,

I am just of my return read She pretends to version of swin was only among woman who wa is pleased to sated the ladies' air. Since she truth. There we were all, as but Mrs. Mohair she invents all she has crooked

“MR. SPECTATOR,

We have Mrs. Mohair's from one end to print the enclosed as to come with She is the most she looks so in about her being which makes her of it all.

“P

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ly called en-
every one of
as he came first a little going in all ches; but at gentleman in he prevailed thought they l, as had dis-that day at ec, if some n so strong a my inquiring they told me, henever they his post, to him again ir allegations Besides our rts of ingenitake it ill if I several recre-
mean time, r wholesome perhaps be a
I understand if you would emple, I am ment. But I nd am, Sir,

GREENBAG.

a the coffee-unity of time of the matter, it in the bee informed a t I design to atermen, who land students

ER 2, 1712.

L 40.

YDEN.

told me, for great mind to he would fain

This morn-letter, which, graphical mise public:—

company with sexes, where,
are written on mong us, whe-ls in the world was advocate all us the story b I have since ary, after the peror Conrade ke of Bavaria, n, finding that ong, petitioned ou' of it, with so much as each of them could carry. The emperor, knowing that they could not convey away more of their effects, granted them their petition; when the women, to his great surprise, came out of the place with every one her husband upon her back.

The emperor was so moved with the sight, that he burst into tears; and, after having very much extolled the women for their conjugal affection, gave the men to their wives, and received the dukedom his favour.

"The ladies did not a little triumph at this step, asking us at the same time, whether in our expectances we believed that the men of any town in Great Britain would, upon the same offer, and at the same conjuncture, have loaded themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them? To this my very good friend, Tom Dapperwit, who took upon him to be the mouth of our sex, replied that they would be very much to blame if they would not do the same good office for the women, considering that their strength would be greater and their burdens lighter. As we were amusing ourselves with discourses of this nature, in order to pass away the evening, which now begins to grow tedious, we fell into that laudable and primitive diversion of questions and commands. I was no longer vested with the regal authority, but I enjoined all the ladies, under pain of my displeasure, to tell the company ingenuously, in case they had been in the siege above mentioned, and had the same offer made them as the good women of that place, what every one of them would have brought off with her, and have thought most worth the saving? There were several merry answers made to my question, which entertained us till bed-time. This filled my mind with such a huddle of ideas, that upon my going to sleep, I fell into the following dream:—

"I saw a town of this island, which shall be nameless, invested on every side, and the inhabitants of it so straitened as to cry for quarter. The general refused any other terms than those granted to the above-mentioned town of Hensberg, namely, that the married women might come out with what they could bring along with them. Immediately the city gates flew open, and a female procession appeared, multitudes of the sex following one another in a row, and staggering under their respective burdens. I took my stand upon an eminence in the enemy's camp, which was appointed for the general rendezvous of these female carriers, being very desirous to look into their several baggage.
The first of them had a huge sack upon her shoulders, which she set down with great care. Upon the opening of it, when I expected to have seen her husband shot out of it, I found it was filled with china-ware. The next appeared in a more decent figure, carrying a handsome young fellow upon her back: I could not forbear commending the young woman for her conjugal affection, when, to my great surprise, I found that she had left the good man at home and brought away her gallant. I saw a third, at some distance, with a little whetted stick peeping over her shoulder, whom I could not suppose for any but her spouse, until, upon her setting her down, I heard her call him dear pug, and found it to be her favourite monkey. A fourth brought a huge bale of cards along with her; and the last Bolonia lap-dog; for her husband, it seems, being very burly man, she thought it would be less trouble for her to bring away little Capad. The next was the wife of a rich usurer, loaded with a bag of gold us that her spouse was very old, and by the nature could not expect to live long; and show her tender regards for him, she had at which the poor man loved better than his he next came towards us with her son upon c, who, we were told, was the greatest rake lace, but so much the mother's darling, that her husband behind with a large family of sons and daughters, for the sake of this youth.

could be endless to mention the several per- th their several loads, that appeared to me traunge vision. All the place about me was with packs of ribands, brocades, embroidery, thousand other materials, sufficient to have d a whole street of toy-shops. One of the having a husband, who was none of the heas bringing him off upon her shoulders, at e time that she carried a great bundle of s lace under her arm: but finding herself oaden, that she could not save both of them, pped the good man, and brought away the

In short, I found but one husband among at mountain of baggage, who was a lively that kicked and spurred all the while his carrying him on, and, as it was said, had assed a day in his life without giving her the e of the strap.

cannot conclude my letter, dear Spec., with- ing thee one very odd whim in this my dream. methought, a dozen women employed in off one man; I could not guess who it ce, until upon his nearer approach I disco- y short phiz. The women all declared that er the sake of thy works, and not thy per- they brought thee off, and that it was on a that thou shouldest continue the Specta- thou thinkest this dream will make a tole- e, it is at thy service, from,

"Dear Spec.,

"Thine, sleeping and waking,

"WILL HONEYCOMB."

udies will see by this letter what I have often a, that Will is one of those old-fashioned rit and pleasure of the town, that shows his railery on marriage, and one who has often fortune that way without success. I cannot dismiss his letter, without observing, that story on which it is built does honour to the that, in order to abuse them, the writer is o have recourse to dream and fiction.

00.] FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1712.

Huc natus adjice septem, dem juvenes: et mox generosque nurusque. le nunc, habeat quam nostra superbia causam.
OVID, Met. vi. 182.

are my daughters of a form divine, even fair sons, an indefectible line. ols, consider this, and ask the cause, which my pride its strong presumption draws.
CROZAL.

who are so well acquainted with the story es, must have read how, upon his making a concerning love, he pressed his point with success, that all the bachelors in his audi- a resolution to marry by the first opportu- that all the married men immediately took d galloped home to their wives. I am apt your discourses, in which you have drawn so many agreeable pic very good effect this obliged to you, at le senseless ridicule, whic of the town have turne thers. For my own and I do not care who among many others, I most insufferable coxco tain that cuckoldom wa or to make use of hush proach. Nay, Sir, I declare to you before married man, and at t assurance as not to b done.

"Among the severa this state of life, and v your former papers, t taken notice of, and w account, by those who must have observed, in nature, that nothing is of man than power or myself amply possessed family. I am perpetu orders, in prescribing administering justice, and punishments. To centurion, I say unto another, Come, and he Do this, and he doeth it my family as a patriarc am myself both king an ments are nothing else private royalties, and t ters of families as smal over the several little fellow-subjects. As I administration of my g I look upon myself not a much greater and hap in England, of my own

"There is another a riage, which has like mean the having a mul cannot but regard as I see my little troop be ditions which I have country, and to my re such a number of reason Christians. I am pleas tuated; and as there is that of a human creatu ing been the occasion tions, than if I had built own expense, or publi- finest wit and learning- has the holy Scripture the judges of Israel, w grandsons, that rode on according to the magni tries! How must the b when he saw such a bea descendants, such a nut raising! For my own with great content, whe dozen of my little boys and of as many little gif of them endeavouring something that may ga tion. I cannot question endeavours in ing I am able us education. ervation, that eldest is often the youngest out that some haps been re-rid, and over-to implant in s of industry, this means, I other of them our way of life, lect, in trade ious; for you ience and ob-ns a paradox namely, that gives them a ise a family,

ing he leaves on, I cannot out a general, a, a divine, a e people who en I see the hen they are nt flatter my-will be happy others. perhaps, think a single man, and probably determine of nes from one

"Well-wisher, HILOGANUS."

ER 4, 1712.

d. xxiv. 19.

er,
ht.—CREECH.

among the anured, in seve-writing, and cessful in it;
and for those erve that se-
to excel in do not know an a very inligned for the r of the vision

O.
ence of what be lost to us!
Imagination
itself again, e disappoint-
course to rea-to find a furnory to relate s of satisfac-
pleasures we ten from us;
rted honours,
temper, and
ed. It needs

most happen from hence that the passion shew often swell to such a size as to burst the heart whi contains it, if time did not make these circumstand less strong and lively, so that reason should become a more equal match for the passion, or if another desire which becomes more present did not overpower them with a livelier representation. These are thoughts which I had when I fell into a kind vision upon this subject, and may therefore stand for a proper introduction to a relation of it.

"I found myself upon a naked shore, with company whose afflicted countenances witnessed their conditions. Before us flowed a water, deep, silent and called the River of Tears, which, issuing from two fountains on an upper ground, encompassed an island that lay before us. The boat which plied in it was old and shattered, having been sometime overset by the impatience and haste of single passengers to arrive at the other side. This immediately was brought to us by Misfortune who steered it, and we were all preparing to take our places when there appeared a woman of a mild and composed behaviour, who began to deter us from it, by representing the dangers which would attend our voyage. Hereupon some who knew her for Patience, and some of those, too, who until then cried the loudest, were persuaded by her, and returned back. The rest of us went in, and she (whose good-nature would not suffer her to forsake persons in trouble) desired leave to accompany us, that she might at least administer some small comfort or advice while we sailed. We were no sooner embarked but the boat was pushed off, the sheet was spread; and being filled with sighs, which are the winds of that country, we made a passage to the further bank, through several difficulties of which the most of us seemed utterly regardless.

"When we landed, we perceived the island to be strangely overcast with fogs, which no brightness could pierce, so that a kind of gloomy horror sat always brooding over it. This had something in it very shocking to easy tempers, insomuch that some others, whom Patience had by this time gained over, left us here, and privily conveyed themselves round the verge of the island, to find a ford by which she told them they might escape.

"For my part, I still went along with those who were for piercing into the centre of the place; and joining ourselves to others whom we found upon the same journey, we marched solemnly as at a funeral, through bordering hedges of rosemary, and through a grove of yew trees, which love to overshadow tombs and flourish in churchyards. Here we heard on every side the wailings and complaints of several of the inhabitants, who had cast themselves disconsolately at the feet of trees; and as we chanced to approach any of these, we might perceive them wringing their hands, beating their breasts, tearing their hair, or after some other manner visibly agitated with vexation. Our sorrows were heightened by the influence of what we heard and saw, and one of our number was wrought up to such a pitch of wildness, as to talk of hanging himself upon a bough which shot temptingly across the path we traveled in; but he was restrained from it by the kind exhortations of our above-mentioned companion.

"We had now gotten into the most dusky, silent part of the island, and by the redoubled sound of sighs, which made a doleful whistling in the branches, the thickness of air, which occasioned faintish respiration, and the violent throbbing of heart, which more and more affected us, we found that we approached the Grotto of Grief. It was a wide, hollow and melancholy cave, sunk deep in a dale, and watered by rivulets that had a colour between red and black. Those crept slow and half-congealed amongst its windings, and mixed their heavy murmurs with the echo of groans that rolled through all the passages. In the most retired parts of it sat the doleful being herself; the path to her was strewn with goads, stings, and thorns; and her throne on which she sat was broken into a rock, with ragged pieces pointing upwards for her to lean upon. A heavy mist hung above her: her head oppressed with it reclined upon her arm. Thus did she reign over her disconsolate subjects, full of herself to stupidity, in eternal pensiveness, and the profoundest silence. On one side of her stood Dejection just dropping into a swoon, and Paleness wasting to a skeleton; on the other side were Care inwardly tormented with imaginations, and Anguish suffering outward troubles to suck the blood from her heart in the shape of vultures. The whole vault had a genuine dismalness in it, which a few scattered lamps, whose bluish flames arose and sunk in their urns, discovered to our eyes with increase. Some of us fell down, overcome and spent with what they suffered in the way, and were given over to those tormentors that stood on either hand of the presence; others, galled and mortified with pain, recovered the entrance, where Patience, whom we had left behind, was still waiting to receive us.

"With her (whose company was now become more grateful to us by the want we had found of her) we wound round the grotto, and ascended at the back of it, out of the mournful dale in whose bottom it lay. On this eminence we halted by her advice, to pant for breath; and lifting our eyes, which until then were fixed downwards, felt a sullen sort of satisfaction, in observing through the shades what numbers had entered the island. This satisfaction, which appears to have ill-nature in it, was excusable, because it happened at a time when we were too much taken up with our own concern, to have respect to that of others; and therefore we did not consider them as suffering, but ourselves as not suffering in the most forlorn estate. It had also the groundwork of humanity and compassion in it, though the mind was too dark and too deeply engaged to perceive it; but as we proceeded onwards, it began to discover itself, and, from observing that others were unhappy, we came to question one another, when it was that we met, and what were the sad occasions that brought us together. Then we heard our stories, we compared them, we mutually gave and received pity, and so by degrees became tolerable company.

"A considerable part of the troublesome road was thus deceived; at length the openings among the trees grew larger, the air seemed thinner, it lay with less oppression upon us, and we could now and then discern tracks in it of a lighter grayness, like the breakings of day, short in duration, much enlivening, and called in that country gleams of amusement. Within a short while, these gleams began to appear more frequent, and then brighter and of a longer continuance: the sighs that hitherto filled the air with so much dolefulness, altered to the sound of common breezes, and in general the horrors of the island were abated.

"When we had arrived at last at the ford by which we were to pass out, we met with those fashionable mourners who had been ferried over along with us, and, who being unwilling to go as far as we, had consented they waited out to the world. One of them might seem a part of the grotto, on the other side so dark, and it was an

"The river bore the further back, whom Comfort appeared in its appearance it blamed us for others advised us back again; for our trouble, by they and all of melancholy and choice of a fit Patience, appeared us over to Comfort the charge; in side to which broke in upon

No. 502.]

Melius, pejor,

Better or worse, a thing but what

WHEN men they are entertained studies and make their rusing Roman the subject of the plied the grand or their politics Spectator, I drew eminence in worthy sentiment Terence. The from the beginning human life, but passage that composed must that with satisfaction the first scene of men accuses the sing in his affairs cannot help feel man."* It is a universal argument of the people, than a nation of a sense. If it were spoken actor, the man have nothing in of the greatest skilful in observation might have laid winning insinuation to his neighbour case his own; y garden might be before he would that a minister of * Homo sum, I am a man. That touch

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

blads brought great notice upon which well judge of it proper way on purposes. tion it meets il instruction may observe moved so di- manity, that nation of sa- ce of what is - what most - night an old side, with all ance which is laughed and edy, which I he hoped to taste as him- o natural de- an made by I came to the sed the door, by entering hat was your ng her time, linations and sort of second he had lately showed she hung negli- none of the emselves off, ch is remark- inds. Then her that was reless; which ir security in intrigue are en you were see her, she her face, and a very good om his own r, that could igh so full of ce of players a great me- dience. But uster of cox- nselves, and ie company, of regard and only to show rpose than to d of two sorts e but of the nd corporeal ments of the of the com- urrections of at they have

e tending to pit in such a pen, stare at ith shameful es of human life in its calm dignity, and the properest ar- guments for the conduct of it, pass by like mere ra- tion, as conducing only to somewhat much better which is to come after. I have seen the whole house at some times in so proper a disposition, that indeed I have trembled for the boxes, and feared the en- tertainment would end in the representation of the rape of the Sabines.

I would not be understood in this talk to argue that nothing is tolerable on the stage but what has an immediate tendency to the promotion of virtue. On the contrary, I can allow, provided there is no- thing against the interests of virtue, and is not of- fensive to good manners, that things of an indif- ferent nature may be represented. For this reason have no exception to the well-drawn rusticities in the Country Wake; and there is something so in- raculously pleasant in Dogget's acting the awkward triumph and comic sorrow of Hob in differed cir- cumstances, that I shall not be able to stay away whenever it is acted. All that vexes me is, that the gallantry of taking the cudgels for Gloucester with the pride of heart in tucking himself up, and taking aim at his adversary, as well as the affected protestation in the humanity of low romance, that he could not promise the squire to break his head, but he would, if he could, do it in love; the flourish and begin: I say what vexes me is, that such excellent touches as these, as well as the squire's being out of all patience at Hob's success and venturing himself into the crowd, are circum- stances hardly taken notice of, and the height of the jest is only in the very point that heads are broken. I am confident were there a scene written, where Penkethman should break his leg by wrestling with Bullock, and Dicky come in to set it, without any word said but what should be according to the exact rules of surgery in making this extension, and bind- ing up the leg, the whole house should be in a roar of applause at the dissembled anguish of the patient, the help given by him who threw him down, and the handy address and arch looks of the surgeon. To enumerate the entrance of ghosts, the embattling of armies, the noise of heroes in love, with a thousand other enormities, would be to transgress the bounds of this paper, for which reason it is possible they may have hereafter distinct discourses; not forget- ting any of the audience who shall set up for actors and interrupt the play on the stage; and players who shall prefer the applause of fools, to that of the reasonable part of the company.—T.

POSTSCRIPT TO SPECTATOR, No 502.

N. B. There are in the play of the Self-Terminator of Terence, which is allowed a most excellent co- medy, several incidents which would draw tears from any man of sense, and not one which would move his laughter.—Spec. in folio, No. 521.

This speculation, No. 502, is controverted in the Guard, No. 59, by a writer under the fictitious name of John Lizard; perhaps Dr. Edw. Young.

No. 503.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1712.

—Deo omnes delinere ex animo mulleribus.

TER. FAM. ACT. II. SC. II.

From henceforward I blot out of my thoughts all women of womankind.

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“You have often mentioned with great re- spect and indignation the misbehaviour of people at church; but I am at present to talk to you of

"Last Sunday was sevennight I went into a church not far from London-bridge; but I wish I had been contented to go to my own parish, I am sure it had been better for me; I say I went to church thither, and got into a pew very near the pulpit. I had hardly been accommodated with a seat, before there entered into the aisle a young lady in the very bloom of youth and beauty, and dressed in the most elegant manner imaginable. Her form was such that it engaged the eyes of the whole congregation in an instant, and mine among the rest. Though we were all thus fixed upon her, she was not in the least out of countenance, or uneasy the least disorder, though unattended by any one, and not seeming to know particularly where to place herself. However, she had not in the least a confident aspect, but moved on with the most graceful modesty, every one making way until she came to a seat just over against that in which I was seated. The deputy of the ward sat in that pew, and she stood opposite to him, and at a glance into her face, though she did not appear the least acquainted with the gentleman, was let in, with a confusion that spoke much admiration at the novelty of the thing. The service immediately began, and she composed herself for it with an air of so much goodness and sweetness, that the confession which she uttered, so as to be heard where I sat, appeared an act of humiliation more than she had occasion for. The truth is, her beauty had something so innocent, and yet so sublime, that we all gazed upon her like a phantom. None of the pictures which we behold of the best Italian painters have anything like the spirit which appeared in her countenance, at the different sentiments expressed in the several parts of Divine service. That gratitude and joy at a thanksgiving, that lowliness and sorrow at the prayers for the sick and distressed, that triumph at the passages which gave instances of the Divine mercy, which appeared respectively in her aspect, will be in my memory to my last hour. I protest to you, Sir, she suspended the devotion of every one around her; and the ease she did everything with soon dispersed the churlish dislike and hesitation in approving what is excellent, too frequent among us, to a general attention and entertainment in observing her behaviour. All the while that we were gazing at her, she took notice of no object about her, but had an art of seeming awkwardly attentive, whatever else her eyes were accidentally thrown upon. One thing indeed was particularly, she stood the whole service, and never kneeled or sat: I do not question but that was to show herself the greater advantage, and set forth to better grace her hands and arms, lifted up with the most ardent devotion; and her bosom, the fairest that ever was seen, bare to observation; while she, you must think, knew nothing of the concern she gave others, any other than as an example of devotion, that drew herself out, without regard to dress or garment, all contrition, and loose of all worldly regards, in ecstasy of devotion. Well; now the organ was to play a voluntary, and she was so skilful in music, and so touched with it, that she kept time not only with some motion of her head, but also with different air in was strong anrious ; when li-gracious ; wheguishing, she v-

had now made by her motion wanted now o-too ; when the distinguished anot exert their was any heard observed it, a-
and she swell-thrown us all oin such a man-intent upon her the cathedrals alone the anti-sermon, and oin that etherpreacher, and with one of C-down the sent-the gold pen, judgment in what I intend
I mean to app-that such a crepart of the tow-to the disturba-
congregation, sure you, was have forgot art
As soon as her ped out of chu-patty air, forso-tossing her he-
the body of the inhabitants, fo-
her fan to a ha-mediately came with great nin-ing mien, as if She said aloud off. By this at the church-very fine lady s-better than I s-lady said, " she Spectator, I tyou : for the o-though it is ap-only to give hin being adm-she may be con-assure you she place where she of among us phantom ;" but more ; for the women against not be excell-manner, with women, who a-posing themse-other end of cause they are tion, who will particular ; bu-tion where I v-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ing and ostensible, discounting the phantom, Servant, WONDER."

. 8, 1712.

n. act. lib. sc. 1.
es, forsooth.

who want wit is something wanted substitute their taste, nature is the cross-purposes, like. A little ay at crambo, e such as can ong those who to make what e also to those of these ex-pretensions to ack unawares, th a twang on ay, and laugh ot to mention ets, of making pe, as that of g that nobody t purpose, or al of pains to ese methods, be arrived at ve an honest ary occasions; at the poor in which may be n all common uing is there- all intellects. th you for the quaint thing, any one word the discourse, go on, and by ty as you are, tier than they e "can deal" p you to some elf very "ill- as "well-bred" allowance. If , you must re- and so they go g exhausted. of small facul- of breeding; re and educa- n is immodest g upon things ntly in double ation will sug- hout my men- s are dispersed e gown or city rder to set off oud laughers, the sillier and ubred part of womankind. But, above all alrea- mentioned, or any who ever were, or ever can be the world, the happiest and surest to be pleas- are a sort of people whom we have not indeed lat- heard much of, and those are your "biters."

A biter is one who tells you a thing you have reason to disbelieve in itself, and perhaps has give you, before he bit you, no reason to disbelieve if his saying it; and, if you give him credit, laughs your face, and triumphs that he has deceived you. In a word, a biter is one who thinks you a fool, because you do not think him a knave. This descrip- tion of him one may insist upon to be a just one for what else but a degree of knavery is it, to depend upon deceit for what you gain of another, be it point of wit, or interest, or any thing else?

This way of wit is called "biting," by a metaphor taken from beasts of prey, which devour harmless and unarmed animals, and look upon them as the food wherever they meet them. The sharpeners about town very ingeniously understood themselves to be to the undesigning part of mankind what foxes are to lambs, and therefore used the word biting, to express any exploit wherein they had over-reached any innocent and inadvertent man of his purse. These rascals of late years have been the gallants of the town, and carried it with a fashionable haughtiness, to the discouragement of modesty, and all honest arts. Shallow fops, who are governed by the eye and admire every thing that struts in vogue, took up from the sharpeners the phrase of biting, and use it upon all occasions, either to disown any non-sensical stuff they should talk themselves, or evade the force of what was reasonably said by others. Then when one of these cunning creatures was entered into a debate with you, whether it was practicable in the present state of affairs to accomplish such a proposition, and you thought he had let fall what destroyed his side of the question, as soon as you looked with an earnestness ready to lay hold of, he immediately cried, "Bite," and you were immediately to acknowledge all that part was in jest. They carry this to all the extravagance imaginable, and if one of these wittings knows any particulars which may give authority to what he says, he is the more ingenious if he imposes upon your credulity. I remember a remarkable instance of the kind. There came up a shrewd young fellow to a plain young man, his countryman, and taking him aside with a grave concerned countenance, went at this rate: "I see you here, and have you heard nothing out of Yorkshire?—You look so surprised you could not have heard of it—and yet the particulars are such that it cannot be false: I am sure I am got into it so far that I now must tell you; but I know not but it may be for your service to know. On Tuesday last, just after dinner—you know the manner is to smoke—opening his box, your father fell down dead in an apoplexy." The youth showed the filial sorrow which he ought—Upon which the witty man cried, "Bite; there was nothing in this."

To put an end to this silly, pernicious, frivolous way at once, I will give the reader one late instance of a bite, which no biter for the future will ever be able to equal, though I heartily wish him the same occasion. It is a superstition with some surgeons who beg the bodies of condemned malefactors, to take to the gall, and bargain for the carcass with the criminal himself. A good honest fellow did so on several occasions, and was admitted to the condemned man on the morning wherein they died. The surgeon communicated his business, and fell into discourse with a little fellow, who refused twelve shillings, and insisted upon fifteen for his body. The fellow who killed the officer of Newgate, very forwardly, and like a man who was willing to deal, told him, "Look you, Mr. Surgeon, that little dry fellow, who has been half starved all his life, and is now if dead with fear, cannot answer your purpose. I have ever lived high and freely, my veins are full, I have not pined in imprisonment; you see my crest is to your knife; and after Jack Catch has done, on my honour you will find me as sound as ever bullock in any of the markets. Come, for twenty shillings I am your man." Says the surgeon, "Done, there is a guinea." This witty rogue took the money, and as soon as he had it in his fist, cries, "Bite; I am to be hanged in chains."

THE SPECTATOR.

T.

[Co. 505.] THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1712.

Non habeo denique nauci Marsum augurem, Non vicinos aruspices, non de circo astrologos.
Non Isacos conjectores, non interpretes somnii: Non enim sunt illi, aut scientia, aut arte divini, Sed supersticiosi vales, impudentes harolli, Aut fuertes, aut insani, aut quibus egestas imperat:
Qui sui questus causa fictas suscitant sententias:
Qui sibi semitam non sapiunt, alteri monstrant viam: Quibus divitias pollicentur, ab his drachmam petunt: De divitiis deducant drachmam, reddant cætera.

ENNIUS.

Argurs and soothsayers, astrologers, Diviners, and interpreters of dreams,
I ne'er consult, and heartily despise:
Vain their pretence to more than human skill.
For gains, imaginary schemes they draw:
Wandering themselves, they guide another's steps.
And for poor sixpence promise countless wealth Let them, if they expect to be believed, Deduct the sixpence, and bestow the rest.

Those who have maintained that men would be more miserable than beasts, were their hopes confined to this life only, among other considerations take notice, that the latter are only afflicted with the anguish of the present evil, whereas the former are very often pained by the reflection on what is passed, and the fear of what is to come. This fear of any rare difficulties or misfortunes is so natural to the mind, that were a man's sorrows and disquietudes summed up at the end of his life, it would generally be found that he had suffered more from the apprehension of such evils as never happened to him, than from those evils which had really befallen him. To this we may add, that among those evils which befall us, there are many which have been more painful to us in the prospect, than by their actual occurrence.

This natural impatience to look into futurity, and know what accidents may happen to us hereafter, has given birth to many ridiculous arts and inventions. Some found their prescience on the lines of a man's hand, others on the features of his face; some on the signatures which nature has impressed on his body, and others on his own hand-writing: some read men's fortunes in the stars, as others have searched after them in the entrails of beasts, the flights of birds. Men of the best sense have been touched more or less with these groundless errors and presages of futurity, upon surveying the most indifferent works of nature. Can any thing be more surprising than to consider Cicero,* who made the greatest figure at the bar and in the senate of the Roman time outshined all his library and himself in the collection of religious attentions, pecked the seeds of death to them?

Notwithstanding all this, out of the mind of a man of such a present age, multitudes are still slaves to the art of prediction and fling to enumerate days, numbers, guarded by them, every thing possible, there is scarce a man who lies in his way.

It is not to be wondered at, says, and cunning men in counties and manors mention the fortune very comfortably, disposed persons to the minister.

Among the many there is none who are by dreams. I have a relation, that there is an extraordinary man made to certain the chief business errors, I must be superstitious of the and ordinary things of so uncertain nature. This I have the following letter of the town that some prophetic time out of mind their wits, to receive cure or for their

"MR. SPECTATOR

"Having long been in trade wanting in conveyed very attentions, I do not find oneiro-critic, or of dreams. For are several good in this particular without being very pretty well qualified by candle-light and laid down upon my wife's side was sighted. I have one hand, and was year. My Christmas with the same letter in a house that formerly tenanted by a coachman.

"If you had been with ordinary wits that there are many lives, upon seeing unexpected, cry, go to sleep in quiet or other has had vision of the pre-

* This censure of Cicero seems to be unfounded; for it is not of him that he wondered how one augur could meet another without laughing in his face.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

de to recover the strong im-
In short, Sir, s are wholly for the benefit, re part of my ce tell those y they never all make out circumstance of ound to them ams portend.
all desire no-
at the same
be so reason-re out of any ent, which I et to the poor ames may be test the truth
ple of quality, care to come ms by seeing the week for r any gentle-rate of half-allowances for d apartments as have not en houses.
OPHONIUS.

8 10, 1712.

cto,
Jugo,
a marito,
er anus.
Epig. xiii. 7

defriend !
years,
le hairs;
e decay.
y !

the gentleman se several ex-arked with the

ble that made ertain a mind prehensions of y attend to all passion; not-married people, ghtful passion,
plentiful for-

riage happy, ld be alike. I have not the r one another, at if they were would design

extremely fine and lost, by less and unpo-ast recovery.
nish it from a married state, than too great a familiarity, and laying aside the common rules of decency. Though could give instances of this in several particulars, shall only mention that of dress. The beaux and belles about town, who dress purely to catch one another, think there is no further occasion for the bait, when their first design has succeeded. But besides the too common fault in point of neatness there are several others which I do not remember to have seen touched upon, but in one of our modern comedies,* where a French woman offering to undress and dress herself before the lover of the play and assuring his [her] mistress that it was very usual in France, the lady tells her that it is a secret in dress she never knew before, and that she was as unpolished an English woman, as to resolve never to learn even to dress before her husband.

There is something so gross in the carriage of some wives, that they lose their husbands' hearts for faults, which if a man has either good-nature or good-breeding, he knows not how to tell them of. I am afraid, indeed, the ladies are generally most faulty in this particular; who, at their first going in to love, find the way so smooth and pleasant, that they fancy it is scarce possible to be tired in it.

There is so much nicety and discretion required to keep love alive after marriage, and make conversation still new and agreeable after twenty or thirty years, that I know nothing which seems readily to promise it, but an earnest endeavour to please on both sides, and superior good sense on the part of the man.

By a man of sense, I mean one acquainted with business and letters.

A woman very much settles her esteem for a man according to the figure he makes in the world, and the character he bears among his own sex. A learning is the chief advantage we have over them it is, methinks, as scandalous and inexcusable for a man of fortune to be illiterate, as for a woman not to know how to behave herself on the most ordinary occasions. It is this which sets the two sexes at the greatest distance: a woman is vexed and surprised to find nothing more in the conversation of a man than in the common tattle of her own sex.

Some small engagement at least in business, not only sets a man's talents in the fairest light, and allots him a part to act in which a wife cannot well intermeddle, but gives frequent occasions for those little absences, which, whatever seeming uneasiness they may give, are some of the best preservatives to love and desire.

The fair sex are so conscious to themselves, that they have nothing in them which can deserve entirely to engross the whole man, that they heartily despise one, who, to use their own expressions, always hanging at their apron-strings.

Lætitia is pretty, modest, tender, and has sense enough; she married Erastus, who is in a post-some business, and has a general taste in most part of polite learning. Lætitia, wherever she runs, has the pleasure to hear of something which was handsomely said or done by Erastus. Erastus, since his marriage, is more gay in his dress than ever, and in all companies is as complaisant to Lætitia as any other lady. I have seen him give her her fan when it has dropped, with all the gallantry of a lover. When they take the air together, Erastus continually improving her thoughts, and with a touch of wit and spirit which is peculiar to him, giving her insight into things she had no notions of before. Lætitia is transported at having a new world thus opening to her, and hangs upon the man that gives her such agreeable informations. Erastus has carried this point still further, as he makes her daily not only more fond of him, but infinitely more satisfied with herself. Erastus finds a justness or beauty in whatever she says or observes that Lætitia herself was not aware of; and by his assistance she has discovered a hundred good qualities and accomplishments in herself, which she never before once dreamed of. Erastus, with the most artful complaisance in the world, by several remote hints, finds he means to make her say or propose almost whatever he has a mind to, which he always receives as her own discovery, and gives her all the reputation of it.

* The "Funeral," or "Grief A-la-mode," by SENECA.

Erastus has a perfect taste in painting, and carried Lætitia with him the other day to see a collection of pictures. I sometimes visit this happy couple. As we were last week walking in the long gallery before dinner, "I have lately laid out some money in paintings," says Erastus; "I bought that Venus and Adonis purely upon Lætitia's judgment; it cost me three-score guineas, and I was this morning offered a hundred for it." I turned towards Lætitia, and saw her cheeks glow with pleasure, while at the same time she cast a look upon Erastus, the most tender and affectionate I ever beheld.

Flavilla married Tom Tawdry; she was taken with his laced coat and rich sword-knot; she has no mortification to see Tom despised by all the worthy part of his own sex. Tom has nothing to do for dinner, but to determine whether he will pare his nails at St. James's, White's, or his own house. He has said nothing to Flavilla since they were married which she might not have heard as well from her own woman. He however takes great care to keep up the saucy ill-natured authority of a husband. Whatever Flavilla happens to assert, Tom immediately contradicts with an oath by way of preface, and, "My dear, I must tell you you talk most confoundedly silly." Flavilla had a heart naturally as well disposed for all the tenderness of love as that of Lætitia; but as love seldom continues long after esteem, it is difficult to determine, at present, whether the unhappy Flavilla hates or despises the person most whom she is obliged to lead her whole life with.—X.

No. 507.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1712.

Defendit numerus, junctaque umbone phalanges.

Juv. Sat. li. 46.

Preserved from shame by numbers on our side.

THERE is something very sublime, though very fanciful, in Plato's description of the Supreme Being; but "truth is his body, and light his shadow." According to this definition, there is nothing so contrary to his nature as error and falsehood. The Platonists had so just a notion of the Almighty's aversion to every thing which is false and erroneous, that they looked upon truth as no less necessary than time to qualify a human soul for the enjoyment of its separate state. For this reason, as they recommended moral duties to qualify and season the will for its future life, so they prescribed several contemplations and sciences to rectify the understanding. Thus, Plato has called mathematical demonstrations the cathartics or purgatives of the soul, as being the most proper means to cleanse it from error, and to give it a relish and nourishment to the perfection of

There are many the malignity proper colours shall here consist which has not that abominable is so very preda man is thought pagate a certain are supported them, eminent conversation is lie is grown as lively catch or the great talker were this fountain however, one able practice; the little regarded, in the air, and hear a partysto ther he is a wh immediately conce which the honest his zeal, without man is looked u gives credit to his own friends sider him in no or a well-meanin fashion to husb extraordinary en and was not a made use of it; his guard; the to take effect.

I have frequer who would seer particular advan it is become the ing they are tho is it possible fo their persons, the party? If we we may find, the same time reasons to justif

In the first p guilt of a lie, may be very mu out, by the mu Though the wei for one to bear, when it is share man very much spreads through as multiplied. to the offence of those who a crime and the dividual of an upon any single in the offence. like that of matt infinite portions essence of matte as the whole die

But in the se join in a lie,

These are the hitherto a
and body dis ve ot fir
of it un app
d
n
p mer
with re
a
com
th univ att tion ded
goal
and an ry was id
the
L rit
it s
not by me
ay
we
to e s 13, 1712
d
in d wh ind
in fer them om her he
on ant
y
to
But

these are the
p that they are a despotic domain over the and as we and as they support it, you body
dis
In
ve towards others. But what is the monarch's dependent is separately given of the monarch's dependent is separately given it, that they
of the monarch's dependent is separately given un
In
app part
d
n
p mer
with
re
a
com
th univ
att
tion
ded
goal
and an ry
was
id
the
L rit
it
s
not by me
ay
we
to e s 13, 1712
d
in d wh
ind
in fer
them
om
her
he
on ant
y
to e s But

THE SPECTATOR.

neighbouring king, we give or keep the way, according as we are out-numbered or not; and if the aim of each is equal in number, rather than give battle, the superiority is soon adjusted by a desertion from one of them.

"Now the expulsion of these unjust rulers out of all societies would gain a man as everlasting a reputation as either of the Brutuses got from their endeavours to extirpate tyranny from among the Romans. I confess myself to be in a conspiracy against the usurper of our club; and to show my reading as well as my merciful disposition, shall allow him until the ides of March to dethrone himself. If he seems to affect empire until that time, and does not gradually recede from the incursions he has made upon our liberties, he shall find a dinner pressed which he has no hand in, and shall be treated with an order, magnificence and luxury, as shall break his proud heart; at the same time that he shall be convinced in his stomach he was unfit for his post, and a more mild and skilful prince receive the acclamations of the people, and be set up in his room; but, as Milton says,

— These thoughts
Full counsel must mature. Peace is despair'd, And who can think submission? War then, war, Open or understood, must be resolved.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most obedient humble Servant."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a young woman at a gentleman's seat in the country, who is a particular friend of my father's, and come hither to pass away a month or two with his daughters. I have been entertained with the utmost civility by the whole family, and nothing has been omitted which can make my stay easy and agreeable on the part of the family; but there is a gentleman here, a visitant as I am, whose behaviour has given me great uneasinesses. When I first arrived here, he used me with the utmost complaisance; but, forsooth, that was not with regard to my sex; and since he has no designs upon me, he does not now why he should distinguish me from a man in things indifferent. He is, you must know, one of those familiar coxcombs, who have observed some well-dressed men with a good grace converse with women, and say no fine things, but yet treat them with that sort of respect which flows from the heart and the understanding, but is exerted in no professions or compliments. This puppy, to imitate this excellence, or avoid the contrary fault of being troublesome in complaisance, takes upon him to try his talent upon me, insomuch that he contradicts me upon all occasions, and one day told me I lied. If I had stuck him with my bodkin, and behaved myself like a man, since he will not treat me as a woman, I had, I think, served him right. I wish, Sir, you would please to give him some maxims of behaviour in these points, and resolve me if all maids are not in point of conversation to be treated by all bachelors as their mistresses? If not so, are they not to be used as gently as their sisters? Is it sufferable that the top of whom I complain should say that he would rather have such-a-one without a groat, than deal with the Indies? What right has any man to make suppositions of things not in his power, and then declare his will to the dislike of one that has never offended him? I assure you these are things worthy your consideration, and I hope we shall have your thoughts upon them. I am, though a woman, deeply offended, ready to forgive all this, because I have no remedy in my power to prevent it. I am, Sir, your humble servant, T. No. 509.] TU

T.

No. 509.] TU

Hominis frug

Discharging

THE useful knowledge has a place in the world in it which improves the learned world; and every man upon his own account the trading part of the world, I believe what he says is true though delivered in a kind of proverbial language has raised more from attention Plutarch, or any worthy citizen but unprofitable

"MR

"SIR,

"I accuse you of money, which is public, but have But, forasmuch as I have received advice from others to write you down to write you But, before I am given an opportunity to observe a man shows it in his servants, and how complain to you particulars there is at London, a lame of manners, which prosperity. I judge regularity in every laugh that I take going to do, for being if their ancient thing which gives offence, is the mean the edifice of the ing thereunto. that well deserve that our monarch consists in being the modious for business both of private and public sent it hardly seen or purpose. In the merchants, the masters of ships and the lame; your rags and muffs justified the greatest place. Thus it oaths, and consequence place. This sequence, for, the highest place for those over the time and the un-hipped away deed of late, the lads from copper. the walnut- in the walks, y reason of are so filthy, s and officers ask for their o. I do not this, because e of the city, re of a man business of the man proper of a sedate, go out of his that business er, that valu- ost excellent eds, suited to

'Keep your It must be us could add e slower men t part of his e rest of the o be managed y, and make

So, though witty and in- whole trade se there is no t living, they nt friend and ds to be pre- han he would ectioned.

must not pre- e reason may ase, or at least take up your t do, or lose r, reputation, sh itself, until maxims in ge- many a little ny got, penny makes the old e world; and, ould be useful and for your n of it at pre- after. If you of the present the author of h an explana-

one of the motto

tion of a proverb, which by vulgar error is taken and used when a man is reduced to an extremity, whereas the propriety of the maxim is to use it when you would say there is plenty, but you must make such a choice as not to hurt another who is to come after you.

"Mr. Tobias Hobson, from whom we have the expression, was a very honourable man, for I shall ever call the man so who gets an estate honestly. Mr. Tobias Hobson was a carrier; and, being a man of great abilities and invention, and one that saw where there might good profit arise, though the duller men overlooked it, this ingenious man was the first in this island who let out hackney-horses. He lived in Cambridge; and, observing that the scholars rid hard, his manner was to keep a large stable of horses, with boots, bridles, and whips, to furnish the gentlemen at once, without going from college to college to borrow, as they have done since the death of this worthy man. I say, Mr. Hobson kept a stable of forty good cattle always ready and fit for travelling; but, when a man came for a horse, he was led into the stable, where there was great choice; but he obliged him to take the horse which stood next to the stable-door; so that every customer was alike well served according to his chance, and every horse ridden with the same justice; from whence it became a proverb, when what ought to be your election was forced upon you, to say, 'Hobson's choice.' This memorable man stands drawn in fresco at an inn (which he used) in Bishopsgate-street, with a hundred pound bag under his arm, with this inscription upon the said bag:

The fruitful mother of a hundred more.

"Whatever tradesman will try the experiment, and begin the day after you publish this my discourse to treat his customers all alike, and all reasonably and honestly, I will ensure him the same success. "I am, Sir, your loving Friend,

T.

"HEZEKIAH THRIFT."

No. 510.] WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1712.

Si sapi,
Neque, præterquam quas ipse amor molestias Habet addas; et illas quas habet, recte feris.
TER. EUN. act. 1. sc. 1.

If you are wise, add not to the troubles which attend the passion of love, and bear patiently those which are inseparable from it.

I WAS the other day driving in a hack through Gerrard-street, when my eye was immediately caught with the prettiest object imaginable—the face of a very fair girl, between thirteen and fourteen, fixed at the chin to a painted sash, and made part of the landscape. It seemed admirably done, and, upon throwing myself eagerly out of the coach to look at it, it laughed, and flung from the window. This amiable figure dwelt upon me; and I was considering the vanity of the girl, and her pleasant coquetry in acting a picture until she was taken notice of and raised the admiration of her beholders. The little circumstance made me run into reflection upon the force of beauty, and the wonderful influence the female sex has upon the other part of the species. Our hearts are seized with their enchantment and there are few of us, but brutal men, who by the hardness lose the chief pleasure in them; can resist their insinuations, though never so much against our interest and opinion. It is common with women to destroy the good effects a man's foil inclination might have upon his honour, by interposing their power over him in herein they cannot influence him, but to id disparagement. I do not know there is so difficult in human life, as to be proof the importunities of a woman a man loves; certainly no armour against tears, sullen at best constrained familiarities, in her usually meet with transport and alacrity. Raleigh was quoted in a letter (of a very correspondent of mine) upon this subject. or, who had lived in courts, camps, through many countries, and seen many men in various climates, and of as various complexions, of our impotence to resist the wiles of a woman in very severe terms. His words are as means did the devil find out, or what induced his own subtlety present him, as fittest to work his mischief by? Even the unquiet the woman; so as by Adam's hearkening to the voice of his wife, contrary to the express command of the living God, mankind by that her sin became the subject of labour, sorrow, and the woman being given to man for a help, and companion, but not for a counsellor. to be noted by whom the woman was even by the most ugly and unworthy of into whom the devil entered and perished. Secondly, What was the motive of her sin? Even a desire to know what was the secret of her knowledge; an affection which since remained in all the posterity of her race. Thirdly, What was it that moved the man to her persuasions? Even the same cause which moved all men since to the like consent; an unwillingness to grieve her, or make her should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. But if Adam, in the state of perfection, the son of David, God's chosen servant, himself a man endued with the greatest wisdom, did both of them disobey their Creator by sinning, and for the love they bare to a woman, is not so wonderful as lamentable, that in succeeding ages have been allured to the same inconvenient and wicked practices by the wiles of their wives, or other beloved darlings, and over and shadow many malicious purposes, a counterfeit passion of dissimulate sorrow, and inquietness." the notions of the minds of lovers are no where so fully described as in the works of skilful writers of the last age. The scene between Fulvia and Cato in the second act of Johnson's Catalina, is an excellent picture of the power of a lady over her gallant. A wench plays with his affections: and as all places of the world, wishes to make a bargain with his mistress, upon her upbraiding for want of spirit, he alludes to enterprises which cannot reveal but with the hazard of his life. When he is worked thus far, with a little flattery and opinion of his gallantry, and desire to get out of her overflowing fondness, she tells him that his life is in her disposal. The man is thus liable to be vanquished by the wiles of her he loves, the safest way is to do what is proper to be done; but to avoid all contention with her before he executes what he intended. Women are ever too hard for us to argue with; and one must consider how senseless it is to argue with one whose looks and gestures are more prevalent with you, than your reason and arguments can be with. It is a miserable slavery to submit to, and to give up a truth for no other reason than not fortitude to support it. A man has enough to do to control his passions, wishes and desires; but he has those of another to govern, and his wife and family, let him be what he will, the conveniences of life in such a situation are so proud of them; but let him be what he will, and not their exorbitant demands by him. In this case a man is used to soften a man's mind above his understanding of this kind, a man should present he makes flows the importunity of his beloved her slave; if from the man's laugh it off, and do not let men with that seriousness of circumstance deserves. What if his wife's fears are to be once indulged, you are the protector, as you were of compliance to her weakness, yourself from avoiding it, they will lead you both, in which you are to be that very complaisance the most difficult mastery over to attain, to resist the grief let the heart ache, be and painful, it is what through, if you think to be conscious to yourself that The old argument, that deny me this," which first by habitual success will give way to it to resign his country and his honour.—T.

No. 511.] THURSDAY

Quis non inveniat tuum

—Who could, In such a crowd a man

"DEAR SPEC.,

"FINDING that my letter to continue my epistolary conversation on those dear confounders, I knowest all the little I have upon that subject: I never told their sakes. I have lately written for a Spectator, which I thought if they pass through thy hands, I found by chance in an advertisement, that lay in my friend's hand. I visited him one morning at the place where I met thee, and he tells us that it was the most proper to have several fairs in the young unmarried world to sale. The men who would provide themselves. Every man at the highest bidder, and the public laid aside for the public use, shalt hear by-and-bye. If people had the choice of the most extraordinary fair was thus picked, th could not go these married lug for them, orth his while st' bidder was must know, es in our own ly women as consequence, at many, there

r their hands, st, the money s disposed of who could not was forced to portion being
To this the forced to live pented of his er to the next

on this occafair in Great pleasant by sellers and car-leading off in mers' daughh, I am cononey prevails in, we should ld choose out
r the richest contrary, the extravagant Thou couldst
s occasion in took care, by r part of the ersons in the s I shall leave which I like ne general of strong town

d set to sale Accordingly
after having woman who as demanded at confluence r part, with a do 'unsight hant in partito be marked ied it off with vith it upon a e a survey of t, a little old which the ad-he was going ld lady, how-her story, by r to a great he fortune of uld know to chant again
to his house, and procured that she had eam a second on upon this plan. I would suppose all the unmarried women in London and Westminster brought to market sacks, with their respective prices on each sack. The first sack that is sold is marked with five hundred and pound. Upon the opening of it, I find it full with an admirable housewife, of an agreeable countenance. The purchaser, upon hearing her good qualities, pays down her price very cheerfully. The second I would open should be a five hundred pound sack. The lady in it, to our surprise, has the face and person of a toast. As we are wondering how she came to be set at so low a price, we hear that she would have been valued at ten thousand pound; but that the public had made those abatements in her being a scold. I would afterward find some beautiful, modest, and discreet women, that should be the top of the market; and perhaps discover had a dozen romps tied up together in the same sack, at one hundred pound a head. The prude and the coquette should be valued at the same price, though the first should go off the better of the two. I fancy thou wouldst like such a vision, had I time to show it; because, to talk in thy own way, there is a mean in it. Whatever thou mayest think of it, pray don't do not make any of thy queer apologies for this letter, as thou didst for my last. The women here are gay lively fellows, and are never angry at the raileries of one who is their known admirer. I am always bitter upon them, but well with them.

"Thine,

"HONESTY."

O.

No. 512.] FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1712

Lectorem delectando, pariterque moneudo.
HON. AGR. POOL. VIND. 111.
Mixing together profit and delight.

THERE is nothing which we receive with so much reluctance as advice. We look upon the man who gives it us as offering an affront to our understanding, and treating us like children or idiots. We consider the instruction as an implicit censure, and the zeal which any one shows for our good on such an occasion as a piece of presumption or impertinence. The truth of it is, the person who pretends to advise, does, in that particular, exercise a superiority over us, and can have no other reason for it, but that, in comparing us with himself, he thinks defective either in our conduct or our understanding. For these reasons, there is nothing so difficult as the art of making advice agreeable; and indeed all the writers, both ancient and modern, have distinguished themselves among one another, according to the perfection at which they have arrived in this art. How many devices have been made use of to render this bitter portion palatable? Some convey their instructions to us in the best choice words, others in the most harmonious numbers, some in points of wit, and others in short proverbs.

But, among all the different ways of giving counsel, I think the finest, and that which pleases the most universally, is fable; in whatsoever shape it appears. If we consider this way of instructing in giving advice, it excels all others, because it is not least shocking, and the least subject to those exceptions which I have before mentioned.

This will appear to us, if we reflect, in the first place, that upon the reading of a fable, we are used to believe we advise ourselves. We pursue the matter for the sake of the story, and consider the precept rather as our own conclusion than his instruction. The moral insinuates itself imperceptibly; we are light by surprise, and become wiser and better awares. In short, by this method, a man is so overreached as to think he is directing himself, while he is following the dictates of another, and consequently is not sensible of that which is the most unpleasant circumstance in advice.

In the next place, if we look into human nature, we shall find that the mind is never so much pleased, when she exerts herself in any action that gives her an idea of her own perfections and abilities. Her natural pride and ambition of the soul is very much gratified in the reading of a fable; for, in writings of this kind, the reader comes in for half the performance; everything appears to him like a discovery of his own; he is busied all the while applying characters and circumstances, and is in this respect both a reader and a composer. It is no wonder, therefore, that on such occasions, when the mind is thus pleased with itself, and amused with its own discoveries, that it is highly delighted with the writing which is the occasion of it. For this reason the Absalom and Achitophel* was one of the most popular poems that ever appeared in English. The poetry is indeed very fine: but had it been much finer, it would not have so much pleased, without a plan which gave the reader an opportunity of exerting his own talents.

This oblique manner of giving advice is so inoffensive, that, if we look into ancient histories, we find the wise men of old very often chose to give counsel to their kings in fables. To omit many which will occur to every one's memory, there is a pretty instance of this nature in a Turkish tale, which I do not like the worse for that little oriental extravagance which is mixed with it.

We are told that the Sultan Mahmoud, by his perpetual wars abroad and his tyranny at home, had filled his dominions with ruin and desolation, and almost unpeopled the Persian empire. The vizier to his great sultan (whether a humorist or an enthusiast, we are not informed) pretended to have learned from a certain dervise to understand the language of owls, so that there was not a bird that could open its mouth but the vizier knew what it was he said. One evening with the emperor, in their return from hunting, they saw a couple of owls upon a tree that grew near an old wall out of a heap of rubbish. "I would fain know," says the sultan, "what those two owls are saying to one another; listen to their discourse, and give me an account of it." The vizier approached the tree, pretending to be very attentive to the two owls. Upon his return to the sultan, "Sir," says he, "I have heard part of their conversation, but dare not tell you what it is." The sultan would not be satisfied with such an answer, but forced him to repeat word for word every thing the owls had said. "You must know, then," said the vizier, "that one of these owls has a son, and the other a daughter, between whom they are now upon a treaty of marriage. The father of the son said to the father of the daughter, in my hearing, 'Brother, I consent to this marriage, provided you will settle upon your daughter fifty ruined villages for her portion.' To which the father of the daughter replied, 'Instead of fifty, I will give her one hundred, if you please. God grant a long life to Sultan Mahmoud shall never want."

The story says, that the sultan had been destroyed by the good counsel of the dervise.

To fill up my piece of natural history, I will add a philosopher the blood of certain mixed together, a wonderful virtue skilled in the knowledge of every thing the dervise above such a serpent, the learned.—O

No. 513.] SATURDAY

—Affliction
Jam propiore Deo
When all the gods

THE following is a story of a prudent man in his old age, more than once mentioned in my speculation, and of a very young man who gives it a place in his

"SIR,

"The indisposition is at last grown so that I am unable to make an end of that whilst I am here, and I am sure are none of your pleasure than you are very glad if I could that day's entertainment several thoughts made great improvement of sickness, and entertainment for

"Among all the mind of a situation to consider more natural than and unbodied being man considers, dissolved, he should now contemplate works, or, to speak some faculty in the vine Being, and than we are in which the eye is lessness and stupidity. Mr. upon Death, his lively colours, the ration from the world which even are not able to do of matter, which this life. His v

"That death is nothing else but us that it is one intercepts the sight of the world is not at * A memorable satire written by Dryden against the faction which, by Lord Shaftesbury's incitement, set the Duke of Monmouth at their head. Of this poem, in which personal satire is applied to the support of public principles, the sale was so large, that it is said not to have been equalled, but by Chapman's trial.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ed is at a great re-he third heavens, those blessed spirits as soon as we step to the other world, world (for there is as a new state of live in this world;
into the next: for these bodies, and can casements, nothing us; nay, nothing reflect light, and of things with it to this visible world of things than what ing at all of it; for sible and invisible ese bodies there are esent themselves to spectacles are taken eye sees what was in the other world, with it. Thus St.
are at home in the ord; but when we re present with the hinks this is enough ese bodies, unless confined to a prison, r lives, which gives and that none of the erty to view all the old we give now for le world, which the odies will present us as eye hath not seen tered into the heart pens our eyes, ens with a new and can never see while should make us as to take the film off sight.'

but be very much pearing in the pree can see and live, when he considers ars before will exa-life, and reward and ust confess that I gion, besides that of y support the most ght. Let a man's is virtues rise to the ainable in this life, any secret sins, so ffences of ignorance, y unguarded words many defects in his advantages of such Christianity has re-he should be cleared r that he should be r holy religion sugreby our guilt may fect obedience ac-

that I have endea-ving hymn, which I
-kness:—

I.
When, rising from the bed of death, O'erwhelm'd with guilt and fear, I see my Maker, face to face, O how shall I appear!

II.
If yet, while pardon may be found,
And mercy may be sought, My heart with inward horror shrinks, And trembles at the thought.

III.
When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd In majesty severe,
And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear.

IV.
But thou hast told the troubled mind,
Who does her sins lament, The timely tribute of her tears Shall endless woe prevent.

V.
Then see the sorrows of my heart, Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight.

VI.
For never shall my soul despair Her pardon to procure,
Who knows thine only Son has died
To make her pardon sure.

"There is a noble hymn in French, which I sieur Bayle has celebrated for a very fine one, which the famous author of the Art of Speaking an admirable one, that turns upon a thought of same nature. If I could have done it justice in glish, I would have sent it you translated; it written by Monsieur des Barreaux, who had been of the greatest wits and libertines in France, & his last years was as remarkable a penitent.

Grand Dieu, tes Jugemens sont remplis d'équité, Toujours tu prends plaisir à nous être propice Mais j'ai tant fait de mal, que jamais ta bonté Ne me pardonnera, sans choquer ta Justice.
Où, mon Dieu, la grandeur de mon impiété Ne laisse à ton pouvoir que le choix du supplice: Ton intérêt s'oppose ma félicité.
Et ta clemence même attend que je périsse.
Contente ton desir, puis qu'il t'est glorieux: Offense toi des pleurs qui coulent de mes yeux; Tonne, frappe, il est tems, rends moi guerre pour gloire J'adore en pensant la raison qui t'aigrit.
Mais dessus quel endroit tombera ton tonnerre, Qui ne soit tout couvert du sang de Jésus Christ.

"If these thoughts may be serviceable to y desire you would place them in a proper light, am ever, with great sincerity.

O. "Sir, yours," &c

No. 514.] MONDAY, OCTOBER 20, 17

— Me Parnasi deserat per ardua dulcis Raptat amor: juvat ire jugis, qua nulla priore Castalum molli divertitur orbita clivo.

VIRG. Georg. III.

But the commanding Muse my chariot guides, Which o'er the dubious cliff securely rides:
And pleas'd I am no beaten road to take,
But first the way to new discoveries make.—D

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I CAME home a little later than usual tonight; and, not finding myself inclined to sit took up Virgil to divert me until I should be disposed to rest. He is the author whom I choose on such occasions; no one writing divine, so harmonious, nor so equal a strain, leaves the mind composed and softened in melancholy; the temper in which, of all choice to close the day. The passages I were those beautiful raptures in which he professes himself entirely given to fuses, and smit with the love of poetry, wishing to be transported to the cool retirements of the mountain Hæmus. I took and went to bed. What I had just a reading made so strong an impression on, that fancy seemed almost to fulfil to wish of Virgil, in presenting to me the following:—

I ought I was on a sudden placed in the Ætolia, where at the end of the horizon I saw Parnassus rising before me. The view was of so large an extent, that I had long about to find a path which should directly to it, had I not seen at some distance a series, which, in a plain that had nothing remarkable enough in it to fix my sight, immatermained me to go thither. When I reached it, I found it parted out into a great number of walks and alleys, which often widened into beautiful openings, as circles or ovals, set with yew and cypresses, with niches, grottoes, and caves, placed on the sides, encompassed with trees. There was no sound to be heard in the place, but only that of a gentle breeze passing through the leaves of the forest; everything beside was in a profound silence. I was captivated by the beauty and retirement of the place, and much, before that hour, was pleased with the content of myself. I indulged the humour, and let myself to wander without choice or restraint, at length, at the end of a range of trees, I saw figures seated on a bank of moss, with a look creeping at their feet. I adored them as the divinities of the place, and stood still to get a particular view of each of them. The first, whose name was Solitude, sat with her back to each other, and seemed rather pensive, as if taken up with her own thoughts, than as if grieved or displeased. The only companions she admitted into that retirement were Silence, who sat on her right hand with her hand on her mouth, and on her left Contempt, with her eyes fixed upon the heavens. Beside her was a celestial globe, with several schemes of mathematical theorems. She prevented my speech by her greatest affability in the world. 'Fear not, said she, 'I know your request before you come; you would be led to the mountain of the Muses; the only way to it lies through this place, and I am so often employed in conducting persons as myself.' When she had thus spoken, she rose from her seat, and I immediately placed myself under her direction; but whilst I passed through the grove I could not help inquiring of her the persons admitted into that sweet retreat. 'Surely,' said I, 'there can nothing be but virtue and virtuous thoughts; the place seems designed for the reception and instruction of such persons as have spent their lives to the dictates of their conscience, and the service of the gods.' 'You imagine right,' said she, 'yourself this place was at first designed for such; it continued to be in the reign of Minerva, when none entered here but holy priests, who were driven from their country from oppression and who reposed themselves here after their labours; and those whom the study and love of wisdom had led to divine conversation. But now it is become no less dangerous than desirable: vice has learned to creep in hither and there, and often creeps in hither and there just before you, Revenge, the robe of Honour. Observe, standing alone; if you will tell you it is Emulation, a frequent intruder we have now the deity to whom it is entirely devoted. Virtue, the Graces attending him, a happy place; a whole tribe of him, and no dishonourable for admittance. But now, changed! and how seldom who dare despise sordid vices, themselves fit companions for

"The goddess had now been arrived at the summit, which lay contiguous to the foot of the mountain. Her guide, being solicited by me, assured me they would show me the mountain of the Muses. It was extremely important numbers, whom I saw with a hill. I turned away from disdain; and, addressing her that, as I had some reach up part of the ascent, strength enough to attain. But, being informed by her to stand upon the sides, and onwards I should irrevocably verge, I resolved to hazard in the attempt: so great was the satisfaction I hoped for my enterprise.

"There were two paths, ways to the summit of the mountain, guarded by the genius of the mountain of our births. He had the several pretensions of that way, but to admit of one on whom Melpomene had her eye at the hour of their meeting was guarded by diligent persons applied who had the way; but he was so tedious, and indeed after a very intricate and laborious had made some progress back than proceed; and yet to arrive at the end they had two paths, which at length of the mountain, there were two, which a little after this carried those happy it was to find it, directly I do not know whether I had the resolution to have done of these doors, had I not (followed by a numerous of both sexes) insist upon being led up. He put me in a who is painted in the map over the Alps. He had a hand; and, producing a given to him by hands who allow as passes; among some of my own writings admitted, and gave by

s. I found the f, but served as ect passengers,
ctions he proto travel that upon this kind
Mr. Spectator,
self. We were sprinkled three ain Aganippe, all harms, but the end of our in the middle mit of the hill,
us two figures, ation: the one her youth and lders and feet, he most distant
She was cons-into the most world, and at ish garb that her a man folher inducted * mirror, and ing ornaments
ne plain below,
th great satis-
he name of the of Liberty, the ymphs: the Time, and the
his. A youth, hem, was their it, and his seat most celebrated secret joy, that e the majority,
t both in num-y to take a full
I was inspired everything in an before: I h was a continunshine. The each side, and vale, the habi-had composed llo was seated anopy an aged over his head.
He held his round about story over the in softer notes Homer, Vir-to them. Be-among whom habit of Lap-incourtiness of lace upon the alone, no one ned himself to almost walked race and Ana-delighted.
up of figures: Socrates die-of Plato; but participate.

most of all, Mæuseus had the greatest address at him. I was at too great a distance to hear what said, or discover the faces of his hearers; but thought I now perceived Virgil, who had joined them, and stood in a posture full of admiration at the harmony of his words.

"Lastly, at the very brink of the hall, I saw Baccalus sending dispatches to the world below of what happened upon Parnassus; but I perceived he did it without leave of the Muses, and by stealth, and was unwilling to have them revised by Apollo. I could now, from this height and serene sky, behold the infinite cares and anxieties with which men below sought out their way through the maze of life. I saw the path of Virtue lie straight before them, whilst Interest, or some malicious demon, still hurried them out of the way. I was at once touched with pleasure at my own happiness, and compassion at the sight of their inextricable errors. Here the contending passions rose so high, that they were inconsistent with the sweet repose I enjoyed; and awaking with a sudden start, the only consolation I could admit of for my loss, was the hope that the relation of my dream will not displease you."—

---

No. 515.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1772.

Pudet me et miseret, qui harum rerum coactus miles.
Monialis frustra— Tæx. Hæuist. act. ii. sc. 3.

I am ashamed and grieved, that I neglected his advice, and gave me the character of these creatures.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I AM obliged to you for printing the account lately sent you of a coquette who disturbed a congregation in the city of London. That intelligence ended at her taking coach, and bidding the driver go where he knew. I could not leave her, but dogged her, as hard as she drove, to St. Paul's churchyard, where there was a stop of coaches, a tending company coming out of the cathedral. This gave me an opportunity to hold up a crown to the coachman, who gave me the signal that he would hurry on, and make no haste, as you know the time is when they favour a chase. By his many kind blunders, driving against other coaches, and dropping of his tackle, I could keep up with him, and keep my fine lady in the parish of St. James's. As I guessed, when I first saw her at church, her business is to win hearts, and throw them away, regarding nothing but the triumph. I have had this business, by tracing her through all with whom I first she was acquainted, to find one who was intimate with a friend of mine, and to be introduced to his notice. I have made so good use of my time, as to procure from that intimate of hers one of her letters which she writ to her when in the country. This epistle of her own may serve to alarm the world against her in ordinary life, as mine, I hope, will to those who shall behold her at church. The letter was written last winter to the lady who gave it me, and I doubt not but you will find it the soul of a happy self-loving dame, that takes all the admirers she can meet with, and returns none of it to her admirers.

"DEAR JENNY,

"I AM glad to find you are likely to be disappointed in marriage so much to your apprehension, as you tell me. You say you are afraid only of me, but I shall laugh at your spouse's airs. I beg of you not to fear it, for I am too nice a discerner in laugh and cry, but whom most other people think one full of way is, when any man who is my admirer to give himself airs of merit, as at this staid gentleman you know did, to mortify by vowing in his presence the most insignificant I can find. At this ball I was led in company by pretty Mr. Fanfly, who, you the most obsequious, well-shaped, well-bred man in town. I, at first entrance, declared partner if he danced at all; which put the assembly into a grin, as forming no terrors to a rival. But we had not been long in the fore I overheard the meritorious gentleman mentioned say with an oath, 'There is no one in the thing, she certainly loves the puppy.' The gentleman, when we were dancing, took an opportunity very soft in his oglings upon a lady he liked, and whom he knew of all women I knew to outshine. The contest began who would be the other most. I, who do not care to be so, for him, had no hard task to outvie him. I, with a very little encouragement, ma coupée, and then sink with all the air and grace is imaginable. When he performed this, I, and the gentleman you know of fall into the arms, and imitate as well as he could the demure. I cannot well give you, who are so country lady, the idea of the joy we have seen a stubborn heart breaking, or a man of sense a fool for our sakes; but this happened, and, I expect his attendance whenever we go to court, to the play, or the park. I sacrifice due to us women of genius, who are the eloquence of beauty, an easy mien. I am an easy mien, one which can be in occasion.

sion easily affected; for I hold one maxim, which wit, that our greatest perfection. It is to that our just over our hips, and force or motion, but perfection we owe the part at a tragedy, the scornful at a comedy, and the part at a sermon.

"To tell you the plain truth, I am not but in being admired, attaining the approbation I had a mind to. You figure in the world (as pleased to put upon the same vanity as I am). I am not, but to make other yours? This indeed is not, has a genius no higher than very good housewife family. The care of my enemies to the countess fine lady is not to be pithing to take up her person. But I interrupt cares, and myself from

"I am, Madam,

"Give me leave, Mr. S. to answer to this epistle, of a pious woman."

“DEAR GATTY,

"I take your raillery obliged to you for the fr of your own gaieties. perfidious pleasure; for,
for man; and in serious ther you yourself know i tend to no other end bu as fast as you can.

"I am, Madam."

T.                      " Your

No. 516.] WEDNESDAY

Immortale odium, et Inde furor vulgo, quod Odit uterque locus; quod Esse deos, quos iure co-

—A grutch, time out And mutually bequeat Religious spite and pic The quarrel which so Each calls the other's His own divine.—TAT

Of all the monstrous have crept into the world as that those who profess Christians, should pursue and hatred for difference the example of their Saviour that all who pursue the form themselves after him, be able to account for effect might expect from those lowly of the highest parity, but by ascribing sin and corruption of those souls full of fury, to seek of Peace.

The massacres to which animated the ordinary people

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

whoever reads the cruelties efficiently con- may be worked id become in- of grace, ph deserve so it world, will, reverend and r before many ed on that la- the occasion, loquence.

but only tran- ristian Hero, in honour of e rescued that isasters. His nd the most conclusion of it and Roman r:—

atrance of the ho have main- the two great e present age, of the future. : those ends to em among us. of glory, but different mo- ve undisputed r in their ra- 's happiness is ther's in their e enjoys the a Persian, the rtan. One is the oppressed. id ostentation inferiors; the nd foundation one therefore to the other a solid honour, , but after the nce must ever e be master of and just; only the noble art extended, and ces, by which nsensibly give g men in the apt to pass for y to express, a country but man's vanity of becoming for sufferings, s to servitude; all the agree- The noblest most elegant ith the various uments, charm- res, and those monarch might ile they flatter his virtue, and gild his vice at so high a rate, th he without scorn of the one, or love of the oth would alternately and occasionally be both; that his bounty should support him in his repen his mercy in his cruelties.

"Nor is it to give things a more severe look th is natural, to suppose such must be the consequen of a prince's having no other pursuit than that his own glory; for if we consider an infant born in the world, and beholding itself the mightiest thin in it, itself the present admiration and future pr spect of a fawning people, who profess themse great or mean, according to the figure he is to mak amongst them, what fancy would not be debauch to believe they were but what they professed the selves—his mere creatures, and use them as end by purchasing with their lives a boundless mone which he, for want of a more just prospect, wou place in the number of his slaves, and the exten his territories? Such undoubtedly would be th tragical effects of a prince's living with no religio which are not to be surpassed but by his having false one.

"If ambition were spicited with zeal, what wou follow, but that his people should be converted to an army, whose swords can make right in poss and solve controversy in belief? And if men shou be stiff-necked to the doctrine of that visible chanc let them be contented with an oar and a chain; i the midst of stripes and anguish, to contemplate Him whose yoke is easy and whose burden a light

"With a tyranny begun on his own subjects, an indignation that others draw their breath indepen dent of his frown or smile, why should he not proceed to the seizure of the world? And if such but the thirst of sway were the motive of his action why should treaties be other than mere words, a solemn national compacts be any thing but a lie in the march of that army, who are never to b down their arms until all men are reduced to th necessity of hanging their lives on his wayward will who might supinely, and at leisure, expiate his in sins, by other men's sufferings, while he daily d ditates new slaughter and new conquests?

"For mere man, when giddy with unbridl power, is an insatiate idol, not to be appeased b myriads offered to his pride, which may be puff'd by the adulation of a base and prostrate world in an opinion that he is something more than man by being something less; and alas! what is th that mortal man will not believe of himself wh complimented with the attributes of God? He o then conceive thoughts of a power as omnipotent his. But, should there be such a foe of man now upon earth, have our sins so far provoked He ven, that we are left utterly naked to his fury? there no power, no leader, no genius, that can d duct and animate us to our death, or our defens Yes; our great God never gave one to reign by permission, but he gave to another also to reign his grace.

"All the circumstances of the illustrious life our prince seem to have conspired to make him a check and bridle of tyranny; for his mind has be strengthened and confirmed by une considered ang gle, and Heaven has educated him by adversity a quick sense of the distresses and miseries of so kind, which he was born to redress. In just m of the trivial glories and light ostentations of pow that glorious instrument of Providence serves, i that, in a steady, calm, and silent course, indepen dent either of applause or calumny; which read im, if not in a political, yet in a moral, a philosophic, an heroic, and a Christian sense, an absolute monarch; who, satisfied with this unchangeable, just, and ample glory, must needs turn all his regards from himself to the service of others; for he begins his enterprises with his own share in the success of them; for integrity bears in itself its reward, or can that which depends not on event ever know disappointment.

"With the undoubted character of a glorious captain, and (what he much more values than the most splendid titles) that of a sincere and honest man, he is the hope and stay of Europe, a universal good; not to be engrossed by us only, for distant potentates implore his friendship, and injured empires court his assistance. He rules the world, not by an invasion of the people of the earth, but the address of its princes; and, if that world should be aroused from the repose which his prevailing arms had given it, why should we not hope that ere is an Almighty, by whose influence the terrible enemy that thinks himself prepared for battle, may find he is but ripe for destruction?—and that ere may be in the womb of time great incidents, which may make the catastrophe of a prosperous life as unfortunate as the particular scenes of it were successful?—for there does not want a skilful eye and resolute arm to observe and grasp the occasion. prince, who from—

Full illum, et ingens Gloria." VIRG. Æn. ii. 325.

Troy is no more, and illum was a town.—DRYDEN.

T.

No. 517.] THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1712.

Heu pietas! heu prisca fides!—VIRG. Æn. vi. 878.

Mirror of ancient faith!

Undaunted worth! Inviolable truth!—DRYDEN.

WE last night received a piece of ill news at our club, which very sensibly afflicted every one of us. The question not but my readers themselves will be puzzled at the hearing of it. To keep them no longer in suspense, Sir Roger de Coverley is dead! He departed this life at his house in the country, after a few weeks' sickness. Sir Andrew Freeport is a letter from one of his correspondents in those parts, that informs him the old man caught a cold at the county-sessions, as he was very warmly protesting an address of his own penning, in which he succeeded according to his wishes. But this particular comes from a whig justice of peace, who was always Sir Roger's enemy and antagonist. I have letters both from the chaplain and Captain Sentry, which mention nothing of it, but are filled with any particulars to the honour of the good old man. I have likewise a letter from the butler, who took so much care of me last summer when I was at the right's house. As my friend the butler mentions, the simplicity of his heart, several circumstances others have passed over in silence, I shall give my reader a copy of his letter, without any alteration or diminution.

"HONOURED SIR,

"Knowing that you was my old master's good friend, I could not forbear sending you the melancholy news of his death, which has afflicted the whole country, as well as his poor servants, who loved him. I may say, better than we did our lives. I am afraid he caught his death the last county-sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow who that had been a man; for you know the poor man's first complaint was a roast-beef stomach, which was served to him, and he knew he used to eat it every time forward he had a good heart to great hopes of his recovery, and was sent him from his wife, who made love to him, and only proved a great grief to him, and he was queathed to this pearl necklace, which was set with jewels, which was his mother. He had that he used to say, because he thought he had left you all his business to the chaplain, and he was to lands about it, and he made his will, he made the parish a great black riding-horse, and he saw him take leave of us all for our friend, and he speak a word for his grown gray-head, and he has left us pension very comfortably every day. He has a charity, which is very comfortable, and it is peremptory, and he left money to be given, and he was heard to say years longer, and he told it. The chaplain was very good end, and he shed tears. He was a very good man, among the good men, and he was in the hand of his father, and he was married by six of his sons, and he was six of the quorum, and he was a corpse with head and shoulders; the men of the house, the men of the house. Captain Sentry taken possession of his estate. When he died, he shed his joy of the death, and he was siring him only, and he was the several legal, and he told him he was. The captain told he says but little, and he says my master loved an old house-dog, and he was so fond of. It was heard the moans of my master's death, and he was self since; no more melancholiest day, and he was in Worcester.

"Honoured Sir

"P S. My master died, that a body carrier, should be his name."

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

poor butler's idea of our ing of it there Andrew, open-on of acts of the Act of marked by Sir that they re-had disputed eared at the een merry at at the sight of ears, and put entry informs mourning for 24, 1712.

amae,
tunis.
Sat. viii. 76.

—STEPNEY.

me, I must a treat at a as have been which I serve

I hear of the rtly condole
ion. I think s of a paper have had it ected of you
if possible,
y and divert-will receive c of such as re mentioned

I have made believe you pleasure to to the church oney. Whe-parish have a hat there be that work by eremarkable other I have y, that there ead in tomb-d very much send you a hose I have en in a dif-
diffused and racted style, athetic; the
b. The first

why?
le;

be,
three,
ne,
came

Also to breathe their last, nine years before,
And now have left their father to deplore
The loss of all his children, with his wife, Who was the joy and comfort of his life.

"The second is as follows:—

Here lies the body of Daniel Saul, Spitalfields weaver, and that's all.

"I will not dismiss you, whilst I am upon this subject without sending a short epitaph which I once met with, though I cannot possibly recollect the place. The thought of it is serious, and in my opinion the finest that I ever met with upon this occasion. You know, Sir, it is usual, after having told us the name of the person who lies interred, to launch out into his praises. This epitaph takes a quite contrary turn, having been made by the person himself some time before his death.

*'Hic jacet R. C. in expectatione diæ supremæ.
Qualis erat, dies iste indicabit.'*

Here lieth R. C. in expectation of the last day What sort of a man he was that day will discover."

"I am, Sir," &c.

The following letter is dated from Cambridge:

"SIR,

"Having lately read among your speculations an essay upon physiognomy, I cannot but think that if you made a visit to this ancient university, you might receive very considerable lights upon the subject, there being scarce a young fellow in it who does not give certain indications of his particular humour and disposition, conformable to the rules of that art. In courts and cities every body lays a constraint upon his countenance, and endeavours to look like the rest of the world; but the youth of this place, having not yet formed themselves by conversation, and the knowledge of the world, give their limbs and features their full play.

"As you have considered human nature in all its lights, you must be extremely well apprised, that there is a very close correspondence between the outward and the inward man; that scarce the least dawning, the least parturiency towards a thought can be stirring in the mind of man, without producing a suitable revolution in his exterior, which will easily discover itself to an adept in the theory of the phiz. Hence it is that the intrinsic worth and merit of a son of Alma Mater is ordinarily calculated from the cast of his visage, the contour of his person, the mechanism of his dress, the disposition of his limbs, the manner of his gait and air with a number of circumstances of equal consequence and information. The practitioners in this art often make use of a gentleman's eyes to give them light into the posture of his brains; take a glance from his nose to judge of the size of his intellects, and interpret the overmuch visibility and pertness of one year as an infallible mark of reprobation and a sign the owner of so saucy a member fear neither God nor man. In conformity to this scheme a contracted brow, a lumpish downcast look, a sobe-sedate pace, with both hands dangling quiet and steady in lines exactly parallel to each lateral pocket of the galligaskins, is logic, metaphysics, and mathematics, in perfection. So likewise the bellos-letters are typified by a saunter in the gait, a fall of one wing of the peruke backward, an insertion of one hand in the fob, and a negligent swing of the other, with a pinch of right fine Barcelona between finger and thumb, a due quantity of the same upon the upper lip, and a noddle-case loaded with polished grave, solemn, staking pace is heroic politics; an unequal one, a genius for the modern ballad; and an open breast, lacious display of the Holland shirt, is fatal tendency to the art military.

be much larger upon these hints, but as I write to. If you can graft any specimen them, or turn them to the advantage of persons concerned in them, you will do us becoming the British Spectator, and

"Your very humble Servant,

"TOM TWEEK."

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1712.

an pecundumque gentis, vitæque volantum.

porco fert monstra sub aquore pontus.

VIRG. ÆNEID. VI. 728.

and boasts the breath of life obtain.

air, and monsters of the main.—DRAKE.

here is a great deal of pleasure in considering the material world, by which I mean of bodies into which nature has so cut the mass of dead matter, with the ones which those bodies bear to one another. I still, methinks, something more wonderful in contemplations on the world which I mean all those animals with which the universe is furnished. The mass is only the shell of the universe; the animals are its inhabitants.

Consider those parts of the material world nearest to us, and are therefore subject to observations and inquiries, it is amazing to see the infinity of animals with which it is every part of matter is peopled; every warm with inhabitants. There is a humour in the body of man, or of any animal, in which our glasses do not discover living creatures. The surface of the earth is covered with other animals, which are the manner the basis of other animals that we may, we find in the most solid bodies, themselves, innumerable cells and cavities filled with such imperceptible inhabitants as are for the naked eye to discover. On the earth, if we look into the more bulky parts we see the seas, lakes, and rivers, teeming with a variety of kinds of living creatures. We see the mountain and marsh, wilderness and field, all stocked with birds and beasts; and all affording proper necessaries and conveniences for the livelihood of multitudes which of the Plurality of Worlds draws a argument from this consideration for the habitability of this planet; as indeed it seems very reasonable by the analogy of reason, that if no part of the world we are acquainted with, lies waste and is not inhabited, those great bodies, which are at such a distance from us, should not be desert and unpeopled, but they should be furnished with beings in their respective situations.

It is a blessing to those beings only which are furnished with perception; and is in a manner confined upon dead matter, any further than as it is to beings which are conscious of it. Accordingly, we find, from the observation of the world, that matter is only made as the basis of life, and that there is no more necessary for the existence of life.

Infinite goodness is of so great nature that it seems to delight in the perfection of every degree of perfection upon every degree of perfection. I have a speculation which I have pleasure to myself, I shall be able to consider that part of the world which comes within our knowledge.

There are some living creatures but just above dead matter, species of shell-fish, which grow out of a cone, that grow to the perfection and immediately die upon the place where they grow. These creatures but one remove from other sense besides that of sight, have still an additional one of smell, and others of sight.

They serve by what a gradual perfection advances through a prodigious space before a creature is formed its senses; and even among different degrees of perfection animal enjoys beyond what is possible though the sense is distinguished by the same common almost of a different nature into the several inward perceptions of sagacity, or what we generally call them rising after the same manner one above another, and receiving improvements, according to the nature they are implanted. This progress is gradual, that the most perfect comes very near to the most imperfect is immediately above it.

The exuberant and overabundant Supreme Being, whose works, is plainly seen, as I have said, his having made so very little falls within our knowledge, than life. Nor is his goodness less than in the multitude of living creatures only made one species of animal which would have enjoyed the happiness, therefore, specified in his works of life, every capacity of being in nature, from a plant to a man, divers kinds of creatures, rising by such a gentle and easy transitions and deviations from one other are almost insensible.

It is so well husbanded and scarce a degree of perception in some one part of the world, or the wisdom of the Deity manifested in this his proceeding.

There is a consequence, however, ready mentioned, which is deducible from the foregoing scale of being rises by such a high as man, we may, by a progression that it still proceeds gradually which are of a superior nature is an infinitely greater space of degrees of perfection between man and man, than between man and a cable insect. This consequence is a variety of beings which are superior to that variety which is inferior to us,

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

are set down, after having and there is such inand his Maker for the in, it is impossible that since there will be still between the highest which produced him. re species of intelligent ere are of sensible and ole to me from hence; eoreal world we see no ite down from us the dea continued series of ve differ very little one fishes that have wings, airy region; and there abitants of the water, and their flesh so like re allowed them on fish-so near of kin both to are the middle between link the terrestrial and at land and at sea, and od and entrails of a hog; dently reported of mer-some brutes that seem and reason as some that animal and vegetable ed, that if you will take ghest of the other, there great difference between come to the lowest and of matter, we shall find all species are linked to-most insensible degrees. infinite power and wise reason to think that it nt harmony of the uni-infinite goodness of ies of creatures should end upward from us toon, as we see they graward: which if it be en to be persuaded that creatures above us than g in degrees of perfec-the infinite being of e lowest state of being, nearest to nothing. And lies we have no clear dis-there is no creature so which so much deserves s man, who fills up the animal and intellectual sible world, and is that which has been often mundi. So that he who, with angels and arch-eing of infinite perfection est order of spirits as his spect say to corruption, to the worm, Thou art

 —O.

OCTOBER 27, 1712.

miolus
 Oct. xxiv. 1.

sh? What time shall end friend?—CREECH.

"MR. SPECTATOR,
 "THE just value you have expressed for trimonial state is the reason that I now write to you, without the fear of being rudand confess to you that though it is three since I lost a very agreeable woman, who wife, my sorrow is still fresh; and I am the midst of company, upon any circumstan-revives her memory, with a reflection should say or do on such an occasion: I any occurrence of that nature, which I can a sense of, though I cannot express it whole-all over softness, and am obliged to retire way to a few sighs and tears before I can I cannot but recommend the subject of mal-hood to you, and beg you to touch upon first opportunity. To those who have not husbands during the lives of their spouses be a tasteless jumble of words; but to whom there are not a few) who have en-state with the sentiments proper for it, you every line, which hits the sorrow, attends tear of pity and consolation; for I know what goodness of Providence it is that of passion is a step towards the relief of there is a certain comfort in the very act of ing, which, I suppose, arises from a sensciousness in the mind, that the affliction it flows from a virtuous cause. My concern indeed so outrageous as at the first transporthink it has subsided rather into a sober mind than any actual perturbation of spirit might be rules formed for men's behaviour great incident, to bring them from that mi-into the condition I am at present; what think, that my sorrow has converted all my temper into meekness, good-nature, and cency. But indeed, when in a serious hour I present my departed consort to my tion, with that air of persuasion in her coun-when I have been in passion, that sweet when I have been in good humour, that ten-passion when I have had anything which uneasiness; I confess to you I am inconsolmy eyes gush with grief, as if I had seen her then expire. In this condition I am broken by a charming young woman, my daughter the picture of what her mother was on her day. The good girl strives to comfort me, shall I let you know that all the comfort me is to make my tears flow more easily child knows she quickens my sorrows, and my heart at the same time. Oh, ye learn-me by what word to speak a motion of which there is no name. When she kneels me be comforted, she is my child: when I in my arms, and bid her say no more, my wife, and is the very comforter I loss of. I banish her the room, and weep I have lost her mother, and that I have lost "Mr. Spectator, I wish it were possible to have a sense of these pleasing perplexities might communicate to the guilty part of that they are incapable of the happiness the very sorrows of the virtuous.

"But pray spare me a little longer; leave to tell you the manner of her death. leave of all her family, and bore the vari-tion of medicines with the greatest patience. nable. When the physician told her certainly die, she desired as well as she all who were present, except myself, might

She said she had nothing to say, for I signed, and I knew all she knew that was in this world; but she desired to be in the presence of God only she might, and I said, do her last duty to me, of for all my kindness to her: adding, and in my last moments I should feel the benefit of your goodness to her, as she did in having acquitted herself with honour, truth, and me.

Myself, and will not tell you that this was my heart in twain; when I expected for some passionate starts of mine, in our time together, to say nothing but for the good, if there was any good suit-own excellence! All that I had ever all the circumstances of sorrow and joy crowded upon my mind in the same when, immediately after, I saw the come upon that dear body which I embraced with transport; when I saw my eyes begin to be ghastly, and their to be to fix themselves on me, how did I feel! She expired in my arms, and I thought I saw her bosom still there was certainly life yet still left. I now spoke to me. But, alas! I grew things moved about me, from the down head; for the best of women was gone for ever.

My doctrine I would, methinks, have you on this account I have given you is, that in equanimity in those who are good runs into their very sorrow, and dis- force of it. Though they must pass tions in common with all who are in it, yet their conscious integrity shall air affliction; nay, that very affliction ce to their integrity, from a reflection virtue in the hour of affliction. I sat sign to put you upon giving us rules how such griefs as these, but I should rather teach men to be capable of them.

My letters have what you call the fine apprehensions of what is properly done is something like this deeply grafted him who is honest and faithful in all and actions. Everything which is or unworthy, is despicable to him, world should approve it. At the same the most lively sensibility in all enjoy- s offerings which it is proper for him to ay duty of life is concerned. To want you in decency and truth should be should think, a greater instance of a a blockhead than not to know the passage in Virgil. You have not yet Spectator, that the fine gentlemen of for hardness of heart; and humanity a share in their pretences. He is a who is always ready to kill a man he does not stand in the same degree of aments for the woman he loves. I you might work up a thousand pretty reflecting upon the persons most sus- e sort of sorrow I have spoken of; you will find upon examination that est and the bravest of mankind who le of it.

Sir, your humble Servant.

to be, 1712.

"F. J."

No. 521.] TUESDAY.

Vera redit facies, dissimulata.
The real face returns, the dissimulated.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I HAVE been for many years in a situation, that there are very few men, that can report what they think, and this through incapacity, which disables almost every man from representing things as they are. I am come to a resolution, that I will say nothing I hear; and I contemn the appellation under the appellation of 'man': and, according to me, one whose life and conversation is a report of what is not matter of fact.

"I remember when I was in a situation, that there was no knowing his mind, you, Mr. Spectator, gave me the opportunity of that matter. In relations, that I am in, the relation lies very often more in the voice, or the gesture, than in the words, which, being repeated in a manner, which is undiscerning, bear a very different meaning from their original meaning. I have formerly have turned this humour to my account; for whenever I have entered with extraordinary vehemence upon considerable authority, I lay any wager that it was not so, I pretended to be so rash as to lay any particular way in opposition to it, a hundred ways of any thing which it has happened, I only come in that one manner as they say, the ninety-nine other ways, which more probability of success, I have particular skill in warming the relation as to make him throw out of the window, and then, if he has a will, he is free to do as he pleases, and the more he does, the more he is free to do as he pleases. Now, for fixing the wager. But, Mr. Spectator, the management, otherwise very good, may arise to the old detestable conceits I have been very often won some wagers of those who have followed themselves upon intellectual themselves to great charge and informed considerably sooner than the world.

"Having got a comfortable position to public report, I am now to so great a perfection, especially to party-relations, I seem with greedy ears to desire to know. I certainly do not know one of my own course of thought, which I am amused with much tranquility, because a late act of parliament has put all party liars from the pen, and consequently made it unprofitable. However, good-breeding obliges me to the figure of the keenest attention, of which in a coffee-house I am sitting over a table with the editor, upon your stomach: for the more is received with, the more good.

* Stat. 7 Anne, cap. 17.—By it a contingency relating to the war with France is void.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

asks you forget him.

Several very personalities; and house where at business to w him to be th of capacity ended merely therefore was formation, for could, for he with the same
the following

r, thus,
r's news.

been so much houses as I for-expect to be these liars there st consists in y; the others a good undercase, therefore,
re as eloquent embellishers;
ar from others
I permit, and fellow in town myself by telling at eight gh all parts of which time he diverted them d at Will's in believed to be drew from it
I have had man I speak of and have been very man they rted it, tall or a ragamuffin, ence. I have news say, that,
an advertise-
away, he has self a little be-offender: for per by a man ption of such ich the angry fellow always he would the sure he would ny other hints tion of all fic-ity to improve

ent, e Servant."

. 29, 1712.

um;
ues homines.
es: vireaut,
mos, mi adimet
t. act. iv. sc. 2.
re sure to make have obtained;
would separate

I should esteem myself a very happy man if speculations could in the least contribute to the rectifying the conduct of my readers in one of the most important affairs of life, to wit, their choice of marriage. This state is the foundation of community, and the chief band of society; and I do not think I can be too frequent on subjects which may give light to my unmarried readers in a point which is so essential to their following happiness or misery. A virtuous disposition, a good understanding, an agreeable person, and an easy fortune, are the things which should be chiefly regarded on this occasion. Because my present view is to direct a young lady, who I think is now in doubt whom to take of many lovers, I shall talk at this time to a female readers. The advantages, as I was going to say, of sense, beauty, and riches, are what are certainly the chief motives to a prudent young woman of fortune for changing her condition; but, as it is to have her eye upon each of these, she is to consider herself, whether the man who has most of these commendations in the lump is not the most desirable. He that has excellent talents, with a moderate estate, and an agreeable person, is preferable to him who is only rich, if it were only that good faculties may purchase riches, but riches cannot purchase worthy endowments. I do not mean that wit, as a capacity to entertain, is what should be highly valued, except it is founded on good-nature and humanity. There are many ingenious men, whose abilities do little else but make themselves and those about them uneasy. Such are those who are far gone in the pleasures of the town, who cannot support themselves without quick sensations and gay reflections, and who are strangers to tranquillity, to right reason, and a calm motion of spirits, without transport or dejection. These ingenious men, of all men living, are most to be avoided by her who would be happy in a husband. They are immediately sated with possession, and must necessarily fly to new acquisitions of beauty, and pass away the wiling moments and intervals of life for with them every hour is heavy that is not joy. But there is a sort of man of wit and sense, who can reflect upon his own make, and that of his partner, with eyes of reason and honour, and who believes he offends against both these, if he does not look upon the woman who chose him to be under his protection in sickness and health with the utmost gratitude, whether from that moment she is shining or defective in person or mind: I say there are those who think themselves bound to supply with good-nature the failings of those who love them, and who always think those the objects of love and pity who came to their arms the objects of joy and admiration.

Of this latter sort is Lysander, a man of wit, learning, sobriety, and good-nature; of birth and estate below no woman to accept; and of whom might be said, should he succeed in his present wishes, his mistress raised his fortune, but not that she made it. When a woman is deliberating with herself whom she shall choose of many near and other in other pretensions, certainly he of best understanding is to be preferred. Life hangs heavily on the repeated conversation of one who has no imagination to be fired at the several occasions and subjects which come before him, or who cannot strike out of his reflections new paths of pleasing discourse. Honest Will Thrash and his wife, though not married above four months, have scarce had a word to say to each other this six weeks; and one can form to one's self a sillier picture than these two asures, in solemn pomp and plenty, unable to joy their fortunes, and at a full stop among a crowd of servants, to whose taste of life they are bidden for the little satisfactions by which they can be understood to be so much as barely in being. The hours of the day, the distinctions of noon and night, dinner and supper, are the greatest notices they are capable of. This is perhaps representing the life of a very modest woman, joined to a dull fellow, more insipid than it really deserves; but I am sure it is not to exalt the commerce with an ingenious companion too high, to say that every new accident or object, which comes into such a gentleman's way, gives his wife new pleasures and satisfactions. The approbation of his words and actions is a continual new feast to her; nor can she enough applaud her good fortune in having her life varied every hour, her mind more improved, and her heart more glad, from every circumstance which they meet with. He will lay out his invention in forming new pleasures and amusements, and make the fortune she has brought him subservient to the honour and reputation of her and hers. A man of sense, who is thus obliged, is ever contriving the happiness of her who did him so great a distinction; while the fool is ungrateful without vice, and never returns a favour because he is not sensible of it. I would, methinks, have so much to say for myself, that, if I fell into the hands of him who treated me ill, he should be sensible when he did so. His conscience should be of my side, whatever became of his inclination. I do not know but it is the insipid choice which has been made by those who have the care of young women, that the marriage state itself has been liable to so much ridicule. But a well-chosen love, moved by passion on both sides, and perfected by the generosity of one party, must be adorned with so many handsome incidents on the other side, that every particular couple would be an example in many circumstances to all the rest of the species. I shall end the chat upon this subject with a couple of letters; one from a lover, who is very well acquainted with the way of bargaining on these occasions; and the other from his rival, who has a less estate, but great gallantry of temper. As for my man of prudence, he makes love, as he says, as if he were already a father, and, laying aside the passion, comes to the reason of the thing.

"MADAM,

"My counsel has perused the inventory of your estate, and considered what estate you have, which seems to be only yours, and to the male-heirs of your family; but, in default of such issue, to the right heirs of your uncle Edward for ever. Thus, Madam, I am advised you cannot (the remainder not being in you) dock the entail; by which means my estate, which is fee-simple, will come by the settlement proposed to your children begotten by me, whether they be males or females: but my children begotten upon you will not inherit your lands, except I beget a son. Now, Madam, since things are so, you are a woman of that prudence, and understand the world so well, as not to expect I should give you more than you can give me.

"I am, Madam (with great respect),

"Your most obedient humble Servant,

"T. W."

The other lover's estate is less than this gentleman's, but he expressed himself as follows:—

"MADAM,

"I have given in my estate to your counsel, and desired my own which your friend and advantage making difficult not make me happy

"Your

You must know and the girl by epistle, she is to be dealt with by worthy gentlemen a farthing for a lady will make B. T. she under considered as a com

No. 523.] T

Nunc Lyciae
Interpres divo Scilicet is sup
Now Lycian l
Now Hermes
To warn him
Of heavenly p

I AM always of any rising of this reason, I the late miscell there are many nious gentleman kind in perusing the Prospect of meet with such a performance pleased to find self with fables when he hints to it only as to

Many of our often extends he do not know how mixing a parcel of his actions.

among the auth turns more upon concerned. I great hero high hear some of the it has repeated scription of Po have searched gave a subject to with the exploit to attend a Fur one end of the school it is need the system of allowed to enlive a heathen god; panegyric that truth, nothing of recourse to our

No thought thought can be at least in that weaken myself, because to divert by ancients to fouling such

If any are admitting compositions, I would totals of Mr. possible for without fawns nymphs, with see he has duty to this face of these ology which country.

their heroes, with their r to write in e a favourite ice between dd be down-poet that is evation in a e them in a urse to such may write a hat does not of his con-this absurd ct, by virtue ich I stand ice is, in all ed that there and to show and being nt that effuse to appre- person who that he is a him to his him in the t depending ling out for

I do like-ercury with ating to the erva to take y concerned are, that I d a hand in o have been hat all such y the Chris- therefore id of man's ss it be for I have good e great deal as which we do also pro- metaphor, d that even h great cau- it the same aternity of dem every bunders, or exercises any other act of authority which does belong to him: in short, I expect that no pageant shall be introduced, or any fact related, which a man cannot give credit to with a good conscience. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to several the female poets in this nation, who shall be still in full possession of their gods and goddesses, in the same manner as if this paper had never been written.

No. 524.] FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1712.

Nos populo dantes—SEN.
As the world leads, we follow.

WHEN I first of all took it into my head to write dreams and visions, I determined to print nothing of that nature which was not of my own invention. But several laborious dreamers have of late communicated to me works of this nature, which, for the reputations and my own, I have hitherto suppressed. Had I printed every one that came to my hand, my book of speculations would have been little else but a book of visions. Some of my correspondents have indeed been so very modest as to offer an excuse for their not being in a capacity to dream better than I have by me, for example, the dream of a young gentleman not passed fifteen: I have likewise the dream of a person of quality, and another calls it The Lady's Dream. In these, and other pieces of the same nature, it is supposed the usual allowance will be made to the age, condition, and sex, of the dreamer. To prevent this inundation of dreams which daily flows in upon me, I shall apply to the dreamers of dreams the advice which Epictetus has couched, after this manner, in a very simple and concise precept. "Never tell thy dreams," say that philosopher; "for though thou thyself mayest take a pleasure in telling thy dream, another will take no pleasure in hearing it." After this short preface, I must do justice to two or three visions which I have lately published, and which I have owned to have been written by other hands. I shall add a dream to these which comes to me from Scotland, by one who declares himself of that country and, for all I know, may be second-sighted. There is, indeed, something in it of the spirit of John Bunyan; but at the same time a certain sublime which that author was never master of. I shall publish it because I question not but it will fall in with the taste of all my popular readers, and amuse the imaginations of those who are more profound; declaring at the same time, that this is the last dream which I intend to publish this season.

"SEN,

"I was last Sunday in the evening led into serious reflection on the reasonableness of virtue and great folly of vice, from an excellent sermon I had heard that afternoon in my parish-church. Among other observations the preacher showed us that the temptations which the tempter proposes were all on a supposition that we are either wise men or fools, or with an intention to render us such that in no other affair we would suffer ourselves to be thus imposed upon, in a case so plainly and clearly against our visible interest. His illustrations and arguments carried so much persuasion and conviction with them, that they remained a considerable while fresh and working in my memory until at last the mind, fatigued with thought, gave to the forcible oppressions of slumber and fancy, unwilling yet to drop the sub-presented me with the following vision :— I methought I was just awoke-out of a sleep that I could never remember the beginning of; the place where I found myself to be was a wide and spacious plain, full of people that wandered up and down through several beaten paths, whereof some were straight, and in direct lines, but most of them winding and turning like a labyrinth; but it appeared to me afterward that these last all came in one issue, so that many that seemed to steer in contrary courses, did at length meet and face another, to the no little amazement of many of

In the midst of the plain there was a great fountain; they called it the spring of Self-love: out of it issued two rivulets to the eastward and westward: the name of the first was Heavenly-Wisdom; the water was wonderfully clear, but of a yet more powerful effect; the other's name was Worldly-Wisdom; its water was thick, and yet far from being dormant or stagnating, for it was in a continual violent agitation; which kept the travellers, as I shall mention by-and-by, from being sensible of the foulness and thickness of the water; it had this effect, that it intoxicated those who drank it, and made them mistake every object that came before them. Both rivulets were parted near the springs into so many others, as there were right and crooked paths, which they attended all the way to their respective issues.

I observed from the several paths many now then diverting, to refresh and otherwise qualify themselves for their journey, to the respective rivulets that ran near them; they contracted a very valuable courage and steadiness in what they were about by drinking these waters. At the end of the perspective of every straight path, all which ended in one issue and point, appeared a high pillar of diamond, casting rays as bright as those of the sun into the paths; which rays had also certain sympathizing and alluring virtues in them, so that whosoever had made some considerable progress in his journey onwards towards the pillar, by repeated impressions of these rays upon him, was wrought into an habitual inclination and conviction of his sight towards it, so that it grew at last in a manner natural to him to look and gaze upon whereby he was kept steady in the straight paths, which alone led to that radiant body, the enjoyment of which was now grown a gratification to nature.

At the issue of the crooked paths there was a black tower, out of the centre of which streamed a succession of flames, which did rise even above the clouds; it gave a very great light to the whole plain, which did sometimes outshine the light of the sun; it oppressed the beams of the adamant pillar; though by the observation I made afterward, it appeared that it was not from any diminution of light, but that this lay in the travellers, who would sometimes step out of the straight paths, where they lost the full prospect of the radiant pillar, and saw it sideways: but the great light from the black tower, which was somewhat particularly scorching and dim, would generally light and hasten them to the proper climate again.

Round about the black tower there were, methought, many thousands of huge misshapen ugly giants: these had great nets, which they were actually plying and casting towards the crooked paths, and they were that were nearest straight, and whirltower, and they were They would send the right paths to for want of frequenby them, grew dis-these would some-caught away, but these had ever been before very hearty I considered a attention, until atter of the traveller up to me, bid me fell to singing an hand, and so car-After I had follow-perceived I had which I greatly gazed round about fancy my first vi-there was no such sidered that if I co-might as well have present, and not was very much effect I then just

Wisdom had upon of it again, I felt methought it dis-this made me stocharm or enchant-within myself what to in this case, I man beckoning, over to him. I way. He then call-out of the path I longer I was in dathat was just hand-me up; that he w-tracted, as not to danger; assuring that way, he woumore secure path.
his palm full of which was of very straight cleared, a just before me: he near me cast me in-far as I could in-hind me. Then You have made world; the water ing nature, you shocked at the d-place; for beside pany you was, you are only bewitchmanner. Look a l-of passengers; the not to suffer the witching water; the
of their sight, they it: but see how eyes downwards, a-thus rush into the troubled at the t-tion. Their wills so fond of the p-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

xazards, and even before the y; the idea they water, yet they ing. See now, reby they have and some of ch gives them content that, ther they are ight than them- superstition, or look that which scribe to them, and k es, when they owed me in my quite out of m ried me to the solli pleasure, till we came in satisfaction in, ult, I were not of two. I was the yinchar g

BEN 1, 1712
 seen ad reports, the of cessary speak glad to know marriage have ne gives me to y, the more I ate from me, a pretty to me s of the same of from wotes to the room of am, for every y she will be I, and that y with all the
 to which say the n in the secret re of it it a
 of it, and
 of it, and long, p eties, and art of any or part, but man of a
 of
 of mot as w nat may out
 from me
 as w y, the
 in a
 in a
 om. It was at the app
 pith

And I am apt to think it was about the same that good-nature, a word so peculiarly elegant our language, that some have affirmed it cannot be expressed in any other, came first to be responsions, and in danger of being transferred to its original sense to so distant an idea as that of I must confess it has been my ambition, in cause of my writings, to restore, as well as I could, the proprieties of things. And as I have touched this already on the subject of marriage several papers, I shall here add some farther variations which occur to me on the same head.
 Nothing seems to be thought, by our fine genius, so indispensable an ornament in fashion, as to love. "A knight-errant," says Don Quix-ot, "without a mistress, is like a tree without leafs, or a man of mode among us, who has not his due to sigh for, might as well pretend to dress without his periwig. We have too proud a mannerable. All our pretenders to are, professd innamoratos; and there is scarce a good or bad, to be heard of, who has not some or supposed Sarahissa to improve his vein.
 If I live to any refinement, conjugal love must certainly seem a much higher degree. There is comparison between the travelers affectations of treating the eyes of women with whom you are captivated by way of amusement, and of whom you know nothing more than their form, and a regular and uniform endeavour to make y self valuable, both as a friend and lover, to whom you have chosen to be the companion of y life. The first is the spring of a thousand gossip ous artifices, falsehoods, and perhaps barbaric and best rises no higher than to a kind of dan-sional breeding, to give the person a more sparking. The latter is the parent of substantial virand agreeable qualities, and cultivates the m while it improves the behaviour. The passionate love to a mistress, even where it is most sincere, smokes too much in the flame of a fever, that wife is like the vital heat.
 I have often thought, if the letters written by of good-nature to their wives were to be compar'd with those written by men of gallantry to their mistresses, that the former, notwithstanding any me-of style, would appear to have the advantage of modesty, tenderness, and constancy, dressed in simplicity of expression, recommending themselves to the native candour, than passionate rapt and extravagant conceits, and ravish adoration.
 As we are apt to search the epithets of the believed to be, which the terms of epistles to mist-res, and as, where there preserved with equal care, we should find I should make any one in the room, except her who is flattered by me.
 But in how different a style must the wise Benjamin, who converses with that good sense and g him our ancient sages instruct, write to a wife w the worthy object of his utmost affection? B y, as to the mistress, in private, and all occas of her appearance, to every good quality and state of mind. A good, he is reverently considering at home, beloved and happy. Th nation he creeps thence settles into an habitual pliancy, which shines in his countenance, even in his winter seasons his conversation. Even the most austere, who have never seen the his refinement, are shatters in the happiness of that it is very much owing to his being the best loved, beloved of husbands, that he is the most st-dard of them, and the most agreeable of compari-

There is a sensible pleasure in contemplating such beautiful instances of domestic life. The happiness of the conjugal state appears heightened to the highest degree it is capable of when we see two persons of accomplished minds not only united in the same interests and affections, but in their taste of the same improvements, pleasures and diversions. Pliny, one of the finest gentlemen and politest writers of the age in which he lived, has left us, in his letter to Hispulla, his wife's aunt, one of the most agreeable family pieces of this kind I have ever met with. I shall end this discourse with a translation of it; and I believe the reader will be of my opinion, that conjugal love is drawn in it with a delicacy which makes it appear to be, as I have represented it, an ornament as well as a virtue.

"PLINY TO HISPULLA.

"As I remember that great affection which was between you and your excellent brother, and know you love his daughter as your own, so as not only to express the tenderness of the best of aunts, but even to supply that of the best of fathers; I am sure it will be a pleasure to you to hear that she proves worthy of her father, worthy of you, and of your and her ancestors. Her ingenuity is admirable; her frugality extraordinary. She loves me, the surest pledge of her virtue; and adds to this a wonderful disposition to learning, which she has acquired from her affection to me. She reads my writings, studies them, and even gets them by heart. You would smile to see the concern she is in when I have a cause to plead, and the joy she shows when it is over. She finds means to have the first news brought her of the success I meet with in court, how I am heard, and what decree is made. If I recite any thing in public, she cannot refrain from placing herself privately in some corner to hear, where with the utmost delight, she feasts on my applauses. Sometimes she sings my verses, and accompanies them with the lute, without any master except love, the best of instructors. From these instances, I take the most certain omens of our perpetual and increasing happiness; since her affection is not founded on my youth and person, which must gradually decay, but she is in love with the immortal part of me, my glory and reputation. Nor indeed could less be expected from one who had the happiness to receive her education from you, who in your house was accustomed to every thing that was virtuous and decent, and even began to love me by your recommendation. For, as you had always the greatest respect for my mother, you were pleased from my infancy to form me, to commend me, and kindly to presage I should be one day what my wife fancies I am. Accept, therefore, our united thanks: mine, that you have bestowed her on me; and hers, that you have given me to her, as a mutual grant of joy and felicity."

No. 526.] MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1712.

Fortius utere loris.—OVID, Met. ii. 127.
Keep a stiff rein.—ADDISON.

I AM very loath to come to extremities with the young gentlemen mentioned in the following letter, and do not care to chastise them with my own hand, until I am forced by provocations too great to be suffered without the absolute destruction of my spectatorial dignity. The crimes of these offenders are placed under the observation of one of my chief officers, who is posted just at the entrance of the pass between Lo confidence i of the pers enormities, me, all pro amendment tion of each is due from mankind.

the above-m tation which John Sly; t that is need delinquents as all other

"TO THE ST

"I grant

"DEAR

"Being a dow's coffee account of t since my las out the leas advantage t day and nig not trouble but I must infant about thirty years hackney-coa in Covent-G five in the a published a young cur, without hold bid defiance thing that y not, but I h gentleman v pudence; an tunity to int requisite tha am myself fellow-stude mean such o under the de aspiring mi that they ca
box. It is, that I can n so bashful a
the country
young gentle Fleet-street some conce
or other crac in hopes nat portion to t
for. Another last was get Gray's-inn-in the fresh great mode corded as a but give the pen, though to desist ent

* Feet. † I

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

from them.
I say to you for I have Spectator
s with little be, it is not thers. I shall ake of ten ful of your outh to est
a thousand
is come of blic shame, emanded me, we will to be to m ome seven in or two e more ex ne have to sell such however, for hort, if our very last of rect, I shall that I shall spate them
your own

ours.
S ou p r con ent of the men-e, and his nature

hab dex of indignities, ere are no apparently app in me, you are, as as the good perly qual ence: I

the hours of fternoon, to things that rts, or walk city of West to the city are the re y at the end of each day, ons who are n pebbles to hey take of the speediest ing, turning to, their old same coach, ased or tired arry the due ondness and all such as ation of taking

shall have addition of honour or riches, and report whether they preserve the countenance they had before such addition. As to persons on foot, you are to be attentive whether they are pleased with their condition, and are dressed suitable to it; but especially to distinguish such as appear discreetly a low-necked shoe, with the decent ornament of a leather garter;* to write down the names of such country gentlemen as, upon the approach of peace, have left the hunting for the military cock of the nation; of all who strut, make a noise, and swear at the drivers of coaches to make haste, when they see it is impossible they should pass; of all young gentlemen in coach-boxes, who labour at a perfect ignorance what they are sure to be excelled by the meanness of the people. You are to do all that in you lies that coaches and passengers give way according to the course of business, all the morning in terraces towards Westminster, the rest of the year towards the Exchange. Upon these directions, together with other secret articles herein enclosed, you are to govern yourself, and give advertisement thereof to me, at all convenient and spectatorial hours, when men of business are to be seen. Hereof you are not to fail. Given under my seal of office.

T. THE SPECTATOR.

No. 527. TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1. 1712.

Facile invenies et populum et populum moratum.
Mellum invenies et populum, et populum moratum.
Facile invenies et populum, et populum moratum.

You will easily find a wise woman, a better the sooner she is gone.

I AM so tender of my women-readers, that I cannot defer the publication of any thing which concerns their happiness or quiet. The repose of a married woman is consulted in the first of the following letters, and the civility of a maiden lady in the second. I did it a necessity to have the address of an addressable man; and I think I have not very where seen a prettier application of a poetical story than that of mine in making the tale of Cephalus and Procris the history picture of a female so gallant a manner as he addresses it. But see the letters —

* MRS. STEPHENS.

It is now almost three months since I was in town about some business; and the hurry of it being over, I took coach one afternoon, and drove to see a relation, who married about six years ago a wealthy citizen. I found her at home, but her husband gone to the Exchange, and expected back within an hour at the furthest. After the usual salutations of kindness, and a hundred questions about friends in the country, we sat down to piquet, played two or three games, and drank tea. I should have told you that this was my second time of seeing her since her marriage; but before, she lived at the same town where I went to school; so that the plea of a relation, added to the innocence of my youth, prevailed upon her good humour to indulge me in a freedom of conversation, as often, and oftener, than the strict discipline of the school would allow of. You may easily imagine, after such an acquaintance, we might be exceeding merry without any offence; as to mind how many inventions I have been deluding the master, how many hands or excuses, how many times been sick in calth; for I was then never sick but at id only then because out of her company. I died away three hours after this manner, and it past five; and, not expecting her would return until late, rose up, and told Ild go early next morning for the country. ly answered she was afraid it would be re she saw me again; so, I took my leave, d. Now, Sir, I had not been got home a when I received a letter from a neighbour that ever since that fatal afternoon the been most inhumanly treated, and the publicly stormed that he was made a of too numerous a society. He had, it tenced most of the time my cousin and I ther. As jealous ears always hear double, I enough to make him mad; and as jea- always see through magnifying glasses, so tain it could not be I whom he had seen, a stripling, but fancied he saw a gay gen- the Temple, ten years older than myself; at reason, I presume, durst not come in, any notice when I went out. He is per- asking his wife if she does not think the (as she said she should) until she see her ain. Pray, Sir, what can be done in this have writ to him to assure him I was at all that afternoon expecting to see him. er is, it is only a trick of hers, and that he n nor will believe me. The parting kiss ghly nettles him; and confirms him in ors. Ben Jonson, as I remember, makes r, in one of his comedies, 'admire the valour of the bold English, who let out s to all encounters.' The general custom on should excuse the favour done me, or I lay down rules when such distinctions given or omitted. You cannot imagine, rouble I am for this unhappy lady's mis- und beg you would insert this letter, that nd may reflect upon this accident coolly. nall matter, the ease of a virtuous woman ole life. I know she will conform to any s (though more strict than the common r country require) to which his particular all] incline him to oblige her. This acci- me in mind how generously Pisiistratus, ian tyrant, behaved himself on a like occa- a he was instigated by his wife to put to ung gentleman, because, being passion- of his daughter, he had kissed her in pub- met her in the street. 'What,' said he, do to those who are our enemies, if we do hose who are our friends?' I will not ou much longer, but am exceedingly con- t this accident may cause a virtuous lady miserable life with a husband who has no or his jealousy but what I have faithfully id ought to be reckoned none. It is to be s, if at last he sees his mistake, yet people slow and unwilling in disbelieving scan- y are quick and forward in believing it. I avour to enliven this plain honest letter l's relation about Cybele's image. The ein it was aboard was stranded at the the Tiber, and the men were unable to until Claudia, a virgin, but suspected of by a slight pull hauled it in. The story he fourth book of the Fasti.

* It has been said that there is an illusion here; that a very worthy gentleman of fortune, bred to the law, who had chambers in Lincoln's Inn, his name was Richard Warner, one of the best of chamberlains, who, though he always wore leather garters, and took the assistance affected singularly. For a more particular account of him, see Anecdotes of W. B. 301. p. 409.

'Parent of Gods,' began 'Reward or punish, but If lewdness e'er deil'd From heaven with just But if my honour yet ha Thou, goddess, thou my Thou, whom the nicest Vouchsafe to follow an She spoke; and touch'd
The truth was witness
The pitying goddess eas Follow'd in triumph, an While Claudia, blushing March'd silent on, with Nor yet from some was Though heaven such vi

"I am, Sir, your

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"You will oblige a la please to print the end paper. If you remembe know Procris, the fond have made her husband, of the wood, a present o process of time he was s his lady suspected he v under the pretence of fo cent. Under this suspic the trees, to observe his concealed, her husband hunting, came within he ing with heat, he cried charming air, approach
"The unfortunate wi the name of a woman, bushes; and the husband his javelin and killed he a fan, which I presented my growing poetical.

'Come, gentle air!' the J While Procris panted in
'Come, gentle air,' the J While at her feet her sw Lo! the glad gales o'er a Breathe on her lips, and In Delia's hand this toy Nor did that fabled dart Both gifts destructive to Alike both lovers fall by Yet guiltless, too, this br At random wounds, nor l She views the story with And pities Procris, while

No. 528.] WEDNE

Dum potuit, solita g

With wonted fortitude
And not a groan con

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I who now write t with injuries; and the tune is, that they are su the generality of mank afflicting imaginable, n general sense of the wor from all mankind; but and paper, am resolved and lay before you what You have very often me done to this or that la not, in any one speculat partial freedom men tak ment women are oblig

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

commerce library is the gence of the
with the ridiugh never so
the greatest on, Sir, that atalogue of a good books his occasion an History;
the author to Rome at at too great were unmar-ed the whole the married to the former;
r. Spectator, and actions
y what name ey performed f citizens, for their care;
ned to extirling to show
r his people, of life was of ry and grand not choose put together ere guilty of born which s, in causing ors to cease;
nd which pro-
man nature,
an; therefore,
overnment in ry by making ed their city, e was sensible ind of virtue d wantonness any civil go-well upon that ing worthies,
so much jus-
who observes well frame to baucheries all s for them all these Romans tly but when ut when they and slept only n of them. If u would care-hs, marriages, ducted out of world without of both sexes ast past; you d, make some y there are left cheme for the gular. I have his abominable as I am wri-manner which
, and examine wn which is a straight all at home, desty. A dis-ful look a en at a cas-is returned with a count-ance resed; but by verting their eyes from the woman of honor and decency, to some flippant creature who will, as the phrase is, be kinder. I must send w, tears as they come into my head, without starting or shudder. Ten thousand to one but the giddy young man who stares,

at the same time is a housekeeper; for you must know they have got into a number of families, and being very regular in their sins, and a young man
who shall keep his four maris and three to the
with the greatest gravity imaginable. There are less than six of these venerable housekeepers of my acquaintance. This humour among young men of this nation is maintained by all the world below them,
and a general dissoluteness of manners arises from this one source of libertinism, without shame or reprehension in the male youth. It is from this source that so many beautiful helpless young women are sacrificed and given up to lewdness, shame, poverty and disease. It is to this use that so many excellent
young women, who might be patterns of conjugal affection, and parents of a worthy race, pine under unhappy passions for such as have not attention enough to observe,
or virtue enough to prefer,
them to their common venches. Now,
Mr. Spectator,
I must be true to own to you, that I myself suffer a tasteless insipid being, from a consideration
I have for a man who would not, as he said in my hearing, resign his liberty, as he calls it,
for all the riches and wealth the whole sex is possessed of. Such calamities as these would not happen, if it could possibly be brought about, that young bachelors as Papists convert, or the licentious were distinguished by their disadvantage from the rest of the world, who fall in with the measure of civil society.
Last you should think I speak thus being,
according to the senseless maxim, since I have said nothing, I shall accept of you I am in a bad condition, not now, for the twentieth year, and happy as I am to see ten different men, and the greater number of them have upon the most relaxed maxim. Something or other is always said when the lover takes to some new wench. A woman is always expected to must, and to receive little more than that of the vicious part of our year. The young man is always said to be a fool, when he is without virtue, and without virtue. Now as I say we must be content to it we must get creatures which are not bad; give us to be expected. Mr.
Spectator,
I sit many the other day, and think I could not displace your spec-tation of your great water. I shall be a judge of when I see whether you take notice of these tricks you win away, or prize this name dictated from the disdainful heavy heart
of.

Sir, your most obedient humble Servant.
" RICHARD WILKINSON."

T.

No. 5290. THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1732.

For a copy of the present sermon, see the Book of the Year, 1732.
For a copy of the present sermon, see the Book of the Year, 1732.

Upon the hearing of several late disputes concerning rank and precedence, I could not resist myself with some observations which I have made up in the learned world, as to this great particular. By the learned world I here mean all all those who are any way concerned in works of literature, whether in the writing, printing, or repeating part. To begin with the writers, I have observed that the author of a folio, in all companies and conversations, sets himself above the author of a quarto; the author of a quarto above the author of an octavo; and so on, by a gradual descent and subordination, to an author in twenty-fours. This distinction is so well observed, that in an assembly of the learned, I have seen a folio writer place himself in an elbow-chair, when the author of a duodecimo has, out of a just deference to his superior quality, seated himself upon a squab. In a word, authors are usually ranged in company after the same manner as their works are upon a shelf.

Disputes

The most minute pocket author hath beneath him the writers of all pamphlets, or works that are only stitched. As for the pamphleteer, he takes place of none but the authors of single sheets, and of that fraternity who publish their labours on certain days, or on every day of the week. I do not find that the precedence among the individuals in this latter class of writers is yet settled.

For my own part, I have had so strict a regard to the ceremonial which prevails in the learned world, that I never presumed to take place of a pamphleteer, until my daily papers were gathered into one or two first volumes which have already appeared. After which, I naturally jumped over the heads not only of all pamphleteers, but of every octavo writer in Great Britain that had written but one book. I am also informed by my bookseller, that six octavos are at all times been looked upon as an equivalent to a folio; which I take notice of the rather, because I would not have the learned world surprised if, after the publication of half a dozen volumes, I take my place accordingly. When my scattered forces are thus rallied, and reduced into regular bodies, I alter myself that I shall make no despicable figure at the head of them.

Whether these rules, which have been received and set out of mind in the commonwealth of letters, were not originally established with an eye to our paper manufacture, I shall leave to the discussion of others; and shall only remark further in this place, that all printers and booksellers take the wall of one another according to the above-mentioned merits of the authors to whom they respectively belong.

I come now to that point of precedence which is settled among the three learned professions by the wisdom of our laws. I need not here take notice of the rank which is allotted to every doctor in each of these professions, who are all of them, though not so high as knights, yet a degree above 'squires: his last order of men, being the illiterate body of the nation, are consequently thrown together into a class below the three learned professions.* I mention this for the sake of several rural 'squires, whose reading does not rise so high as to The present State of England, and who are often apt to surp that precedence which by the laws of their country is not due to them. Their want of learning, which has planted them in this station, may in some measure extenuate their misdemeanour; and our professors ought to pardon them when they offend in this particular, considering that they are in a state of ignorance, or, as we usually say, do not show their right hand from their left.

There is another tribe of persons who are retainers to the learned upon all occasions; I mean the body; I mean the squire. Among these, the principle, that the comedian; and drolls who make lower end of the give way to the maxim, "Once this reason it w Bullock, notwithstanding of his person though he were tion is observed Queens and he conversation, and maids of he tance also behi

I shall only writers of tragic seated, served, those who deal seats between t been a long d tragic and her latter yield the and many other sion. Burlesque the heroic, as c in the drama.

By this short distinction pre ters.—O.

No. 530.] E

Sic visu
Formas
Savo
Thus V
Unlike
To disc Whe
She t
And bl

It is very u upon marriage, to enter into t culed, and to se heads. I scarce not, sooner or l a blessing to a judgment. I forth to us with ample of this ki distinguished t general, very o choosing one of a companion avenge in kind ridicule.

My friend W cifully witty up which I lately c the ladies am daughter; a pi by the last post he has married to me on this o matter that he count of his sp something more

* In some Universities, that of Dublin in particular, they give doctors of music, who take rank after the doctors of the three learned professions, and above 'squires.

Downloaded from <http://ajphaphysiol.physiology.org/> by guest on September 11, 2012 inverted rak. .

dashed with h those little nd Will offer.
us hear what

tion, as a prudent head of a family, a good husband, a careful father (when it shall so happen), and as " Your most sincere Friend, and humble Servant,
O. " WILLIAM HONEYCOMB."

Quædam et ceteras, Variorum eruditione Interpretatus est:
 Universales quoque generaliter apud Nos, Vetus præcipue scholæ, et ætate condidit Hæc, et cetera: 15

Winged like he w. p. d. birds above,
The great Div. son, and the mighty King He came from greater than him here To take me up or down.
So I am truly his, as thou art.—Ch. xvi.

If we consider the idea which wise men, by the light of reason, have framed of the Divine Being, it amounts to this: that he has in him all the perfection of a spiritual nature. And, since we have no notion of any kind of spiritual perfection let what we discover in our own souls, we join multitude to each kind of these perfections, and what a faculty in a human soul becomes an attribute in God. We exist in place and time; the Divine Being fills the immensity of space with his presence and inhabits eternity. We are possessed of a little power and a little knowledge; The Divine Being is almighty and omniscient. In short, by adding in our way to any kind of perfection we enjoy, and by joining all these different kinds of perfection in one being, we form our idea of the great Sovereign Ruler.

Though every one who thinks must have had this observation, I shall pronounce Mr. Locke's authority to the same purpose, out of his Essay of Human Understanding. "If we examine the ideas we have of the incomprehensible Supreme Being, we shall find that we come by it the same way; and that the complex ideas we have of God as separate spirits, are made up of the simple ideas we receive from reflection; i. e. having, from what we experience in ourselves, got the ideas of existence and duration, of knowledge and power, of pleasure and happiness, and of several other qualities in powers, which it is better to have than to have without; when we would frame an idea the most suitable we can to the Supreme Being, we enlarge every one of these with our own idea of infinity; and putting them together make our complex idea of God."

It is not impossible that there may be many kinds of spiritual perfection, besides those which a being in a human soul; but it is impossible that we should have ideas of any kinds of perfection, except those of which we have some small rays at least in our own strikes in ourselves. It would then be a very high presumption to determine whether the Spirit of Being has not many more attributes than those which enter into our conceptions of him. This is certain, that if there be a kind of spiritual perfection which is not marked out in the human soul, it belongs in its fulness to the divine nature.

Several eminent philosophers have imagined that the soul, in her separate state, may have new faculties springing up in her, which she is not capable of exerting during her present union with the body; and whether these faculties may not correspond with other attributes in the divine nature, and open to us hereafter new matter of wonder and adoration, we are altogether ignorant. This, as I have said before, we ought to acquiesce in, that the Sovereign Being, the great Author of Nature, has in him all possible perfections, as well in kind as in degree: to speak according to our methods of conceiving, I shall only add under this head, that when we have raised our notion of this infinite Being as high as it is possible for the mind of man to go, it will fall infinitely short of what he really is. "There is no end of his greatness." The most exalted creature he has made is only capable of adoring it; none of himself can comprehend it.

The advice of the son of Sirach is very just and sublime in this light. "By his word all things consist. We may speak much, and yet come short: wherefore sum him he is all. How shall we be able to magnify him? for he is great above all his works. The Lord is terrible and very great; and marvellous is his power. When you glorify the Lord, exalt him as much as you can: for even yet will he far exceed. And when you exalt him, put forth all your strength, and be not weary; for you can never go far enough. Who hath seen him, that he might tell us? and who can magnify him as he is? There are yet hid greater things than these be, for we have seen but a few of his works."

I have here only considered the Supreme Being by the light of reason and philosophy. If we would see him in all the wonders of his mercy, we must have recourse to revelation, which represents him to us not only as infinitely great and glorious, but as infinitely good and just in his dispensations towards man. But as this is a theory which falls under every man's consideration, though indeed it can never be sufficiently considered, I shall here only take notice of that habitual worship and veneration which we ought to pay to this Almighty Being. We should often refresh our minds with the thought of him, and annihilate ourselves before him, in the contemplation of our own worthlessness, and of his transcendent excellency and perfection. This would imprint on our minds such a constant and uninterrupted awe and veneration as that which I am here recommending, and which is in reality a kind of incessant prayer, and reasonable humiliation of the soul before him who made it.

This would effectually kill in us all the little seeds of pride, vanity, and self-conceit, which are apt to root up in the minds of such whose thoughts turn on those comparative advantages which they enjoy over some of their fellow-creatures, than on that infinite distance which is placed between them and the supreme model of all perfection. It would likewise quicken our desires and endeavours of uniting ourselves to him by all the acts of religion and virtue.

Such an habitual homage to the Supreme Being would, in a particular manner, banish from among that prevailing impiety of using his name on the most trivial occasions.

I find the following passage in an excellent sermon, preached at the funeral of a gentleman,* who was diligent as we are of nature than

"He had the God of heaven in any person mentioned by him in his discourse particularly as he was so exact observed him."

Every one by the Jews holy. They were religious disce those who make ordinary expressions most impertinent into the most ridiculous phrase mention those.

It would be an forth the horror The very men those in whom gion, is not utt

No. 532.] M

Reddere

I play the To cut m

It is a very duce other men saying, I have in the world. I of, but that it who will take tion of the unw excellence of and yourself for that got so far, you you ever before the fame and we speak this as pr ing man, but a into a right cha having extorted of the greatest appeared by any few young gent be a glory to d possible means rest of ignorance substitute in th sense. It is fro self honoured as sciences. Mr. T this idea of me. lent paper of ve and the other et poem,† which I the mean time his, but insert th of Adrian. I v mentions; but his argument, th have seen, conv * See Bishop Burnet's History of the Honourable Robert Addison.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the same hoith five or six g to mention rian spoke on it was a piece circumstances.

n, Methinks
y serious soli-leparture; in es at my first and before I generally put ompanion of ow deserting unknown re-

and pensive.
and humour?

ere lies the tural and ob-man: and, if n, that doubt will seem so ought, that it k otherwise:
onfession in-
The dimi-nd the rest, y, but rather e find in Cabi after him, ost love and u think me of Adrian, be or; if not, to am," &c.

SPECTATOR.
tage,
uge?

reins.
riest may hear,

ould hide;
alth.

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

ti:

At length despoil'd, each to his fields retreats, First with the dogs, and long amidst the vapours From port to stupid snore sagaciously down, In youth a cockcomb, and in age a clown.

" Such readers scorn'd, then mingl'd they during flight Above the stars, and tread'd the fields of light:
Fame, heaven, and hell, are thy exalted themes,
And visions such as Jove himself might dream; Man sunk to slavery, though in glory born; Heaven's pride, when upright; and deprec'd, his scorn.

" Such hints alone could British Virgil lead, And thou alone deserve from such a friend:
A debt so borrow'd is illustrious shame.
And fame when shar'd with him is double loss:
So flush'd with sweets, by beauty's queen bestow'd, With more than mortal charms Adonis glow'd: Such generous strifes Eugene and Marlborough try,
And, as in glory, so in friendship vie.

" Permit these lines by thee to live—not blame A muse that pants and languishes for fame:
That fears to sink when humbler themes she sings, Lost in the mass of mean forgotten things Receiv'd by thee, I propound my rhymes:
The praise of virgins in succeeding times Mix'd with thy works, their life no bounds shall set, But stand protected as inspir'd by thee.

" So some weak shoot, which else would yearly die, Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the skies;
Through the new pupal fest'ring juices flow, Thrust forth the germ, and give the flowers to show Aloft, immortal reigns the plant unknown, With borrow'd life, and vigour not his own."

" TO THE SPECTATOR-GENERAL.

" Mr. JOHN SLY humbly sheweth, " That upon reading the deputation given to the said Mr. John Sly, all persons passing by his observatory, behaved themselves with the same decenrum as if your honour yourself had been present.

" That your said officer is preparing, according to your honour's secret instructions, hats for the several kinds of heads that make figures in the realm of Great Britain, with cocks significant of their powers and faculties.

" That your said officer has taken due notice of your instructions and admonitions concerning the internals of the head from the outward form of the same. His hats for men of the faculties of law and physic do but just turn up, to give a little life to their sagacity; his military hats glare full in the face; and he has prepared a familiar easy cock for all good companions between the above-mentioned extremes.
For this end he has consulted the most learned of his acquaintance for the true form and dimensions of the lepidum caput, and made a hat fit for it.

" Your said officer does further represent, That the young divines about town are many of them got into the cock military, and desires your instructions therein.

" That the town has been for several days very well behaved, and further your said officer saith not."

T.

No. 533.] TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1712

Immo duas dabo, inquit ille, unum si parum est;

Et si duarum proletem, addentes dum—FLAUT.

Nay, says he, if one is too little, I will give you two;
And if two will not satisfy you, I will add two more.

" TO THE SPECTATOR.

" SIR,

" You have often given us very excellent discourses against that unnatural custom of parents, in forcing their children to marry contrary to their inclinations. My own case, without further parade

* A compliment to Addison. † By Mr. Thomas Tate.

I will lay before you, and leave you to judge of it. My father and mother both being in declining years, would fain see me, their eldest son, as they call it, settled. I am as much for that as they can be: but I must be settled, it seems, not according to my own, but their, liking. Upon this account I am teased every day, because I have not yet fallen in love, in spite of nature, with one of a neighbouring gentleman's daughters; for, out of their abundant generosity, they give me the choice of four. 'Jack,' begins my father, 'Mrs. Catharine is a fine woman.'—'Yes, Sir, but she is rather too old.'—'She will make the more discreet manager, boy.' Then my mother plays her part. 'Is not Mrs. Betty exceedingly fair?'—'Yes, Madam, but she is of no conversation; she has no fire, no agreeable vivacity; she either speaks nor looks with spirit.'—'True, son, but for those very reasons she will be an easy, soft, obliging, tractable creature.'—'After all,' cries an old aunt (who belongs to the class of those who read plays with spectacles on), 'what think you, nephew, of proper Mrs. Dorothy?'—'What do I think? why, I think she cannot be above six foot* two inches high.'—'Well, well, you may banter as long as you please, but height of stature is commanding and majestic.'—'Come, come,' says a cousin of mine in the family, 'I will fit him: Fidelia is yet behind—pretty Miss Fiddy must please you.'—'Oh! your very humble servant, dear coz, she is as much too young as her eldest sister is too old.'—'Is it so indeed,' quoth she, 'good Mr. Pert? You who are at barely turned of twenty-two, and Miss Fiddy in half a year's time will be in her teens, and she is capable of learning any thing. Then she will be a observant; she will cry perhaps now and then, but never be angry.' Thus they will think for me on this matter, wherein I am more particularly concerned than any body else. If I name any woman in the world, one of these daughters has certainly the same qualities. You see by these few hints, Mr. Spectator, what a comfortable life I lead. To be still more open and free with you, I have been passionately fond of a young lady (whom give me leave to call Miranda) now for these three years. I have often urged the matter home to my parents with all the submission of a son, but the impatience of a lover. Pray, Sir, think of three years; what expressible scenes of inquietude, what variety of misery must I have gone through in three long whole years! Miranda's fortune is equal to those I have mentioned; but her relations are not intimates with mine. Ah! there's the rub! Miranda's person, wit, and humour, are what the nicest fancy could imagine: and, though we know you to be so elegant a judge of beauty, yet there is none among all your various characters of fine women preferable to Miranda. In a word, she is never guilty of doing any thing but one amiss (if she can be thought to do miss by me), in being as blind to my faults as she is to her own perfections.

"I am, Sir,

"Your very humble obedient Servant,

"DUSTERRASTUS."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"When you spent so much time as you did lately censuring the ambitious young gentlemen who ride in triumph through town and country on coach-boxes, I wished you had employed those moments in consideration of what passes sometimes within-side of those vehicles, by the insolent who travelled from Essex to London, what I have to under the chair no where else a young woman could have preserved for a fortnight it was I was no soon great surprise, attacked me, I not repeat to me to hear. speedy end of self what a per- tuous and a proper handling daughter, if you what treatment dragoons. On entertained us tions, or lewd with shame and had not allowed eyes. But we should not ever suffer death? hounds deserve better than on it effectually. Has every im- me, who pay pray consider who have nothing as gentleman-like talk obscenely has not power which you can gentleman, who gentlemen of to sup with him or three friends manners and mision. It happens of his regiment first onset eng healths and st imagine the cor ing some of his them the story (whom I find y been invited to Anglesey, and ner, instead of for, where the usual passions window, and we know what he answered he, 'I pleasure and im- versation of the sensibly stung to throw their care and so a conver This story prese together with th cers, that the y confusion. Sir if you like it, y but I think it ha

* Feet.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

is mechanic ably propose full power est persons mouths of all I wish you
dest person,
and conse-
me to travel
their pockets.
bject would public notice may be had,
that part of
on presumes ae, the party ith a request e very much ke; and his cribe.
vant, CRUEL."

12, 1712.

la
.73.
d.—STEPNEY.

en, the only nd have my which did me ave perhaps what is suit-as I can re-as been whechild to do, or re wholesome as ill for my other for my tell you I do ry earth ever or chair I am place to an-l who had to ing stories of the womanly uch and such until I came r since I grew abused after m so killing, house is fre-
to ask queson: but I am ut my bright ular for talke of the very w, and who to us without ality of those r me to speak ut provoking ie Mrs. Suchinted with all to her enter Sir, I am so ouch me; so I so well-bred
e like a fool,

for no one will answer as if I were their friend or companion. Pray, Sir, be pleased to take the part of us beauties and fortunes into your consideration, and do not let us be thus flattered out of our senses. I have got a hussy of a maid who is most craftily given to this ill quality. I was at first diverted with a certain absurdity the creature was guilty of in every thing she said. She is a country girl; and in the dialect of the shire she was born in, would tell me that every body reckoned her lady had the purest red and white in the world; then would tell me I was the most like one Sisly Dobson in their town, who made the miller make away with himself and walk afterward in the corn-field where they use to meet. With all this, this cunning hussy can be letters in my way, and put a billet in my glove, and then stand in it she knows nothing of it. I do not know, from my birth to this day, that I have been ever treated by any one as I ought; and if it were not for a few books, which I delight in, I should be at this hour a novice to all common sense. Would it not be worth your while to lay down rules for my behaviour in this case, and tell people, that we do not expect honest plain answers as well as other people? Why must I, good Sir, because I have good air, a fine complexion, and am in the bloom of my years, be misled in all my actions; and have the notions of good and ill confounded in my mind, &c. no other offence, but because I have the advantage of beauty and fortune? Indeed, Sir, what with this silly homage which is paid us by the sort of people I have above spoken of, and the utter negligence which others have for us, the conversation of us young women of condition is no other than what must expose us to ignorance and vanity, if not vice. All this I humbly submitted to your spectatorial wisdom, by Sir

"Your humble Servant,

"SHARLOT WEALRY."

"MR. SPECTATOR, Will's Coffee-house.

"Pray, Sir, it will serve to fill up a paper if you put in this; which is only to ask, whether that sort of verses which is a paraphrase of Isaiah, in one of your speculations, is not written by Mr. Pope? Then you get on another line, by putting in, with proper distances, as at the end of a letter.

"I am, Sir, your humble Servant,

"ABRAHAM DAPPERWIT."

"MR. DAPPERWIT,

"I am glad to get another line forward, by sending that excellent piece is Mr. Pope's; and with proper distances,

"I am, Sir your humble Servant,

"THE SPECTATOR."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I was a wealthy grocer in the city, and as fortunate as diligent; but I was a single man, and you know there are women. One in particular came to my shop, who I wished might, but was afraid to, would, make a grocer's wife. I thought, however, to take an effectual way of courting, and sold to her at less price than I bought, that I might buy at a price than I sold. She, you may be sure, often came and helped me to many customers at the old rate, fancying I was obliged to her. You need not think this was a good living trade, and my riches must be vastly improved. In due time, I might have declared bankrupt, when I declared myself her lover, and she herself married. I was,

tion to support myself, and am now in towing rich by losing my customers.

"Yours,
"JEREMY COMFIT."

SPECTATOR,

n the condition of the idol you was once mention, and bar-keeper of a coffee-believe it is needless to tell you the oppor-must give, and the importunities I suffer. is one gentleman who besieges me as close ench did Bouchain. His gravity makes cautious, and his regular approaches ded engineer. You need not doubt of his he is a lawyer; and especially since he o little use of it at Westminster, he may sore for me.

then can weak woman do? I am willing to but he would have it at discretion, and I tion. In the mean time, whilst we par-several interests are neglected. As his is stronger, my tea grows weaker: and pleads at my bar, none come to him for t in forma pauperis. Dear Mr. Spectator, not to insist upon hard articles, nor by lar desires contradict the well-meaning is countenance. If we were agreed, we le to something, as soon as we could deere we should get most by the law—at house or at Westminster.

"Your humble Servant,

"LUCINDA PARLEY."

A Minute from Mr. John Sly.

world is pretty regular for about forty rod en west of the observatory of the said Mr. he is credibly informed, that when they eyond the pass into the Strand, or those city-ward are got within Temple-bar, just as they were before. It is therefore posed, that moving sentries may be ap-all the busy hours of the day between the and Westminster, and report what passes onour, or your subordinate officers, from ne."

red,

r. Sly name the said officers, provided he r for their principles and morals.—T.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1712.

longam resces. ———— Hos. 1 Od. xi. 7. short vain hope.

er-hundred-and-seventy-first speculation on the subject of hope in general. I de-paper as a speculation upon that vain and pe, which is misemployed on temporal ob-produces many sorrows and calamities in c.

precept several times inculcated by Ho-we should not entertain a hope of any life which lies at a great distance from us. tness and uncertainty of our time here ch a kind of hope unreasonable and ab-grave lies unseen between us and the ich we reach after. Where one man lives to good he has in view, ten thousand are cut pursuit of it.

opens likewise unluckily, that one hope no es to us but another rises up in its stead, apt to fancy that we shall be happy and satisfied if we possess o particular enjoyments; b emptiness, or the natural have no sooner gained o hopes to another. We st and landscapes lying be tance terminated our vie

The natural consequ these; that we should ta run out into too great a sufficiently weigh the obje be such as we may rea what we propose in their are such as we are prett our life extend itself so which are at too great a ble that we may be inter gress towards them. If we have not thoroughly our disappointment will sure in the fruition of t we are not likely to pos vain, and make life a g than it really is.

Many of the miseries ceed from our want of of these particulars. The sanguine tribe of lover bankrupt, the politician jector, are cast away in imaginations and towerin look the goods of fortun something that glitters to neglect solid and subs is showy and superficial. which lies within their are not capable of attai schemes for a long and d to imaginary points of b ties; and consequently v beggary, ruin, and disho

What I have here say an Arabian fable, whi French by Monsieur G such a wild but natural not but my reader will as I have been, and th if he reflects on the se which have sometimes pe relation to the Persian g

Alnaschar, says the f that never would set his ring his father's life. N him to the value of a hu money. Alnaschar, in laid it out in glasses, bo ware. These he piled and, having made cho placed the basket at hi upon the wall in expect sat in this posture, wit he fell into a most amus overheard by one of his himself in the followin says he, "cost me at hundred drachmas, whic I shall quickly make tw in retail. These two very little while rise to will amount in time to said drachmas cannot fa As soon as by this mea class-man, and mounds, pearls, have got togere, I will make id, with lands, then begin to world. I will traffic, ousand drachlf master of a naturally set demand the after having mation which cretion, and ter possesses.

that it is my ousand pieces oon as I have I will buy her the best that ard make my in and equiis right hand, ly to honour and pieces of erward to his r purse of the as, 'Sir, you ys give more to my house, in her a due to love and re her to her and talk but at to me, that kindness, and t her sit down able, and will night. Her r daughter to he daughter,

lf at my feet, vour. Then eneration for her from me she shall fall

p in this chi-acting with
; so that un-ware, which or, he kicked him into the pieces.

14, 1712.

6. Æn. ix. 617.
DRYDEN.

my booksel-
out eighteen nd, brushing o the further d something e same time ch, pressing delivered the ithdrew. I observed, in the midst of her discourse, that she flushed and cast an eye upon me over her shoulder, having been informed by my bookseller that I was the man of the short face whom she had so often read of. Upon her passing by me, the pretty blooming creature smiled in my face, and dropped me a courtesy. She scarce gave me time to return a salute, before she quitted the shop with an air of skuffle, and stepped again into her coach, giving the footman directions to drive where they were to. Upon her departure, my bookseller gave me a letter superscribed "To the ingenious Spectator," which the young lady had desired him to deliver into my own hands, and to tell me that the speedy publication of it would not only oblige heredit, but a tea-table of my friends. I opened it therefore with a resolution to publish it, whatever it should contain, and am sure if any of my male readers will be severely critical as not to like it, they would have been as well pleased with it as myself, had they seen the face of the pretty scribe.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

London, Nov. 1712.

"You are always ready to receive any useful hint or proposal, and such, I believe, you will think as that may put you in a way to employ the most idle part of the kingdom: I mean that part of mankind who are known by the name of the women's men, or beaux, &c. Mr. Spectator, you are sensible these pretty gentlemen are not made for manly employments, and for want of business are often as much in the vapours as the ladies. Now what I propose is this, that since knotting is again in fashion, who has been found a very pretty amusement, that you will recommend it to these gentlemen as something that may make them useful to the ladies they admire. And since it is not inconsistent with any game, or other diversion, for it may be done in the playhouse, in their coaches, at the tea-table, and in short in all places where they come for the sake of the ladies (except at church; be pleased to forbid that there, to prevent mistakes), it will be easily complied with. It is, besides, an employment that allows, as we see by the fair sex, of many graces which will make the beaux more readily comply with it: it shows a white hand and a diamond ring, a great advantage; it leaves the eyes at full liberty to be employed as before, as also the thoughts at the tongue. In short, it seems in every respect proper, that it is needless to urge it further, by speaking of the satisfaction these male knotters will find, when they see their work mixed up in a fringe and worn by the fair lady for whom and with whom it was done. Truly, Mr. Spectator, I cannot be so pleased I have hit upon something that these gentlemen are capable of; for it is sad to consider a part of the kingdom (I mean for mankind) should be of no manner of use. I shall not trouble you further at this time, but only to say, that I am always your reader, and generally your admirer.

"T. B.

"P. S. The sooner these fine gentlemen are set to work the better; there being at this time several fine fringes that stay only for more hands."

I shall in the next place present my reader with the description of a set of men who are numbers enough in the world, though I do not remember that I have yet taken notice of them, as they are drawn in the following letter:—

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Since you have lately, to so good purpose, as upon conjugal love, it is to be hoped you will age every practice that rather proceeds from id to interest than to happiness. Now you but observe, that most of our fine young readily fall in with the direction of the graver retain in their service by some small encouragement as great a number as they can of supernu and insignificant fellows, which they use differs, and commonly call 'shoeing horns,' are never designed to know the length of the it only, when a good offer comes, to whet and m up to the point. Nay, it is the opinion of ave lady, Madam Matchwell, that it is also- convenient for every prudent family to have of these implements about the house to clap occasion serves; and that every spark ought uce a certificate of his being a shoeing horn be admitted as a shoe. A certain lady I could name, if it was necessary, has at pre- ore shoeing horns of all sizes, countries, and , in her service, than ever she had new shoes life. I have known a woman make use of a ; horn for several years, and, finding him unful in that function, convert him at length shoe. I am mistaken if your friend, Mr. Wil- oneycomb, was not a cast shoeing horn be- late marriage. As for myself, I must frankly to you, that I have been an errant shoeing or above these twenty years. I served my stress in that capacity above five of the num- fore she was shod. I confess, though she had who made their applications to her, I always t myself the best shoe in her shop; and it t until a month before her marriage that I red what I was.

had like to have broke my heart, and raised spicions in me, that I told the next I made upon receiving some unkind usage from her, began to look upon myself as no more than eing horn. Upon which, my dear, who was tte in her nature, told me I was hypochondri- ad that I might as well look upon myself to egg, or a pipkin. But in a very short time e gave me to know that I was not mistaken elf. It would be tedious to you to recount the an unfortunate shoeing horn, or I might en- you with a very long and melancholy relation ufferings. Upon the whole, I think, Sir, it ery well become a man in your post, to de- in what cases a woman may be allowed with to make use of a shoeing horn, as also to whether a maid on this side five-and-twenty, dow who has not been three years in that may be granted such a privilege, with other ies which will naturally occur to you upon ject.

"I am, Sir,

"With the most profound veneration,

"Yours," &c.

[ SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1712.

For we are his offspring.—Acts xvii. 28.

"TO THE SPECTATOR.

has been usual to remind persons of rank, occasions in life, of their race and quality, what expectations they were born; that by ing what is worthy of them, they may be wu from mean pursuits, and encouraged to e undertakings. This is turning nobility principle of virtue, and making it productive of merit, as it is und a reward of it.

"It is for the like have in some of your readers the dignity o not be insensible that there are authors wh very different view, a written to show the The reflections whic usually take some t characters of those th resolve the most shi artifice and design: content, repulses, or their spleen for philos and such as find them any distinction among pulling down all app to upbraid them; and deformity. From a draughts of mankind burlesque pictures w turas; where the art distorted proportions distinguishing likenes manner as to transform into the most odious

"It is very disinge kind with the worst, s to degrade the whole not only to remove a but to destroy that re great guard of innoc

"It is true, indeed, tures of beauty and d virtue and vice, in th rity is found among n every individual in so is so unequal to hims most wavering and i creation. So that t cerning the dignity o appear like some diffi losophy, in which the to be of equal strengt sidering this point, as here borrow an adm Pascal, which I think "It is of dangero represent to man ho beasts, without showi greatness. It is likv his greatness without dangerous yet to leav very beneficial that b both." Whatever im our nature, it is the b to rectify them, as far sent state. In the me ragement to generou shall put them all o sublime manner of s approach their kings,

O king

may be addressed to mortal among us, un

* An allusion to the foli Morales de M. le Duc de says of him, that he had in ghosts.

ded. And he soul, will ity of his naitable to it. to a subject r letter, and the thoughts of his book acquainted e elder Cato peaker, and is venerable as it were future state, imperishable r death. I as you have e soul's im- he Christian not be dis- th shines in nasion, that so great ac- of the past, is enriched veries; it is ns all these death, is re- his manner: hen I depart ember, that was invisible isible it ex- existing still, ly would the eath, if their their fame! that the soul departed out lost when it ation. But ance, then it an frame is of its parts? other beings from whence neither pre- yes.'

No one shall y father, or us, or Afri- her excellent ned so many, without be- it. And, if I e to speak of endured the nights, both at the same erminate toy o have worn free from la- I know not, and looked expectation, it shall then rue, that the most worthy strongest im-

"What besides this is the cause that the wise men die with the greatest equanimity, the ignorant with the greatest concern? Does it not seem to those minds which have the most extensive view, foresee they are removing to a happier condition, which those of a narrow sight do not perceive? for my part, am transported with the hope of seeing your ancestors, whom I have honoured and loved, and am earnestly desirous of meeting not only the excellent persons whom I have known, but those too, of whom I have heard and read, and of whom myself have written; nor would I be detained from so pleasing a journey. O happy day, when I shall escape from this crowd, this heap of pollution, and be admitted to that divine assembly of exalted spirits! when I shall go not only to those great persons I have named, but to my Cato, my son, then when a better man was never born, and whose faults I myself performed, whereas he ought rather to have attended mine. Yet has not his soul deserted me, but, seeming to cast back a look on me, is gone before to those habitations to which it was sensible I should follow him. And though I might appear to have borne my loss with courage, I was not so affected with it; but I comforted myself in the assurance, that it would not be long before we should meet again, and be divorced no more."

"I am, Sir," &c.

No. 538.] MONDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1772

Ultra Finem tendere opus. — Mos. 7 Sat. 1. 1.
To launch beyond all bounds.

SURPRISE is so much the life of stories, that even one aims at it who endeavours to please by telling them. Smooth delivery, an elegant choice of words, and a sweet arrangement, are all beautifying graces; but not the particulars in this point of conversation, which either long command the attention, or strike with the violence of a sudden passion, or excite the burst of laughter which accompanies merriment. I have sometimes fancied that the mind is in this case like a traveller who sees a fine seat in haste; he acknowledges the delightfulness of a walk with regularity, but would be uneasy if he were obliged to pace it over, when the first view had led him into all its beauties from one end to the other.

However, a knowledge of the success which stories will have when they are attended with a true surprise, as it has happily made the characters of some, so has it also been the ruin of the characters of others. There is a set of men who outrage truth instead of affecting us with a manner in telling it; who overleap the line of probability, that they may be seen to move out of the common road, and endeavour only to make their hearers stare by implying upon them with a kind of nonsense against the philosophy of nature, or such a heap of wonders as upon their own knowledge, as it is not likely if man should have ever met with.

I have been led to this observation by a company into which I fell accidentally. The subject of metaphysics was a proper field wherein such false surprises might expatiate, and there were those present who appeared very fond to show it in its full extent of traditional history. Some of them, in a loose manner, offered to our consideration the miraculous powers which the effluvia of cheese have in bodies whose pores are disposed to receive them in a noxious manner; others gave an account of men who could indeed bear the sight of cheese, but re; for which they brought a reason from the their nurses. Others again discoursed, with-leavouring at reasons, concerning an uncon-le aversion which some stomachs have against-of meat when it is whole, and the eager in- in they have for it when, by its being cut up, pe which had affected them is altered. From they passed to eels, then to pawnips, and so is aversion to another, until we had worked selves to such a pitch of complaisance, that he dinner was to come in we inquired the f every dish, and hoped it would be no offence company, before it was admitted. When we down, this civility among us turned the dis-from eatables to other sorts of aversions; and rnal cat, which plagues every conversation of ure, began then to engross the subject. One rated at the sight of it, another had smelled s it lay concealed in a very distant cupboard; who crowned the whole set of these stories, d up the number of times in which it had oc-d him to swoon away. "At last," says he, ou may all be satisfied of my invincible aver-a cat, I shall give an unanswerable instance. is going through a street of London, where I ver been until then, I felt a general damp atness all over me, which I could not tell how unt for, until I chanced to cast my eyes up-and found that I was passing under a sign- which the picture of a cat was hung."

extravagance of this turn in the way of sur-ive a stop to the talk we had been carrying me were silent because they doubted, and because they were conquered in their own o that the gentleman had an opportunity to a belief of it upon us, and let us see that he ber exposing himself than ridiculing others. st freely own that I did not all this while ve every thing that was said; but yet I some in the company had been endeavouring uld pitch the bar furthest; that it had for me been a measuring cast, and at last my f the cat and sign-post had thrown beyond L n considered the manner in which this story n received, and the possibility that it might sed for a jest upon others, if he had not la-against himself. From hence, thought I, e two ways which the well-bred world gene-ces to correct such a practice, when they do k fit to contradict it flatly.

first of these is a general silence, which I ot advise any one to interpret in his own bet is often the effect of prudence in avoiding d, when they see another drive so fast that no stopping him without being run against; very seldom the effect of weakness in be-suddenly. The generality of mankind are rossly ignorant, as some overbearing spirits rsuade themselves; and if the authority of ter or a caution against danger make us our opinions, yet neither of these are of ough to suppress our thoughts of them. If ho has endeavoured to amuse his company roabilities could but look into their minds, l find that they imagine he lightly esteems ense when he thinks to impose upon them, he is less esteemed by them in his attempt so. His endeavour to glory at their ex-comes a ground of quarrel, and the scorn ference with which they entertain it begins diate punishment: and indeed (if we should even go no further) ference, has a deeper sition, because oppos that has a sort of gen sary mingling along w is some esteem in your you think him worth lence, or a negligent anger, mixed with a s thought by you too co

The other method correcting this practice shoot such talkers in story with further deg up for a voucher to the let them see they st heard a discourse was of fear. One of the how it had turned his while the terrors of a Another, taking the his own knowledge to like nature to such a ble he could ever ha still grounded these sake of variety, it migh of the conversation, al who can feel the pass escape so common at some of the company contradict him: but appearance of severit story in his head, assur to believe that the fe man's hair gray, since had suffered so by it, and made them easy, taken to bring us to sh to increase our charac mimicry, by which an versation to show us to ridiculous before, that a resemblance you bea know he will not lie lieving you. Then it immediately with a co you have been saying, wardly grieved at the but perceive others en short, you are against company runs against obliged to you for that lowed them at your ow you have injured, nas on you, when by the bar become a frequent dive

"MR. SPECTATOR

"The other day, walk I thought of your pape taphs, and am of opin worth being communica

Here innocence and Was snatch'd by ear Hence she did go, Je Sorrow to know, be Death, that does sin Is the next blessing t

ER 18, 1712.

I fortune and I find I have ly to visit me, s, though they
of you would use these pert d my country use them as tion of a jilt:
one of them flowed the li-vanity to be-break that reg to use foils, to fight; and t, without deay with which man who pre-comes into a ope upon this ee of the naoks, and ges-
l make none, d interpreters larly skilled into a sudden ay have seen ities beyond d cities. Add is look, which Though I can taught way of y prey: and ntil I find I Sir, to print he chase of a pes, returns, from time to r instruction reducing the t of man.

pendent,
A LOVELY."

spect for vir-ring the de-than to lay parents, who screet young for no other to enter into ches, my cir-suspected to w motives as ce, wit, and they have in e on this sub-may be from e itself, and at our incli-
and while we e enjoyment may change very delicate haunted, I am in hopes it would give the parties concerned a reflection that might expedite our happiness. There is a possibility, and I hope I may say it without imputation of immodesty to her I love with the highest honour: I say there is a possibility this delay will be as painful to her as it is to me; if it be as much it must be more, by reason of the severe rules the sex are under, in being denied even the relief of complaint. If you oblige me in this, and I assure I promise you a place at my wedding, and a present suitable to your spectatorial dignity.

"Your most humble Servant,

"EUSTACE."

"SIR,

"I yesterday heard a young gentleman, that looks as if he was just come to the gown and a scarf, use evil speaking: which subject, you know Archibald Tillotson has so nobly handled in a sermon in his folio. As soon as ever he had named his text, as he had opened a little the drift of his discourse, I was in great hopes he had been one of Sir Roger's chastains. I have conceived so great an idea of the charming discourse above, that I should have thought one part of my Sabbath very well spent in hearing repetition of it. But, alas! Mr. Spectator, this reverend divine gave us his grace's sermon, and yet do not know how; even I, that I am sure have read it at least twenty times, could not tell what to make of it, and was at a loss sometimes to guess what the man aimed at. He was so just indeed, as to give us all the heads and the sub-divisions of the sermon and further I think there was not one beautiful thought in it but what we had. But then, Sir, this gentleman made so many pretty additions; and he could never give us a paragraph of the sermon, but he introduced it with something which methought looked more like a design to show his own inequity, than to instruct the people. In short, he added and curtailed in such a manner, that he vexed me; insomuch that I could not forbear thinking (what I confess I ought not to have thought of in a holy a place), that this young spark was as justly blameable as Bullock or Penkethman, when they mend a noble play of Shakspeare or Jonson. Pray Sir, take this into your consideration; and, if we must be entertained with the works of any of these great men, desire these gentlemen to give them as as they find them, that so when we read them to our families at home, they may the better remember that they have heard them at church.

"Sir, your humble Servant."

No. 540.] WEDNESDAY, NOV. 19, 1712.

—Non deficit alter.—Vind. Aen. vi. 143.

A second is not wanting.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"THERE is no part of your writings which I have in more esteem than your criticism upon Milton. It is an honourable and candid endeavour to set the works of our noble writers in the graceful light which they deserve. You will lose much of my kind affection towards you, if you do not attempt the same of Spenser also, or at least indulge my per-sion for that charming author as far as to print the loose hints I now give you on that subject.

"Spenser's general plan is the representation of six virtues—holiness, temperance, chastity, friendship, justice, and courtesy—in six legends by six persons. The six personages are supposed, under proper allegories suitable to their respective characters, to all that is necessary for the full manifestation of the respective virtues which they are to exert.

"These one might undertake to show under the several heads are admirably drawn; no images improper, and most surprisingly beautiful. The Redcross Knight runs through the whole steps of the Christian life; Guyon does all that temperance can possibly require; Britomartis (a woman) observes the true rules of unaffected chastity; Arthegal is in every respect of life strictly and wisely just; Calidore is rightly courteous.

"In short, in Fairy land, where knights-errant have a full scope to range, and to do even what Ariosto or Orlando's could not do in the world without breaking into credibility, Spenser's knights have, under those six heads, a full and truly poetical system of Christian, public, and low life.

"His legend of friendship is more diffuse, and yet even there the allegory is finely drawn, only the heads various: one knight could not there support all the parts.

"To do honour to his country, Prince Arthur is a universal hero; in holiness, temperance, chastity, and justice, superexcellent. For the same reason, and to compliment Queen Elizabeth, Gloriana, queen of fairies, whose court was the asylum of the oppressed, represents that glorious queen. At her commands all these knights set forth, and only at her's the Redcross Knight destroys the dragon, Guyon overturns the Bower of Bliss, Arthegal (i. e. Justice) beats down Geryoneo (i. e. Philip II., king of Spain) to rescue Belge (i. e. Holland), and he beats the Grantorto (the same Philip in another light) to restore Irena (i. e. Peace to Europe).

"Chastity being the first female virtue, Britomartis is a Briton; her part is fine, though it requires explanation. His style is very poetical; no puns, affectations of wit, forced antitheses, or any of that low tribe.

"His old words are all true English, and numbers exquisite; and since of words there is the multa renescentur, since they are all proper, such a poem should not (any more than Milton's) consist all of it of common ordinary words. See instances of descriptions.

Useless jealousy in Britomartis, v. 6. 14, in its restlessness.

Like as a wayward child, whose sounder sleep Is broken with some fearful dream's affright, With froward will doth set himself to weep, Ne can be still'd for all his nurse's might.
But kicks and squalls, and shrieks for fell despite;
Now scratching her, and her loose locks misusing, Now seeking darkness, and now seeking light; Then craving suck, and then the suck refusing:
Such was this lady's fit in her love's fond accusing.

Curiosity occasioned by jealousy, upon occasion of her lover's absence. Ibid. Stan. 8, 9.

Then as she look'd long, at last she spy'd One coming towards her with hasty speed:
Well ween'd she then, ere him she plain descri'd, That it was one sent from her love indeed: Whereat her heart was fill'd with hope and dread, Ne would she stay till he in place could come,
But ran to meet him forth to know his tidings' somme: Even in the door him meeting, she begun,
'And where is he, thy lord, and how far hence?
Declare at once; and hath he lost or won?'

Care and his house are described thus, iv. 6. 33—35.

Not far away, nor meet for any guest,
They spy'd a little cottage, like some poor man's nest.

34.

There entering in, they found the good man's self,
Full busily unto his work ybent.

Who was so
With hollow
As if he had Full black a Besmear'd w
With rugged
The which h

Rude was hi
No better ha
His blistered
And fingers f Right fit to re
His name wa
That neither
But to small
These he un

"Homer's
quity: see wh are in these e the Redcross Stan. 8, 9.

The sailing p
The vine-pro
The bulder-
The aspine g

The laurel, s
And poets sa
The willow v
The yew obe
The birch fo
The myrrhe
The war-like
The fruitful
The carver h

"I shall tro let me conclud they have alr directions to y
vi. 6. 14.

The best (sa
Is to avoid th For when the Removed is,
Abstain from Subdue desir
Use scantied
Shun secrecy
So shall you
T.

No. 541.] TH

Format enim
Fortunarum
Aut ad humi Post effort an

For nature fo
And writes o Pleasure end
And grief de
And these ar

My friend
mentioned in lay aside his pursuit of the essay, some th action, which cate to the pub his favourite been an intim a good judge the most eloq lived.

Cicero conel with some pro without whic different one,

a greater ap-
impression, Gracchus?— am! to what the Capitol?
's blood. Or I behold my despairing!
seems, were sture, of the refrain from this the ra-were actors manner of ut the imita-

is here given stage I shall Roman mas-ning myself to adapt this I intend it, d in this dis-
I shall make at celebrated

as much as
; for the apus in all re-
the greater
ure, and the notion of the nce, tone of he whole per-tones of the instruments,

y the mind.
ag to the vamselves into or soft, tone.
ious kinds of ntracted, the
, the broken,
Every one
d judgment;
the painter,

acute, raised,
character of Shakespeare,
this kind.

ster!
His wife.
I blood!

ice quite dif-modulated soliloquy of ness!

its forth
ousness,
a him;
st. surely f this in the trest Mother,

Ell go, and in the anguish of my heart Weep o'er my child!—If he must die, my life Is wrapt in his, I shall not long survive.
'Tis for his sake that I have risk'd a life, Grown'd to captivity, and cutty'd th'active Yes, my Antony, we'll go together!
Together to the realms of night we'll go;
There to thy ravish'd eyes thy wife I'll show,
And point him out among the shades below.

Fear expresses itself in a low, hesitating, and affect sound. If the reader considers the broken speech of Lady Macbeth, while her husband is alone the murder of Duncan and his grooms, he will imagine her even affrighted with the sound of her own voice while she is speaking it:—

Alas! I am afraid they have awak'd, And 'tis not done; th' attempt, and not the deed, Confounds us—Hark!—I laid the daggers ready;
He could not miss them. Had he not resembled My father as he slept, I had done it.

Courage assumes a louder tone, as in that speech of Don Sebastian.

Here satiate all your fury;
Let Fortune empty her whole quiver on me; I have a soul that like an ample shield Can take in all, and verge enough for more.

Pleasure dissolves into a luxurious, mild, tender, and joyous modulation; as in the following lines in Caius Marius:—

Lavinia! O there's music in the name, That softening me to infant tenderness, Makes my heart spring like the first leap of life.

And perplexity is different from all these; grave but not bemoaning, with an earnest uniform sound of voice; as in that celebrated speech of Hamlet:—

To be, or not to be!—that is the question: Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them? To die, to sleep;
No more; and by a sleep to say we end
The heart-ach, and a thousand natural shocks That flesh is heir to: 'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wish'd! To die, to sleep!—
To sleep; perchance to dream! Ay, there's the rub; For, in that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil, Must give us pause—There's the respect That makes calamity of so long life;
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time, Th' oppressor's wrongs, the proud man's contumely, The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay, The insolence of office, and the spurns That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus make,
With a bare bodkin? Who would fardels bear, To groan and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscover'd country, from whose bosom No traveller returns, puzzles the will,
And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of.

As all these varieties of voice are to be directed to the sense, so the action is to be directed by the voice, and with a beautiful propriety, as it were, to enforce it. The arm, which by a strong spirit Tully calls the orator's weapon, is to be sometimes raised and extended; and the hand, by its motion sometimes to lead, and sometimes to follow, the words as they are uttered. The stamping of the foot, too, has its proper expression in denoting anger, or absolute command. But the face is the epitome of the whole man, and the eyes are as were the epitome of the face; for which reason, I say, the best judges among the Romans were extremely pleased even with Roscius himself in his mask. No part of the body, besides the face, capable of as many changes as there are different emotions in the mind, and of expressing them all by those changes. Nor is this to be done without the freedom of the eyes; therefore Theophrastus called one, who barely rehearsed his speech with his eyes fixed, an "absent actor."

As the countenance admits of so great variety, it requires also great judgment to govern it. Not that the form of the face is to be shifted on every occasion, lest it turn to farce and buffoonery; but it is certain that the eyes have a wonderful power of marking the emotions of the mind; sometimes by a steadfast look, sometimes by a careless one—now by a sudden regard, then by a joyful sparkling, as the sense of the words is diversified; for action is, as it were, the speech of the features and limbs, and must therefore conform itself always to the sentiments of the soul. And it may be observed, that in all which relates to the gesture there is a wonderful force implanted by nature; since the vulgar, the unskilful, and even the most barbarous, are chiefly affected by this. None are moved by the sound of words but those who understand the language; and the sense of many things is lost upon men of a dull apprehension: but action is a kind of universal tongue: all men are subject to the same passions, and consequently know the same marks of them in others, by which they themselves express them.

Perhaps some of my readers may be of opinion that the hints I have here made use of out of Cicero are somewhat too refined for the players on our theatre: in answer to which I venture to lay it down as a maxim, that without good sense no one can be a good player, and that he is very unfit to personate the dignity of a Roman hero who cannot enter into the rules for pronunciation and gesture delivered by a Roman orator.

There is another thing which my author does not think too minute to insist on, though it is purely mechanical: and that is the right pitching of the voice. On this occasion he tells the story of Gracchus, who employed a servant with a little ivory pipe to stand behind him, and give him the right pitch, as often as he wandered too far from the proper modulation. "Every voice," says Tully, "has its particular medium and compass, and the sweetness of speech consists in leading it through all the variety of tones naturally, and without touching any extreme. Therefore," says he, "leave the pipe at home, but carry the sense of this custom with you."

No. 542.] FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1712.

Et sibi preferri se gaudet——— Ovid, Met. ii. 430.

——— He heard,

Well pleas'd, himself before himself preferr'd.—ADDISON.

WHEN I have been present in assemblies, where my paper has been talked of, I have been very well pleased to hear those who would detract from the author of it observe, that the letters which are sent to the Spectator are as good, if not better, than any of his works. Upon this occasion many letters of mirth are usually mentioned, which some think the Spectator writ to himself, and which others commend because they fancy he received them from his correspondents. Such are those from the valetudinarian: the inspector of the sign-posts; the master of the fan exercise; with that of the hooped petticoat; that of Nicholas Hart the annual sleeper; that from Sir John Evelyn; that upon the London Cries; with multitudes of the same nature. As I love nothing that I may do they have, yet not design it writings when them. I have tlemen proving was not able to day before. N ing out ambig any reason to the honour to epistle, which esteem or ap These rigid c thing which d not be positive the flower-pot write those let I must there often choose t letter, for the policy of those fore they own would extort a applaud any t tain. Thirdly, introducing a work, which c written in the because the d had I publish crous composi names and c often serve to tional reflecti them.

There are o particular hon such who will or borrowed which are writ of a person, w his learning, in his private sure he could but, had he n he would find less. Those v in this point, fending, that fault, in quo which I might assertion is in published, I o vour to confu

Some are that small rep any of these some of the b scripts with w are others, I given me a gr under this hea invention. T guilty of false manuscripts v of action or gaged. But

* The person was Rawlinson. Folio, in the T

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

... which ever
his exception;
on, can be re-
matter of fact.
reader may be ing, what I deand what as answering the made against that there are re should al-nd others who t hath not an ent of religion tlemen to dis-ee one half of

Were I se-ing in a serious e the censure e anything in least, or that sincerely degnorance, and n, and virtue, than the pub-while I desire ular paper or and independafter it.

Following letter,
ers have been ch I must own ters :—

of your well-
at satisfaction, to the British ry sorry to find ember of your d the worthy as taken pos-omb has mar-emplar with-s own profes-
e are afraid it less you very of new mem-osing the Briof ladies who and question very suddenly, all parts of the Pray deliver the multitude oblige Servant,
ILO-SPEC."

BER 22, 1712.
et. 11. 12.

... among the
rd, and inward the work of a rful. As the art, their dis-
of admiring formation of a human body. Galen was converted by his dis-tions, and could not but own a Supreme Being up-a survey of this his handy-work. There were, indeed, many parts, of which the old anatomists did not know the certain use; but, as they saw that most of those which they examined were adapted with admirable art to their several functions, they did not question but those, whose uses they could not determine, were contrived with the same wisdom for respective ends and purposes. Since the cir-ulation of the blood has been found out, and many other great discoveries have been made by our modern anatomists, we see new wonders in the human frame, and discern several important uses for the parts, which uses the ancients knew nothing of. In short, the body of man is such a subject as stands the utmost test of examination. Though it appears formed with the nicest wisdom, upon the most superficial survey of it, it still mends upon the search and produces our surprise and amazement in proportion as we pry into it. What I have here said of a human body may be applied to the body of every animal which has been the subject of anatomic observations.

The body of an animal is an object adequate our senses. It is a particular system of Providence that lies in a narrow compass. The eye is able to command it, and by successive inquiries can wear into all its parts. Could the body of the whole earth, or indeed the whole universe, be thus submitted to the examination of our senses, were it not too big and disproportioned for our inquiries, too unwieldy for the management of the eye and hand, there is no question but it would appear to us curious and well contrived a frame as that of human body. We should see the same concentration and subserviency, the same necessity and usefulness, the same beauty and harmony, in all the every of its parts, as what we discover in the body of every single animal.

The more extended our reason is, and the more able to grapple with immense objects, the greater still are those discoveries which it makes of wisdom and providence in the works of the creation. A Isaac Newton, who stands up as the miracle of the present age, can look through a whole planetary system; consider it in its weight, number, and measure; and draw from it as many demonstrations of infinite power and wisdom, as a more confined understanding is able to deduce from the system of human body.

But to return to our speculations on anatomy, shall here consider the fabric and texture of the bodies of animals in one particular view: which, in my opinion, shows the hand of a thinking and wise Being in their formation, with the evidence of a thousand demonstrations. I think we may lay this down as an uncontested principle, that chance never acts in a perpetual uniformity and consistency with itself. If one should always find the same number with ten thousand dice, or see every thing just five times less, or five times more in number than the throw which immediately preceded it, we would not imagine there is some invisible power which directs the cast? This is the process which we find in the operations of nature. Every kind of animal is diversified by different magnitudes, each of which give rise to a different species.
Let a man trace the dog or lion kind, and he will observe how many of the works of nature are perfected, if I may use the expression, in a variety of editions. If we look into the reptile world, at it different kinds of animals that fill the element, we meet with the same repetitions among species, that differ very little from one another in size and bulk. You find the same that is drawn at large copied out in several sizes and ending in miniature. It would be to produce instances of this regular conduct of nature, as it would be superfluous to those reversed in the natural history of animals. The magnificent harmony of the universe is such, that may observe innumerable divisions running on the same ground. I might also extend this notion to the dead parts of nature, in which I find matter disposed into many similar systems, well in our survey of stars and planets, as of vegetables, and other sublunary parts of nature. In a word, Providence has shown the effects of its goodness and wisdom, not only in the creation of many original species, but in the multitude of descents* which it has made on every species in particular.

To pursue this thought still further. Every creature considered in itself has many varied parts that are exact copies of some parts which it possesses, and which are combined in the same manner. One eye would have been sufficient for the subsistence and preservation of the animal; but, in order to better his condition, another placed with a mathematical exactness in the same most advantageous situation, and in the particular of the same size and texture. Is it for chance to be thus delicate and uninterfering in its operations? Should a million of dice thrown twice together the same number, the wonder would be nothing in comparison with this. But we see this similitude and resemblance in the hand, the fingers; when we see one half of the body entirely correspond with the other in the minute strokes, without which a man might not well subsisted; nay, when we often see a part repeated a hundred times in the same twofold situation it consists of the most intricate of numberless fibres, and these parts still in magnitude, as the convenience of the particular situation requires; sure a man must be strangely cast of understanding, who does not see the finger of God in so wonderful a work. It applies in those parts of the body, without which man might have very well subsisted, though well as with them, are a plain demonstration of the wise Contriver, as those more numerous which are found among the vessels of the body, are evident demonstrations that they are not the work of chance. This argument gains additional strength, if we apply it to every insect within our knowledge, as well as to numberless living creatures that are objects of sight for a human eye: and if we consider several species in this whole world of life, one another in very many particulars, so convenient for their respective states of existence, it is much more probable that a hundred of dice should be casually thrown a hundred times in the same number, than that the body of any single animal should be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of matter. And like chance should arise in innumerable instances, requires a degree of credulity that is not in the direction of common sense. We may carry this consideration to the two sexes in every species, to each of the distinctions that were necessary to this great world of life.

* perhaps for "descents," i.e. progress downwards.

There are many more instances of the goodness of the Being, and of his transference of goodness, in the formation of the creature, for which I have writings, particularly the entitled Creation,* where the human body is described with elegance. I have been told which runs through the whole, but not seen it enlarged upon.

No. 544. MONDAY.

Nunquam ita quisquam habuit Quin rex, atq. rex, usus semper Aliquid inueniat: ut illa, Et, quæ tibi putaris prima

No man was ever so completely satisfied as not to receive new information, inasmuch that we find our thoughts we understood, and called our truest interest.

THERE are, I think, many letters from my friend who ever a rational and equal comparison for an advantage of condition:—

"Sir,

"I am come to the conclusion, honoured kinsman, Sir, to assure you I find it a figure of master of the house, so comely enjoyed by the not (with respect to the be it spoken) reflect upon confirmed in the truth, spoken at the club; to and well-disposed heart is highly superior in his the greatest talents, is of tions. But alas! why speaking of my worth little absurdities and in of the politest men a greater qualities are known not whether by not enhance his merit, a reputation in his country the pains of the wisest. By the way, I must oblige your readers have my writings, wherein Sir H. quired into the private man at the tavern. In circumstance as an innocent of his mind, a very easy thing to receive and not as an inclination her. The less discernment enter into that delicacy, ter: but indeed my chief represent to you my perfect satisfaction I promise of my new fortune. I ger's servants, except s * Creation. A poem.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

r. Those who hand to be upon such as lded so many sons so quarhom they are hem upon all of ready moy dependants ign to lend it
according to ch as I have as for such of or female, as being in the ge my affairs ar by doing ey to the use such as have my family or racticable is,
my money,
vn security:
because the lo it for their sand pounds what a crowd is where Sir money to put kes void the e he is out of the kindred breeding him self by his la-er his time is portunities of ice I came to ve a constant ions I can to y neighbour-

you a little my past life, satisfaction
t is, which is the way of life which I know ercome. It s's own coun-
It is from a om my youth
l gentlemen,
sture, justice,
be the most human race, suffer painful
ous marches, and pass the s of the most o deserve the g the other
r, were there could never have in our the character ery contrary erbearing, in g to tell you s, I have set able for such in the army, and will please from time to time to sojourn all any part of the year, at Coverley. Such of them will do me that honour shall find horses, servants and all things necessary for their accommodation and enjoyment of all the conveniences of life in pleasant various country. If Colonel Camper-be in town, and his abilities are not employed a other way in the service, there is no man would more welcome here. That gentleman's thorough knowledge in his profession, together with the in-plicity of his manners and goodness of his heart would induce others like him to honour my abode and I should be glad my acquaintance would tell themselves to be invited or not, as their characters have an affinity to his.

"I would have all my friends know, that they need not fear (though I am become a country gentleman) I will trespass against their temperance and sobriety. No, Sir, I shall retain so much of the good sentiments for the conduct of life, which I cultivated in each other at our club, as to resist all inordinate pleasures; but particularly remember, with our beloved Tully, that the delight in life consists in desire, not satiety. They who most passionately pursue pleasure seldomest arrive at it.
Now I am writing to a philosopher I cannot but bear mentioning the satisfaction I took in the pa-page I read yesterday in the same Tully. A noble man of Athens made a compliment to Plato the morning after he had supped at his house: 'Your entertainments do not only please when you give them, but also the day after.'

"I am, my worthy Friend,
Your most obedient humble Servant,
T. "WILLIAM SENTER."

No. 545.] TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1775

Quin potius pacem internam pactosque hymenales Execratus—VIRG. Æn. 12. 38.
Let us in bonds of lasting peace unite,
And celebrate the hymeneal rite.

I CANNOT but think the following letter from the Emperor of China to the Pope of Rome, proposing a coalition of the Chinese and Roman churches, will be acceptable to the curious. I must confess, I myself being of opinion that the Emperor has as much authority to be interpreter to him as he pretends to expound, as the Pope has to be vicar of the more person he takes upon him to represent, I was not little pleased with their treaty of alliance. What progress the negotiation between his majesty of Rome and his holiness of China makes (as we daily writers say upon subjects where we are at a loss) time will let us know. In the mean time, when they agree in the fundamentals of power and authority, and differ only in matters of faith, we may expect the matter will go on without difficulty.

Copia di lettera del re della China al Papa, in-terpretata dal padre segretario dell' India della compagna di Giesu.

"A voi benedetto sopra i benedetti P. P. et superiore grande de pontifici e pastore Xpus dispensatore del' opulo de' re d' Europa, Umanitate XI

"Il favorito amico di Dio Giunato 75, puer-simo sopra tutti i potentissimi della terra, alio-

* Colonel Camperdell. Spent in India. A son committed to the father of the late worthy Admiral Boscawen, who was drowned in the Royal George at Spithead, Aug. 27, 1782.

l'altissimi sotto il sole e la luna, che de di smeraldo della China sopra cento ad interpretare la lingua di Dio a tutti i fedeli d' Abramo, chi dà la vita e la ato quindici regni, ed a cento settante con la penna dello struzzo vergine, e ed accrescimento di vecchiezza.

arrivato il tempo in cui il fiore della gioventù deve maturare i frutti della piezza, e confortare con quell' i desiderii nostri divoti, e propagare il seme d' a che deve proteggerli, habbiamo stabilimpagnarci con una vergine eccelsa ed stata alla mamella della leonessa forte e mansueta. Percio essendoci stato figu-il vostro popolo Europeo Romano per ne invite, e forte, e caste; allongiamo la potente, a stringere una di loro, e questa tra nipote, o nipote di qualche altro grantino, che sia guardata dall' occhio dritto a seminata in lei l' autorità di Sarra, la Esther, e la sapienza di Abba; la vogliamo io della colomba che guarda il cielo, e la la bocca della conchiglia che si pasce della il mattino. La sua età non passi ducento luna, la sua statura sia alta quanto la a del grano verde, e la sua grossezza manipolo di grano secco. Noi la manvestire per li nostri mandatici ambas-chi la condurranno a noi, e noi incontra-riva del fiume grande facendola salire cocchio. Ella potrà adorare appresso di Dio, con venti quattro altre vergini a sua potrà cantare con loro, come la tottora era.

ando O padre e amico nostro questa na, sarete caggione di unire in perpetua testi vostri regni d' Europa al nostro do-perio, e si abbracceranno le vostre leggi era abbraccia la pianta; e noi medesimi del nostro seme reale in coteste proaldando i letti di vostri principi con il oso delle nostre amazzoni, d' alcune delle tri mandatici ambasciatori vi porteranno nze dipinte.

stiriamo di tenere in pace le due buone umiglie delli missionarii gli figlioli d' Igbianchi e neri figlioli di Dominico, il cui egl' uni e degl' altri ci serve di scorta nel imento e di lume ad interpretare le divine ne appunto fa lume l' oglio che si getta to alzandoci dal nostro trono per abbrac-chiarci nostro congiunto e confederato, no che questo foglio sia segnato col nostro erial della nostra città, capo del mondo, giorno della terza lunatione l' anno quarto imperio.

o è un sole nella cui faccia è anche quella ed intorno tra i raggi vi sono traposte ade.

il traduttore che secondo il ceremonial di tere e recedentissimo specialmente fessere n la penna della struzzo-vergine con la sogbonsi scrivere quei re che le pregere rivendo a qualche altro principe del mon-gior finezza che usino, e scrivergli con la pavone."

from the Emperor of China to the Pope, in-by a father Jesuit, secretary of the Indies. blessed above the blessed, great emperor of bishops and pastor of C oil of the kings of Europe

"The favourite friend VIth, the most powerful of the earth, highest above sun and moon, who sits on China, above 100 steps of guage of God to the faithful death to 115 kingdoms, and with the quill of a virgin and increase of old age.

"Being arrived at the t the flower of our royal y fruit towards old age, to co of our devoted people, and that plant which must pro mined to accompany ourse virgin, suckled at the bre a meek lamb; and, imagi your European Roman pe unconquerable and chaste powerful arm to embrace be one of your nieces, or great Latin priest, the da Let the authority of Sa fidelity of Esther, and th would have her eye like look upon heaven and es shell-fish to feed upon the age must not exceed 200 her stature be equal to th and her girth a handful.

"We will send our m clothe her, and to condu meet her on the bank of t to leap up into our charie ship her own God, togeth of her own choosing; an as the turtle in the spring

"You, O father and f our desire, may be an oc tual friendship our high kingdoms, and we may ivy embraces the tree; an our royal blood into you chief of your princes wi amazons, the resembling our said mandarines amba

"We exhort you to ke
gious families of missio Ignatius, and the white an that the counsel, both of serve as a guide to us light to interpret the div the sea produces light.

"To conclude, we ris brace you, we declare yo and have ordered this le perial signet, in our roya the eighth day of the th year of our reign."

Letters from Rome s both among gentlemen the subject of this epis The Jesuit who translate the majesty of the origi there was an offer of th predecessor of the prese of France; but no lady voyage, that sex not bei

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

treating the monial, very him with the ever used be-tions are pre-much zeal as empress for
of the In-the reigning indulgences in advancing gion in those

TAL.

a prodigious

JOHN SLY."

26, 1712.

vendor north,

ger may not be observe, when all manner of yourself from posed to sale, ression upon

in my way,

other tongue,

s. I under-

Gibber was

r stage, and n know what en I came to

tial to one of every thing

and force, in to make any

Oldfield, who,

o just a conse-

ade what she

The passions believe were

duct of the hors do not in this kind, and lawyers

give advice,

I me, that he flow the play er it was for articulates not aking an au-

sir superficial

air affections

t of the look,

could not but peared in the ught out of a

and dress, on use the merit

ing upon us to ll that I was author in the

own all that he had borrowed from others, and lay in a clear light all that he gives his spectators for their money with an account of the first manufacturers. But intended to give the lecture of this day upon the common and prostituted behaviour of trades in ordinary commerce. The philosopher made it a rule of trade, that your profit ought to be the common profit; and it is unjust to make any step towards gain wherein the gain of even those to whom you sell not also consulted. A man may deceive himself he thinks fit, but he is no better than a cheat who sells anything without telling the exceptions against it, as well as what is to be said to its advantage.

The scandalous abuse of language and hardening of conscience, which may be observed every day in going from one place to another, is what makes whole city to an unprejudiced eye a den of thieves.
It was no small pleasure to me for this reason to remark, as I passed by Cornhill, that the shopthat worthy, honest, though lately-unfortunate citizen, Mr. John Morton, so well known in the linen trade, is sitting up anew. Since a man has been in a distressed condition, it ought to be a great satisfaction to have passed through it in such a manner as not to have lost the friendship of those who suffered with him, but to receive an honourable acknowledgment of his honesty from those very persons to whom the law had consigned his estate.

The misfortune of this citizen is like to prove a very general advantage to those who shall deal with him hereafter; for the stock with which he was sets up being the loan of his friends, he cannot expose that to the hazard of giving credit, but enters into a ready-money trade, by which means he will both buy and sell the best and cheapest. He imposes upon himself a rule of affixing the value of each piece he sells, to the piece itself; so that the most ignorant servant or child will be as good a buyer at his shop as the most skilful in the trade.
For all which, you have all his hopes and fortune for your security. To encourage dealing after this way, there is not only the avoiding the most infernal guilt in ordinary bartering; but this observation, that he who buys with ready money saves as much to his family as the state exacts out of his for the security and service of his country; that is to say, in plain English, sixteen will do as much as twenty shillings.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"My heart is so swelled with grateful sentiments on account of some favours which I have lately received, that I must beg leave to give them utterance amongst the crowd of other anonymous correspondents; and writing, I hope, will be as great a relief to my forced silence, as it is to your natural taciturnity. My generous benefactor will not suffer me to speak to him in any terms of acknowledgment, but ever treats me as if he had the greatest obligations, and uses me with a distinction that I not to be expected from one so much my superior in fortune, years, and understanding. He mentions, as if I had a certain right to his favours from some merit, which his particular indulgence me has discovered; but that is only a learned artifice to lessen the pain an honest mind feels in receiving obligations when there is no probability of returning them.

"A gift is doubled when accompanied with a delicacy of address; but what to me gives it its inexpressible value, is its coming from the man most esteemed in the world. It pleases me indeed, a er" a tragedy

advantage and addition to my fortune; but consider it as an instance of that good man's hip, it overjoys, it transports me: I look on a lover's eye, and no longer regard the gift, hand that gave it. For my friendship is so void of any gainful views, that it often gives me to think it should have been chargeable to me, and I cannot at some melancholy hours help his generosity the injury of fearing it should be on this account, and that the last favour might be of legacy of a departing friendship.

I confess these fears seem very groundless and but you must forgive them to the apprehension of one possessed of a great treasure, who is at the most distant shadow of danger.

Now I have thus far opened my heart to you, will not conceal the secret satisfaction I feel there, and the goodness of my friend will not be denied. I am pleased with thinking the prayers of the Almighty hath sufficient blessings in it, and will certainly discharge the debt, I am not made the happy instrument of doing.

However, nothing in my power shall be wanting to show my gratitude; I will make it the business of my life to thank him; and shall esteem of him those my best friends, who give me the greatest assistance in this good work. Printing here would be some little instance of my gratitude, and your favour herein will very much oblige me.

Your most humble Servant, &c.
W. C."

547.] THURSDAY, NOV. 27, 1712.

Valisus tibi, monstrata radice vel herba, non fieret levius, fugeres radice vel herba proficiente nihil curarier.—Hos. 2 Ep. ii. 149.

suppose you had a wound, and one that shew'd it as a herb, which you apply'd, but found no good; Would you be fond of this, increase your pain, and use the fruitless remedy again?—CREECH.

very difficult to praise a man without put him out of countenance. My following correspondent has found out this uncommon art, and, with his friends, has celebrated some of his relations after such a concealed but diverting manner, that if any of my readers think I am not publishing my own commendations, they now I should have deserved their censure as I had I suppressed the humour in which they conveyed to me.

SIR,

It is often in a private assembly of wits of both sexes, where we generally descant upon your speculations, or upon the subjects on which you have written.

We were last Tuesday talking of those names which you have lately published. Some commending one of your papers, and some others; and there was scarce a single person in company that had not a favourite speculation. This a man of wit and learning told us, he thought it would not be amiss if we paid the Spectator the same compliment that is often made in our prints to Sir William Read, Dr. Grant, Mr. the apothecary, and other eminent physicians: there it is usual for the patients to publish some which have been made upon them, and what distempers under which they laboured. I shall take your proposal to heart; and the lady where we visited the two last volumes in large paper inter-leaved for her own perusal, brought down, and laid one in the company regular advertisement in like ingenious composition meet with at the end of the world. I had finished our work, and deal of mirth at the Spectator. The proposal entered the for the title-page, after the order:—

"Remedium efficax remedy adapted to all persons may cure him spleen, or any other man system, with an infection is upon him. as bread, agreeable to confinement. It has as abundance of the ne the kingdom have ex-

"N. B. No family Over the two Spectator first in the third

"I, William Crazy having been for several doubts, fears, and vapours and beauty of Mary hereby, for the benefit that I have found great ing doses, having taken with a dish of chocolate

For the B

"In charity to such case of levee-hunting, bread every morning a men, I, A. B., do testify laboured under this fa- cured of it by a reu Baldwin, contained in No. 193, where any of same remedy at the pr "An infallible cure choly, Nos. 173, 184, 239, 245, 247, 251.

"Probatum est.

"I, Christopher Q with a certain distemper showed itself in impertinencies, have not asked since my perusal of the 228."

"The Britannic B modesty, No. 231, which blushing colour to the or pale, that it is not natural fine complexion, which is the nearest friend in the least hurtful. It handsome; is not subject cannot be paralleled by metie, &c. It is certain world.

"I, Samuel Self, of

* Translated from the Latin. Liqueor. Spect. in folio, No.

himself, and something to be expected against it. I have heard of a man who, in a heated argument, endeavoured to strengthen his position by saying, "If you have the money, you will not mind it; but to get to the bottom of it, let me know how many guineas you have published, or supposed to have published."

It is a pity, however, to say, that a man who is so much afraid that they did it from one or another of the reasons, are none of these. B. then was given to understand that she was wrong, as Horace says, non est.

It is a pity, however, to say, that a man who is so much afraid that they did it from one or another of the reasons, are none of these. B. then was given to understand that she was wrong, as Horace says, non est.

Aliment says her two Gods, and in spite of her endeavours to the contrary, sinks from one level only as they are more or less so.

Two of three of the old Greek poets having got the same turn to a sentence, which describes the miseries of man in this life.—

It is a pity, however, to say, that a man who is so much afraid that they did it from one or another of the reasons, are none of these. B. then was given to understand that she was wrong, as Horace says, non est.

It will not perhaps be unentertaining to the public, to observe how these three immortal poets are bound up in different subjects by the same way of thinking; but I shall return to the first of them.

Our goodness being of a comparative and not an absolute nature, there is none who in stature can be called a virtuous man. Every one has his natural alloy, though one may be rarer than another; for this reason I cannot turn to a poet to introduce a perfect or a faultless character, not only because such a character is improper to me, but because it is not such a thing in nature. The tragic poet of the one or the other the Spectator in the other page took notice of that late invention of the ancient poets, and the wrong notions into which it has crept into the writers. The most perfect man he was strong enough to mow down, to punish, to abuse, and to glory. Providence in regard to man is such that may be fatal him. For this reason I cannot find, but that the instruction and moral are to be found, where a man who is virtuous in the world, his character falls into distress, and shows the flaws of nature at the end of a tragical action, he is represented as happy at the end of the play. Such a tragedy corrects the misanthropic nature, softens the mind of the reader with soft words to pity, and compassion, and shows him his own private affliction, and teaches him not to judge of men's virtues by their successes. I cannot think of one real hero in all antiquity, but I read of one in modern times, that he was not so very naturally represented in a tragedy, as I have seen in the comedies. The hero is a man of sense and a prevailing passion, or a prevailing passion, and show it in such a manner, as you sufficiently acquit the gods of any imputation of interfering. For as Horace says, non est, that the hero is faulty, though not as faulty as those whom we generally call the heroes.

It is a pity, however, to say, that a man who is so much afraid that they did it from one or another of the reasons, are none of these. B. then was given to understand that she was wrong, as Horace says, non est.

happy persons. Nisus and Euryalus. Lausus and Creusa, come all to unfortunate ends. The poet takes notice in particular, that, in the sacking of Troy, Ripheus fell, who was the most just man among the Trojans.

—Cedit et Ripheus justissimus unus.
Qui fuit in Teucriis, et servatissimus æqui: Hic aliter visum est.—Æn. ii. 427.

I that Pantheus could neither be preserved by transcendent piety, nor by the holy fillets of Apollo, whose priest he was.

—Nec te tuas plurima, Pantheus, Labentem pietas, nec Apollinis infula textit.—Ibid. v. 129.

I might here mention the practice of ancient tragedy, both Greek and Latin; but as this particular is touched upon in the paper above mentioned, I will pass it over in silence. I could produce passages out of Aristotle in favour of my opinion; and in one place he says that an absolutely virtuous man should not be represented as unhappy, this I do not justify any one who shall think fit to bring an absolutely virtuous man upon the stage. I know who are acquainted with that author's way of writing know very well that, to take the whole extent of his subject into his divisions of it, he often makes use of such cases as are imaginary, and not possible to practice. He himself declares that in tragedies as ended unhappily bore away the edge in theatrical contentions, from those which ended happily; and for the fortieth speculation, which I am now considering, as it has given reasons these are more apt to please an audience, so it proves that these are generally preferable to the other, though at the same time it affirms that many different tragedies have and may be written in both kinds.

I shall conclude with observing, that though the Spectator above mentioned is so far against the rule of poetical justice, as to affirm that good men may be brought to an unhappy catastrophe in tragedy, it is not say that ill men may go off unpunished. The reason for this distinction is very plain, namely, that the best of men are vicious enough to justify Providence for any misfortunes and afflictions which may befall them, but there are many men so wicked that they can have no claim or pretence to goodness. The best of men may deserve punishment, but the worst of men cannot deserve happiness.

549.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1712.

Quamvis digressu veteris confusus amici, Laudo tamen.—Juv. Sat. iii. 1.

Thou' griev'd at the departure of my friend, His purpose of retiring I commend.

SEVERE most people begin the world with a resolution to withdraw from it into a serious kind of study or retirement when they have made themselves easy in it. Our unhappiness is, that we find some excuse or other for deferring such our good resolutions until our intended retreat is cut off by death. But among all kinds of people there are none who are so hard to part with the world as those who grow old in the heaping up of riches. Their desires are so warped with their constant attention to it, that it is very difficult for them to give their minds another bent, and convert them towards those pleasures, which though they are proper for every stage of life, are so more especially for the last. Seneca describes an old usurer as so charmed with the pleasure of a certain purchase he calls it was the event of it he put it out again thought by a disinterested my worthy friend so much natural ease of mind, that I a pleasure. As we sole remaining me gave me an account in which he had been reckoned up to me which at another time of good fortune; but then, he termed providence, and blessed "Now," says he, "I am so used to being a debtor, that I often in manner with regard. In this case, when I find such innumerable means to cast them on the creditor side, I find. Now, though I am in my power to be I am resolved how yours that way. Surprised, my friend, myself to a more meet you no more.

I could not but be withstanding the law drew has since enlarged in the following my hands:—

"Good Mrs.

"Notwithstanding always rallied me from business, and sayings, that 'as he has got a little that there is one enough, and is de his life in the enjoyment of me so well, that I enjoyment of my useful to the public estate has been his nature, either to it is now fixed at tenements. I have of stocks, winds, and considerable purchase opportunity of being in setting my pocket them a comfortable industry. My garden and pasture-ground or rather workhouse, I am a great man starving in my spread of improvements thoughts are already fencing others; marshes. In fine, of this island, I am a spot as any in it there is not an inveterate to the best

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

loyment I so tever corner ing home husbandman of rain or a estate withtributing to it has been rown away others. But fresh air on find several
I am now of ind business and in order, nciling it to ore acquaint of charity, of this very in-where I may endow very ed husband-me to say my years, who all heir thoughts an how they saying, that I
You know ace; it is my ill permit you netimes, you ou, and shall mutton of my ds; and fruit ve free egress having any such a hearty

ant,
REPORT." er being en-reader next stitution of a

ER 1, 1712.

hlatu?
it ver. 138.
Roscommon.

ub, whereof I er, there are petitions, and election. At several indi-
men made use ry gentleman n he received up word that ce of the de-barrel of the ny life. The I intend to
ub. Some of Honeycomb
terests in the ing in it here-
x. A citizen me that he can company, and others to bribe me with the odd nine in case I may succeed Sir Andrew Freeport, which he thinks would raise the credit of that fund. I have several letters dated from Jenny Mann's, by gentlemen who are candidates for Captain Sentry's place; and a many from a coffee-house in Paul's churchyard of such who would fill up the vacancy occasioned by the death of my worthy friend the clergyman, whom can never mention but with a particular respect.

Having maturely weighed these several parties lars, with the many remonstrances that have been made to me on this subject, and considering how invidious an office I shall take upon me if I make the whole election depend upon my single voice and being unwilling to expose myself to those cal-mours, which on such an occasion will not fail to be raised against me for partiality, injustice, corruption, and other qualities, which my nature abhors I have formed to myself the project of a club as follows:—

I have thoughts of issuing out writs to all every of the clubs that are established in the city of London and Westminster, requiring them to choose out of their respective bodies a person of the greatest merit, and to return his name to me before Lady-day, at which time I intend to sit upon business.

By this means, I may have reason to hope, that the club over which I shall preside will be the very flower and quintessence of all other clubs. I have communicated this my project to none but a particular friend of mine, whom I have celebrated twice or thrice for his happiness in that kind of wit which is commonly known by the name of a pun. The only objection he makes to it is, that I shall raise up enemies to myself if I act with an irregularity and that my detractors, instead of giving me the usual title of Spectator, will be apt to call me the King of Clubs.

But to proceed on my intended project; it is well known that I at first set forth in this work as the character of a silent man; and I think I have so well preserved my taciturnity, that I do not remember to have violated it with three sentences in the space of almost two years. As a necessary result is my delight, I have made very few excursions in the conversations which I have related, beyond Yes or a No. By this means, my readers have had many good things which I have had in my heart though I did not care for uttering them.

Now in order to diversify my character, and to show the world how well I can talk if I have a mind I have thoughts of being very loquacious in the club which I have now under consideration. But that I may proceed the more regularly in this affair, I design, upon the first meeting of the said club, to have my mouth opened in form; intending to regulate myself in this particular by a certain ritual which I have by me, that contains all the ceremonies which are practised at the opening of the mouth of a cardinal. I have likewise examined the forms which were used of old by Pythagoras, when any of his scholars, after an apprenticeship of silence, was made free of his speech. In the mean time, as I have of late found my name in foreign papers upon less occasions, I question not but in these articles from Great Britain they will inform the world, that "the Spectator's mouth is to be opened on the twenty-fifth of March next." I may perhaps publish a very useful paper at that time of the proceedings in that solemnity, and of the persons who shall assist at it. But of this more hereafter.—D.

No. 551.] TUESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1712.

Sic honor et nomen divinis vatibus atque Carmenibus venit. ———— Hos. Ars Poet. ver. 400.

So ancient is the pedigree of verse,
And so divine a poet's function.—Roscommon.

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“WHEN men of worthy and excelling geniuses have obliged the world with beautiful and instructive writings, it is in the nature of gratitude that praise should be returned them, as one proper consequent reward of their performances. Nor has mankind ever been so degenerately sunk but they have made his return, and even when they have not been brought up by the generous endeavour so as to receive the advantages designed by it. This praise, which arises first in the mouth of particular persons, spreads and lasts according to the merit of authors; and when it thus meets with a full success changes its denomination, and is called fame. They, who have happily arrived at this, are, even while they live, inflamed by the acknowledgments of others, and spurred on to new undertakings for the benefit of mankind, notwithstanding the detraction which some abject tempers would cast upon them: not when they debase, their characters being free from the shadow which envy laid them under, begin to shine out with the greater splendour; their spirits survive in their works; they are admitted into the highest companies, and they continue pleasing and instructing posterity from age to age. Some of us best gain a character, by being able to show that they are no strangers to them: and others obtain a new warmth to labour for the happiness and use of mankind, from a reflection upon those honours which are paid to their memories.

“The thought of this took me up as I turned over those epigrams which are the remains of several of the poets of Greece, and perceived many dedicated to the fame of those who had excelled in beautiful poetic performances. Wherefore, in pursuance to my thought, I concluded to do something along with them to bring their praises into a new light and language, for the encouragement of those whose modest tempers may be deterred by the fear of envy or detraction from fair attempts, to which their parts might render them equal. You will perceive them, if they follow, to be conceived in the form of epigrams, a sort of writing which is wholly set apart for short-pointed method of praise.

ON ORPHEUS, WRITTEN BY ANTIPATER

No longer, Orpheus, shall thy sacred strains Lead stones, and trees, and beasts along the plains:
No longer soothe the boisterous winds to sleep, Or still the billows of the raging deep.
For thou art gone. The Muses mourn thy fall In solemn strains, thy mother most of all, Ye mortals, idly for your sons ye moan, If thus a goddess could not save her own.

“Observe here, that if we take the fable for granted, as it was believed to be in that age when an epigram was written, the turn appears to have been set to the gods, and a resigning spirit in its application. But if we consider the point with respect to our present knowledge, it will be less esteemed; though the author himself, because he believed it, may still be more valued than any one who should now write with a point of the same nature.

• ON HOMER, BY ALPHEUS OF MYTILENE.

Still in our ears Andromache complains, And still in sight the fate of Troy remains: Still Ajax fights, still Hector's dusky along Such strange enchantment dwells in Homer's song.

Whose birth
For all the

“The thought and depending looks as if it were contending for but when you story the poet for a kind of an amongst its sev

ON A

This tomb
Let ivy wreath
And from its Let wells of
So will time
If any please

“The poet author, and he own head with seems to love h nothing but pla by entering in humour is eas its air, raised b a turn as he m here because th his honour; an advise others, cautiously avoi only where the

ON

Divine Earls
So fair, is no
So much as Thy name a

“The thought it is general, th because it' point would be better we join it with bounds it, to the gives his praise have been a sta not to have four worthy.

ON SO

Wind, gentle Around the Sweet ivy, w
With bluish
Thus will th
Prove grate
Whose soul,
Among the

“This epigram
the former: the seemed closer co tion. I fancied is generally ma ting with his ha him. This look cause the image the original as plain them so.

ON MENAN

The very be
To taste the
The very Gr
Their happy
Thus still yo
And raise its

“This epigram

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

kably with a has also told ither a set or her the glory ke the nation own it present to re it returned ch have been t always pre-ay more suc-
: another, let as I have at-rit and art of me up to it.
upon fable:
ng qualifica-general; it is pose to raise m justly. I xcellent epi-ind of grave tfully speaks and dead to lly deceased.
how to leave

IS

as,

n.

APH.

d,

l.

mail

'

ring,

"

having provery ingenious it in the voough to have

No. 551, some wits, in com-could not for-same collec-mpliment to him.

all that follows,
was not printed tion of 1712

Who first transcribed the famous Trojan war, And wise Ulysses' acts, O Jove, make known For since 'tis certain thus these poems are, No more let Homer boast they are his own

" If you think it worthy of a place in your speculations, for aught I know (by that means) it may in time be printed as often in English as it has already been in Greek.

" I am (like the rest of the world),

" Sir, your great Admirer,

" 4th Dec.

" G. R."

The reader may observe that the beauty of the epigram is different from that of any in the forges ing. An irony is looked upon as the finest pal-lative of praise; and very often conveys the noblest panegyric under the appearance of satire. Home is here seemingly accused and treated as a plagiarist, but what is drawn up in the form of an accusation is certainly, as my correspondent observes, the greatest compliment that could have been paid to that divine poet.

" DEAR MR. SPECTATOR,

" I am a gentleman of a pretty good fortune, and of a temper impatient of any thing which I think injury. However, I always quarrelled according to law, and instead of attacking my adversary by the dangerous method of sword and pistol, I made my assaults by that more secure one of writ or warrant.
I cannot help telling you, that either by the justice of my causes or the superiority of my conduct, I have been generally successful; and to my great satisfaction I can say it, that by three actions of slander, and half-a-dozen trespasses, I have for several years enjoyed a perfect tranquillity in my reputation and estate: by these means, also, I have been made known to the judges; the serjeants of our circuit are my intimate friends; and the best mental counsel pay a very profound respect to me who has made so great a figure in the law. Affairs of consequence having brought me to town, I had the curiosity the other day to visit Westminster-hall, and, having placed myself in one of the courts expected to be most agreeably entertained. After the court and counsel were with due ceremony seated up stands a learned gentleman, and began, When this matter was last "stirred" before your lordships; the next humbly moved to "quash" the dictment; another complained that his adversary had "snapped" a judgment; the next informed the court that his client was stripped of his possession; another begged leave to acquaint his lordship that they had been "saddled" with costs. At last we got a grave serjeant, and told us his client had been "hung up" a whole term by a writ of error. At this I could bear it no longer, but came higher, and resolved to apply myself to your honour to interpose with these gentlemen, that they would leave off such low and unnatural expressions: for surely though the lawyers subscribe to hideous French and false Latin, yet they should let their clients have a little decent and proper English for their jargon. What man that has a value for a good name would like to have it said in a public court, that Mr. Such-a-one was stript, saddled, or hung-up? This being what has escaped your spectatorial observation, be pleased to correct such an illiberal cant among profane speakers, and you will infinitely oblige,

" Your humble Servant,

" PHILISTICK."

" Joe's Coffee-house, Nov. 28."

* No. 551 is not lettered in the Spectator, but has a signature in the 6vo. or 12mo. editions of 1712.

No. 552.] WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1712.

Qui pręgravat ariesInfra se positas, extinctus amabitur idem.—Hox. 2 Ep. l. 13.

For those are hated that excel the rest.

Although, when dead, they are belov'd and blest.—Cæsar.

As I was tumbling about the town the other day in a hackney-coach, and delighting myself with busy scenes in the shops on each side of me, it came into my head, with no small remorse, that I had not seen frequent enough in the mention and recommendation of the industrious part of mankind. It very naturally upon this occasion touched my conscience in particular, that I had not acquitted myself to my friend Mr. Peter Motteux. That industrious man of trade, and formerly brother of the mill, has dedicated to me a poem upon tea. It could injure him, as a man of business, if I did not let the world know that the author of so good verses rit them before he was concerned in traffic. In order to expiate my negligence towards him, I immediately resolved to make him a visit. I found it spacious warehouses filled and adorned with tea, china, and India-ware. I could observe a beautiful resemblance of the whole; and such different and considerable branches of trade carried on in the same house, I exulted in seeing disposed by a poetical head. In one place were exposed to view silks of various shades and colours, rich brocades, and the wealthiest product of foreign looms. Here you might see the finest laces held up by the fairest hands; and there, examined by the beautiful eyes of the buyers, the most delicate cambrics, muslins, and linens. I could not but congratulate my friend to the humble, but I hope beneficial, use he had made of his talents, and wished I could be a patron to his trade, as he had been pleased to make me of his poetry. The honest man has I know that modest desire of gain which is peculiar to those who understand better things than riches; and I dare say he would be contented with much less than that is called wealth in that quarter of the town which he inhabits, and will oblige all his customers with demands agreeable to the moderation of his desires.

Among other omissions of which I have been also guilty, with relation to men of industry of a superior order, I must acknowledge my silence towards a proposal frequently enclosed to me by Mr. Renatus Læris, organ-builder. The ambition of this artist is to erect an organ in St. Paul's cathedral, over the west door, at the entrance into the body of the church, which in art and magnificence shall transcend any work of that kind ever before intended. The proposal in perspicuous language sets forth the honour and advantage such a performance would be to the British name, as well as that it would apply the power of sounds in a manner more amazingly terrible than perhaps has yet been known, and I am sure to an end much more worthy. Had so vast sums which have been laid out upon operas about skill or conduct, and to no other purpose as to suspend or vitiate our understandings, been proposed this way, we should now perhaps have had a machine so formed as to strike the minds of half a people at once in a place of worship, with a forgetfulness of present care and calamity, and a hope of endless rapture, joy, and hallelujah hereafter.

When I am doing this justice, I am not to forget a best mechanic of my acquaintance, that useful servant to sciences and knowledge, Mr. John Rowley; but think I lay a great obligation on the public, by acquainting them with a pair of new globes, which I have lately purchased in the said

IN

“Care shall be placed according to the manner of the many of Cassini, Mr. Flamsteed, and Mr. Halley, Savilian professor of astronomy, from whatever globe more exact.”

“That all the figures, new, and just, distinct, and true magnitude of the stars, according to the observation of the stars. They have been expressed in any globe.”

IN

“That by reason of the errors both in the Eastern and Western hemispheres, Asia, and Africa, in a manner wholly new, and not noted that the latitude of the globe of other great and necessary remarkable countries omitted in other the best discovery. Lastly, that the seasons, and other parts of the tropics, be represented.”

“Now, in reference to the universal use, and necessary parts of the globe, to the honour of the charge of carrying it, and sired that all geographers should be so great a work, following conditions.”

“I. The underwriter with a compass thirty inches diameter, adorned, the stars distinguished, the circles, and inaccurately divided, really appear, in and intelligent than will be demonstrated.”

“II. Whosoever shall pay twenty-five pounds for a pair of the globes, shall present them to any public library, arms, name, title, inserted in some place.”

“III. That every year the sum of ten pounds be delivered of the sum up. And that the twelve months shall be completed; and with globes in the hands of the underwriter.”

“IV. That after be sold to a third party, thirty pounds.”

“V. That, if the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

1712, the
and by Mr. le-bar, who ding to the

ER 4, 1712,

n.
p. xiv. 35.

BRECH.

Monday last
ers. Among tain projecthat in all y mouth will eholders, he hall for the ic ceremony.
himself, pro-ries on every nat occasion.
petitioning may have the make to the mouth. I am reat canvas-n, upon the me on those noned them.
to election,
i. If I find of my silence her exigency ctions in so meet before i to my satisfying to a full be given. at I am not a ncern which resent design se with much nost outlying
his occasion,
rith me about the remotest se I am very erwick-upon-compares the uted in these n; "which,"
once for all,
he work must its of ground little time be ntleman lays ready sprouter themselves ny disappear-he, "but the s they know r's eye; and oad-brimmed at I question and within a your paper."
come to my written as the ceased with as it is sent me from gentlemen who belong to a bed which I shall always honour, and where (I cannot speak it without a secret pride) my speculations have met with a very kind reception. It is usual for poets, upon the publishing of their works, to print before them such copies of verses as have been made in their praise. Not that you must imagine they are pleased with their own commendation, but because the elegant compositions of their friends should not be lost. I must make the same apology for the publication of the ensuing letter, to which I have suppressed no part of those praises that are given my speculations with too lavish and good-natured a hand; though my correspondents can witness for me, that at other times I have generally blotted out those parts in the letters which I have received from them.

O.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"In spite of your invincible silence you have found out the method of being the most agreeable companion in the world: that kind of conversation which you hold with the town has the good feature of being always pleasing to the men of taste and leisure, and never offensive to those of hurry and business. You are never heard but at what Horace calls destro tempore, and have the happiness to observe the politic rule which the same discerning author gave his friend, when he enjoined him to deliver his book to Augustus:—

Si validus, si lætus erit, si denique poscet.—I Ep. lib. 2.

—When vexing cares are fled, When well, when merry, when he asks to read.—CHURCH.

You never begin to talk but when people are desirous to hear you; and I defy any one to be out of humour until you leave off. But I am led unconsciously into reflections foreign to the original design of this epistle; which was to let you know, that some unfeigned admirers of your inimitable papers, who could, without any flattery, greet you with the salutation used to the eastern monarchs, viz. "O Spectator, live for ever," have lately been under the same apprehensions with Mr. Philo-Spec.; that the haste you have made to dispatch your best friends portends no long duration to your own short visits. We could not, indeed, find any just grounds for complaint in the method you took to dissolve the venerable body; no, the world was not worthy of your divine. Will Honeycomb could not, with his reputation, live single any longer. It was high time for the Templar to turn himself to Coke; and Sir Roger's dying was the wisest thing he ever did in his life. It was, however, matter of great grief to us, to think that we were in danger of losing so elegant and valuable an entertainment. And we could not, without sorrow, reflect that we were fated to have nothing to interrupt our sips in the morning and to suspend our coffee in mid-air, between our lips and right ear, but the ordinary trash of new papers. We resolved, therefore, not to part with you so. But since, to make use of your own allusion, the cherries began now to crowd the market and their season was almost over, we consulted of future enjoyments, and endeavoured to make the exquisite pleasure that delicious fruit gave us last as lasting as we could, and by drying them, preserve their stay beyond its natural date. We even thought thus they have not a flavour equal to their fresh bloom; but yet, under this disadvantage, they peep the palate, and become a salver-better than at its first appearance. To speak plain, number of us who have begun your and meet two nights in the week in you a re-hearing. We never come out drinking your health, and as without general expressions of thanks to night's improvement. This we conceive useful institution than any other club excepting even that of Ugly Faces. manifest advantage over that renowned respect to Mr. Spectator's company. they may brag that you sometimes make appearance amongst them, it is impossible should ever get a word from you, are with us the reverse of what Phaedra have his mistress be in his rival's comment in your absence.' We make you and as long as we please; and, let me seldom hold your tongue for the whole promise myself you will look with an upon a meeting which owes its original emulation among its members, who most profound respect for your paper; have a very great value for your person: say you can no where find four more writers, and humble Servants, than

"T. F. G. S. J. T. E. F."

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1712.

intanda via est, qua me quoque possim no, victorque virum volitare per ora.

VIRG. Georg. lib. 9.

I must attempt, my grovelling name To lift, and wing my flight to fame.—DAYDEN.

For the following essay, as well for its down rules out of Tully for pronunciation, to the ingenious author of a poem lately, entitled An Ode to the Creator of the world, by the Fragments of Orpheus. I mark, made as I remember by a celebrated author, that no man ever pushed his art as it was able to extend. I shall not alter this assertion be strictly true. It is said, that men of the greatest applications can look back upon many years, and neglected parts of time, which were away from them unemployed; and if any one considering person in the present to fancy with himself, at some time or other his life were to begin again he could not be so much provoked to cast on itself this reproach, when the examples of such persons are presented to it as have far outshot the generality in learning, arts, or any valuations.

Of the most extensive and improved genius, I had any instance of in our own nation, was that of Sir Francis Bacon, Lord of this great man, by an extraordinary compass of thought, and indefatigable industry, amassed to himself such stores of knowledge, that we cannot look upon without amazement, seemed to have grasped all that was in books before his time; and, not that, he began to strike out new tracts of knowledge to be travelled over by any one compass of the longest life. These could only mark down, like imperfect steps, on supposed points of land, to be verified and ascertained by the industry of after-ages, who should produce or conjectures.

"The excellent Mr. Boyle seems to have been designed to the labours and inquiries of genius I have just mentioned experiments, he in a great number of plans and outlines of science had sketched out. His life was of nature through a great number of changes, and in the most rational adoration of its divine Author."

"It would be impossible for those who have extended their curiosity, two, in the studies they pursued, readers on this occasion will be brought to a third,* who is wise the glory of our own age, and the improvements which others had made in mathematical knowledge has so many hands, as to afford at once a great capacity is of a kind that is exhaustible the subject of that remark in holy writ, that we seek to find out the works of God, and to the end, yet shall he be glorified."

"I cannot help mentioning more of a different kind in order to one as may serve to show the nature and of application, an instance of a universal genius. The person I mean is Leonardo da Vinci, painter, descended from a noble family, about the beginning of the sixteenth century, his profession of history-painter, master, that some have affirmed went before him. It is the envy of Michael Angelo, who was and that from the study of anatomy, he learned his best manner, a master too in sculpture, and skilful in anatomy, mathematics. The aqueduct from the river Arno, is mentioned as a work of his contrived in several languages, and was the studies of history, philosophy, and natural history. Though it is not necessary to mention I cannot but take notice, that he mentioned likewise his particular instances of his strength and courage is described to have been of a great and a master of all gentle exercises. We are told that his moral education to his natural and intellectual faculties, that he was of an honest and adorned with great sweetness of temper. I break off the account of his life, which will be an entertainment to our readers, to find so remarkable a genius, distinguished by as remarkable a death. The fame of his works, and a universal esteem, he was in France, where, after some time, Francis the First coming to Paris, he retired to himself in his bed to acknowledge what was done him by that visit, and Leonardo, faintly expired in the arms of that monarch."

"It is impossible to attend to these without being raised * Sir Isaac Newton. * He was born never publicly acknowledged them. We put other friends upon importuning him, I shall end what I think I am obliged to his head, by giving my reader this hint of my judgment of my productions—that the next upon them would be an account when The Tender Husband was in England.

My reader will also find some papers which are in the letter X, for which he is obliged to the gentleman who diverted the town with the letter to The Distressed Mother. I might have sent these several papers with the free consent of gentlemen, who did not write them, and of being known for the authors. But, and sincere behaviour ought to be pre-emptive considerations, I would not let my acquaintance with a consciousness of having praise which is not my right.

Assistances which I have had have been by letter, sometimes by whole papers, sometimes by short hints from unknown hands. I have been able to trace favours of this kind with certainty, but to the following names, in the order wherein I received the hints: the first I am going to name cautioned in a list wherein he would not precede. The persons to whom I am indebted for acknowledgments are, Mr. Henry Pope, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Carey of New Oxford, Mr. Tickell of Queen's in the University, Mr. Parnell and Mr. Eusden of Cambridge. Thus, to speak in the language of my late friend, Sir Andrew Freeport, I add my accounts with all my creditors for printing. But as these excellent performers would not have seen the light without this paper, I may still arrogate to myself their being communicated to the public. Nothing more to add, but having swelled five hundred and fifty-five papers, they are now bound into seven volumes, four of which are published, and the three others in the press. I will not be demanded of me why I now publish I must own myself obliged to give to the town of my time hereafter; since their partiality to me is so great, that of the former volumes of Spectators of a thousand each book, is already sold off, and each half-sheet has brought into the market one week with another, above 200. I am glad from the single paper, notwithstanding the tax reduced it to less than half the number formerly printed before the tax was laid. I beseech the continuance of this inclination what I may hereafter produce, and in many occurrences of my life tasted of pain and sorrow, that I am proof against more prosperous circumstances than those to which my own industry can possess me.

I am, my good-natured Reader,

Your most obedient,

Most obliged humble Servant,

RICHARD STEELE.

et plaudite. Ter.

My next letter regards an ingenious set of people who have done me the honour to make their society:—

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“The academy of painting in London, having done you the honour to choose you one of their members, and a lively art, which before was regarded as a Spectator, has asked you to be under the same care of her interests.

“The honour of our country in the matter I am going to defend (and perhaps other nations will be national false humility as to glory; and, though we boast the world in things where we are in other things we attribute which we ourselves possess particularly in the art of painting.

“Painting is an art of which much for any mortal man to do in all its parts; it is enough to paint faces, history, landscape, pieces, fruit, flowers, or designs. I have ever been excellent in all the kinds (in number) of these several kinds of painting. I take upon me to call every kind of painting.

“And as one man may be better, but unable to paint a face well, and so of the rest; in some kinds of painting, and better in other climates.

“Italy may have the pretensions for history-painting; a neat finished manner of variety, janty, fluttering pictures; traits; but to give the honour of painting to any one account of their excellence is like adjudging the prize of or burlesque poetry, to him any one of them.

“Where there are the most helps and encouragement suppose an art will arrive to by this rule let us consider respect to face-painting. It delights so much in having or relations pictures; whether good-nature, or having a lot being encouraged in that pictures, which the purity of free use of, or from whatever are not inferior to those of rather they are greater; statues and bas-reliefs which history-painters, the beauties which England is confessed painters; and, besides, we number of the works of the best any people, not without a copy of the most excellent in every kind. And for encouragement of the English nation degree as artists have no reason.

“And accordingly, in a place where so well performed I do not whether it has lain in but I have, and pretend to have seen what is done abroad that the honour of that trade due to us. I appeal to the truth of what I assert.

excelled our their own ingenation distinargument in be observed or any one of prejudices in y considerable
-painters.
ntry, and has stead of going is for portrait-

Hither such aly, Germany, y other kinds where it is in blessed virgin uke. I dare lesire another e would come t our present his improve-m, would per-signer living.

l rvant," &c.
The Weather
ved, but came when I left off cellent sentiwork to Mr.

STERLE."

8, 1714.

ina pastus,
a tegebat,
uventa,
sulcia.
i. Æn. li. 471.
snake,
returns,
rus:
it sides
rides:
g.
—DRYDEN.

ectator, I ac-of electing a in it after a tion and the ng it so easy, a fifty years'
world under to talk like full freedom

ie history of w a talkative e give an ac-has been proto be as red in history,
n of Cæsus,

volume of the ediate time was after having been many years as much longer-as myself.

Upon the first opening of my mouth I made speech, consisting of about half a dozen well-turned periods; but grew so very hoarse upon it, that three days together, instead of finding the use of tongue, I was afraid that I had quite lost.
Besides, the unusual extension of my muscles this occasion made my face ache on both sides, such a degree, that nothing but an invincible resultion and perseverance could have prevented from falling back to my monosyllables.

I afterward made several essays towards spee-ing; and that I might not be startled at my voice which has happened to me more than once used to read aloud in my chamber, and have sit-stood in the middle of the street to call a coach where I knew there was none within hearing.

When I was thus grown pretty well acquaint-with my own voice, I laid hold of all opportunity to exert it. Not caring however to speak much myself, and to draw upon me the whole attention those I conversed with, I used for some time walk every morning in the Mall, and talk in close with a parcel of Frenchmen. I found my modesty greatly relieved by the communicative temper this nation, who are so very sociable as to think they are never better company than when they are all opening at the same time.

I then fancied I might receive great benefit from female conversation, and that I should have the convenience of talking with the greater freedom, as I was not under any impediment of thinking; therefore threw myself into an assembly of ladies, but could not for my life get in a word among them, and found that if I did not change my company, was in danger of being reduced to my primitive taciturnity.

The coffee-houses have ever since been my chief places of resort, where I have made the greatest improvements; in order to which I have taken particular care never to be of the same opinion with the man I conversed with. I was a Tory at Rutland's and a Whig at Child's, a friend to the Englishman or an advocate for the Examiner, as it best suited my turn: some fancy me a great enemy to the French king, though in reality I only make use of him for a help to discourse. In short, I wrangle and dispute for exercise; and have carried the point so far, that I was once like to have been run through the body for making a little too free with my betters.

In a word, I am quite another man in what I was —Nil fuit unquam

Tam dispar sibi

Hor. l. Ep. li. 15.

Nothing was ever so unlike itself

My old acquaintance scarce knew me, nay, was asked the other day by a Jew at Jonathan's whether I was not related to a dumb gentleman who used to come to that coffee-house? But I think I never was better pleased in my life than about a week ago, when, as I was battling it across the table with a young Templar, his companion gave him a pull by the sleeve, begging him to come away, for that the old prig would talk him to death.

Being now a very good proficient in discourse, I shall appear in the world with this addition to my character, that my countrymen may reap the fruit of my new-acquired loquacity.

Those who have been present at public disputes in the university know that it is usual to maintain heresies for argument's sake. I have heard a man advent Socinian for half an hour, who has heretofore divine all his life after. I have found a method to accomplish myself in the science, having talked above a twelve-month so much for the benefit of my hearers, as

But, since I have now gained the art, I have been so long endeavouring after, I shall make a right use of it, and shall think myself obliged for the future to speak always in sincerity of heart. While a man is learning, he practises both on friend and foe; but when he is a master in the art, he never exerts himself but he thinks the right side.

My last allusion may not give my reader a true idea of my design in this paper, I must here declare that the author of it is of no faction; friend to no interests but those of truth; nor a foe to any but those of vice and folly. I make more noise in the world than I do, I am still resolved to act in it as a true spectator. It is not my ambition to be numbered either of whigs or tories, but I would be good men; and I could heartily wish that the faults common to both parties, which are sufficient matter to work upon, without resorting to those which are peculiar to either.

A multitude of counsellors there is safety, and I think ourselves the securest nation in the world. Most of our garrets are inhabited by men who watch over the liberties of their country, and make a shift to keep themselves from taking into their care the properties of their subjects.

Politicians of both sides have already set the nation into a most unnatural ferment, I am far from endeavouring to raise it to a pitch, that, on the contrary, it shall be the object of my papers to inspire my countrymen with a mutual good-will and benevolence. Faults either party may be guilty of, they are inflamed than cured by those reproaches cast upon one another. The most likely way to rectify any man's conduct is by referring to him the principles of truth and religion and virtue; and so long as he acts in conformity to these principles, whatever party he is not fail of being a good Englishman, and of his country.

Persons concerned in this work, the most of them, or at least of such as desire it, are published hereafter; until which time I shall leave the courteous reader to suspend his judgment rather to consider what is written than who writes it.

I have adjusted all necessary preliminaries before I shall enter, I shall not trouble him with any long discourses, but proceed in my old manner to entertain him with speculations on the subject that falls in my way.

Among all the accounts I do not remember one that is more honourable than the following passage. As an advocate was pleading before one of the prætors, he produced a single witness in a point of testimony of two persons; he insisted on the integrity of the witness he had produced; but the prætor, who the law required two witnesses of one, though it were Cato, would not receive from a person who sat at the prætor's table, while Cato was still living, a thousand examples, he had gained among his countrymen, in count of his sincerity.

When such an inflexible integrity is joined and qualified by the good breeding, there is no need of the whole catalogue of social virtues; ever, ought to take great care to get out of his veracity, nor to be free from prejudice of his virtue.

This subject is exquisitely handled in an elegant sermon of the great master, I shall beg leave to transcribe a few sentences as a proper introduction to the letter, which I shall make use of in this speculation.

"The old English plainness and generous integrity of nature, which always argues a true disposition, which always argues a true resolution, and is usually accompanied with a great resolution, is in a great measure lost."

"The dialect of conversation is now swelled with vanity and affected (as I may say) of expression, that if a man that has been in the world should return into the world, he would want a dictionary to help him in his language, and to know the meaning of the phrase in fashion; and I believe at what a low rate he would pass in current payment; to understand it, it would be necessary for him to bring himself with a good conscience, to convert terms and in their own way."

I have by me a letter from a person of great curiosity, and which is a confirmation to the foregoing account of the most excellent prelate, who was written in King Charles's time, and was ambassador of Bantam,† to England.

"MASTER,

"The people where I am, are more than from their hearts than from their heads, and thou knowest the inclination of the places do not know what they say. They call thee and thy subjects, and we speak what we mean; and we mean what we say; and we mean another: truth they mean politeness. Upon this account, I was sent from the king to tell thee that he was extremely 71 MONDAY, JUNE 21, 1714.

non timet ambiguum, Tyriosque bilingues.

VIRG. ÆN. I. 665.

ambiguous race, and Tyrians double-tongued.

is nothing," says Plato, "so delightful as the speaking of truth." For this is no conversation so agreeable as that of integrity, who hears without any intention to deceive, and speaks without any intention † Archbishop Tillotson, vol. II. p. 162.

was troubled
If on my ac-an hour he ing had haptold me, by do me any which I de-ous for me;
his promise,
I lodged the sired me to his house as ruing began order to let some of the o have made sooner saw to desire me such doings this nation, had asked a g's servants, r, that I had prised at his ing, 'What
for another,
However, I
e would lend in this couns treacherous

he great men y asking tending by accikind of lie a il to a great hou wouldst eeive a hunknow how I eople, since
sem. When enerally told ps I saw him ment before.
tion are phyys ask me is, o me above a ot only thus it in a more their hands, hough at the
' drink their found by ex-often pretend manner; but the goodness
their wishes.
this double-himself once antam!"

E 23, 1714.

em
t?
re!
a, ur; horse
a
t

file, data vadihuc, qui nunc abstractus in vobis est.
Sed et felices viventes in vobis.
Cetera de morte hoc (adit) erat nunc in vobis Delasare valent Falgum. Ne te nunc, qui Quo rem deservit. In quo dicit, in quo dicit, Jan faciam quod vultis, et in quo nunc nunc.
Mercator; in vobis nunc nunc nunc. In vobis Vos hinc nunc nunc nunc nunc. In vobis Quid stat? Nunc. Atque nunc nunc nunc.

Thos. 1. 1. 1.

Whence is't, Macenna, that so few approve The state they're plac'd in, and incline to move?
Whether against their will by fate impos'd, Or by consent and prudent choice expos'd?
Happy the merchant! the old soldier cross, Broke with fatigues and warlike enterprise.
The merchant, when the dreaded hurricane Tosses his wealthy cargo on the main, Applauds the wars and toils of a campaign;
There an engagement soon decides your doom, Bravely to die, or come victorious home.
The lawyer vows the farmer's life is best,
When at the dawn the clients break his rest.
The farmer, having put in half 't appear,
And forc'd to town, cries they are happiest there:
With thousands more of this inconstant race, Would tire e'en Fabius to relate each case.
Not to detain you longer, pray attend,
The issue of all this: Should Jove descend, And grant to every man his rash demand,
To run his lengths with a neglectful hand:
First, grant the harass'd warrior a release, Bid him to trade, and try the faithful seas,
To purchase treasure and declining seas;
Next, call the pleader from his learned strife, To the calm blessings of a country life;
And with these separate demands dissent Each suppliant to enjoy the promis'd bliss: Don't you believe they'd run? Not one will move, Though proffer'd to be happy from above.—HARRIS.

It is a celebrated thought of Socrates, that if all the misfortunes of mankind were cast into a public stock, in order to be equally distributed among all whole species, those who now think themselves the most unhappy would prefer the share they were already possessed of before that which would fall in their lot by such a division. Horace has carried this thought a great deal further in the motto of my paper, which implies, that the hardships or misfortunes we are under are more easy to us than those of any other person would be, in case we could change conditions with him.

As I was ruminating upon these two remarks, as seated in my elbow-chair, I insensibly fell asleep when on a sudden methought there was a peevish notion made by Jupiter, that every mortal should bring in his griefs and calamities, and throw them together in a heap. There was a large plain appointed for this purpose. I took my stand in the centre of it, and saw with a great deal of pleasure the whole human species marching one after another, as throwing down their several loads, which immediately grew up into a prodigious mountain, that seemed to rise above the clouds.

There was a certain lady of a thin wiry shape, who was very active in this solemnity. She carried a magnifying glass in one of her hands, and was clothed in a loose flowing robe, embroidered with several figures of fiends and spectres, that discovered themselves in a thousand chimerical shapes as the garment hovered in the wind. There was something wild and distracted in her looks. Her name was Fancy. She led up every mortal to the appointed place, after having very officiously aided him in making up his pack, and laying it upon his shoulders. My heart melted within me to see my fellow-creatures groaning under their respective burdens, and to consider that prodigious bulk of human calamities which lay before me.

There were, however, several persons who go version upon this occasion. I observed ag in a farce very carefully concealed d embroidered cloak, which, upon his into the heap, I discovered to be Pother, after a great deal of puffing, threw ggage, which, upon examining, I found life.

re multitudes of lovers saddled with very burdens composed of darts and flames; was very odd, though they sighed as if would break under these bundles of cas-ty could not persuade themselves to cast be heap, when they came up to it; but, faint efforts, shook their heads, and way as heavy loaden as they came. I ades of old women throw down their and several young ones who stripped of a tawny skin. There were very great noses, large lips, and rusty teeth. The s, I was surprised to see the greatest part tain made up of bodily deformities. Obe advancing towards the heap with a than ordinary upon his back, I found ear approach that it was only a natural h he disposed of with great joy of heart collection of human miseries. There se distempers of all sorts; though I could serve, that there were many more imareal. One little packet I could not but of, which was a complication of all the ident to human nature, and was in the great many fine people; this was called

But what most of all surprised me, was made, that there was not a single vice own into the whole heap; at which I uch astonished, having concluded within every one would take this opportunity rid of his passions, prejudices, and notice in particular of a very profligate I did not question came loaden with his upon searching into his bundle I found of throwing his guilt from him, he had own his memory. He was followed by flesh rogue, who flung away his modesty is ignorance.

a whole race of mankind had thus cast as, the phantom which had been so busy asion, seeing me an idle Spectator of e, approached towards me. I grew un-presence, when of a sudden she held her glass full before my eyes. I no sooner in it, but was startled at the shortness now appeared to me in its utmost aggra-e immoderate breadth of the features ery much out of humour with my own e, upon which I threw it from me like a appened very luckily that one who stood ast before thrown down his visage, which is too long for him. It was indeed ex-most shameful length; I believe the very odestly speaking, as long as my whole ad both of us an opportunity of mends; and all the contributions being now every man was at liberty to exchange es for those of another person. But se many new incidents in the sequel of I shall reserve them for the subject of
 er.

No. 559.] FRIDAY

Quid causo est, merito quod Iratus buccas inflet, neque Tam facilem dicat, votis

Were it not just that Jove Should drive these triflers And unrelenting stand with

In my last paper I gave mountain of miseries which several calamities that afflisaw with unspeakable ple-thus delivered from its sore time, as we stood round the several materials of which was scarcely a mortal in did not discover what his blessings of life, and won-them ever came to look up grievances.

As we were regarding fusion of miseries, this ch-issued out a second proc-was now at liberty to exch-return to his habitation was should be delivered to h-

Upon this, Fancy began and, parcelling out the wh-activity, recommended to packet. The hurry and co-not to be expressed. Som-made upon the occasion I public. A venerable gray laid down the cholic, and heir to his estate, snatched had been thrown into the l-The graceless youth, in l-hour, pulled the old gentle-had liked to have knocked meeting the true father, wha fit of the gripes, he beggagain, and give him back incapable either of them-they had made. A poor gal-down his chains, took up but made such wry faces, tceive he was no great gal-was pleasant enough to se-that were made, for sickness against want of appetite, an-

The female world were selves in bartering for fea-a lock of gray hairs for a making over a short waistders, and a third cheapenputation: but on all these one of them who did not t-soon as she had got it in more disagreeable than th-same observation on every lamity which every one i-upon himself in lieu of w-whether it be that all the in some measure suited a strength, or that every eviable by our being accustermine.

I could not from my h-poor hump-backed gentle-former paper, who went off son with a stone in his blad-man who had struck up th-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ly of ladies, who used shoulders peeping over particular adventure. had no sooner taken he made such a gro-looked upon him I myself, insomuch that utenance. The poor f the ridicule, that I t he had done; on the elf had no great reason touch my forehead, I d my finger upon my se was exceeding pro-e unlucky knocks as I y face, and aiming at two other gentlemen ne ridiculous circum-

foolish swop between nd two long trapsticks One of these looked s, and was so lifted up y height, that his head the other made such pted to walk, that he forward upon his new to be a pleasant kind n the ground, and told of wine that he did not I drew from him in a buted among the two ous sight, as they wane pressure of their se-plain was filled with ans and lamentations. mpassion on the poor ond time to lay down give every one his own mselves with a great the phantom who had sions was commanded in her stead a goddess er motions were steady t serious but cheerful. ast her eyes towards on Jupiter: her name ooner placed herself by that I thought very re-unk to such a degree.

d part so big as it was ed every man his own g him how to bear it in r, he marched off with ell pleased that he had e as to the kind of evils of morality to be drawn om it never to repine at envy the happiness of e for any man to form hbour's sufferings; for ormined never to think plaints, but to regard atures with sentiments

JUNE 28, 1714.

—OVID, Met. l. 747.
softly breaks.—DANF.

EVERY one has heard of the famous co-who, according to the opinion of the vulgstudied himself dumb; for which reason, I believed, he delivers out his oracles in writing that as it will, the blind Teresias was no famous in Greece than this dumb artist has for some years last past in the cities of Lond-Westminster. Thus much for the profound man who honours me with the following ep-" Sir, From my Cell, June 24,

" Being informed that you have lately use of your tongue, I have some thoughts of ing your example, that I may be a fortune properly speaking. I am grown weary of su-urnity, and having served my country man under the title of 'the dumb doctor,' I sh-prophesy by word of mouth, and (as Mr. L-of the magpie, who you know was a great teller among the ancients) chatter futurity. hitherto chosen to receive questions and answers in writing, that I might avoid the ness and trouble of debates, my querists generally of a humour to think that they have predictions enough for their money. In sh-my case has been something like that of the creeet animals the monkeys, who, as the tell us, can speak if they would, but purpose it, that they may not be made to work. hitherto gained a livelihood by holding my but shall now open my mouth in order to fil-I appear a little word-bound in my first and responses, I hope it will not be imputed want of foresight, but to the long disuse of I doubt not by this invention to have all my customers over again; for if I have promised them lovers or husbands, riches or good fu-my design to confirm to them, ried eue, what already given them under my hand. If y-honour me with a visit, I will compliment y-the first opening of my mouth: and if you you may make an entertaining dialogue out conversation of two dumb men. Excuse this worthy sir, from one who has been a long in-" Your silent Admirer,

" CORNELIUS AGRIPPA

I have received the following letter, or billet-doux, from a pert young baggage, who gratulates with me upon the same occasion:

" June 23,

" DEAR MR PRATE-A-PACK,

" I am a member of a female society w-ourselves the Chit-chat Club, and am ord-the whole sisterhood to congratulate you ouse of your tongue. We have all of us a mind to hear you talk; and if you will tal-place among us for an evening, we have unanimagreed to allow you one minute in ten, interruption. " I am, Sir,

" Your humble servant,

" P. S. You may find us at my Lady Clack's, who will leave orders with her port-if an elderly gentleman, with a short face, for her, he shall be admitted, and no q-asked."

As this particular paper shall consist o-what I have received from my corresponshall fill up the remaining part of it with ogratulatory letters of the same nature.

" Sir, Oxford, June 25,

" We are here wonderfully pleased w-opening of your mouth, and very frequen-approbation of your design; especially since you are resolved to preserve your taciturnity in party matters. We do not question but that great an orator as Sir Hudibras, of whom sweetly sings,

—He could not open
His mouth, but out there flew a trope.

It send us down the half dozen well-turned hat produced such dismal effects in your we will deposit them near an old manfully's orations, among the archives of the; for we all agree with you, that there is a remarkable accident recorded in history, which happened to the son of Cæsus; I believe you might have gone higher, and d Balaam's ass. We are impatient to see our productions; and expect what words fall from you with as much attention as were set to watch the speaking head of Bacon formerly erected in this place.

"We are, worthy Sir,

"Your most humble Servants,

"B. R. T. D." &c.

NEXT SPEC., Middle Temple, June 24. very glad to hear that thou beginnest to find, by thy yesterday's vision, thou art it that thou canst not forbear talking in

Let me only advise thee to speak like; for I am afraid thou wilt be very queer if not intend to use the phrases in fashion, I list them in thy second paper. Hast thou to pass for a Bantamite, or to make us s? I do assure thee, dear Spec., I am not at of my veracity, when I subscribe myself constant Admirer, and humble Servant,

"FRANK TOWNLY."

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 30, 1714.

Paulatim abolere Sichæum et vivo tenat prævertere amore sem resides animos desuetæque corda.

VIRG. ÆN. l. 724.

—But he
the piliant bosom of the fair, adds her heart anew, and blots her former care. it is to the living love resign'd.
Æneas enters in her mind.—DANIEL.

a tall, broad-shouldered, impudent, black, as I thought, every way qualified for a; but after having tried my fortune for years together, I have not been able to gle relict in the mind. My first attacks rally successful, but always broke off as y came to the word settlement. Though improved my fortune this way, I have ence, and have learnt several secrets be of use to those unhappy gentlemen, ommonly distinguished by the name of lers, and who do not know that this tribe are, generally speaking, as much upon is themselves. I shall here communicate mysteries of a certain female cabal of this call themselves the Widow Club. This ts of nine experienced dames, who take once a week round a large oval table. President is a person who has disposed bands, and is now determined to take a eing of opinion that there is as much he touch of a seventh husband as of a s. Her comrades are as follow:

1. Snap, who has four jointures, by four different bedfellows, of at present upon the pos die sex man, and is said tending her possessions England on this side the

"III. Mrs. Medlar, v a gallant, is now wedde sixty. Upon her maki after a week's cohabitat sit as a widow, and acco the board.

"IV. The widow Qu night after the death o weeds have served her t as new.

"V. Lady Catharine at eighteen, and has sin and two coachmen.

"VI. The Lady Wad the 15th year of her a knight, aged three-score had twins nine months 55th year of her age s Spindle, Esq. a youth of not outlive the honey-mo

"VII. Deborah Conq is somewhat particular. Sampson Conquest, some Sir Sampson was seven breadth from the tip of He had married three w in child-bed. This terr none of them durst ver length Mrs. Deborah un good an account of him she very fairly laid him o upon the ground. This great a reputation in the Sir Sampson's three vict the merit of a fourth wid place accordingly.

"VIII. The widow W Wildfire, fox-hunter, who bar gate. She took his d it was thought it would had she not diverted he addresses of a gentleman made love to her in the s hood. This gentleman w for the sake of a young session of her for six wee out by a broken officer, place to a gentleman at c short-lived a favourite as the pleasure to see him series of lovers, who fol to the 37th year of her ag sued a cessation of ten v berdasher, took it in his h and it is thought will ve

"IX. The last is prett her first husband's heart which time she was ente after left it upon accout made so quick a dispatc her seat in less than a t matron is looked upon as of the society, and will p chair before she dies.

"These ladies, upon solved to give the pictu bands to the club-room;

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

they covered all the ne to a second resort give her own picture, bands' in midwinter.

em the misfortune to ney had a noble cellar rs. When they grow to commemorate their

But ask them which e, they are not able to that they do not weep usband as for the want which the whole society his, to cry up the pleas-occasions, in order to om marriage, and ento themselves.

any one makes love to communicate his name, ably sit upon his repugood-humour; and if sister of the club, they to make him sure. By ed with all the widow-afford them great est Irish gentleman, it of this society, but at to the whole club.

turns upon their former rting to hear them restratagems with which scified the choleric, or man, till at last, to use him out of the house most cultivated by this ate chiefly to these two and how to manage a st of artifices, they are the compass of your reserved for a second usband is built upon the re universally assented o give him his heart at o great freedoms and ated by him like a raw nows the world. Not mer figure. To celeother virtue of a deould recommend to his d his old friends and he dear man to herself. undutiful children of e thoroughly convinced ade over to her all his letter, I am, more ceremony, humble Servant." &c.

JULY 2, 1711.

Edm. Esq. Oct 1. 1712

ect for a man to speak, it grate his own heart ment, and the reader's aise from him." Let the tenour of his discourse be what it will u subject, it generally proceeds from vanity. A fact as man will rather relate a blunder or a city he has committed, than be debarr'd tr ing of his own dear person.

Some very great writers have been guilty fault. It is observed of Tully in particu his works run very much in the first per that he takes 11 occasions of doing himself " Does he think," says Brutus, " that his ship deserves more applause than my puttin to death, because I am not perpetually to the ides of March, as he is of the nimes of ber?" I need not acquaint my learner i in the ides of March Brutus destroyed Cæ that Cicero quashed the conspiracy of Cæ the calends of December. How shockin this great man's talking of himself might la to his contemporaries. I must confess I a better pleased than when he is on this subject openings of the heart give a man a thorough into his personal character, and illustrate passages in the history of his life; besides th is some little pleasure in discovering the i of a great man, and seeing how the opinion of himself agrees with what the world eu of him.

The gentlemen of Port Royal, who we eminent for their learning and humility t other in France, banished the way of spee the first person out of all their works, as from vain-glory and self-conceit. To sho particular aversion to it, they branded this writing with the name of an egotism; a figur be found among the ancient rhetoricians.

The most violent egotism which I have n in the course of my reading, is that of C Wesley, Ego et res meæ. " I and my king;" haps the most eminent egotist that ever o in the world was Montaigne, the author of t brated Essays. This lively old Gascon has all his bodily infirmities into his works; an having spoken of the faults or virtues of an man, immediately publishes to the world stands with himself in that particular. I kept his own counsel, he might have pass much better man, though perhaps he would n been so diverting an author. The title of a promises perhaps a discourse upon Virgil or Cæsar; but, when you look into it, you are meet with more upon Monsieur Montaigne either of them. The younger Scaliger, wh to have been no great friend to this auth having acquainted the world that his father rings, adds these words: La grande judaïse taïgne, qui a écrit qu'il aimoit mieux le vin ble Que le blanc a ton à faire de savoir ce qu'il
" For my part," says Montaigne, " I am lover of your white wines."—" What the d miles it to the public," says Scaliger, " wh is a lover of white wines or of red wines?"

I cannot here forbear mentioning a tribe ists, for whom I always had a mortal aver mean the authors of memoirs, who are nev tioned in any works but their own, and w all their productions out of this single figure!

Most of our modern prefaces savour very of the egotism. Every insignificant author it of importance to the world to know that his book in the country, that he did it to pa some of his idle hours, that it was publish importunity of friends, or that his natural or conversations, directed him to the choice subject.

—Id populus curat scilicet.

Informations cannot but be highly gratifying reader.

se works of humour especially, when a man under a fictitious personage, the talking of himself may give some diversion to the public; could advise every other writer never to speak of himself, unless there be something very considerable in his character: though I am sensible this rule of little use in the world, because there is no so many fancies his thoughts worth publishing that he look upon himself as a considerable person. I will close this paper with a remark upon such egotists in conversation: these are generally in a shallow part of mankind, people being full of themselves when they have nothing to say. There is one kind of egotists which is common in the world, though I do not recollect that any writer has taken notice of them; those empty conceited fellows who repeat, in jests of their own or some of their particular friends, several jests which were made before they were born, and which every one who has conversed in the world has heard a hundred times over. A young fellow of my acquaintance was very fond of this absurdity; he would be always laying down for some old piece of wit, and telling us, as he and Jack Such-a-one were together, that other of them had such a conceit on such an occasion; upon which he would laugh very heartily, and wonder the company did not join with him. When his mirth was over, I have often rebuked him out of Terence. Tuumne, obsecro te, am erat? vetus credidi. But finding him still impenetrable, and having a kindness for the young fellow, who was otherwise a good-natured fellow, I recommended to his perusal the Oxford and Cambridge jests, with several little pieces of pleasantry of the same nature. Upon the reading of them he underwent no small confusion to find that all his jests had passed through several editions, and that he thought was a new conceit, and had applied to his own use, had appeared in print before, or his ingenious friends were ever heard of. This had so good an effect upon him, that he is at present to pass for a man of plain sense and ordinary conversation, and is never facetious when he knows his company.

[No. 563.] MONDAY, JULY 5, 1714.

—Magni nominis umbra.—LUCAN. l. 135.
The shadow of a mighty name.

ALL entertain my reader with two very curious stories. The first of them comes from a chimerical person, who I believe never writ to any body before.

SIR,

I am descended from the ancient family of the Blank, a name well known to all men of business. I always read in those little white spaces of writing, which want to be filled up, and which for that reason are called blank spaces, as of right appertaining to our family: for I consider myself as the proprietor of a manor, who lays his claim to all wastes or unenclosed ground that are unappropriated. I am a great friend to John a Styles and John a Nokes; and, I am told, came in with the conqueror. I am mentioned oftener in both houses of Parliament than any other person is written, or, more properly thus: I am one every thing, and appear as I can make myself in sometimes metamorphosed a day of the month, or often represent a sum of the first subsidy that have now and then sold thousands of land-soldiers been employed in the “Now, Sir, my commission made use of to serve as soon as a proper place.

“If you have ever seen the curtain rises, you are filled with men of my rank, and resign their state to those for whom they are

“But the most ill-natured are those who are placed in time as persons of great credit out to supply them. I am qualified for all offices, for a soldier, a politician, please. I have known Blank, that has been heap up great riches, and importance, before he could agree among the step into his place. I continue so long in office, such it is to be reckoned it), that he has grown to be removed.

“But to return to commodious a person, well-regulated government, my case into consideration made a tool of, and of such usage, without blank. For all which myself to your protection.

“Your

“P. S. I herewith by a country attorney whose names he was did not think fit to they were transacting instrument,” and read You may see by this am to the busy world

“I, T. Blank; Esq. county of Blank, do sum of Blank, to God he did me in procuring Blank: and I do hereby pay unto him the said day of the month of penalty and forfeiture.

I shall take time to imaginary correspondence shall present my reason to come from a person blood.

“Good Mr. Sir “I am married to the same time ore him when over he is the

When he is at chances to sends me in fore. I may hild's fortune

n goes every

I once pre-
: in his hand, eeing me do kicked down runds but the s together in desiring him would spend broke to his my giving a he flew into on tea-dishes, convenient for a room which by this neitely went to a passion, he e; and if on is rage upon,

I be in safety.
now whether e distemper;
publish this at veneration know you do

vant," &c.

Y 7, 1714.

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

"

is darkened and eclipsed by a hundred other irregular passions.

Men have either no character at all, says a celebrated author, or it is that of being inconsistent with themselves. They find it easier to join ex-imities than to be uniform and of a piece. This finely illustrated in Xenophon's Life of Cyrus the Great. That author tells us, that Cyrus having taken a most beautiful lady named Panthea, the wife of Abradatas, committed her to the custody of Araspas, a young Persian nobleman, who had little before maintained in discourse that a virtually virtuous was incapable of entertaining any lawful passion. The young gentleman had allong been in the possession of his fair captive, and a complaint was made to Cyrus, that he not only solicited the lady Panthea to receive him in the room of her absent husband, but that, finding her re-treaties had no effect, he was preparing to make use of force. Cyrus, who loved the young man, immediately sent for him, and in a gentle manner representing to him his fault, and putting him in remind of his former assertion, the unhappy youth confounded with a quick sense of his guilt and shame, burst out into a flood of tears, and spoke as follows:—

"O Cyrus, I am convinced that I have two souls.
Love has taught me this piece of philosophy. If I had but one soul, it could not at the same time possibly after virtue and vice, wish and abhor at the same thing. It is certain therefore we have two souls when the good soul rules I undertake nobly and virtuous actions; but when the bad soul predominates I am forced to do evil. All I can say at present is, that I find my good soul, encouraged by your presence, has got the better of my bad."

I know not whether my readers will allow of this piece of philosophy; but if they will not, they may confess we meet with as different passions in men and the same soul as can be supposed in two. We can hardly read the life of a great man who lived in former ages, or converse with any who are eminent among our contemporaries, that is not an instance of what I am saying.

But as I have hitherto only argued against the partiality and injustice of giving our judgment upon men in gross, who are such a composition of virtues and vices, of good and evil, I might carry this reflection still further, and make it extend to most of their actions. If, on the one hand, we fairly weigh every circumstance, we should frequently find them obliged to do that action we at first sight condemn in order to avoid another we should have been much more displeased with. If, on the other hand, we nicely examined such actions as appear most deserving to the eye, we should find most of them either deficient and lame in several parts, produced by bad ambition, or directed to an ill end. The very same action may sometimes be so oddly cir-cumstanced, that it is difficult to determine whether it ought to be rewarded or punished. Those who compiled the laws of England were so sensible of this that they have laid it down as one of their first maxims, "It is better suffering a mischief than inconvenience;" which is as much as to say in other words, that, since no law can take in or provide for all cases, it is better private men should have an injustice done them than that a public grievance should not be redressed. This is usually pleaded in defence of all those hardships which fall upon particular persons in particular occasions, which could not be foreseen when a law was made. To reward however, as much as possible, the court of ry was erected, which frequently mitigates s the teeth of the common law, in cases of properties, while in criminal cases there is a of pardoning still lodged in the crown. withstanding this, it is perhaps impossible in government to distribute rewards and punish-strictly proportioned to the merits of every ache. Spartan commonwealth was indeed wou-exact in this particular; and I do not rein all my reading to have met with so nice ple of justice as that recorded by Plutarch, uch I shall close my paper for this day.

city of Sparta, being unexpectedly attacked powerful army of Thebans, was in very great of falling into the hands of their enemies. izens suddenly gathering themselves into a ught with a resolution equal to the necessity affairs, yet no one so remarkably distinhimself on this occasion, to the amazement armies, as Isidas, the son of Phœbidas, who hat time in the bloom of his youth, and very ble for the comeliness of his person. He ning out of the bath when the alarm was o that he had not time to put on his clothes, es his armour; however, transported with a o serve his country in so great an exigency, d up a spear in one hand and a sword in the e flung himself into the thickest ranks of mies. Nothing could withstand his fury; part soever he fought he put the enemies to thout receiving a single wound. Whether, utarch, he was the particular care of some o rewarded his valour that day with an ex-ary protection, or that his enemies, struck e unusualness of his dress, and beauty of his supposed him something more than man, I t determine.

gallantry of this action was judged so great spartans, that the ephori, or chief magis-decreed he should be presented with a gar-it, as soon as they had done so, fined him a d drachmas for going out to the battle uno. 565.] FRIDAY, JULY 9, 1714.

Deum namque ire per omnes que, tractusque maris, cœlumque profundum.
Vino. Georg. iv. 221.

ed the whole created mass inspires, in heaven and earth, and ocean's depths: he throws fluence round, and kindles as he goes.—DRYDEN.

a yesterday about sun-set walking in the lds, until the night insensibly fell upon me. st amused myself with all the richness and of colours which appeared in the western heaven; in proportion as they faded away ot out, several stars and planets appeared er another, until the whole firmament was in The blueness of the ether was exceedingly ned and enlivened by the season of the year, the rays of all those luminaries that passed it. The galaxy appeared in its most beauti-

e. To complete the scene, the full moon length in that clouded majesty which Milton tice of, and opened to the eye a new picture re, which was more finely shaded and dis-among softer lights than that which the sun ore discovered to us.

was surveying the moon walking in her ess, and taking her progress among the constellations, a thought very often perplexes and contemplative nat-it in that reflection, "V the work of thy finger which thou hast ordainart mindful of him? a regardest him?" In th sidered that infinite be-philosophically, of sun upon me, with those in-worlds which were mo-suns; when I still enlianother heaven of suns this which we discovered by a superior firmame planted at so great a di-to the inhabitants of t us; in short, whilst I g not but reflect on th which I myself bore a works.

Were the sun, which creation, with all the move about him, utterlated, they would not of sand upon the sea-s is so exceedingly little that it would scarce m The chasm would be could take in the whole from one end of the c possible there may be hereafter, or in creatur exalted than ourselves help of glasses, which naked eyes; and the more still are our disc this thought so far, th sible there may be stavelled down to us, sinc is no question but the set to it: but when we of an infinite power, ness, with an infinite can our imagination se

To return, therefore not but look upon my being that was not wor-who had so great a wo intendency. I was amidst the immensity that infinite variety of bability swarm throu regions of matter.

In order to recover thought, I considered those narrow concept entertain of the Div cannot attend to many time. If we are caref must of course negle which we observe in that cleaves in some highest capacities, as beings of finite and lin of every created bei measure of space, and is stinted to a certain n in which we move, a wider circumference to according as we rise on

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

lest of these our spheres then, therefore, we reflect e so used and accustomed rselves, that we cannot ascribing it to Him in y of imperfection. Our at his attributes are infiour conceptions is such, g bounds to every thing ason comes again to our all those little prejudices s, and are natural to the y extinguish this melanoverlooked by our Maker works, and the infinity of e seems to be incessantly in the first place that he e second, that he is omomnipresence, his being and supports, the whole ation, and every part of nothing he has made little, or so inconsideratially inhabit. His substance of every being, whe-ll, and as intimately pre-o itself. It would be an he able to remove out of o withdraw himself from r from any part of that spread abroad to infinity. n the language of the old whose centre is every ce no where.

is omniscient as well as science indeed necessarily omnipresence; he can-ery motion that arises in which he thus essentially ght that is stirring in the part of which he is thus al moralists have con-temple of God, which he nds, and which is filled have considered infinite rather the habitation, of est and most exalted way space is that of Sir Isaac porium of the Godhead. ensoriola, or little sen-hend the presence and ew objects that lie continowledge and observation circle. But as God Ale and know every thing te space gives room to as it were, an organ to from the body, and with start beyond the bounds r millions of years con-infinite space with the find itself within the encompassed round with ead. Whilst we are in ent with us because he O that I knew where I

" Behold I go forward, backward, but I cannot and where he does work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth him-right hand that I cannot see him." Inson as well as revelation assures us, that be absent from us, notwithstanding he covered by us.

In this consideration of God Almighty presence and omniscience every one thought vanishes. He cannot but reg-thing that has being, especially such of him who fear they are not regarded by him privity to all their thoughts, and to that heart in particular, which is apt to trouble this occasion; for, as it is impossible overlook any of his creatures, so we may dent that he regards, with an eye of mi-who endeavour to recommend themselves tice, and in an unfeigned humility of heart selves unworthy that he should be mindful

No. 566.] MONDAY, JULY 12,

Militiæ species amor est.—OVID, Art. Am. ii.
Love is a kind of warfare.

As my correspondents begin to grow merous, I think myself obliged to take so of them, and shall therefore make this pa-cellary of letters. I have since my re-as-office of Spectator, received abundance from gentlemen of the blade, who I find so used to action that they know not how They seem generally to be of opinion that at home ought to reward them for their abroad, and that, until the cause of their calls them again into the field, they have right to quarter themselves upon the la-order to favour their approaches, I am dissome to enlarge upon the accomplishment profession, and by others to give them my the carrying on their attacks. But let us let the gentlemen say for themselves:—

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"Though it may look somewhat pervers the arts of peace to talk too much of war, gratitude to pay the last office to its man-even peace itself is, in some measure, obli-for its being.

"You have, in your former papers, al-commended the accomplished to the favofair; and I hope you will allow me to some part of a military life not altogether sary to the forming a gentleman. I need you that in France, whose fashions we ha-formerly so fond of, almost every one dis-pretences to merit from the sword; and th-has scarce the face to make his court to without some credentials from the service mend him. As the profession is very an-have reason to think some of the great among the old Romans derived many of tues from it, their commanders being frequother respects some of the most shining cof the age.

"The army not only gives a man oppoof exercising these two great virtues, pati-courage, but often produces them in him they had scarce any footing before. I need that it is one of the best schools in the wo-ceive a general notion of mankind in, and freedom of behaviour, which is not so required in any other place. At the same most own that some military airs are pretty extraordinary; and that a man who goes into the army a second time will come out of it a sort of public nuisance: not a man of sense, or one who before had not been sufficiently used to a mixed conversation, generally takes the true turn. The court has in all ages been allowed to be the standard of good-breeding; and I believe there is not a juster observation in Monsieur de la Rochefoucault, than that "a man who has been bred up wholly to business can never get the air of a courtier at court, but will immediately catch it in the camp." The reason of this most certainly is, that the very essence of good-breeding and politeness consists in several niceties, which are so minute that they escape his observation, and he falls short of the original he would copy after; but when he sees the same things charged and aggravated to a fault, he no sooner endeavours to come up to the pattern which is set before him, than, though he stops somewhat short of that, he naturally rests there in reality he ought. I was, two or three days ago, mightily pleased with the observation of a humorous gentleman upon one of his friends, who was in other respects every way an accomplished person, that he wanted nothing but a dash of the excomb in him, by which he understood a little of that alertness and unconcern in the common actions of life, which is usually so visible among gentlemen of the army, and which a campaign or two would infallibly have given him.

"You will easily guess, Sir, by this my panegyric upon a military education, that I am myself a soldier; and indeed I am so. I remember, within three years after I had been in the army, I was ordered into the country a recruiting. I had very particular success in this part of the service, and was ever and above assured, at my going away, that I might have taken a young lady, who was the most considerable fortune in the country, along with me. I preferred the pursuit of fame at that time to all other considerations; and though I was not absolutely bent on a wooden leg, resolved at least to get a scar or two for the good of Europe. I have at present as much as I desire of this sort of honour; and if you could recommend me effectually, should be well enough contented to pass the remainder of my days in the arms of some dear kind creature, and upon a pretty estate in the country. This, as I take it, would be following the example of Lucius Cincinnatus, the old Roman dictator, who, at the end of a war, left the camp to follow the plough. I am, Sir, with all imaginable respect,

"Your most obedient humble Servant,

"WILL WARLEY."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I am a half-pay officer, and am at present with a friend in the country. Here is a rich widow in the neighbourhood, who has made fools of all the fox-hunters within fifty miles of her. She declares she intends to marry, but has not yet been asked by the man she could like. She usually admits her humble admirers to an audience or two; but after she has once given them denial, will never see them more. I am assured by a female relation that I shall have fair play at her; but as my whole success depends on my first approaches, I desire your advice, whether I had best storm, or proceed by way of rap."

"I am, Sir, yours, &c."

"P. S. I had forgot to tell you that I have already carried her maid."

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I have as much talent as a Country, and am in the morning at sea, and in the afternoon at the settlement of the session of the blanché, and in the pretenders for the advice, and in the

"From my four in the afternoon."

No. 567.]

—Inceptus est

—The weak

I HAVE received a correspondent's general run, I should say, I have a few things sell which illustrious title eye upon a new separated from up and perusal and an h, a Z, them, has sold have known a or three well-

A sprinkling of papist, plund in an italic c upon the eye "scribbler, in without which controversy."

Our party tue of an inu that of late P——t at let honour, and them from ex satisfaction t that he is ab by the streng blank space, first or last le

Some of o more satirical of a great m on all the c first of all i tious memor name of all i in his works, without any

* M and h m † Tom Brew

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

authors, and taking than curious libel, find a great acquaintance easily dis-tion who en- on, and ruin est Engli- at there are io hears me rite *** not ple may cry but to make the p-dd-ng hat if a cer- tain prelate d for it), our . Must the se my lady sonable that terror of the e of a —? and clearly, country. I i, though he l would not a traitor, au s," &c. &c. eatise, which st celebrated nicate to the In the mean us reader, as mas: and if ile it, I will ses, acquaint

: my readers l state tracts, t, I might in the political r of the age. shine all the oroughly to d shortly to ave a single

, 1714.

[Epig. l. 29.

not far from d three per- of tobacco; own use, I stood before wo or three e one of the that lighting looked upon to conversa- our heads to- g intrrenched k up the last , "The Spec- upon which at the upper wn out of his

month a great deal of smoke, which we had been lecting for some time before," "Ay," says he, "in witty then wise, I am afraid." His neighbour, who at his right hand, immediately coloured, and, as an angry politician, laid down his pipe with so much wrath that he broke it in the middle, and by means furnished me with a tobacco-stopper. I lit it up very sedately, and, looking him full in the face, made use of it from time to time all the while he was speaking: "This fellow," says he, "must for his life keep out of politics. Do you see how abuses four great men here?" I fixed my eyes attentively on the paper, and asked him if he meant those who were represented by Asterisks. "No risks," says he, "do you call them? they are all them stars—he might as well have put garlands on them. Then pray do but mind the two or three next lines. Ch-rch and p-dd-ing in the same sentence! Our clergy are very much beloved by him!" Upon this the third gentleman, who was a mild disposition, and, as I found, a whig in his heart, desired him not to be too severe upon the Spectator neither; "for," says he, "you had be very cautious of giving offence, and has himself put two dashes into his pudding."—"A dash for a dash," says the angry politician; "in his next sentence he gives a plain innuendo that our poster will be in a sweet p-ckle. What does the fool mean by his pickle? Why does not he write it at length if he means honestly?"—"I have read over the whole sentence," says I; "but I look upon the parenthesis in the belly of it to be the most dangerous part, and as full of insinuations as it can be. But who," says I, "is my Lady Q-p-t-s?"—"An answer that if you can, Sir," says the furious statesman to the poor whig that sat over against him. But without giving him time to reply, "I do assure you," says he, "were I my Lady Q-p-t-s, I would send him for scandalum magnatum. What is the use come to? Must every body be allowed to?"—"He had by this time filled a new pipe, and applied it to his lips, when we expected the last word of the sentence, put us off with a whiff of tobacco; when he redoubled with so much rage and trepidation that he almost stifled the whole company. After a short pause, I owned that I thought the Spectator had gone too far in writing so many letters of my Lady Q-p-t-s's name; "but, however," says I, "he has made a little amends for it in his next sentence where he leaves blank space without so much as consonant to direct us. I mean," says I, "as those words, 'the fleet that used to be the terror of the ocean, should be wind-bound for the sake of —';" after which ensues a chasm, that, in my opinion, looks modest enough."—"Sir," says my antagonist, "you may easily know his meaning by his gaping: I suppose he designs his chasm, as I call it, for a hole to creep out at, but I believe will hardly serve his turn. Who can endure the great officers of state, the B—y's and T—treated after so scurrilous a manner?"—"I care for my life," says I, "imagine who they are."—"The Spectator means."—"No," says he; "Your humble servant, Sir!" Upon which he flung himself back in his chair after a contemptuous manner, and smiled upon the old lethargic gentleman on his hand, who I found was his great admirer. The whig however had begun to conceive a good will towards me, and, seeing my pipe out, very generously offered me the use of his box; but I declined it with great civility, being obliged to meet a friend about a time in another quarter of the city.

leaving the coffee-house, I could not forbear with myself upon that gross tribe of fools be termed the over-wise, and upon the of writing anything in this censorious age weak head may not construe into private ad personal reflection.

n who has a good nose at an innuendo smells and sedition in the most innocent words that put together, and never sees a vice or folly zed, but finds out one or other of his ac-ce pointed at by the writer. I remember y pragmatical fellow in the country, who, nding over "The Whole Duty of Man," had the names of several persons in the village de of every sin which is mentioned by that t author; so that he had converted one of ; books in the world into a libel against the churchwardens, overseers of the poor, and most considerable persons in the parish. sk, with these extraordinary marginal notes, dentally into the hands of one who had never before; upon which there arose a current at somebody had written a book against the and the whole parish. The minister of the aving at that time a controversy with some gregation upon the account of his tithes, er some suspicion of being the author, until l man set his people right, by showing them satirical passages might be applied to several f two or three neighbouring villages, and book was written against all the sinners in
 [

.569.] MONDAY, JULY 19, 1714.

centur multis urgere culiculis, vere mero, quem perspexisse laborent, micula digna. — Hon. Ar. Poet. ver. 434.

ere the kings who never chose a friend n full cups they had unmask'd his soul, n the bottom of his deepest thoughts. — ROSCOPHOS.

ces are so incurable as those which men are lory in. One would wonder how drunken-id have the good luck to be of this number. sis, being invited to a match of drinking at demanded the prize very humorously, be-was drunk before any of the rest of the
 : "for," says he, "when we run a race, he ives at the goal first is entitled to the re-on the contrary, in this thirsty generation, ur falls upon him who carries off the great-ity of liquor, and knocks down the rest of any. I was the other day with honest Will the West Saxon, who was reckoning up h liquor had passed through him in the last ears of his life, which, according to his ion, amounted to twenty-three hogsheads er, four tons of port, half a kilderkin of er, nineteen barrels of cider, and three of champagne; besides which he had as-four hundred bowls of punch, not to men, drams, and whets without number. I not but every reader's memory will suggest veral ambitious young men who are as vain articular as Will Funnell, and can boast of is exploits.

odern philosophers observe, that there is a decay of moisture in the globe of the earth. y chiefly ascribe to the growth of vegelich incorporate into their own substance d bodies that never return again to their store: but, with submission, they ought to throw into their account beings which fetch the liquids; especially w compared with their more than comes to the

But, however high think of themselves, a monster than any that creatures which God h no character which a deformed, in the eyes o that of a drunkard. B trymen, who was addi up for a share in the R feated in a great battle was seen by the army, notwithstanding he had the common jest was, t ing upon the tree before bottle.

This vice has very fa body, and fortune, of
 to it.

In regard to the m every flaw in it. The of reason, may keep u or folly to which he makes every latent see show itself; it gives fu to those objects which

When a young fellow sopher that his wife w water in your wine," you will quickly make difference into love, lov into madness. It often into an idiot, and the o gives bitterness to rese supportable, and displ soul in its utmost defor

Nor does this vice o of a man, and show t lours, but often occasi naturally subject. The truth in a saying of Se not produce but discove teaches us the contrary. himself, and infuses ge she is a stranger to it person you converse w not the same man who you. Upon this maxim est sayings I ever me Publius Syrus, "Qui sentem." "He who jest injures the absent."

Thus does drunkenne to reason, whose busin every vice which is cr against all the approac to make its entrance. which this vice produ ally under its dominion on the mind even in i sensibly weakens the memory, and makes the produced by frequent ex

I should now proceed this vice has on the be but these I shall reser future paper.

intellectual being, who feels no other effects from his presence, but such as proceed from divine wrath and indignation!

"Thirdly, How happy is the condition of that intellectual being, who is sensible of his Maker's presence, from the secret effects of his mercy and loving-kindness!

"First, How disconsolate is the condition of an intellectual being, who is thus present with his Maker, but at the same time receives no extraordinary benefit or advantage from his presence! Every particle of matter is actuated by this Almighty Being which passes through it. The heavens and the earth, the stars and planets, move and gravitate by virtue of this great principle within them. All the dead parts of nature are invigorated by the presence of their Creator, and made capable of exerting their respective qualities. The several instincts, in the brute creation, do likewise operate and work towards the several ends which are agreeable to them by this divine energy. Man only, who does not co-operate with this Holy Spirit, and is unattentive to his presence, receives none of those advantages from it, which are perfective of his nature, and necessary to his well-being. The Divinity is with him, and in him, and every where about him, but of no advantage to him. It is the same thing to a man without religion, as if there were no God in the world. It is indeed impossible for an Infinite Being to remove himself from any of his creatures; but though he cannot withdraw his essence from us, which would argue an imperfection in him, he can withdraw from us all the joys and consolations of it. His presence may perhaps be necessary to support us in our existence; but he may leave this our existence to itself, with regard to its happiness or misery. For in this sense he may cast us away from his presence, and take his Holy Spirit from us. This single consideration one would think sufficient to make us open our hearts to all those infusions of joy and gladness which are so near at hand, and ready to be poured in upon us; especially when we consider, secondly, the deplorable condition of an intellectual being, who feels no other effects from his Maker's presence, but such as proceed from divine wrath and indignation.

"We may assure ourselves that the great Author of nature will not always be as one who is indifferent to any of his creatures. Those who will not feel him in his love, will be sure at length to feel him in his displeasure. And how dreadful is the condition of that creature, who is only sensible of the being of his Creator by what he suffers from him! He is as essentially present in hell as in heaven; but the inhabitants of the former behold him only in his wrath, and shrink within the flames to conceal themselves from him. It is not in the power of imagination to conceive the fearful effects of Omnipotence incensed.

"But I shall only consider the wretchedness of an intellectual being, who in this life lies under the displeasure of Him, that at all times and in all places is intimately united with him. He is able to disquiet the soul, and vex it in all its faculties. He can hinder any of the greatest comforts of life from refreshing us, and give an edge to every one of its slightest calamities. Who then can bear the thought of being an outcast from his presence, that is, from the comforts of it, or of feeling it only in its terrors? How pathetic is that expostulation of Job, when for the trial of his patience he was made to look upon himself in this deplorable condition! "Why hast thou set me a burden, and become a burthen to me? For my vexation is grievous, because of mine affliction, and my soul is weary."

"The blessed that is, are as, the presence of our eyes. The by which they do material of our souls, when glorified bodies part of space. Divine presence standing between be content to keep with us, by the outward senses we may, however by his influence thoughts which comforts and our souls, and satisfactions with and diffusing to good men. He is as a soul who standing, rectifying enliven all the fore is an intense meditation, by communication. Though the whole all nature look and support with mind, and bear horrors which helper is at hand any thing else or terrifying he tempt he attend things to his fender, his glory his deepest so he is in complete perceives with presence, as a that can be made creatures. Even the pains of hell the breaking between his soul always present itself to him in

"If he would our Maker's presence mercy and good over all our things. Scripture, his must take care endeavour to always accept thus to reside could direct some remarkable passage in nobis spiritu vator, et quem nos." "There watches and will treat us him." But I about the wound; and indeed was the means that relieved the hero; but the reason it was the particular assistance of a physician speeded the operation. An Englishman may see the whole story in Mr. Dryden's Virg.—

'd on his knees the pensive hero stood, and saw, unmov'd, the mourning crowd.
And physician takes his robes around,
And hands, and hastes to the wound.
Little touches he performs his part,
And that, soliciting the dart, Receives all his heavenly art.
Using samples, known of sovereign use, Presses out, and pours their noble juice:
But infus'd to lenify the pain, With pinners, but he tugs in vain.
The patron of his art pray'd, That his art refus'd his aid.
Now the goddess mother, mov'd with grief, Se'd with pity, hastens her relief.
She of healing dittany she brought,
In the Cretan fields with care she sought;
Is the stem, which woolly leaves surround; Presses with flowers, the flowers with purple crown'd;
Down to wounded goats: a sure relief In the pointed steel and ease the grief.
Mus brings, in clouds involv'd; and brews Ract liquor with ambrosian dews, From panacea: unseen she stands, Using the mixture with her heavenly hands;
And in a bowl already crown'd Dice of medicinal herbs, prepared to bathe the wound.
Ach, unknowing of superior art, Aids the cure, with this foment the part:
A moment ceas'd the raging smart.
D in the blood, and in the bottom stands Ed, but scarcely touch'd with tender hands, Up and follows of its own accord; Alth and vigour are at once restor'd.
At perceiv'd the closing wound!
At the footsteps of a god he found:
Arms! he cries: 'the sword and shield prepare,
And the willing chief, renew'd, to war.
No mortal work, no cure of mine,
Is effect, but done by hands divine.' ..

Virg. Æn. lib. xii. 391, &c.

] WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1714.

— Castigate remordent.—Juv. Sat. ii. 35. utilised, the accusation they retort.

er on the club of widows has brought me letters; and among the rest, a long one President, as follows:—

ART SIR,

re pleased to be very merry, as you ima-us widows: and you seem to ground your ur receiving consolation so soon after the ar dears, and the number we are pleased or our companions; but you never reflect ands we have buried, and how short a loss of them was capable of occasioning. rn part, Mrs. President, as you call me, usband I was married to at fourteen by and guardian (as I afterward discovered) sale, for the third part of my fortune. w looked upon me as a mere child he ad up after his own fancy: if he kissed ermaid before my face, I was supposed so ow could I think there was any hurt in he came home roaring drunk at five in g, it was the custom of all men that live d. I was not to see a penny of money, ing, how could I manage it? He took a cousin of his into the house (as he said) ousekeeper, and to govern my servants: ald I know how to rule a family? While she had what money she reasonable for the trouble was not to be so censorious and kindness between great a coward, to contem-child to be thus imposed tempt as I ought to do, blinded wives do, until away my tyrant, who let own land, and a large money brought me mandeavoured to establish while my husband was Honourable, Edward Wa-who addressed me, advisthat was my intimate fri-what I was worth. Mr. N-man, and every body who does himself, if they di-esteem and love is all object as it is impossimean himself. He made within four or five mon-with such an assured ease not to banish him; qumalice, I heard his first innocent surprise, and ceived it touched his very the best-natured, silly, pa man has such a notion better than he thinks he be thus revenged on him-tune; and finding it was heart ache, I resolved and entertained several impression of my unde-strung in his head, he at-the inevitable force of maral blushes and side glan-favourite; and when I diversion, he thought it and pitied the violence to comply with my fri-Nicholas Fribble of sixty Sir, the case of Mrs. Med-have had me cry out my shed tears enough for my my marriage; and when reckoning he had been a widow of that stand-afterward John Sturdy, I indeed some thoughts of found he could stay; and indecent to ask me to was out; so, privately re-I took Mr. Sturdy for the lieve it, Sir, Mr. Sturdy about six feet high, and the country, and I belie-times for my old Fribble his dogs all the day, and up at table with him and I think myself obliged to chase in which he broke began his addresses and had married him now, but in the guards that had my acquaintance, and I little vain of his courtshiit, and read me such an conduct of women; I mar-day, out of pure spite to (or from the which he ceding from when I read

of my heart, were very rth lasted a ry much in action after-t six in fine married so ve my estate s lost in two ny diamond how, I met
k. My plate een reduced id not been ow that had afterward, at too, by non-fort was still o prevent all serve every acquaintance
my charms the delight I town it was an of sense ;
ang himself,
, and how I being third om my rank f pride ; but extravagant,
ed, however,
rs. He was s hearkening e to tell what hen the sun
; he had no
of them all ;
ing him ac-
day he was es for all his ed him with ons for every ther he lived fevers ; when nded a con-his wretched institution by several medi-rand remedy
r uneasiness, r any more of ced me to all n my choice,
indifferency.
d that he was reat fortune ;
to make me ell, that came
the country
ally, nothing band so soon
at the same
hers. ' You she, ' to know ration ; he is ive long ; he ow.' I knew

afterward she had given the selfsame shadow of me to him ; but, however, I was so much persuaded by her, I hastened on the match for fear he should die before the time came ; he had the same fears, and was so pressing, I married him in a fortnight, resolving to keep it private a fortnight longer. During this fortnight Mr. Waitfort came to make me a visit : he told me he had waited on me sooner, but had that respect for me, he would not interrupt me in the first day of my affliction for my dear lord ; that as soon as he heard I was at liberty to make another choice, he had broke off a match very advantageous for his fortune, just upon the point of conclusion, and was forty times more in love with me than ever. I never received more pleasure in my life than from this declaration ; but I suspected my face to a grave air, and said the news of his engagement had touched me to the heart, that his rash jealous fit I had married a man I never could have thought on, if I had not lost all hopes of him. Good-natured Mr. Waitfort had liked to have dropped down dead at hearing this, but went from me with such an air as plainly showed me he had laid all the blame upon himself, and hated those friends that had advised him to the fatal application ; he seemed as much touched by my misfortune as his own, for he had not the least doubt I was still passionately in love with him. The truth of the story is, my new husband gave me reason to repent I had not stayed for him ; he had married me for my money, and I soon found he loved money to distraction ; there was nothing he would not do to get it ; nothing he would not suffer to preserve it ; the smallest expense kept him awake whole nights ; and when he paid a bill, it was with as many sighs, and after as many delays, as a man that endures the loss of a limb. I heard nothing but reproofs for extravagancy, whatever I did. I saw very well that he would have starved me, but for losing my jointures ; and he suffered agonies between the grief of seeing me have as good a stomach, and the fear that if he had made me fast, it might prejudice my health. I did not doubt he would have broken my heart, if I did not break his, which was allowable by the law of self-defence. The way was very easy. I resolved to spend as much money as I could ; and, before he was aware of the stroke, appeared before him in a two thousand pound diamond necklace : he said nothing, he went quietly to his chamber, and, as it is thought, composed himself with a dose of opium. I believe myself so well upon the occasion, that to this day I believe he died of an apoplexy. Mr. Waitfort was resolved not to be too late this time, and I knew from him in two days, I am almost out of my wits at this present writing, and very doubtful whether will marry him or no. I do not think of a reward for the ridiculous reason you mention, but out of pure morality that I think so much constancy should be rewarded, though I may not do it after all, perhaps. I do not believe all the unreasonable mills of mankind can give a pretence why I should have been constant to the memory of any of the deceased or have spent much time in grieving for an insolent insignificant, negligent, extravagant, splenetic, covetous husband ;—my first insulted me, my second was nothing to me, my third disgusted me, the fourth would have ruined me, the fifth tormented me, and the sixth would have starved me. If the other had your name would thus give in their husbands' names at length, you would see they have had as little reason as myself to lose their hours in weeping and wailing.

No. 574.] FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1714.

Non possidentem multa vocaveris

Recte beatum. Rectius occupat

Muneribus beatus, qui Deorum

Muneribus sapienter uti,

Duramque callet pauperiem pati.—HOM. 4 Od. ix. 45

Believe not those that lands possess,

And shining heaps of useless ore,

The only lords of happiness;

But rather those that know

For what kind fates bestow,

And have the heart to use the store

That have the generous skill to bear

The hated weight of poverty.—CÆCILIUS.

I was once engaged in discourse with a Rosicrucian about "the great secret." As this kind of men (I mean those of them who are not professed cheats) are overrun with enthusiasm and philosophy, it was very amusing to hear this religious adept descending on his pretended discovery. He talked of the secret as of a spirit which lived within an emerald, and converted every thing that was near it to the highest perfection it is capable of. "It gives a lustre," says he, "to the sun, and water to the diamond. It irradiates every metal, and enriches lead with all the properties of gold. It heightens smoke into flame, flame into light, and light into glory." He further added, "that a single ray of it dissipates pain, and care, and melancholy, from the person on whom it falls. In short," says he, "its presence naturally changes every place into a kind of heaven." After he had gone on for some time in this unintelligible cant, I found that he jumbled natural and moral ideas together into the same discourse, and that his great secret was nothing else but content.

This virtue does indeed produce, in some measure, all those effects which the alchymist usually ascribes to what he calls the philosopher's stone; and if it does not bring riches, it does the same thing, by banishing the desire of them. If it cannot remove the disquietudes arising out of a man's mind, body, or fortune, it makes him easy under them. It has indeed a kindly influence on the soul of man, in respect of every being to whom he stands related. It extinguishes all murmur, repining, and ingratitude, towards that Being who has allotted him his part to act in this world. It destroys all inordinate ambition, and every tendency to corruption, with regard to the community wherein he is placed. It gives sweetness to his conversation, and a perpetual serenity to all his thoughts.

Among the many methods which might be made use of for the acquiring of this virtue, I shall only mention the two following. First of all, a man should always consider how much he has more than he wants: and secondly, how much more unhappy he might be than he really is.

First of all a man should always consider how much he has more than he wants. I am wonderfully pleased with the reply which Aristippus made to one who condoled him upon the loss of a farm: "Why," said he, "I have three farms still, and you have but one; so that I ought rather to be afflicted for you than you for me." On the contrary, foolish men are more apt to consider what they have lost than what they possess; and to fix their eyes upon those who are richer than themselves, rather than on those who are under greater difficulties. All the real pleasures and conveniences of life lie in a narrow compass; but it is the humour of mankind to be always looking forward, and straining after one who has got the start of them in wealth and honour. For this reason, as there are none can be properly called rich who have not more than the

the polit people, w

and have

Persons

poverty, stead of

they end

and appe

beheld, w

that is pla

their desi others ar ridiculous

be suffici

those evil man's est does not b

sale to an

Pittacus,

him a goo by the Ki

ness, but he knew

valent to the thoug natural w add, "Lu

fore recor

are alway enjoyment tracting t

the philos

much care happiness.

In the

how much

is. The f are suffici themselves

under som receive gr

the unhap others, or and great

him.

I like upon break told the s was not h quotations

old philos

his friends

that came down the one," says man that instance to Hammond

man was tr

when he t

God that i stone, that at the same

I cannot

that there

Christianit

mind of m ing of. I sent condi

tell us that out being it befalls us in which the gods very gravely it is necessary of the universe would be wise. These, silence than that his dis- a means suf- despair than reply to one to his friend the death of a lief could not reason," said more tender es to every is condition; his afflictions the removal cause it can the greatest d; and if in from the sub- ie next from 2, 1714.

iv. 223.

ed hermit go you are in a not another "but what is a creature ag, or rather is short and asting. The , in which of to make our- whether we ves the plea- is uncertain h of a very to ourselves and settled, pon the first ll which side ver right we e we adhere e make pro- ever to have ough it were is a stranger on the earth, at would his that we were ifferent ends ? Must not world to get think that it station, and were forbidood.

den poverty by threats of eternal punishment, enjoined to pursue our pleasures under pain of damnation? He would certainly imagine that we were influenced by a scheme of duties quite opposite those which are indeed prescribed to us. And according to such an imagination, he must conclude that we are a species of the most obedient creature in the universe; that we are constant in our duty and that we keep a steady eye on the end for which we were sent hither.

But how great would be his astonishment when he learned that we were beings not designed to exist in this world above threescore and ten years, and that the greatest part of this busy species falls before even of that age? How would he be lost in horror and admiration, when he should know that this sort of creatures, who lay out all their endeavours for the life, which scarce deserves the name of existence—when, I say, he should know that this sort of creatures are to exist to all eternity in another life, to which they make no preparations? Nothing could be a greater disgrace to reason, than that men, who are persuaded of these two different states of being, should be perpetually employed in providing for the life of threescore and ten years, and neglecting to make provision for that, which after many myriads of years will be still new, and still beginning; especially when we consider that our endeavours in making ourselves great, or rich, or honourable, or whatever else we place our happiness in, may all prove unsuccessful: whereas, if we constantly and sincerely endeavour to make ourselves happy in the other life, we are sure that our endeavours will succeed, and that we shall not be disappointed of our hope.

The following question is started by one of the schoolmen:—Supposing the whole body of the earth were a great ball or mass of the finest sand, and that a single grain or particle of this sand should be annihilated every thousand years. Supposing then that you had it in your choice to be happy all the while this prodigious mass of sand was consuming by this slow method, until there was not a grain of it left, on condition you were to be miserable for ever after? Or, supposing that you might be happy for ever after on condition that you would be miserable until the whole mass of sand were thus annihilated at the rate of one sand in a thousand years:—which of these two cases would you make your choice?

It must be confessed in this case, so many thousands of years are to the imagination as a kind of eternity, though in reality they do not bear so great a proportion to that duration which is to follow the sand as a unit does to the greatest number which you can put together in figures, or as one of those sands to the supposed heap. Reason therefore tells us, without any manner of hesitation, which would be the better part in this choice. However, as I have before intimated, our reason might in such case be overset by the imagination, as to dispose some persons to sink under the consideration of the great length of the first part of this duration, and as the great distance of that second duration which is to succeed it. The mind, I say, might give itself up to that happiness which is at hand, considering that it is so very near, and that it would last so very long. But when the choice we actually have before us is this, whether we will choose to be happy in the space of only threescore and ten, say, years, or only twenty or ten years, I might say at only a day or an hour, and miserable to all eternity:— the contrary, miserable for this short term of years, and happy for a whole eternity: what words sufficient to express that folly and want of consideration which in such a case makes a wrong choice?

I here put the case even at the worst, by supposing, what seldom happens, that a course of virtue makes us miserable in this life: but if we suppose, as it generally happens, that virtue would make us more happy even in this life than a contrary course of vice, how can we sufficiently admire the stupidity or madness of those persons who are capable of making so absurd a choice?

Every wise man, therefore, will consider this life only as it may conduce to the happiness of the hereafter, and cheerfully sacrifice the pleasures of a few years to those of an eternity.

No. 576.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1714.

Nitor in adversum: nec me, qui cætera, vincit Inpetus; et rapido contrarius evehor orbi.

Ovid, Met. ii. 72.

I steer against their motions, nor am I Borne back by all the current of the sky.—ADDISON.

I REMEMBER a young man of very lively parts, and of a sprightly turn in conversation, who had only one fault, which was an inordinate desire of appearing fashionable. This ran him into many mours, and consequently into many distempers. He never went to bed until two o'clock in the morning, because he would not be a queer fellow; and was every now and then knocked down by a constable to signalize his vivacity. He was initiated into half a dozen clubs before he was one-and-twenty; and so improved in them his natural variety of temper, that you might frequently trace him to his lodgings by a range of broken windows, and other the like monuments of wit and gallantry. To be short, after having fully established his reputation of being a very agreeable rake, he died of old age at five-and-twenty.

There is indeed nothing which betrays a man into so many errors and inconveniences as the desire of not appearing singular; for which reason it is very necessary to form a right idea of singularity, that we may know when it is laudable, and when it is vicious. In the first place, every man of sense will agree with me, that singularity is laudable when, in contradiction to a multitude, it adheres to the dictates of conscience, morality, and honour. In these cases we ought to consider that it is not custom, but duty, which is the rule of action; and that we should be only so far sociable, as we are reasonable creatures. Truth is nevertheless so far not being attended to; and it is the nature of actions, not the number of actors, by which we ought to regulate our behaviour. Singularity in concerns of this kind is to be looked upon as heroic bravery, in which a man saves the species only as he soars above it. What greater instance can there be of a weak and pusillanimous temper, than for a man to pass his whole life in opposition to his own sentiments? or not dare to be what he thinks he ought to be?

Singularity, therefore, is only vicious when it makes men act contrary to reason, or when it puts them upon distinguishing themselves by trifles. As for the first of these, who are singular in any thing that is irreligious, immoral, or dishonourable, I assure every one will easily give them up. I shall therefore speak of those only who are remarkable for their singularity in things of no importance; as in dress, behaviour, and other courses of life, where no deference due to the public may be a colour for a multitude in some particular of his private inclinations. I often makes a husband from being of another him ridiculous to standing.

I have heard of a man in England, who was foolishly singular within himself, of life according to reason and good example. The little oddnesses of his dinner, supper, ought to attend, appetites to our appetites. In his men he would not strictly true: he his humble service and would rather drink the king's would thrust his every morning, about half an hour could bawl the which end he got the Greek tongue more deep and expectation of particularities, philosophical reasons him, he chose to concluding very about his head as cleanly, than frequent perspiration observed, that dress must not blood; for which his doublet of the manner of the pure dictate so much from the deed from his wife have, clapped his his estate: but he did no harm, commission of his estate into the hands

The fate of the remark in Mons Dead." "The he, "are mad much as those v they have the g side; whereas a lunatic is a fre words, something does not fall in

The subject letter which I for want of room next paper.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

* 6, 1714.

vi. 612.
not rave.
t paper is as t custom, too making them-

l conversation, myself to give ed that though et I could not I shall not add hall write will praise, but is ce conceived le foundation.

ast altogether
o an acquaint-e some small e part of the e country. I t very hearty ain man, not e without the mer upon the submit even nent, such as

This necesy day; and, as used at these a shady walk lf with some ow, Mr. Spect be poetry, it any passage to pronounce which I think essed; and to action of the observed by eroic fits, who much to my not soon dis-y, had it not one day shut very deeply on's Paradise book in my ar I made no
the following

nd,
s grate

door of my of the family at consterna-
egged pardon myself par-
who received he was too ugh the key-ture I easily specially the te with some end himself, to me, did not seem altogether easy. I took notice that butler was never after this accident ordered to the bottle upon the table after dinner. Add to that I frequently overheard the servants men-me by the name of 'the crazed gentleman, the tleman a little touched, the mad Londoner,' and like. This made me think it high time for me shift my quarters, which I resolved to do the handsome opportunity; and was confirmed in resolution by a young lady in the neighbourhood who frequently visited us, and who one day, a-having heard all the fine things I was able to was pleased with a scornful smile to bid me sleep.

"The first minute I got to my lodgings in to-I set pen to paper to desire your opinion, which upon the evidence before you, I am mad or not. can bring certificates that I behave myself well before company, and I hope there is at least as merit in withdrawing to be mad. Look you, Sir, am contented to be esteemed a little touched and phrase it, but should be sorry to be madder than neighbours; therefore, pray let me be as much my senses as you can afford. I know I could let yourself as an instance of a man who has confused talking to himself; but yours is a particular case and cannot justify me, who have not kept silent any part of my life. What if I should own myself in love? You know lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy—But I will say no more upon this subject, because I have long since observed a ready way to be thought mad is to contend that you are not so; as we generally conclude that mad drunk who takes pains to be thought sober. I will therefore leave myself to your determination; but am the more desirous to be thought in my reason that it may be no discredit to you when I assure you that I have always been very much

"Your Admirer,

"P. S. If I must be mad, I desire the young lady may believe it is for her."

"The humble Petition of John a Nokes and John a Styles,

"Sheweth,

"That your petitioners have had causes depending in Westminster hall above five hundred years and that we despair of ever seeing them brought an issue; that your petitioners have not been involved in these lawsuits out of any litigious tempof their own, but by the instigation of contentious persons; that the young lawyers in our courts do are continually setting us together by the ears, and think they do us no hurt, because they plead for without a fee; that many of the gentlemen of the robe have no other clients in the world besides two; that when they have nothing else to do, they make us plaintiffs and defendants, though they never retained by either of us; that they trade condemn, or acquit us, without any manner of regard to our reputations and good names in the world.
Your petitioners, therefore, being therewith enraged by the favourable reception which you had gave to our kinsman Blank, do humbly pray that you will put an end to the controversies which have been so long depending between us your said petitioners, and that our enmity may not endure from generation to generation; it being our resolution live hereafter as it becometh men of peaceable dispositions.

"And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray," &c.

No. 578. MONDAY, AUGUST 9, 1714.

—Æque feris humana in corpora transit.
Inque feris noster. — OVID, Met. xv. 167.

—'Tis unbodied spirit flies— And lodges where it lights in man or beast. — DRYDEN.

THERE has been very great reason, on several accounts, for the learned world to endeavour at settling what it was that might be said to compose personal identity.

Mr. Locke, after having premised that the word person properly signifies a thinking intelligent being that has reason and reflection, and can consider itself as itself, concludes, that it is consciousness alone, and not an identity of substance, which makes this personal identity of sameness. "Had I the same consciousness," says that author, "that I saw the ark and Noah's flood, as that I saw an overflowing of the Thames last winter; or as that I now write; I could no more doubt that I who write this now, that saw the Thames overflow last winter, and that viewed be flood at the general deluge, was the same self, since that self in what substance you please, than that I who write this am the same myself now while I write, whether I consist of all the same substance, material or immaterial, or no, that I was yesterday; or as to this point of being the same self, it matters not whether this present self be made up of the same or other substances."

I was mightily pleased with a story in some measure applicable to this piece of philosophy, which I read the other day in the Persian Tales, as they are lately very well translated by Mr. Phillips; and with an abridgment whereof I shall here present my readers.

I shall only premise that these stories are written after the eastern manner, but somewhat more correct.

"Fadlallah, a prince of great virtue, succeeded his father Bin Ortoc in the kingdom of Mousel. He reigned over his faithful subjects for some time, and lived in great happiness with his beauteous consort Queen Zemroude, when there appeared at his court a young dervise of so lively and entertaining a turn of wit, as won upon the affections of every one he conversed with. His reputation grew so fast every day, that it at last raised a curiosity in the prince himself to see and talk with him. He did so; and, far from finding that common fame had flattered him, he was soon convinced that every thing he had heard of him fell short of the truth.

"Fadlallah immediately lost all manner of relish for the conversation of other men; and, as he was every day more and more satisfied of the abilities of his stranger, offered him the first posts in his kingdom. The young dervise, after having thanked him with a very singular modesty, desired to be excused, as having made a vow never to accept of any employment, and preferring a free and independent state of life to all other conditions.

"The king was infinitely charmed with so great an example of moderation; and though he could not get him to engage in a life of business, made him however his chief companion and first favourite.

"As they were one day hunting together and appeared to be separated from the rest of the company, the dervise entertained Fadlallah with an account of his travels and adventures. After having related to him several curiosities which he had seen in the Indies, 'It was in this place,' says he, 'that I contracted an acquaintance with an old brachman, who was skilled in the most hidden powers of nature; died within my arms, and with his parting breath communicated to me one of the most valuable of his secrets, on any man.' The young favourite's greatness he had it was the power the dervise, 'that; it is the flinging my own

"While he was ing by them, and shot her through a fair opportunity. The young dervise, breathless on that of the dervise, fawned to several wanton the same instant its life. The king common an opportunity every thing that him. The dervise, relating his promise him at last that from so excellent him therefore began to repeat two of which the whole content to try the them as he had found himself a little time to come for the treacher into the royal cabinet bow against him not the king, was to the woods.

"The dervise returned to Mousel the unhappy Fadlallah.

"The first that cured himself in kingdom, was to his subjects to The king had provided his pur nightingale, when tree. In this night to the palace; was near his queen's with so many men drew her to the to see that, instead the mirth of his slave who was serenade her ever charmed with his ers, and ordered to put that little king, pleased more near his himself to be taken though he showed any of the other hid himself in highly pleased new favourite, open cage in her opportunity of m ing, by a thousand allowed him. The every day in her

If happy in endured the erwise enter even in his

th the prin-iate himself naged Fad-t his wings, ent rage, it new matter

ittle lap-dog i which one self inclined enliven this orning Zem-

in the cage.
is occasion;
tle actions;
in them like
s.

he dervise to ving in vain eing grieved her repeated
"I will exert our nightin-
and serenade i with a look
o him, when,
his soul into mazed to see

l that passed, one corner of vn body, and,
indignation,
ngale.

azed and con-
the king, enner his whole is found dead all the deer, f it; but the sacy, peculiar ly afflicted at for some time ots, even from r mind. She g his pardon ost rigid justice.

r death, that rest relations, litude and re-

ST 11, 1712.

v. 132

irst, the Com-be printing of de a very res of their edinot commit thousands of ery," Archbishop Laud, to punish this negligence, had a considerable fine upon that company in the star-chamber.

By the practice of the world, which prevails in this degenerate age, I am afraid that very many young profligates of both sexes are possessed of the spurious edition of the Bible, and observe the commandment according to that faulty reading.

Adulterers in the first ages of the church were excommunicated for ever, and unqualified all their lives from bearing a part in Christian assemblies; notwithstanding they might seek it with tears, and at the appearances of the most unfeigned repentance.

I might here mention some ancient laws among the heathens, which punished this crime with death, and others of the same kind, which are now in force among several governments that have embraced the reformed religion. But, because a subject of this nature may be too serious for my ordinary reader, who are very apt to throw by my papers when they are not enlivened with something that is diverse or uncommon, I shall here publish the contents of a little manuscript lately fallen into my hands, in which pretends to great antiquity; though by reason of some modern phrases, and other particulars in it, I can by no means allow it to be genuine, but rather the production of a modern sophist.

It is well known by the learned, that there was a temple upon mount Ætna dedicated to Vulcan, which was guarded by dogs of so exquisite a smell, say the historians, that they could discern whether the persons who came thither were chaste or otherwise. They used to meet and fawn upon such as were chaste, caressing them as the friends of their master Vulcan; but flew at those who were polluted, and never ceased barking at them till they had driven them from the temple.

My manuscript gives the following account of these dogs, and was probably designed as a comedy upon this story:—

"These dogs were given to Vulcan, by his sister Diana, the goddess of hunting and of chastity, being bred them out of some of her hounds, in which she had observed this natural instinct and sagacity.
It was thought she did it in spite to Venus, and upon her return home, always found her husband in a good or bad humour, according to the reception which she met with from his dogs. They lived in the temple several years, but were such snappish cur, that they frightened away most of the visitors.
The women of Sicily made a solemn deposition the priest, by which they acquainted him, that they would not come up to the temple with their annual offerings unless he muzzled his mastiffs; and at last compromised the matter with him, that the offerings should always be brought by a chorus of young girls who were none of them above seven years old. This was wonderful, says the author, to see how difficult the treatment was which the dogs gave to these liberties, from that which they had shown to their mothers. It is said that the prince of Syracuse, having married a young lady, and being naturally of a jealous temper, made such an interest with the priests of this temple, that he procured a whelp of them of this famous breed. The young puppy was very troublesome to the fair lady at first, inasmuch that she solicited her husband to send him away; but the good man cut her short with the old Sicilian proverb, 'Love me, love my dog;' from which she lived very peaceably with both of them. The ladies of Syracuse were very much amused with him, and several of very good reputation refused to come to court until he was discarded. There was

THE SPECTATOR.

ed some of them that defied his sagacity; but it observed, though he did not actually bite them, could growl at them most confoundedly. To re- to the dogs of the temple; after they had lived in great repute for several years, it so hap- d, that as one of the priests, who had been making a visit to a widow who lived on the pro- rory of Lilybeum, returned home pretty late in evening, the dogs flew at him with so much fury, they would have worried him if his brethren not come to his assistance; upon which, says uthor, the dogs were all of them hanged, as ng lost their original instinct."

cannot conclude this paper without wishing that ad some of this breed of dogs in Great Britain, h would certainly do justice, I should say ho- , to the ladies of our country, and show the d the difference between pagan women and e who are instructed in sounder principles of e and religion.

No. 580.] FRIDAY, AUGUST 13, 1714.

— Si verbis audacia detur, Hand timeam magni dixisse palatia coeli.

OVID, MET. l. 175.

This place, the brightest mansion of the sky, I'll call the palace of the Deity.—DARTON.

"SIR,

I CONSIDERED in my two last letters that awful tremendous subject, the ubiquity or omnipre- se of the Divine Being. I have shown that he is present in all places throughout the whole of infinite space. This doctrine is so agree- to reason, that we meet with it in the writings he enlightened heathens, as I might show at e, were it not already done by other hands. But gh the Deity be thus essentially present through he immensity of space, there is one part of it in h he discovers himself in a most transcendent visible glory; this is that place which is marked in Scripture under the different appellations of radise, the third heaven, the throne of God, and habitation of his glory.' It is here where the ified body of our Saviour resides, and where all celestial hierarchies, and the innumerable hosts ngels, are represented as perpetually surround- the seat of God with hallelujahs and hymns of e. This is that presence of God which some of divines call his glorious, and others his majestic ence. He is indeed as essentially present in other places as in this; but it is here where He les in a sensible magnificence, and in the midst ll those splendours which can affect the imagina- of created beings.

It is very remarkable that this opinion of God ighty's presence in heaven, whether discovered he light of nature, or by a general tradition from first parents, prevails among all the nations of world, whatsoever different notions they entertain he Godhead. If you look into Homer, that is, most ancient of the Greek writers, you see the eme power seated in the heavens, and encom- ed with inferior deities, among whom the Muses represented as singing incessantly about his ne. Who does not here see the main strokes outlines of this great truth we are speaking of? same doctrine is shadowed out in many other en authors, though at the same time, like seve- other revealed truths, dashed and adulterated a mixture of fables and human inventions.— te pass over the notions of the Greeks and

Romans, those mo world, we find the late discovered n an opinion that a divinity whom the

"As in Solomon's Sanctu- rium, in which the figures of the but the high-prie after having made people: so if we great temple, there which the High-p took his place and having made a pro

"With how mu be erected! Wil habitation beautif by Him who inspi great must be the whole art of creat God has chosen to nificent manner? of infinite power wisdom? A spir an ineffable mann which were made knows the inward and ravish it in al ties. It is to this apply those beauti hold even to the n stars are not pure sun, and all the live, are but as rather darkness it dours which enco

"As the glory of imagination, so pr is light behind lig far that space may in perfect majest Though it is not i though not immea regard to any crea made these lower wide and magnifi and perishable be the courts of his residence in a mo himself in the ful numerable compa men made perfect

"This is certai be raised too high omnipotence and erted themselves, duce a scene infin what we are able but at the consum apartments of nat beings who inh added to that glo speaking, and by tion for beings wh cleared of their in seems to intimate and of a new earth

"I have only regard to the sig highly probable likewise enjoy the

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

transports the eat reason to place in Holy tainments of o wonderfully which human h more will it ich is exerted e senses are hey cannot be ; without pro-fore, should culties, which at pleasure to nments which after? Why nd seeing will ich are most not meet with jects, 'which rd, nor can it e? I knew a g of himself') in the body, I dy, I cannot ght up to the n (whether in not tell, God into paradise, is not possible that what he y thing which is impossible to ey a notion of delight in in-try, where we bode; and as glorious place, ty to get what e make use of se everlasting be sure that lace will infliexpectations, the throne of er we are able entertain our-n this subject, d of it in the ay not be dif-

lory to beings excel one an-titled nearer to greater mani-there are not the multitude beir Maker in nd adoration;
a state of in-divines, have ore particular
These, and innocently into inspire us us of this de-going letters, at can employ of the Duty;
never depart onsidered the Divine Being, as he inhabits infinitude, as he sees among his works, as he is present to the mind man, and as he discovers himself in a vast and manner among the regions of the bliss. Such consideration should be kept awake in us at times, and in all places, and possess our minds with a perpetual awe and reverence. It should be inwoven with all our thoughts and perceptions, as become one with the consciousness of our own being.

It is not to be reflected on in the coldness of phisophy, but ought to sink us into the lowest prostrtion before Him who is so astonishingly wonderful and holy."

No. 581.] MONDAY, AUGUST 16, 1714.

Sunt bona, sunt quedam mediocria, sunt quædam pæne.
Quæ legi ———— MAKE EYES & EARS.
Some good, more bad, some neither: one has to choose.

I AM at present sitting with a heap of letters before me, which I have received under the character of Spectator. I have complaints from lovers, rebukes from projectors, scandal from ladies, congratulations compliments, and advice, in abundance.

I have not been thus long an author, to be insensible of the natural fondness every person must be for their own productions; and I begin to think have treated my correspondents a little too ungenerally in stringing them all together on a file, and letting them lie so long unregarded. I shall therefore, in the future, think myself at least obliged to take notice of such letters as I receive, and may possibly do it at the end of every month.

In the mean time I intend my present paper to short answer to most of those which have been ready sent me.

The public, however, are not to expect I should them into all my secrets; and, though I appear to struse to most people, it is sufficient if I am understood by my particular correspondents.

My well-wisher, Van Nath, is very ardent, but is quite enough so to appear in print.

Philadelphus will, in a little time, see his question fully answered by a treatise which is now in the press.

It was very improper at that time to comply with Mr. G.

Miss Kitty must excuse me.

The gentleman who sent me a copy of verses on his mistress's dancing, is, I believe, too thoughtful in love to compose correctly.

I have too great a respect for both the universities, to praise one at the expense of the other.

Tom Nimble is a very honest fellow, and I desire him to present my humble service to his cousin F.
Bumper.

I am obliged for the letter upon prejudice.

I may in due time animadvert on the case of Gen-Grumble.

The petition of P. S. granted.

That of Sarah Loveit refused.

The papers of A. S. are returned.

I thank Aristippus for his kind invitation.

My friend at Woodstock is a bold man to undertake for all within ten miles of him.

I am afraid the entertainment of Tom Turnstone will hardly be relished by the good citizens of London and Westminster.

I must consider further of it, before I indulge W. F. in those freedoms he takes with the ladies stockings.

I am obliged to the ingenious gentleman who on the subject of a late Spectator, and particular notice of his last letter. The lady who wrote me a letter dated July in relation to some passages in a Lover, more particular in her directions, I shall be answer.

A gentleman who fancies my writings could his husband, who can abuse such a wife as he has, I am afraid, too great an opinion of propolis is, I dare say, a very well-meaning is a little too prolix in his compositions. It is thus himself must be the best judge in the sententions.

A letter dated from Lincoln is received. A and her friend may hear further from me. A little too hasty.

is a good girl, but must not courtesy to does not know.

ingenuously confess my friend Samson as quite puzzled me, and writ me a long h I cannot comprehend one word of.

I must also explain what he means by his g." it beneath my spectatorial dignity to conf in the affair of the boiled dumpling.

consult some literati on the project sent discovery of the longitude.

not how to conclude this paper better than g a couple of letters which are really ge- d which I look upon to be two of the pieces I have received from my correspond- her sex:—

OTHER SPEC.,

you are surveying every object that falls y, I am wholly taken up with one. Had who demanded what beauty was, lived to an angel I love, he would not have asked sition. Had another seen her, he would ve loved the person in whom Heaven has re visible; and, were you yourself to be pany, you could never, with all your lo- ty enough of her good-humour and sense. the outlines of a picture, which I can inish, than I can sufficiently admire the al. I am, your most affectionate Brother,

"CONSTANTIO SPEC."

DD MR. PERT,

allow you nothing until you resolve me ing question. Pray what is the reason e you only talk now upon Wednesdays, nd Mondays, you pretend to be a greater n when you spoke every day as you for- l to do? If this be your plunging out of mity, pray let the length of your speeches e for the scarceness of them. I am, good

"Your Admirer,

"If you will be long enough for me,

"AMANDA LOVELENGTH."

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 18, 1714.

—Tenet insanabile multos cacoëthes. Juv. Sat. vii. 51.

of writing is an endless itch.—CH. DRYDEN.

is a certain distemper, which is mentioned Galen nor Hippocrates, nor to be met London Dispensary. Juvenal, in the y paper, terms it a cacoëthes; which is for a disease called in plain English,

"the itch of writing."

mical as the small-pox, are not seized with it s lives. There is, howev two distempers, that th posed you for a time, ne this I am speaking of, v blood, seldom comes out is very much afflicted wi very many remedies hav infected with it, few of cessful. Some have be and lampoons, but have from them; others have an hour together betw made use of as a cure f appears in its greatest mali one kind of this malady removed, like the bitin sound of a musical instr known by the name of a patient of this kind un sure yourself there is ne him effectually, but by pen, ink, and paper.

But, to drop the alle out, there is no species o and more incurable, tha whose words return upon and at stated times. We in the perusal of these au reading of all others, nam have but patience, we ma labours. I have often ad of Diogenes, who reading his friends, when every d ing that he was almost c end of it, he cried, "C On the contrary, our pro writers I am now speaki One day makes work for when to promise ourselve

It is a melancholy thin of printing, which might mankind, should prove o it should be made use of t norance through a peopl them truth and knowledg

I was lately reading e entitled William Ramsa logy. This profound aut passages, has the followi the sun is not the cause e light is so great that it m over at once, as clear as tenebrificous and dark s night is brought on, and t and obscurity upon the ea

I consider writers in th trologer does the heavn are stars that scatter ligh could mention several au stars of the first magnitud gentlemen, who have bee be looked upon as a dark e has been a great while b these antiluminaries. I their darkness as long a till at length I came to a them, and hope in a litt out of the British hemisp

* Put in t

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

1714.

they are still arriving at greater degrees of perfection as long as you live, and appear more delighted in every succeeding year than they did in the last going.

But I do not only recommend this art to men of estates as a pleasing amusement, but as it is a kind of virtuous employment, and may therefore be inculcated by moral motives; particularly from the love which we ought to have for our country, and the regard which we ought to bear to our posterity. As, for the first, I need only mention what is frequently observed by others, that the increase of forest trees does by no means bear a proportion to the destruction of them, insomuch that in a few ages the nation may be at a loss to supply itself with timber sufficient for the fleets of England. I know when a man talks of posterity in matters of the nature, he is looked upon with an eye of ridicule by the cunning and selfish part of mankind. Most people are of the humour of an old fellow of a college, who, when he was pressed by the society to come into something that might redound to the good of their successors, grew very peevish: "We are always doing," says he, "something for posterity, but I would fain see posterity do something for us."

But I think men are inexcusable, who fail in a duty of this nature, since it is so easily discharged. When a man considers that the putting of a few twigs into the ground is doing good to one who will make his appearance in the world about fifty years hence, or that he is perhaps making one of his own descendants easy or rich, by an inconsiderable expense, if he finds himself averse to it, he may conclude that he has a poor and base heart, void of all generous principles and love to mankind.

There is one consideration which may very much enforce what I have here said. Many honest minds, that are naturally disposed to do good in the world, and become beneficial to mankind, complain within themselves that they have not talents for it. This, therefore, is a good office, which is suited to the meanest capacities, and which may be performed by multitudes, who have not abilities sufficient to be able to serve well of their country, and to recommend themselves to their posterity, by any other method. It is the phrase of a friend of mine, when any useful country neighbour dies, that "you may trace him;" which I look upon as a good funeral oration, at the death of an honest husbandman, who hath left the impressions of his industry behind him in the place where he has lived.

Upon the foregoing considerations, I can scarce forbear representing the subject of this paper as a kind of moral virtue; which, as I have already shown, recommends itself likewise by the pleasure that it tends to. It must be confessed that this is true of those turbulent pleasures which are apt to gratify man in the heats of youth; but, if it be not so tumultuous, it is more lasting. Nothing can be more delightful than to entertain ourselves with prospects of our own making, and to walk under those shades which our own industry has raised. Amusements of this nature compose the mind, and lay at rest all those passions which are uneasy to the soul of man, besides that they naturally engender good thoughts, and dispose us to useful contemplations. Many of the old philosophers passed away the greatest parts of their lives under their gardens. Epicurus himself could not think sensual pleasure attainable in any other way. Every reader, who is acquainted with Hesiod, Virgil, and Horace, the greatest geniuses of all ages, are proper

oice to any more happy easily; but ving on em-
themselves, ns of Adam labour and first parent, se to whom ch an appliome calling may not be only useless their busy chase, or to n the fields of our most very one of nounced to give thee to the field."
en indulged luence both ffords many delightful in han that of n whose for-f England, arks behind never hired about it the on the pos-entlemen of s upon their been at this such an em-glorious for been heroes are told in planted all ething truly t; it gives a
; it fills the es, and has reason, the like that of re delighted iter or artist hem which is they give a nually imen you have taking of the your hands;
of perfection,
uin. On the plantations,

quity, knows very well with how much rapture they have spoken on this subject; and that Virgil in particular has written a whole book on the art of planting.

This art seems to have been more especially adapted to the nature of man in his primeval state, when he had life enough to see his productions flourish in their utmost beauty, and gradually decay with him. One who lived before the flood might have seen a wood of the tallest oaks in the acorn. But I only mention this particular in order to introduce, in my next paper, a history which I have found among the accounts of China, and which may be looked upon as an antediluvian novel.

No. 584.] MONDAY, AUGUST 23, 1714.

Hic gehdi fontes, hic mollia prata, Lycori:

Hic nomus, hic toto tecum consumerer avo.—VIRG. ECL. x. 42.

Come see what pleasures in our plains abound;

The woods, the fountains, and the flow'ry ground:

Here I could live, and love, and die with only you.—DRYDEN.

HILPA was one of the hundred and fifty daughters of Zilpah, of the race of Cohu, by whom some of the learned think is meant Cain. She was exceedingly beautiful, and, when she was but a girl of threescore and ten years of age, received the addresses of several who made love to her. Among these were two brothers, Harpath and Shalum. Harpath being the first-born, was master of that fruitful region which lies at the foot of mount Tirzah, in the southern parts of China. Shalum (which is to say the planter, in the Chinese language) possessed all the neighbouring hills, and that great range of mountains which goes under the name of Tirzah. Harpath was of a haughty contemptuous spirit; Shalum was of a gentle disposition, beloved both by God and man.

It is said that among the antediluvian women, the daughters of Cohu had their minds wholly set upon riches; for which reason the beautiful Hilpa preferred Harpath to Shalum, because of his numerous flocks and herds, that covered all the low country which runs along the foot of mount Tirzah, and is watered by several fountains and streams breaking out of the sides of that mountain.

Harpath made so quick a dispatch of his courtship, that he married Hilpa in the hundredth year of her age; and, being of an insolent temper, laughed to scorn his brother Shalum for having pretended to the beautiful Hilpa, when he was master of nothing but a long chain of rocks and mountains. This so much provoked Shalum, that he is said to have cursed his brother in the bitterness of his heart, and to have prayed that one of his mountains might fall upon his head if ever he came within the shadow of it.

From this time forward Harpath would never venture out of the valleys, but came to an untimely end in the two hundred and fiftieth year of his age, being drowned in a river as he attempted to cross it. This river is called to this day, from his name who perished in it, the river Harpath; and, what is very remarkable, issues out of one of those mountains which Shalum wished might fall upon his brother, when he cursed him in the bitterness of his heart.

Hilpa was in the hundred and sixtieth year of her age at the death of her husband, having brought him but fifty children before he was snatched away, as has been already related. Many of the antediluvians made joye to the young widow; though no one was thought so like her first lover. Shalum, about ten years of age, was not thought should be seen in the deace of her.

Shalum fall solving to take raised against to Hilpa, be with Harpath which fell to He knew how soil, and is th tional secrets employment to his amuse years shaded up into groves walks and law whole region, began now to pleasantness position of Sh mildest and w drew into it t petually empl ging of trence the better dist of this spaciou

The habita more beautiful space of sever with the dista were then cov and gloomy co place, and co escapes the eye

The Chines to have writte widowhood.

parting from and plainness original.

Shalum was years old, and

"Shalum,

"What hav Zilpah, since to my rival? and have be woods and for have I bewail Tirzah, and s sand gloomy s lings are at part of them fountains. T thy reception. let us people t tiful race of among these d of them with thou daughter a thousand ye of a few centu or as a cedar of four hundred thought of by

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

d remember which I look out now exe answer to

T 25, 1714.

ing. Ecl. v. 68.
joice;
v.—DAYDEN.

AND HILPA.

so good an in less than
er:—

lum, Master

the creation.

alum? Thou not secretly adows? Art of her green sight of her the bleating
y mountains, though I am ts, and those ie top of Tir-ley?more wise and hy dwellings out the di-influences of asons. Can
such a one?
alone, that I ch are fallen words. May est thou add it tempt not e thy retire-afterward she pouring hills, is treat lasted Shalum five riches, and a
of all recom-
us fruits and ag could anye had planted e wood was s as are most ing birds; so
f the country,
t to the other son.liful and sur-woodlands;
ortunities he her, he suc-
re she made her word to ss than fifty

She had not been long among her own people in the valleys, when she received new adventures, and at the same time a most splendid visit from Mishpach, who was a mighty man of old, and had built a great city, which he called, after his own name. Every house was made for at least a thousand years, nay there were some that were leased out for three lives: so that the quantity of stone and timber consumed in this building is scarce to be imagined by those who live in the present age of the world. The great man entertained her with the voice of musical instruments which had been lately invented, and danced before her to the sound of the timbrel. He also presented her with several domestic utensils wrought in brass and iron, which had been newly found out for the conveniency of life. In the mean time Shalum grew very uneasy with himself, and was sorely displeased at Hilpa for the reception which she had given to Mishpach, inasmuch that he never wrote to her or spoke of her during a whole revolution of Saturn; but finding that this intercourse went no further than a visit, he again renewed his addresses to her; who, during his long silence, is said very often to have cast a wishing eye upon mount Tirzah.

Her mind continued wavering about twenty years longer between Shalum and Mishpach; for though her inclinations favoured the former, her interest pleaded very powerfully for the other. While her heart was in this unsettled condition, the following accident happened, which determined her choice. A high tower of wood that stood in the city of Mishpach having caught fire by a flash of lightning, in a few days reduced the whole town to ashes. Mishpach resolved to rebuild the place, whatever it should cost him; and, having already destroyed all the timber of the country, he was forced to have recourse to Shalum, whose forests were now two hundred years old. He purchased these woods with so many herds of cattle and flocks of sheep, and with such a vast extent of fields and pastures, that Shalum was now grown more wealthy than Mishpach; and therefore appeared so charming in the eyes of Zilpah's daughter, that she no longer refused him in marriage. On the day on which he brought her up into the mountains he raised a most prodigious pile of cedar, and of every sweet-smelling wood, which reached about three hundred cubits in height: he also cast into the pile bundles of myrrh and sheaves of spikenard, enriching it with every spicy shrub, and making it fat with the gums of his plantations. This was the burnt-offering which Shalum offered in the day of his espousals; the smoke of it ascended up to heaven, and filled the whole country with incense and perfume.

No. 586.] FRIDAY, AUGUST 27, 1714.

—Quæ in vita usurpant homines, cogitant, corant, vident, quæ que agunt vigilantes, agitantque, ea cunctis in somno accidunt.—Cic. de Div.

The things which employ men's waking thoughts and senses recur to their imaginations in sleep.

By the last post I received the following letter which is built upon a thought that is new, and very well carried on; for which reasons I shall give it to the public without alteration, addition, or amendment:—

"SIR,

"It was a good piece of advice which Pythagoras gave to his scholars—that every night before they slept they should examine what they had been doing y, and so discover what actions were worthy out to-morrow, and what little vices were to be guarded against from slipping unawares into a habit.

 I have second the philosopher's advice, it should be, that in a morning before my scholar rose I should consider what he had been about that night, and with the same strictness as if the condition had believed himself to be in was real. Such my into the actions of his fancy must be of great advantage; for this reason, because in circumstances which a man imagines himself in sleep are generally such as entirely favour his passions, good or bad, and give him imaginary opportunities of pursuing them to the utmost: his temper will lie fairly open to his view, and he considers how it is moved when free from constraints which the accidents of real life hinder. Dreams are certainly the result of strong thoughts, and our daily hopes and fears give the mind such nimble relishes of pleasure and such severe touches of pain, in its middles. A man that murders his enemy, or his friend, in a dream, had need to guard his against revenge and ingratitude, and take care that he be not tempted to do a vile thing in the heat of false, or the neglect of true honour.
 I part, I seldom receive a benefit, but in a short time I make most noble returns for it, though my benefactor is not a whit the wiser, yet it pleases me to think that it was from a sense of gratitude in me that my mind was capable of such generous transport while I myself repaying the kindness of my friend: I have often been ready to beg pardon, instead of making an injury, after considering that when I was in my power I had carried my revenge much too far.

It has been observed, in the course of my papers, how much one's happiness or misery depend upon the imagination: of which truth I have many workings of fancy in sleep are no incredible instances; so that not only the advantage of making discoveries of himself, but to his own ease or disquiet, may induce me to accept of my advice. Such as are willing to follow it, I shall put into a way of doing it secure, by observing only one maxim which I give them, viz. 'To go to bed with a mind free from passion, and a body clear of the imperance.'

I, indeed, who can sink into sleep with their less calm or innocent than they should be, plunge themselves into scenes of guilt and horror, or they who are willing to purchase any quietude for the satisfaction of a full glass full of wine; these I have nothing to say, as not knowing how to invite them to reflect on the full of shame and horror: but those that observe this rule, I promise them they shall be in health and cheerfulness, and be capable of enjoying with delight those glorious moments, when the mind has been indulging itself in such thoughts, such noble hurry of imagination.
 A man's going supperless to bed should induce him to the table of some great prince or emperor, where he shall be entertained with the noblest honour and plenty, and do so much business, that he shall rise with as good a stomach as if he had fasted all night long: he should see his dearest friends remain in great distresses, which he should instantly disengage them from, could he have been content to have bottled; believe me the temptable consequence of one's appetite.

"I forbear recommend other accounts, until I can see how others relish what I have said. There be any that may be hurt because they never dream perhaps who do little else one as sensible as I am sleep, it would be no distinguishable a portion of stocks and stones, or vegetually at work upon However, it is an honour to persuade my countrymen so many unregarded encourage it.

"I shall conclude two of my way of pro-

"If I have any business to-morrow, I am scarce in the midst of it; and whole procession of the stage of the next day's risen upon it.

"There is scarcely some time or other been I was master of a collar whenever there is a pro-I intend to step in as s-"I have done many examination, when I being invisible; for we not possessed of those

"Lastly, Mr. Spectator respondent of yours, as ters in your paper while you have a mind I should parcel of visions and tuary, which I shall with on proper occasions

"Oxford, Aug. 20.

No. 587.] MONDAY

Intus et in cute n-I know thee to th-
 Thy shallow cen-

THOUGH the author known to me, I am ap-of that ingenious gentle-the last paper, some ex-

"SIR,

"I was the other home. Among many recorded of that imposhis age, the angel Gabriel was among his playfellows cut open his breast, pluck-out of it that black dog Turkish divines, is conthat he was free from sin said to myself, Though very good moral may be man but apply it to squeeze out of his heart ties he find in it: 220

"While my mind was

BRITISH ESSAYISTS

most pleasing entered my ween them. of the room red to open at in which ne, and for- he hearts of e; but, be- madvert on e yourself.' ife, cut me izee it. I any things, t, issued out ort, after it ked like an breathing a ed it safe to d me up, we transparent looked like ny eye upon which con- incredible t swam, and side of the le of it, was d seemed to is. 'That,' com Dread- ne late wars, n aiming at He is lately oked up with n than him- ise it is im- ficiently re- amined was l at the bot- erceive that ck, and had rt. 'This,' ick Gloomy, noney. Not- s still poor. ble state of nposition of gives them himself than shed a large he fomes or I could not I turned the and in the ou are ex- igs to Will de soul, and s. The speck art of Free- and I,' said her, and I do nan which I eacher com- nd to my un- welling spot, rds me, was r inspection he phantom told me Freeclove was one of the best natured man alive.

" 'This,' says my teacher, 'is a female heart of your acquaintance.' I found the fomes in it of the largest size, and of a hundred different colours which were still varying every moment. Upon my asking to whom it belonged, I was informed that it was the heart of Coquetilla.

"I set it down, and drew out another, in which I took the fomes at first sight to be very small, but was amazed to find that, as I looked steadfastly upon it, it grew still larger. It was the heart of Melissa, a noted prude, who lives the next door to me.

" 'I show you this,' says the phantom, 'because it is indeed a rarity, and you have the happiness to know the person to whom it belongs.' He then put into my hands a large crystal glass, that enclosed a heart, in which, though I examined it with the utmost nicety, I could not perceive any blemish. I made no scruple to affirm that it must be the heart of Seraphina; and was glad, but not surprised, to find that it was so. 'She is indeed,' continued my guide, 'the ornament as well as the envy of her sex.' At these last words he pointed to the heart of several of her female acquaintance which lay in different phials, and had very large spots in them all of a deep blue. 'You are not to wonder,' says he, 'that you see no spot in a heart, whose innocence has been proof against all the corruptions of depraved age. If it has any blemish, it is too small to be discovered by human eyes.'

"I laid it down, and took up the hearts of other females, in all of which the fomes ran in various veins, which were twisted together, and made a very perplexed figure. I asked the meaning of it, and was told it represented deceit.

"I should have been glad to have examined the hearts of several of my acquaintance, whom I knew to be particularly addicted to drinking, gaming, co- triving, &c., but my interpreter told me I must do that alone until another opportunity, and flung down the cover of the chest with so much violence as he immediately awoke me."

No. 588.] WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 1, 1774

Dicitis, omnis in imbecillitate est et gratia, et cunctis.

You pretend that all kindness and benevolence is founded in weakness.

Man may be considered in two views, as a reasonable and as a sociable being; capable of becoming himself either happy or miserable, and contributing to the happiness or misery of his fellow-creatures. Suitably to this double capacity, the Contriver of human nature hath wisely furnished with two principles of action, self-love and benevolence; designed one of them to render men watchful to his own personal interest, the other to deter him from giving his utmost assistance to all engaged in the same pursuit. This is such an account of our frame, so agreeable to reason, so much to the honour of our Maker, and the credit of our species that it may appear somewhat unreasonable when should induce men to represent human nature as they do under characters of disadvantage; or have drawn it with a little and sordid aspect, what pleasure they can possibly take in such a picture. If they reflect that it is their own, and, if we will believe themselves, is not more odious than the serpent. One of the first that talked in this lofty strain of our nature was Epicurus. Benevolence, and owers say, is all founded in weakness; and, er be pretended, the kindness that passeth between men is by every man directed to himself. This, it must be confessed, is of a piece with that hopeful philosophy, which, having hatched man up out of the four elements, attributes his being to chance, and derives all his wisdom from an unintelligible declination of atoms. In these glorious discoveries the poet is beyond transport in the praises of his hero, as if it needs be something more than man, only to endeavour to prove that man is in nothing inferior to beasts. In this school was Mr. Hobbes, who used to speak after the same manner, if he did not draw his knowledge from an observation of his own temper; for he somewhere unluckily lays this as a rule, that from the similitudes of the actions and passions of one man to the thoughts and passions of another, whosoever looks into himself can consider what he doth when he thinks, fears, &c., and upon what grounds, he shall be able to read and know what are the thoughts and passions of all other men upon the like occasion. I will allow Mr. Hobbes to know best how he is inclined; but in earnest, I should be heartily conceited with myself if I thought myself of this temper as he affirms, and should have as much kindness for myself as for any body in the world.

Hitherto I always imagined that kind and gentle propensions were the original growth of the heart of man; and, however checked and overruled by counter-inclinations that have since sprung up in us, have still some force in the worst of us, and a considerable influence on the best. I think it is a fair step towards the proof of the utility of the most beneficent of all beings is he who is the most absolute fulness of perfection in himself, and who gives existence to the universe, and so cannot be supposed to want that which he communicated, and which diminishes from the plenitude of his own mind and happiness. The philosophers before mentioned have indeed done all that in them lay to increase this argument; for, placing the gods in the most elevated blessedness, they describe ourselves as poor miserable mortals can be, and set them out from all concern for mankind, and the score of their having no need of us. But that sitteth in the heavens wants not us, we have a continual need of him; and, surely, next to the survey of the immense treasures of his own mind, the most exalted pleasure he receives is from seeing millions of creatures, lately drawn out of the void of non-existence, rejoicing in the various degrees of being and happiness imparted to them. If this is the true, the glorious character of the Deity, in forming a reasonable creature he would not possibly suffer his image to pass out of his mind, nor adorned with a resemblance of himself in the lowest part of his nature. For what company could a mind, whose love is as unbounded as his knowledge, have in a work so unlike himself; or one that should be capable of knowing and dealing with a vast circle of objects, and love itself? What proportion would there be between the head and the heart of such a creature, and its understanding? Or could any of such creatures, with no other bottom but the earth on which to maintain a commerce, ever be happy? Reason, it is certain, would oblige every man to pursue the general happiness as the means to procure and establish his own; and yet, if benevolence in consideration, there were not a natural instinct, prompting me to the satisfaction of others, and the admonitions of reason to restrain me into a state of war and contention, I should be as restless as the soul is in the body. The all-wise and all-potent Creator saw the returns of hunger and cold, and the desires, to put it in mind, if we should eat and drink without any abstracted speculation and disinterestedness, and then leave us to our own quantity, we should be as brutish as the most brutish life. And, in that we follow nothing but our inclinations which are like a bias, draw the order, therefore, to each of us, that we may be of benefits among men, and not fail to give them this benevolence, if, as I have said, it comes from whence can we derive it? Is it inconsistent with the motions contrary? Is the motion of the earth is motion round its own axis, proved as an illustration, which it about the centre, answering to universal self-love abated, or its violence? So far from a distinct principle, it is love, and then doth designed.

But to descend from the height of benevolence, which arises from the satisfaction of mankind, having removed them from a thousand and a half as a disinterested being, from a reflection we have the same ill accident nothing to the present, being an artificial cause by no means be admitted, because children, about their own condition, into the prospects of touches of compassion, and delight which impart to another, or relieve objects are numerous, and really inexpressible, but a consciousness of something praiseworthy, and Whereas, if in all the and self-love, as there are motions that make the nature would not have pleasure; nor could a person receives for be at all more satisfied for what he doth will cases the ends of self. The conscience of a man to mankind is the not doubtless it is, and to pose anything so much notwithstanding which less unselfish. The purification of our hunger of these appetites; the prospect; and so like

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

in the intel-
to reason, it; and, I
as it is so, that nature after all the
to conclude, re is such a th, if I were is Cicero in I willingly the interest
n. For the
it the mind, the godlike
d, it teaches hem with a s, that they hey bestow
among men, science: for ly generous looks to the as nothing benefit than s will not be

R 3, 1714.

andem

'4.

nd :

r a wound,

at-that the spot ll seat upon of a large will, to cut any such then I have very walk as nt you turn orest, where are beautiful rt.

an show you rs' standing, er a troop of ation, that I n the neigh-monuments

ig, in a day, course upon to my books, eration the old tradition and a cedar;

to one tree,
the temple

Constantius, ine, that fa-ander which d adds, that t veneration, and regarded

it as the highest piece of sacrilege to injure certain trees which they took to be protected by some deity.
The story of Erisichon, the grove of Dodona, and that at Delphi, are all instances of this kind.

"If we consider the machine in Virgil, so much blamed by several critics, in this light, we shall hardly think it too violent.

"Æneas, when he built his fleet in order to sail for Italy, was obliged to cut down the grove on mount Ida, which however he durst not do until he had obtained leave from Cybele, to whom it was dedicated. The goddess could not but think herself obliged to protect the ships, which were made of consecrated timber, after a very extraordinary manner, and therefore desired Jupiter, that they might not be obnoxious to the power of waves or winds.
Jupiter would not grant this, but promised her that as many as came safe to Italy should be transferred into goddesses of the sea; which the poet tells us was accordingly executed.

And now at length the number'd hours were pass'd, Prefix'd by Fate's irreversible doom, When the great mother of the gods was free,
To save her ships, and hush Jove's decree.
First, from the quarter of the morn there sprung A light that ting'd the heavens, and shot along; Then from a cloud, fring'd round with golden fires, Were timbrels heard, and flames withouten fires;
And last a voice, with more than mortal sounds, Both hosts in arms opposed with equal horror wound.

"O Trojan race, your needless aid forbear; And know my ships are my peculiar care.
With greater ease the bold Latinian may With unaided hands attempt to turn the sea, Than singe my sacred pines. But you, my children, Loos'd from your crooked anchors, harrass'd at large, Exalted each a nymph: break the band,
And swim the seas, at Cybele's command.
No sooner had the goddess ceased to speak, When lo, th' obedient ships their hquiers leave;
And strange to tell, like dolphins in the main,
They plunge their prows, and dive and spring again.
As many beauteous maids the billows sweep, As rode before tall vessels on the deep.

DeVigne's Vase.

"The common opinion concerning the nymphs whom the ancients called Hamadryads, is more to the honour of trees than any thing yet mentioned.
It was thought the fate of these nymphs had so much a dependance on some trees, more especially oaks, that they lived and died together. For this reason they were extremely grateful to such persons who preserved those trees with which their being was sisted. Apollonius tells us a very remarkable story to this purpose, with which I shall conclude my letter.

"A certain man, called Rhæcus, observing an oak ready to fall, and being moved with a sort of compassion towards the tree, ordered his servants to pour in fresh earth at the roots of it, and set it on right. The Hamadryad, or nymph, who must necessarily have perished with the tree, appeared to him the next day, and, after having returned her her thanks, told him she was ready to grant whatever he should ask. As she was extremely beautiful, Rhæcus desired he might be entertained as his lover. The Hamadryad, not much displeased with the request, promised to give him a meeting, and commanded him for some days to abstain from the embraces of all other women, adding, that she would send a bee to him, to let him know when he was to be happy. Rhæcus was, it seems, too much addicted to gaming, and happened to be in a ruinous ill-luck when the faithful bee came buzzing about him; so that, instead of minding his kind message, he had like to have killed him for his pains.
The Hamadryad was so provoked at her own dis-ment, and the ill usage of her messenger, deprived Rhæcus of the use of his limbs. R. says the story, he was not so much a but he made a shift to cut down the tree, sequently to fell his mistress."

O.] MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1714.

aiduo labuntur tempora motu, as ac flumen. Neque enim consistere flumen, is hora potest: sed ut unda impellitur unda, que prior venienti, argetque priorem: sic sic fugiunt pariter, pariterque sequuntur: sunt semper. Num quod fuit ante, relictum est:
quod laud fuerat: momentaque cuncta novantur.
Ovid, Met. xv. 179.

see are in perpetual flux, and run, ers from their fountains, rolling on, e, no more than streams, is at a stay: ing hour is ever on her way: the fountains still supply their store, ve behind impels the wave before; successive course the minutes run, e their predecessor minutes on.
ing, ever new; for former things l aside, like abdicated kings; ery moment alters what is done, ovates some act, till then unknown.—DRYDEN.

Following discourse comes from the same hand with the Essays on Infinity.

consider infinite space as an expansion a circumference: we consider eternity, or duration, as a line that has neither a be-nor an end. In our speculations of infinite e consider that particular place in which we a kind of centre to the whole expansion. In ulations of eternity, we consider the time present to us as the middle, which divides le line into two equal parts. For this reason itty authors compare the present time to an or narrow neck of land, that rises in the an ocean, immeasurably diffused on either
it.

osophy, and indeed common sense, naturally ernity under two divisions, which we may English that eternity which is past, and that which is to come. The learned terms of a parte ante, and Æternitas a parte post, more amusing to the reader, but can have idea affixed to them than what is conveyed those words, an eternity that is past, and ity that is to come. Each of these eternities ed at the one extreme; or, in other words, er has an end, and the latter a beginning.

us first of all consider that eternity which reserving that which is to come for the sub-another paper. The nature of this eternity y inconceivable by the mind of man: our emonstrates to us that it has been, but at e time can frame no idea of it, but what is absurdity and contradiction. We can have conception of any duration which is past, it all of it was once present; and whatever e present is at some certain distance from whatever is at any certain distance from us, istance never so remote, cannot be eternity. y notion of any duration being past, implies as once present, for the idea of being once is actually included in the idea of its being his, therefore, is a depth not to be sounded an understanding. We are sure that there is an eternity, and yet contradict ourselves e measure this eternity by any notion which frame of it.

we go to the bottom of this matter, we shall find that the difficulty ceptions of eternity pro that we can have no ot tion than that by which created beings, do exist ration made up of past, is nothing which exist parts of whose exist present, and consequ certain number of yea ascend as high as we p to that eternity which of years to millions of y up to any fountain-hea ning in eternity: but a that whatever was once reach of numbers, thou able to put enough* of pose. We may as well actually present in any does not lie at a cert any part of infinite dur sent, and does not also tance from us. The d immeasurable and inde our reason tells us th Here, therefore, is tha derstanding is not capa sure that something mu and are at the same t any thing which exists, existence, can have exi

"It is hard for a re thought in his own mi stracted speculation; b it, because I think it of the being and eterni are many other demon great truth, I do not any proofs in this matte has suggested to us, esp as has been urged by tration and force of u appears altogether concl the pains to examine it

"Having thus consi past, according to the I shall now draw up subject, which are dict son, and which may be a philosopher in this gr

"First, It is certain made itself; for if so, was, which is a contrad

"Secondly, That the existed from all eterni

"Thirdly, That what of created beings, or ac we have of existence,
eternity.

"Fourthly, That thi fore be the great Auth Days,' who, being at i tions from all finite an quite different manner of which they can have

"I know that several not be thought ignor tended to explain the telling us that he com

* KNOW: The singular

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

in a pantheum
and sense, an ference to his to which the description of

g past,

these proposi-
x to them :
norance than nothing, and

We cannot a we meditate ach glory and the fountain is whole creafore, with the s some being rarity, so this sible manner,
have existed otions of ex-tural dictates ves us of the hat he is the
that he is the d the ending ;
one day, and hich, and the his existence nitely differ-creatures, and s to frame any kes of his own

: I Am ;' and ame he shall
, he bids him great Creator, a manner existence, and es as the only
The ancient n speculations his revelation ere is nothing, e existence, as resent, and to e existence, is nothing which only properly
sent ; that is, t perfect mane no idea of.

with one use-ntly prostrate aker, when we wisdom which tures ? What od-will, which ence to being-ally when we a the complete ess, and in the p can think of om nothing, of onable, and a taken in as a artner in eter-
in wonder, in praise, in adoration ! It is indeed a thought too for the mind of man, and rather to be entertained in the secrecy of devotion, and in the silence of a soul, than to be expressed by words. The Supreme Being has not given us powers or faculties sufficient to extol and magnify such unutterable goodness.

"It is however some comfort to us, that we shall be always doing what we shall never be able to do, and that a work which cannot be finished, will however be the work of eternity."

No. 591.] WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1791

—Tenerum lunor amorum.

OTIS, Trist. 3 B. 3. 71.

Love the soft subject of his sportive Muse.

"I HAVE just received a letter from a gentleman who tells me he has observed, with no small concern, that my papers have of late been very loose in relation to love; a subject which, when agreeably handled, can scarcely fail of being well received by both sexes.

If my invention, therefore, should be almost exhausted on this head, he offers to serve under me the quality of a love-counsellor; for which place he conceives himself to be thoroughly qualified, having made this passion his principal study, and observed it in all its different shapes and appearances from the fifteenth to the forty-fifth year of his age.

He assures me with an air of confidence, which he proceeds from his real abilities, that he does not doubt of giving judgment in the satisfaction of the parties concerned in the most nice and delicate cases which can happen in an amour: as,

How great the construction of the fingers must be before it amounts to a squeeze by the hand.

What can be properly termed an absolute denial from a maid, and what from a widow.

What advances a lover may presume to make after having received a pat upon his shoulder from his mistress's fan.

Whether a lady, at the first interview, may allow a humble servant to kiss her hand.

How far it may be permitted to curse the maid in order to succeed with the mistress.

What constructions a man may put upon a smile and in what cases a frown goes for nothing.

On what occasion a sheepish look may do us vice, &c.

As a further proof of his skill, he also sent me several maxims in love, which he assures me are the result of a long and profound reflection, some of which I think myself obliged to communicate to the public, not remembering to have seen them before in any author.

"There are more calamities in the world arising from love than from hatred.

"Love is the daughter of idleness, but the mother of Disquietude.

"Men of grave natures, says Sir Francis Bacon, are the most constant; for the same reason, women should be more constant than men.

"The gay part of mankind is most amorous, the serious most loving.

"A coquette often loses her reputation while she preserves her virtue.

"A prude often preserves her reputation while she has lost her virtue.

"Love refines a man's behaviour, but makes a woman's ridiculous.

"Love is generally accompanied with great in the young, interest in the middle-aged, and a passion too gross to name in the old.

"The endeavours to revive a decaying passion generally extinguish the remains of it.

"A woman who from being a slattern becomes over-neat, or from being over-neat becomes a slattern, is most certainly in love."

I shall make use of this gentleman's skill as I see occasion; and since I am got upon the subject of love, shall conclude this paper with a copy of verses which were lately sent me by an unknown hand, as I look upon them to be above the ordinary run of sonneteers.

The author tells me they were written in one of his despairing fits; and I find entertains some hope that his mistress may pity such a passion as he has described, before she knows that she is herself Corinna.

Conceal fond man, conceal the mighty smart, Nor tell Corinna she has fir'd thy heart.
In vain would'st thou complain, in vain pretend To ask a pity which she must not lend.
She's too much thy superior to comply,
And too, too fair to let thy passion die.
Languish in secret, and with dumb surprise Drink the resistless glances of her eyes.
At awful distance entertain thy grief, Be still in pain, but never ask relief.
Ne'er tempt her scorn of thy consuming state, Be any way undone, but fly her hate.
Thou must submit to see thy charmer bless Some happier youth that shall admire her less; Who is that lovely form, that heavenly mind, Shall missten thousand beauties thou could'st find;
Who with low fancy shall approach her charms, While half enjoy'd she sinks into his arms.
She knows not, must not know, thy noble fire, Whom she and whom the Muses do inspire:
Her image only shall thy breast employ,
And fill thy captive soul with shades of joy; Direct thy dreams by night, thy thoughts by day,
And never never from thy bosom stray.*

No. 592.] FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1714.

—Stadium sine divite vena.—HOR. Ars Poet. ver. 409 Art without a vein.—ROSCOMMON.

I look upon the playhouse as a world within itself. They have lately furnished the middle region of it with a new set of meteors, in order to give the sublime to many modern tragedies. I was there last winter at the first rehearsal of the new thunder,† which is much more deep and sonorous than any hitherto made use of. They have a Salmoneus behind the scenes who plays it off with great success. Their lightnings are made to flash more briskly than heretofore; their clouds are also better furbelowed, and more voluminous; not to mention a violent storm locked up in a great chest, that is designed for the Tempest. They are also provided with above a dozen showers of snow, which, as I am informed, are the plays of many unsuccessful poets artificially cut and shredded for that use. Mr. Rymer's Edgar is to fall in snow at the next acting of King Lear, in order to heighten, or rather to alleviate, the distress of that unfortunate prince; and to serve by way of decoration to a piece which that great critic has written against.

I do not indeed wonder that the actors should be such professed enemies to those among our nation who are commonly known by the name of critics,

* The author of these verses was Gilbert, the second brother of Eustace Budgell, Esq.

† Apparently an allusion to Mr. Dennis's new and improved method of making thunder; at whom several oblique strokes in this paper seem to have been aimed.

SPECTATOR—Nos. 85 & 86

since it is a play, not takes. So that whatever must of necessity be the first part. Whether the determination be more than myself to the honour of the published it; by a run of exquisitely them more

I have Aristotle and Quintilian Dacier among that some, are so stupid words together and withhold the learned old authors them by way of notions the words unpronounced among unthey are very The ancient contemporaries escaped the find out a little slips of writings of of the smart make it the new production ordinary blenments, that piece are full of these criticisms are like those of the

Envy and ignorance in the health son of Nox Idle men, who plish or distract from o to decry tho they have n of Momus, critics, are t lustrious and numerous a the people, sometimes a from the rule 2ndly, that great genius than in the knows but so First, We perfectly accing, and n them on extances out o have shown purposely re

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

much higher a rule would the noblest ancient and frequent de-
the greatest noble effect of proceeding from what the arts, which is seem sensible ks of a great art, than in and observes that Terence ical cavillers entlam.

ulate than these

tion in the ill is a physician was killed re-spensare is a
of these rigid d one of his
of the stage modern critic, Shakespeare
f poetry, and rrhus's ring,
of Apollo and duced by the ut any help

ER 13, 1714.

aligna.
t. vi. 270.
ht.
light.—DRYDEN.

Shadow, has curious obser-he method to his letter will readers.

ure, that none
by we should scenes we are they have less ditations. A question, who up for want of dot instead of
and it must ough two or as much such of countries;
em strangely e such traces carefully pur-
th of action.
n our fancied ocking in our tivity of the ep the image affords us a strong intimation of something within us that can never die.

"I have wondered that Alexander the Great who came into the world sufficiently dreamed of by his parents, and had himself a tolerable knack of dreaming, should often say that sleep was one thing which made him sensible he was mortal. I, who have not such fields of action in the day-time to divert my attention from this matter, plainly perceive that in those operations of the mind, while the body is at rest, there is a certain vastness of conception very suitable to the capacity, and demonstrative of the force of that divine part in our composition which will last for ever. Neither do I much doubt but, had we a true account of the wonders the best last mentioned performed in his sleep, his embracing this little globe would hardly be worth mentioning. I may affirm, without vanity, that, when I compare several actions in Quintus Curtius and some others in my own noctuary, I appear the greater hero of the two."

I shall close this subject with observing, that while we are awake we are at liberty to fix our thoughts on what we please, but in sleep we have not the command of them. The ideas which strike the fancy arise in us without our choice, either from the occurrences of the day past, the temper we lie down in, or it may be the direction of some superior being.

It is certain the imagination may be so differently affected in sleep, that our actions of the day might be either rewarded or punished with a little agreeable happiness or misery. St. Austin was of opinion that, if in Paradise there was the same vicissitude of sleeping and waking as in the present world, the dreams of its inhabitants would be very happy.

And so far at present our dreams are in power, that they are generally conformable to our waking thoughts, so that it is not impossible to convey ourselves to a concert of music, the conversation of constant friends, or any other entertainment which has been before lodged in the mind.

My readers, by applying these hints, will find the necessity of making a good day of it, if they heartily wish themselves a good night.

I have considered Marcia's prayer, and Lucius's account of Cato, in this light.

Marc. O ye immortal powers that guard the just,
Watch round his couch, and soften his repose, Nurish his sorrows, and beguile his soul With easy dreams; remember all his virtues, And show mankind that goodness is your care.

Luc. Sweet are the slumbers of the virtuous soul!
O Marcia, I have seen thy godlike father;
Some power invisible supports his soul,
And bears it up in all its wond'rous greatness.
A kind refreshing sleep is fallen upon him;
I saw him stretch'd at ease, his fancy lost In pleasing dreams; as I drew near his couch He smil'd, and cry'd, Caesar, thou canst not hurt me!

Mr. Shadow acquaints me in a postscript, that he has no manner of title to the vision which accompanied his first letter; but adds, that, as the gentlemen who wrote it dream very sensibly, he shall be glad to meet him some night or other under the great elm-tree, by which Virgil has given us a fine metaphorical image of sleep, in order to turn over a leaf of the leaves together, and oblige the public with an account of the dreams that lie under them.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 15, 1714.

item qui rodit amicum, edit, alio culpante; solutos us hominum, famanque dicaris de visu potest; commissa tacere de niger est: hunc tu, Romane, caveas.
 Hor. l. Sat. IV. 81.

rail against his absent friends, scandalize'd, and not defends; set him, and speaks what'er he can,
 as though a witty man;
 so brings his friends in disesteem; a knave;—be sure beware of him.—CREECH.

re vexations of life put together, we at a great part of them proceed from as and reproaches which we spread ing one another.

re a man living, who is not, in some of this offence; though at the same we treat one another, it must be cons all consent in speaking ill of the re notorious for this practice. It gets rise either from an ill-will to mans inclination to make ourselves estimation of wit, and vanity of being secrets of the world; or from a de-ing any of these dispositions of mind s with whom we converse.

er of scandal is more or less odious to criminal in himself, as he is influenced more of the foregoing motives. But, be the occasion of spreading these re ought to consider that the effect of ly prejudicial and pernicious to the m they are aimed. The injury is the he principle from whence it proceeds nt.

e looks upon himself with too much en he passes a judgment on his own tions, and as very few would be thought abominable proceeding, which is so actised, and at the same time so uni-d, I shall lay down three rules, by have a man examine and search into before he stands acquitted to himself isposition of mind which I am here

Let him consider whether he does not hearing the faults of others.

Vhether he is not too apt to believe ckening accounts, and more inclined us on the uncharitable than on the side.

hether he is not ready to spread and h reports as tend to the disreputation the several steps by which this vice grows up into slander and defamation. place, a man who takes delight in ults of others, shows sufficiently that relish of scandal, and consequently his vice, within him. If his mind is hearing the reproaches which are cast will find the same pleasure in relating the more apt to do it, as he will natu-every one he converses with in de-same manner with himself. A man our, therefore, to wear out of his mind viority, which is perpetually heightamed by listening to such stories as reputation of others.

nd place, a man should consult his own he be not apt to believe such little blackening accounts, and more dulous on the uncharitable than side.

Such a credulity is very generally arises from a man's own secret corruptions. If Thales, "Falsehood is just as as the ears are from the eye," would intimate, that a wise man give credit to the reports of not seen. I shall, under this three remarkable rules to be bers of the celebrated Abbey are published in a little French

The fathers are there ordiear to any accounts of base con-turn off all such discourse if they hear any thing of this nature, that they cannot disbelieve it, pose that the criminal action from a good intention in his This is, perhaps, carrying ex-gance; but it is certainly man-to suppose, as the ill-natured that indifferent and even good bad principles and wrong inte-

In the third place, a man heart, whether he does not find nation to propagate such reports reputation of another.

When the disease of the hitherto been speaking of, as malignity, it discovers itself and is in danger of becoming therefore, insist upon the guilt which every one cannot but void of humanity, or even shall only add, that whatever may take in spreading whis-will find an infinitely greater quering the temptation he is secret die within his own breast.

No. 595.] 'FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER

— Non ut placidis coeant Serpentes avibus gementibus — Nature, and the com-Forbid to reconcile antipathies Or make a snake engender a dove And hungry tigers court the dove

If ordinary authors would they think, they would at least of being intelligible. But they be ridiculous; and, by their style, perfectly disguise the There is a grievance of this wealth of letters, which I have solved to redress, and accord-day apart for justice. What of inconsistent metaphors, very often found in learned writers, learned without exception.

In order to set this matter reader, I shall in the first metaphor is a simile in one

* St Basil Sermon 61.

† Felibien, Description de l'Abbaye 1671; reprinted in 1682. It is a Duchess of Liancourt

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

resemblances
There is not be compared eral distinct ing may be the mischief these metait there shall apt resem-noise. Thus underbolt, a them proper force. But ed, that the
the lion hath billows nave

vious. And s are put to-less. It hath e images of ge, therefore, cannot, with-
; and so of
to make any metaphorical inal. I shall ance which I trial writers,
rated author,
' &c. I suptly heard of g lashed in a both at any of nonsense.
absurdity of uppose these
ed. Imagine eral lashes of e the true re-
e. I believe,
e to judge of r, and deter-ich are hete-y, which are

I must take etaphors into error on the
as the other.
lustre of one id makes him gether. I re-who, having d a world of sider her as nes, and pur-letter written y reader hath e epistle hath nt after what it if he dare.

t have fallen t in return all ur shoulders.
age upon me Billingsgate,
er I deserved
. I tell you

once for all, turn your eyes where you please, you shall never smell me out. Do you think that the panics, which you sow about the parish, will ever build a monument to your glory? No, Sir, you may fight these battles as long as you will; but when you come to balance the account, you will find that you have been fishing in troubled waters, and that as ignis fatuus hath bewildered you, and that indeed you have built upon a sandy foundation, and brought your hogs to a fair market.

"I am, Sir, yours," &c.

No. 596.] MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1718

Molle meum levibus cor est vincibile telis.

Ovid, Ep. xv. 12.

Cupid's light darts my tender bosom move.—Pope.

THE case of my correspondent, who sends me the following letter, has somewhat in it so very whimsical, that I know not how to entertain my reader better than by laying it before them.

"Sir, Middle Temple, Sept. 18

"I am fully convinced that there is not upon earth a more impertinent creature than an unfortunate lover. We are daily complaining of the severity of our fate to people who are wholly unconcerned in it; and hourly improving a passion, which we would persuade the world is the torment of our lives. Notwithstanding this reflection, Sir, I cannot forbear acquainting you with my own case. You must know then, Sir, that, even from my childhood the most prevailing inclination I could perceive in myself was a strong desire to be in favour with the fair sex. I am at present in the one-and-twenty year of my age; and should have made choice of a she bedfellow many years since, had not my father who has a pretty good estate of his own getting, and passes in the world for a prudent man, been pleased to lay it down as a maxim, that nothing should a young fellow's fortune so soon as marrying early, and that no man ought to think of wedlock until six-and-twenty. Knowing his sentiments upon this head, I thought it in vain to apply myself to women of condition, who expect settlements; so that all my amours have hitherto been with ladies who had no fortunes: but I know not how to give you so good an idea of me, as by laying before you the history of my life.

"I can very well remember, that at my school-mistress's, whenever we broke up, I was always for joining myself with the miss who lay-in, and was constantly one of the first to make a party in the play of Husband and Wife. This passion for being well with the females still increased as I advanced in years. At the dancing-school I contracted many quarrels by struggling with my fellow-scholars for the partner I liked best, that upon a full night, before our mothers made their appearance, I was usually up to the nose in blood. My father like a discreet man, soon removed me from this stage of softness to a school of discipline, where I learnt Latin and Greek. I underwent several severities in this place, until it was thought convenient to send me to the university: though, to confess the truth, I should not have arrived so early at the seat of learning, but from the discovery of an intrigue between me and my master's housekeeper, upon whom I had employed my rhetoric as effectually, that, though she was a very elderly lady, I had almost brought her to consent to marry me. Upon my arrival at Oxford, I found logic so dry, and ving attention to the dead, I soon fell the living. My first amour was with whom I shall call Parthenope: her ale by the town-wall. Being often by the proctor, I was forced at last, stress's reputation might receive no onfess my addresses were honourable. was immediately sent home; but Par after marrying a shoemaker, I was d to return. My next affair was with ighter, who deserted me for the sake barber. Upon my complaining to one lar friends of this misfortune, the cruel mere jest of my calamity, and asked ile, where the needle should turn but

After this I was deeply in love with and at last with my bed-maker; upon sent away, or, in the university phrase, ever.

Coming home, I settled to my studies and contracted so great a reservedness st from the company I most affected, r thought he might venture me at the

a week after my arrival, I began to and became enamoured with a mighty re, who had every thing but money to er. Having frequent opportunities of ie soft things which a heart formed for spire me with, I soon gained her cou- of marriage; but unfortunately for us sence of my charmer I usually talked guage to her eldest sister, who is also

Now I assure you, Mr. Spectator, proceed from any real affection I had her; but, being a perfect stranger to tion of men, and strongly addicted to h the women, I knew no other lan- of love. I should, however, be very to you if you could free me from the im at present in. I have sent word to eman in the country that I am des- ve with the younger sister; and her new no better, poor man, acquainted same post, that I had for some time dresses to the elder. Upon this, old ne up word, that he has heard so much s, that he intends immediately to order ith-sea. Sir, I have occasionally talked ying, that I begin to think there is not and if the old 'squire persists in his de- reby give him notice that I am pro- f with proper instruments for the de- despairing lovers: let him therefore l consider that by his obstinacy he may he son of his strength, the world a r, my mistress a passionate lover, and ctator, "Your constant Admirer,

"JEREMY LOVEMORE."

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 22, 1714.

- Mens sine pondere ludit.—Petr. s mind uncumber'd plays.

ceived my friend Shadow's letter, seve- respondents have been pleased to send it how they have been employed in at notable adventures they have been a common sign of a barber's shop engaged in during that mod shall lay before my readers few of their extravagancies, in time accustom themselves to the purpose.

One, who styles himself Gl that his fair one charges him does not use him with half sincerity of his passion m Gladio having by valour and tyrants, enchanters, monste number, and exposed himse gers for her sake and safe postscript to know whether, in them, he may not promi her esteem at last.

Another, who is very p writes me word, that having sea, he took occasion one gone along with it, and gr richest man in all the Indie about a year or two, a gue open his casement, blew h country again, where awaki the change of the air not turned to his left side in ord but ere he could get on s nately apprehended for steal condemned for the fact, and executed, if somebody steppi ber had not brought him a ton, wants Mr. Shadow's ad would bid him be content to and learn to be satisfied as s

The next is a public-spiri me, that on the second of S whole city was on fire, and been reduced to ashes again not flown over it with the and happily extinguished the prevailed too far. He woul he has not a right to petit aldermen for a reward.

A letter, dated Septemb me, that the writer, being res had fasted all that day; and of dreaming upon something handsome slice of bride-cake conveniently under his pillow memory happened to fail him lect nothing but an odd fauc cake: which being found up few crumbs, he is resolved to dreams another time, believi may possibly be somewhat o

I have received numerous delicious dreamers, desiring thod of silencing those noi tions lead them to take their city in a morning, doing a working strange confusion it bitants. Several monarchs honour to acquaint me how ofte from their respective thron coach or the rumbling of a w private gentlemen, I find, h vast estates by fellows not fair lady was just on the poi young, handsome, rich, ing an impertinent tinker pass and a hopeful youth, who h to great honour and prefer

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

in old song, those incon-it dissolving impoverishinterrupting
, and gene-
A boisterous ect without ces, to open ransforming nations into y statesman, ror of Eu-the Great as crowned the conclu-
th instant,
rial majesty testimonies de, who owe rances from by waking ed him from watchman, r, freed him emies, and to nothing.

e has often rsefulness of a gout by the at plained a his imperti-
with a word

his order of ders to make lutions. A of forgetting had a youth him remem-is waked by as a kind of hat it is time verlooked all himself what to the condi-

y please, but y adventures this side the la's dream at t of the audi-excellent disels to a gen-in of ill-luck etty children thrown them ering himself strong smell r a bottle of l to her nose, he preacher's

ptly from his may employ vation which rected him to ation through all its extravagancies, whether in sleeping or waking, is no improper method of correcting and bringing it to act in subordination to reason, so as to be delighted only with such objects as will affect it with pleasure when it is never so cold and sedate.

No. 598.] FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1714.

Jamne igitur laudat, quod de sapientibus alter Ridebat, quoties a limbo moveat unum Protuleratque pedem: fiebat contrarius alter?
Jov. Sat. 2. 28.

Will ye not now the pair of sages praise,
Who the same end pursu'd by several ways?
One ply'd, one condemn'd, the woful times;
One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes.—Dorset.

MANKIND may be divided into the merry and the serious, who both of them make a very good figure in the species, so long as they keep their respective humours from degenerating into the neighbouring extreme; there being a natural tendency in the one to a melancholy moroseness, and in the other to a fantastic levity.

The merry part of the world are very amiable while they diffuse a cheerfulness through conversation at proper seasons and on proper occasions; but on the contrary, a great grievance to society when they infect every discourse with insipid mirth, and turn into ridicule such subjects as are not suited to it. For though laughter is looked upon by the philosophers as the property of reason, the excess of it has been always considered as the mark of folly.

On the other side, seriousness has its beauty while it is attended with cheerfulness and humanity, and does not come in unseasonably to pall the good humour of those with whom we converse.

These two sets of men, notwithstanding that each of them shine in their respective characters, are apt to bear a natural aversion and antipathy to each another.

What is more usual than to hear men of serious tempers, and austere morals, enlarging upon the vanities and follies of the young and gay part of the species, whilst they look with a kind of honour upon such pomps and diversions as are innocent in themselves, and only culpable when they draw the mind too much?

I could not but smile upon reading a passage in the account which Mr. Baxter gives of his own life, wherein he represents it as a great blessing that in his youth he very narrowly escaped getting a place at court.

It must indeed be confessed that levity of temper takes a man off his guard, and opens a pass to his soul for any temptation that assaults it. It favours all the approaches of vice, and weakens all the resistance of virtue; for which reason a renowned statesman in Queen Elizabeth's days, after having retired from court and public business, in order to give himself up to the duties of religion, when any of his old friends used to visit him, had still the word of advice in his mouth, "Be serious."

An eminent Italian author of this cast of mind speaking of the great advantage of a serious and composed temper, wishes very graciously, that for the benefit of mankind he had Trophonius's cave in his possession; which, says he, would contribute more to the reformation of manners than all the good houses and hidewells in Europe.

We have a very particular description of this cave in Pausanias, who tells us that it was made in the form of a huge oven, and had many particu-again into day-light, yet cave to have been a nun-a solemn procession of behind another, in the the most exemplary dece-delighted with so edifywards me a great comp-laughing, singing, and that I could hear them them. Upon my asking them whether they told were French Protestant Britain; and that, find-humour for my country, me in order to compostion. I told them that, soon spoil their mirth; whole shoal of them, w-survey of the place, cam-and with looks entirely in a Dutchman, who hakelder, as he called it; bit had made any manner

A comedian, who had parts of humour, told me to act Alexander the Great, succeed very well in it, three laughing features of the experiment, but contrary to it, that I am afraid hereafter but a Timon of Athens.

I then clapped up an order to qualify him for succeeded by a young man who was brought to me to her great sorrow and Quaker. Seeing myself Freethinkers and scoffing making themselves merry thoughtful brows of those I thrust them all in, one the door upon them. I looked as if they had bewits, and were marching hands to a wood that was I found they were not at their first serious thoughts quickly bring them to a gave them into the cust that happy change was

The last that was bro woman, who at the first into an immoderate fit of to hold her sides all the ing to me. Upon this, I and taking the daughters said I, "be pleased to r your mother tells me y into the mouth of the ca having begged pardon fo me that she often treat of her relations in the sa sit giggling and laughi one end of a tragedy t would sometimes burst ou and set the whole cong The mother was going came out of the cave to tenance and a low curse exuberant mirth, that he reduced her to a more

1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 2675, 2676, 2677, 2678, 26

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

trude of her-ores, I looked I saw all my very pensive place seemed ngth resolved at it was that pon the com-entrance, the a nod in my vered myself pleased at the not knowing re spoiled my 29, 1714.

En. vi. 641.
ow.—DARBY.

asure in ex-different reliantries, have y of the soul, romise them-
prejudices we find that t parents, has t these great d to the doc-tion. I was
th a learned ersant among ts of Africa.*
that country, or of a future ing we there f to us. We nature that ble of being
ts. The Su-ce with this d in the soul
ie, say they,
umour to be es or br w-ers, ter, we shall st of such a entertained the concert gion about us y desire will t a man's in-nt with him.
reme Power
whether he agination as among those ss will be the al objects, or on our own which I have withstanding y chimerical blime in its
of a Divine

Dean Lancelot reginationibus man, the father count of West

Being on a human soul. It has also, like many other opinions of the heathen world upon these important points; it has, I say, its foundation in truth as it supposes the souls of good men after this life to be in a state of perfect happiness; that in this state there will be no barren hopes, nor fruitless wishes, and that we shall enjoy every thing we can desire. But the particular circumstance which I am most pleased with in this scheme, and which arises from a just reflection upon human nature, is that variety of pleasures which it supposes the soul of good men will be possessed of in another world. This I think highly probable, from the dictates both of reason and revelation. The soul consists of many faculties, as the understanding, and the will, with all the senses both outward and inward; or, to speak more philosophically, the soul can exert herself in many different ways of action. She can understand, will, imagine, see, and hear; love, and discourse, and apply herself to many other the like exercises of different kinds and natures; but what is more to be considered, the soul is capable of receiving a most exquisite pleasure and satisfaction from the exercise of any of these its powers, when they are gratified with their proper objects; she can be entirely happy by the satisfaction of the memory, the sight, the hearing, or any other mode of perception. Every faculty is as a distinct taste in the mind, and hath objects accommodated to its proper relish. Doctor Tillotson somewhere says, that he will not presume to determine in what consists the happiness of the blessed, because God Almighty is capable of making the soul happy by ten thousand different ways. Besides those several avenues to pleasure which the soul is endowed with in this life, it is not impossible, according to the opinions of many eminent divines, but there may be new faculties in the souls of good men made perfect, as well as new senses in their glorified bodies. This we are sure of, that there will be new objects offered to all those faculties which are essential to us.

We are likewise to take notice that every particular faculty is capable of being employed on a very great variety of objects. The understanding, for example, may be happy in the contemplation of moral, natural, mathematical, and other kinds of truth. The memory, likewise, may turn itself to an infinite multitude of objects, especially when the soul shall have passed through the space of many millions of years, and shall reflect with pleasure on the days of eternity. Every other faculty may be considered in the same extent.

We cannot question but that the happiness of a soul will be adequate to its nature; and that it is not endowed with any faculties which are to lie useless and unemployed. The happiness is to be the happiness of the whole man; and we may easily conceive to ourselves the happiness of the soul which any one of its faculties is in the fruition of its chief good. The happiness may be of a more exalted nature in proportion as the faculty employed is exalted; but, as the whole soul acts in the exertion of any of its particular powers, the whole soul is happy in the pleasure which arises from any of its particular actions. For, notwithstanding, as has been before hinted, and as it has been taken notice of by one of the greatest modern philosophers,* we divide the soul into several powers, and faculties, there is no such division in the soul itself, since it is the whole soul that remembers, understands, wills, or imagines.

* Locke

power of considering the memory, understanding, imagination, and the like faculties, is for enabling us to express ourselves in such subjects of speculation, not that there is a division in the soul itself.

It is, then, that the soul has many different faculties, in other words, many different ways of being pleased, that it can be intensely pleased or made happy by all these different faculties, or ways of being pleased, that it may be endowed with several latent faculties, which it is not at present in a condition to use, that we cannot believe the soul is endowed with a faculty which is of no use to it; that, if any one of these faculties is transcendently exercised, the soul is in a state of happiness; and, in this place, considering that the happiness of an individual is to be the happiness of the whole man, the question is, but that there is an infinite variety of pleasures we are speaking of? and that this joy will be made up of all those pleasures of which the nature of the soul is capable of receiving? shall be the more confirmed in this doctrine, to observe the nature of variety with regard to the soul of man. The soul does not care to be in the same bent. The faculties relieve one another by turns, and receive an additional pleasure from the novelty of those objects about which they are exerted.

It is likewise very much confirmed by the different views which it gives us of the nature of happiness. In the description of the happiness of God it represents to us all those objects which are able to gratify the senses and imagination: in many places it intimates to us all the happiness which the understanding can possibly receive in this state, where all things shall be revealed to us; we shall know even as we are known; the pleasures of devotion, of divine love, the pleasure of being with our blessed Saviour, with an innumerable host of angels, and with the spirits of just men made perfect, are likewise revealed to us in several parts of the holy writings. There are also described those hierarchies or governments in which the angels shall be ranged one above another, and in which we may be sure a great part of our happiness will likewise consist; for it will not be there as in this world, where every one is aiming at power and superiority; but, on the contrary, every one will be at that station the most proper for him in which he is placed, and will probably think that he is not so happy in any other station. And many other particulars, are marked in the description of heaven, as the several ingredients of our happiness in heaven, which all imply such a variety of faculties and such a gratification of the soul in all its faculties, as I have been here mentioning.

The Rabbins tell us, that the cherubim are the angels who know most, and the seraphim are the angels who love most. Whether this description be not altogether imaginary, I shall not here inquire; but it is highly probable that, among the angels, there may be some who will be employed with the employment of one faculty more than another; and this perhaps according to those virtuous habits or inclinations which have been taken the deepest root.

It will here apply this consideration to the spirit of the wicked men, with relation to the pain which they will suffer in every one of their faculties, and the active miseries which shall be appropriated to each faculty in particular. But, leaving this to the discretion of my readers, I shall conclude with observing how we ought to glorify our Creator, and rejoice in the gifts bestowed upon us, for having been made capable of pleasure by so many different ways, that what a variety of pains and pleasures enter into the thoughts of the human spirit is framed by the different faculties, and taste the different pleasures; may therefore look into the nature of amazement, and cannot but be in a posture to Him who has poured out a profusion of blessings upon us, and made it a being capable of enjoying them.

There cannot be a doubt that God has designed us for a state of happiness for that heaven which he has thus natured out for us, and made it a being capable of bliss. He would never have made us vain, and have endowed us with faculties not to be exerted on objects of vanity. It is very manifest that the constitution of our mind is adapted to an infinite variety of pleasures which are not to be met with in this world; therefore, at all times, we should appoint this his gracious providence towards us, and make the most of it, as so many qualifications which are to be the instruments of our happiness.

No. 601.] FRIDAY.

Man is naturally

THE following essay has entertained my readers.

“Notwithstanding the great variety of pleasures which obtain in this world, it is not therefore concluded that the nature of mankind is such as to delight in nothing so much as to receive more of their pleasures from the world, by rebound from other pleasures, than to receive more of their pleasures from the world, by rebound from other pleasures. Now, it is manifest that there are but few, and to a great degree above the grovelling pleasures of the world, another order of beings, whose nature is the same; moved by the same passions, and endowed with all the same faculties, cleared, refined, and cultivated, as the fluid body in winter and summer, is stiffened in ice as water, and streams, gladdening the eye, and refreshing the soul. It is a property of the human mind, that its kind wishes spread themselves over the whole creation; and if there were too many of them, who were not their own dear selves, with their species, let us suppose that the world is frozen, and, by the contrary quality, restrained from its usual activity, therefore endeavour to check upon this general passion of the soul, which will enable it to find out what method, this method, this method, unfettered, and restore the soul to its exercise.

“The first and leading passion of the human mind is the love of the true source of moral excellence, and the obliquity of matter in any of its d, who, when beings, must as most others error. That tion of a soul d that the ill be corrected s, occasioned es and dispo-egree, on the ls, others are rly it may be an illiberal es them is to cramp draws at they never ore. It is a h one advan-

as painful to n to perform y beneficent reason of the les them and aracter may dominates in benefit withssary to give requital, the d by the op-
The strength
t the weight he resolution sacrifice of in-too grateful marks of its e of this ill e distempers ver, a great icence obste-ing a likely ich shall be force of med that we do soever, the here be the portunity to be ground it is difference e their foun-
in their na-o gain upon as the former esh supplies, and this suggeral require-ad, and yet that vicious produce a not doing, hey are ac-
resolution, operations of proceeding up, that an ngredient in-are of such so that the fall to every e of this is,
in evil eye,

each imagining all the rest to be embarked in interest that cannot take place but to his prejudice.
Hence are those eager competitions for wealth power; hence one man's success becomes another's disappointment; and, like pretenders to the supremiacy, they can seldom have common charity towards their rivals. Not that they are naturally disposed to quarrel and fall out; but it is natural for a man to prefer himself to all others, and to secure his own interest first. If that which men esteem the happiest were, like the light, the same without and unconfined good, whether ten thousand enjoyed the benefit of it or but one, we should see more good-will and kind endeavours would be assuasive

Homo qui erranti comiter monstrat viam Quasi lumen de suo lumine accendat, facit, Nullumque ipse lucrat, cum illi ascendat.

To direct a wanderer in the right way, as to light another man's candle by one's own, which lumen none of us light what the other gains.

"But, unluckily, mankind agree in ranking the of objects which inevitably engage them in pertual differences. Learn, therefore, like a wise man, the true estimate of things. Desire not more of the world than is necessary to accommodate you passing through it; look upon every thing beyond not as useless only, but burdensome. Place your quiet in things which you cannot have without putting others beside them, and thereby make them your enemies; and which, when attained, will give you more trouble to keep than satisfaction in the enjoyment. Virtue is a good of a nobler kind it grows by communication; and so little reward earthly riches, that the more hands it is lodged in, the greater is every man's particular stock. So, by propagating and mingling their flames, not only the lights of a branch together cast a more extensive brightness, but each single light burns with stronger flame. And lastly, take this along with you, that if wealth be an instrument of pleasure, the greatest pleasure it can put into your power is the of doing good. It is worth considering that the organs of sense act within a narrow compass, and the appetites will soon say they have enough. Which of the two therefore is the happier man—the who confining all his regard to the gratification of his own appetites, is capable but of short fits of pleasure—or the man who, reckoning himself a share-in the satisfactions of others, especially those who come to them by his means, enlarges the sphere of his happiness?

"The last enemy to beneficence I shall mention is uneasiness of any kind. A guilty or a discontented mind, a mind ruffled by ill-fortune, disordered by its own passions, hurried by neglect, or fretting at disappointments, hath not leisure to attend to the necessity or reasonableness of a kindness desired, nor a taste for those pleasures which wait on beneficence, which demand a calm and unperturbed heart to relish them. The most miserable of all beings is the most envious; and, on the other hand, the most communicative is the happiest. And if you are in search of the seat of perfect love and friendship, you will not find it until you come to the region of the blessed, where happiness, like a refreshing stream, flows from heart to heart in an endless circulation, and is preserved sweet and untainted by the motion. It is old advice, if you have a favour to request of any one, to observe the golden times of address, when the soul, in a flash of good humour, takes a pleasure to show itself pleased.
Persons conscious of their own integrity, valuing emselves and their condition, and full of grace in a Supreme Being, and the hope of almighty, survey all about them with a flow of blood: as trees which like their soil, they shoot expressions of kindness, and bend beneath the precious load, to the hand of the gatherer. The mind be not thus easy, it is an infallible at it is not in its natural state: place the in its right posture, it will immediately display its innate propensity to beneficence."

602.] MONDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1714.

Facit hoc illos hyacinthos.—Juv. Sat. vi. 110.

This makes them hyacinths.

following letter comes from a gentleman and is very diligent in making his observations which I think too material not to be communicated to the public:—

18,

order to execute the office of love-casualist to Britain, with which I take myself to be in your paper of September 8, I shall make further observations upon the two sexes in beginning with that which always ought to be upper hand. After having observed, with curiosity, the accomplishments which are apt to captivate female hearts, I find that there is no one irresistible as one who is a man of importance. He makes himself talked of, though it be for the singular cock of his hat, or for prating aloud in a play, is in the fair way of being a favourite.

I have known a young fellow make his way by knocking down a constable; and may to say, though it may seem a paradox, that a fair one has died by a duel in which both servants have survived.

About three winters ago I took notice of a lady at the theatre, who conceived a passion for a notorious rake that headed a party of cat-bags. I am credibly informed that the emperor of the Turks married a rich widow within three months after having rendered himself formidable in the streets of London and Westminster. Scouring the windows have done frequent execution upon the sex. But there is no set of these rascals who make their way more successful than those who have gained themselves a name by being a great man's favourite, and have ruined the greatest number of fortunes. There is a strange curiosity in the world to be acquainted with the dear man who has been loved by others, and to know what it makes him so agreeable. His reputation is more than half his business. Every one, that is ambitious of being a woman of fashion, looks out for opportunities of being in his company; so that, as the old proverb, 'When his name is up he is a-bed.'

As very sensible of the great advantage of being in the company of a man of importance upon these occasions on the king's entry, when I was seated in a box behind a cluster of very pretty country ladies had one of these showy gentlemen in the company. The first trick I caught him at was to flatter several persons of quality whom he did not know; nay, he had the impudence to hem at a lady who had a finer equipage than ordinary; and a little concerned at the impertinent behaviour of the mob that hindered his friend from taking notice of him. He pulled off his hat to him who it was, he told him that he had been very much obliged to him, whereas, in truth, it was he who had been very much obliged to him.

"He was never at a person's name, though under a peer. He for the aldermen, very good privy-councillors, with rakes among the bishops."

"In short, I collected that he was acquainted with nobody. At the same time did not that day make mention of his mistress, could have done in half an hour."

"Ovid has finely told of love, which I shall here send you his translation:

"Page

Thus love in theatres And glances are still Nor shun the chariot
The Circus is no more No need is there of time Nor nods, nor signs, nor But boldly next the Close as you can to Pleas'd or unpleas'd
For so the laws of love Then find occasion to Inquire whose chariot
To whatsoever side Suit all your inclination Like what she likes,
And whom she favours

"Again, page

O when will come When thou, the best
Drawn by white horses With conquer'd slaves Slaves that no longer O glorious object! O
O day of public joy!
On such a day, if thou Some beauty sits, the
If she inquire the name Of mountains, rivers, Answer to all thou know'st Of things unknown as This is Euphrates, or Flows the swift Tigris Invent new names of Call this Armenia, this Call this a Mede, and Talk probably: no more

No. 603.] WEDNESDAY

Ducite ab urbe domum, &c.

— Restore

My lingering Daphnis to me

The following copy of my correspondents, and original, that I do not mind my readers:—*

My time, O ye Muses, when When Phoebe went with me

* The Phoebe of this name was daughter of the very learned and prebendary of Ely, early College, Cambridge, who married to Dr. Dennison of Killaloe in Ireland, and was Bishop of Peterborough.

res: I felt in my breast; like Cohn was blest;
as left me behind;
on a sudden I find!
a could possibly be,
but, alas! it was she.

II.
to tend a few sheep,
lie down and sleep,
be cheerful and gay.
feather all day;
neevish am grown,
ever was known.
y joys are all drown'd, t weighs more than a pound.

III.
to run sweetly along,
the pebbles among;
if Phœbe was there,
twas music to hear:
lk by its side,
nothing but chide.
side I go in pain?
bling, and hear me complain.

IV.
and me would oftentimes play, re as joyful as they,
g, how happy the time, uty were all in their prime:
en by me they pass, adful of grass:
akes me quite mad,
I am so sad.

V. pleased to see
y fair one and me;
so, and to my dog said, had patted his head, g, I with a sour look a blow with my crook: for why should not Tray hen Phœbe's away?

VI.
be, what sights have I seen!
ow fresh was the green!
the trees and the shade,
, and every thing made!
ough all are still there, delightful appear:
e, I find, of her eyes, pects arise.

VII.
as both all the wood thro', and nightingale too;
locks by us did bleat, pper under our feet,
ugh still they sing on,
the melody's gone:
a now I have found,
greeable sound.

VIII.
thy delicate hue?
eautiful blue?
the blossom beguile?
e, why do they not smile?
as that you dress'd for: a place on her breast;
pleasure her eye,
on her bosom to die.

IX.
s, till my Phœbe return!
yr's cool breezes I burn!
bouts he would tread, and 'twould melt down the lead.
og hither my dear,
t when she is here.
of delay,
ter for all thou canst say.

X.
at hears me complain, ten my pain?
lin, thy passion remove;
o live without love?
up to return,
d so sadly forlorn,
all die with despair!
now ye love one so fair.

No. 604.] FRIDAY, OCTOBER

Tu ne quaesieris (scire nefas) quem iussu Finem tui dederint, Leuconoe: nec Ba Tentaris numeros. — HON. 10

Ah, do not strive too much to know, My dear Leuconoe,
What the kind gods design to do With me and thee. — Cæcilius.

THE desire of knowing future events is the strongest inclination in the mind; and, indeed, an ability of foreseeing probably what, in the language of men, is called prudence; but, not satisfied with this reason holds out, mankind hath endeavored to penetrate more compendiously into futurity by oracles, omens, lucky hours, and the like. Superstition, owe their rise to this propensity. As this principle is founded in self-love, it is sure to be solicitous in the first place for its own fortune, the course of his life, and the manner of his death.

If we consider that we are free-agents, we discover the absurdity of such inquiries into our actions, which we might have neglected, is the cause of another that and so the whole chain of life is linked together. Pain, poverty, or infamy, are the natural consequences of vicious and imprudent acts, as blessings are of good ones; so that we suppose our lot to be determined without our great enhancement of pleasure arises unexpectedly; and pain is doubled by being unexpected. Upon all these, and several other considerations, ought to rest satisfied in this portion allotted us; to adore the hand that hath fitted us to our nature, and hath not more displayed its power in our knowledge than in our ignorance.

It is not unworthy observation, that the inquiries into future events prevail more in proportion to the improvement of liberal useful knowledge in the several parts of the world. Accordingly we find, that magical inquiries are main in Lapland; in the more remote parts of Scotland they have their second sight; of our own countrymen see abundant evidence. In Asia this credulity is strong; and in that part of refined learning there consists a knowledge of amulets, talismans, occult influences, &c. the like.

When I was at Grand Cairo I fell into the acquaintance of a good-natured musician, who promised me many good offices which he intended to do me when he became the prime minister. It was a fortune bestowed on his imagination, that he was a doctor very deep in the curious sciences, and repeated solicitations I went to learn of him this wonderful sage. For a small sum he promised, but was required to wait in expectation until he had run through the Egyptian ceremonies. Having a strong propensity then, to dreaming, I took a nap upon the spot I was placed, and had the following particulars whereof I picked up the other day my papers.

I found myself in an unbounded prospect, methought the whole world, in several parts with different tongues, was assembled. A multitude glided swiftly along, and I found a strong inclination to mingle in the train. I quickly singled out some of the spleeniest. Several in rich caftans and glittering robes, bustled through the throng, and tramp-er they threw down; until, to my great ad that the great pace they went only a to a scaffold or a bowstring. Many sels on the other side moved forward iety; some danced until they fell all thers painted their faces until they es. A tribe of creatures with busy nto a fit of laughter at the misfortunes y ladies, I turned my eyes upon them. ch of them filling his pockets with ds, and when there was no room left e wretches, looking round with fear ed away before my face with famine

t.
ct of human misery struck me dumb . Then it was that, to disburden my en and ink, and did every thing that pened under my office of Spectator. mploying myself for the good of man-rised to meet with very unsuitable y fellow-creatures. Never was poor t with pamphleteers, who sometimes ly against me, but oftener shot at me bulwarks, or rose up suddenly in y were of all characters and capaci-h ensigns of dignity, and others in what most surprised me was to see black gowns among my enemies. It trouble to me, sometimes to have a to me with an angry face, and re-having lampooned him when I had eard of him in my life. With the berwise; many became my enemies particularly pointed out: as there ho resented the satire which they I directed against them. My great the company of half a dozen friends, nee were the club which I have so d in my papers. I laughed often at ay sleep, and was the more diverted ycomb's gallantries (when we after-acquainted), because I had foreseen ith a farmer's daughter. The regret my mind upon the death of my com-ixities for the public, and the many fleeing before my eyes, made me osity; when the magician entered awakened me, by telling me (when that he was just going to begin. only delivered the prophecy of that which is past, it being inconvenient second part until a more proper op-

MONDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1714.

extremum animum; cultusque frequenti.
e voces artes, haud tarda sequuntur.

VIRG. GEORG. II. 51.

They change their savage mind.

as lose, and, quitting nature's part, as and discipline of art.—DRYDEN.

used the following letter, and finding the subject of love, I referred it to suist, whom I have retained in my ulations of that kind. He returned at morning with his report annexed and black gowns employed by the administ year of the Queen's reign, Dr. Swift, fr. Friend, Dr. King, Mr. Oldsworth, Mrs. D. niers of the Examiners, &c.

to it, with both of which I reader:—

“MR. SPECTATOR,

“Finding that you have person in your service in qu apply myself to you, under that hath for some months pe couple of humble servants, of aversion to: the other I think first hath the reputation of a is one of those people that value. My spark is reckoned the men, but is a favourite marry the man of worth as oblige my parents, and imp with my dear beau I prom although not a jointure. N whether I should consent to man that I have only no obj against whom all objections t I am determined to follow t I dare say he will not put thing as matrimony contrary

“I am, &c.

“P. S. I forgot to tell you tleman is the most complai world, and is always of my forsooth, fancies he hath as slights my lapdog, and hath th dict me when he thinks I About half an hour ago he m that a patch always implies a

As I look upon it to be n with the parents than the da some considerations to my may incline her to comply w direction she is; and at the her that it is not impossible have a true affection for him different to her; or, to use th that, “if she marries first, love

The only objection that she against the gentleman propos of complaisance, which, I p willing to return. Now I c very circumstance, that she ever they may think of it, are their hearts. It is difficult love delights more in giving p Miss Fickle ask her own heart a secret pride in making this look very silly. Hath she eve than when her behaviour hath to hang himself; or doth she when she thinks she hath dri brink of a purling stream? the same time, that it is not im may have discovered her tricks give her as good as she bri handsome young baggage th Greek of my acquaintance, ju as if he had been a barbarian. she had fixed him she took a his rival's box, and apparently little finger. She became a p arts and sciences, and scarce him without wilfully mispell young scholar, to be even coquettes as soon as he had g not want parts to turn into ric and pleasure of the town. A one another for the space of

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

es from Lou-
sted with her ontrary way.
n a few days are now the present with asure.
me time, not fter them a satisfaction
I know very
to be excused
th worn out a discretion,
ect. And it
g husbands, men beyond tually in the ply the same

of their pur-united care serve, by the ore warm in red than any bligations, here than in use affection ary, persons a particular they think in they have that as there marriage, so served.

ry of custom e a mutual ons. It is a lend of mine loves a man is stories, or cret delight;
lattery, and of self-love.
re possessed the air and nto the same some have rt, that the to resemble nt therefore ended will two or three in the beau, fier another.
nent, if that is the most

our present which I shall rrespondent as in British ress through ughter, who celebrated and the vio-

the mother her daughn her heart
It was no sooner dark than she conveyed into his room young maid of no disagreeable figure, who was of her attendants, and did not want address to prove the opportunity for the advancement of fortune. She made so good use of her time, t when she offered to rise a little before day, the k could by no means think of parting with her; that finding herself under a necessity of discover who she was, she did it in so handsome a man that his majesty was exceedingly gracious to h and took her ever after under his protection: so much, that our chronicles tell us he carried h along with him, made her his first minister of m and continued true to her alone, until his marria with the beautiful Elfrida.

No. 606.] WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 17

— Longum castu solata laborum Arguta conjux percurrit perline telas.—VIRG. Georg. 4. 28 — menu time at home
The good wife singin piles the various looms.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I HAVE a couple of nieces under my directi who so often run gadding abroad, that I do n know where to have them. Their dress, their d and their visits, take up all their time, and they to bed as tired with doing nothing, as I am sh quilting a whole under-petticoat. The only tim they are not idle is while they read your Spectator which being dedicated to the interests of virtue, desire you to recommend the long-neglected an needle-work. Those hours which in this age a thrown away in dress, play, visits, and the lik were employed, in my time, in writing out recipes or working beds, chairs, and hangings for the fam For my part, I have plied my needle these 40 years, and by my good-will would never have it us of my hand. It grieves my heart to see a couple proud idle flirts sipping their tea, for a whole af noon, in a room hung round with the industry their great-grandmother. Pray, Sir, take the la able mystery of embroidery into your serious con sideration, and, as you have a great deal of the viti of the last age in you, continue your endeavours t reform the present. "I am," &c.

In obedience to the commands of my respectable correspondent, I have duly weighed this important subject, and promise myself, from the arguments here laid down, that all the fine ladies of England will be ready, as soon as their mourning is over, to appear covered with the work of their own hands.

What a delightful entertainment must it be to the fair sex, whom their native modesty, and the tend ness of men towards them, exempt from public busi ness, to pass their hours in imitating fruit of flowers, and transplanting all the beauties of nature into their own dress, or raising a new creation i their closets and apartments! How pleasing is th amusement of walking among the shades and grove planted by themselves, in surveying heroes slain b their needle, or little Cupids which they hav brought into the world without pain!

This is, methinks, the most proper way where a lady can show a fine genius; and I cannot help wishing that several writers of that sex had chosen to apply themselves rather to tapestry than rhime.
Your pastoral poetesses may vent their fancy i rural landscapes, and place despairing shepherds * Public mourning for the death of Queen Anne.

illows, or drown them in a stream of heroic writers may work up battles and inflame them with gold or stain them. Even those who have only a or an epigram, may put many valuations to a purse, and crowd a thousand air of garters.

Without breach of good manners, immodest creature is void of genius, and her part herein but very awkwardly, unless insist upon her working, if it be not out of harm's way.

Argument for busying good women in this, because it takes them off from usual attendant of tea-tables, and all scenes of life. While they are forming and beasts, their neighbours will be the fathers of their own children; and will be but seldom mentioned where it is, whether blue or red is the more

How much greater glory would be general, if she would choose rather to be of Blenheim in tapestry, than sigh with so much remembrance against those women in their hearts!

It is that I shall mention, is the profit to the family where these pretty arts. It is manifest that this way of life fair ladies from running out into excess at the same time an actual improvement would that matron be, who is described upon her monument, "that she wrote the whole Bible in tapestry, and at an old age, after having covered three miles of wail in the mansion-house!" Being considered, I humbly submit proposals to all mothers in Great

Let every virgin whatsoever be allowed to be the mistress of her first lover, but in a suit of mourning.

Let every fresh humble servant, she appear with a new stomacher at the

Let one be actually married until she has had her bed pillows, &c. ready situated, as if the bed were quite finished.

Let I mistake not, would effectually read art of needle-work, and make the needle Britain exceedingly nimble-fingered.

Let the memorable custom of the Grecian lacertian preserved in Homer, which I have seen a very good effect with my country-dow, in ancient times, could not, they receive a second husband, until they had shrouded for her deceased lord, or the like. Accordingly, the chaste Penelope thought, lost Ulysses at sea, she was time in preparing a winding-sheet for the body of her husband. The story of very famous, and yet not sufficiently general circumstances, I shall give it as Homer makes one of her woovers

Let her give to every youth apart, her sweet looks, and a deceitful heart: Let her be the love of many a slender twine, Let her be the texture, and perplex design; Let her, she cried, "my lord but newly dead, Let her, to court my widow'd bed, Let her, as solemn vows require, Let her, shroud for poor Ulysses' sire,

Let her limbs, when fate the hero's Shall claim this labour of his Let her all the dames of Greece While the great king without

Thus she, Nor did my friend All day she sped the long labour But when the burning lamps were Each night unravell'd what the Three livelong summers did the The fourth her maidens told the These eyes beheld, as close I The backward labours of her Till, watch'd at length, and so Her task she ended, and com

No. 607.] FRIDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1749.

Dicite Io Pagan, et Io his dilectis Decidit in casses præda perempta

Now Io Pagan sing, now sing And with repeated Io's fill the The prey is fallen in my snare

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"HAVING in your paper of Monday my report on the case of Mrs. Pagan, in I have taken notice that let me be married; I hope your readers are so sensible that as love generally produces matrimony, so "It perhaps requires more virtue in a husband or wife than what gives the most shining character who is married.

"Discretion seems absolutely necessary. Accordingly we find that the best and most famous for their wisdom, have drawn a perfect pattern of a perfect husband, it the more complete, hath celestial just returns of fidelity and tenderness inasmuch that he refused the love of a woman for her sake; and, to use the words of Pagan authors, 'Vetulum mulierem,' his old woman was dearest to him.

"Virtue is the next necessary to this domestic character, as if constancy and mutual esteem were more remarkable in them than any others of the age.

"Good-nature is a third necessary to the marriage state, without which the marriage is sour upon a thousand occasions. A good mind is joined with the heart, which attracts the admiration and esteem of others. Thus Caesar, not more for his fortune and valour than for his wisdom, has won the hearts of the Roman people. Through the custom, he pronounced the funeral of his first and best-loved wife.

"Good-nature is insufficient, it must be accompanied with a steady and uniform, and accompanied with a steady temper, which is above all things necessary to this friendship contracted for life. It is easy within himself before he can be easy to others. Socrates and Marcus Antoninus, of men, who by the strength of their minds entirely composed their minds to the passions, are celebrated for good-nature. Withstanding the first was young and the other with Faustina. The first would but habituate themselves to bear with one another's faults, the second pretty well conquered. This good temper and complacency was necessary in the nuptial ceremonies among solemnity, alla of the vic-a passage out ordshire, not resent paper, y give rise to er belonging

e manors of therton, and f the earls of The said Sir
s, one baconnovre ready Lent, to be d, after the past, in form

before named in their own or to the por-and shall say ow, that I am lyke hanging re, after the r porter shall y his faith to of his neigh-

l bailiff shall
of the lord-hall go to the Knightleye,
Knightleye,
be ready at time of day, horse and a vey the said unity of Staf-
l bailiff shall,
he tenants of appointed at the services
t the day as e bacon shall Whichenovre,
and awaiting he bacon.—
delivered to l those which o the bacon.
with trumps relsy, to the l of Whichethe bacon in mandeth the s neighbours here ready,"

e two neigh-
be a wedded l if since his and if he be d neighbours three points in down and

at Dummow in ord, at the date brought to the hall-door, and shall there be upon one half-quarter of wheat, and upon one sh of rye. And he that demandeth the bacon sh kneel upon his knee, and shall hold his right ha upon a book, which book shall be laid open t bacon and the corn, and shall make oath in t manner:—

"Here ye, Sir Philip de Somerville, lord Whichenovre, mayntener and gyver of this bacon that I, A. sithe I wedded R. my wife, and sithe I k hyr in my keepyng, and at my wylls by a retr a day after our marriage, I would not have chang for none other; farer ne fowler; richer ne poor ne for none other descended of greater hys slepyng ne wakyng, at noo tyme. And if the w B. were sole, and I sole, I would take her to be wyfe before all the wymen of the world, of w condicions soever they be, good or evyll; as be me God and his sayntes, and this flesh and fleshes."

"And his neighbours shall make oath, that th trust verily he hath said truly. And if it be tak by his neighbours before named, that he be a tr man, there shall be delivered to him half-a-quar of wheat and a cheese; and if he be a villain, shall have a quarter of rye without cheese. A then shall Knightleye, the lord of Redlow, be call for to carry all these things tofore rehearsed; a the said corn shall be laid on one horse; and t bacon above it; and he to whom the bacon app taineth shall ascend upon his horse, and shall be the cheese before him if he have a horse. And if have none, the lord of Whichenovre shall cause h to have one horse and saddle, to such time as he l passed his lordship; and so shall they depart fr manor of Whichenovre with the corn and the chee tofore him that hath won it, with trumpets, tabour and other manner of minstrelsy. And all the h tenants of Whichenovre shall conduct him to h passed the lordship of Whichenovre. And the shall they all return except him to whom app taineth to make the carriage and journey within the county of Stafford, at the costs of his lord Whichenovre."

No. 608.] MONDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1711.

— Perjuria ridet amantium.—Ovid, Art. Amor. l. 631.

— Forgiving with a smile

The perjuries that easy maids beguile.—Dryden.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"ACCORDING to my promise I herewith trans to you a list of several persons, who from time time demanded the fitch of bacon of Sir Philip Somerville, and his descendants; as it is preserved in an ancient manuscript, under the title of 'Th Register of Whichenovre-hall, and of the house fitch there maintained.'

"In the beginning of this record, is recited th law or institution in form, as it is already printed your last paper: to which are added two lines as a comment upon the general law, the substance whereof is, that the wife shall take the same oath the husband, mutatis mutandis; and that the judge shall, as they think meet, interrogate or cross-exa mine the witnesses. After this precedeth the regul ter in manner following:—

"Aubry de Falstaff, son of Sir John Falstaff, k with dame Maude his wife, were the first that de manded the bacon, he having bribed twain of h father's companions to swear falsely in his behalf whereby he gained the fitch. But he and his son immediately into a dispute how the said should be dressed, it was, by order of the men from him and hung up again in the said island. The wife of Stephen Freckle, brought her husband along with her, and set forth the actions and behaviour of her consort, adding that she doubted not but he was ready to like of her, his wife; whereupon he, the said, shaking his head, she turned short and gave him a box on the ear.

de Waverland, having laid his hand upon the clause, "were I sole and was rehearsed, found a secret compunction in his mind, and stole it off again.

ard de Loveless, who was a courtier, and a bred-man, being observed to hesitate at "after our marriage," was thereupon explain himself. He replied, by talking of his exact complaisance while he was and alleged that he had not in the least his wife for a year and a day before marriage he hoped was the same thing.

ne Jolly, Esq. making it appear, by une testimony, that he and his wife had all and entire affection for the space of nth, commonly called the honey-moon, consideration thereof, one rasher bestowed his, says the record, many years passed any demandant appeared at Whiche-insomuch that one would have thought ole country were turned Jews, so little ection to the flitch of bacon.

st couple enrolled had liked to have care e of the witnesses had not deposed, that Sunday with the demandant, whose wife w the Squire's lady at church, she thought pped some expressions, as if she thought deserved to be knighted; to which he passionate pish! The judges taking the to consideration, declared the aforesaid o imply an unwarrantable ambition in anger in the husband.

orded as a sufficient disqualification of se that, speaking of her husband, she orgive him."

ewise remarkable, that a couple were in the deposition of one of their neigh-he lady had once told her husband, that duty to obey: to which he replied, "O u are never in the wrong!"

lent passion of one lady for her lapdog; sway of the old housemaid by another; torn by the wife, and a tailor's by the quarrel about the kissing crust; spoilsrs, and coming in late of nights, are so al articles which occasioned the reprone scores of demandants, whose names in the aforesaid register.

enumerating other particular persons, nt myself with observing that the senenced against one Gervase Poacher is, ght have had bacon to his eggs, if he efore scolded his wife when they were

And the deposition against Dorothy s in these words, "that she had so far lominion of the coal fire (the stirring husband claimed to himself) that by she never would suffer the poker out

"I find but two couple were successful: the first wife, who since the day seen one another until the second was an honest pathe husband was a man of peaceable temper; the w-

No. 609.] WEDNESDAY

— Farrago

The miscellaneous

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I HAVE for some time paper, and have therefore into the Spectator, when will not have many spare of your own. As I was than honest country gentle-expressing his astonishmmightily crowded with d-which I told him he was y-took all those gentlemen persons of that dignity; after his first degree in the hither only to show himse-is apt to think he is but hand cassock for his publi-not the additional ornamemagnitude to entitle him Doctor from his landlady Now since I know that I looked upon as a mark of is made use of among som-venturers of the town, I sh-give it a place among those justly exposed in several of well assured that the main-in the country and the uns-to a man untainted with pleased to see this venerab-When my patron did me th-his family (for I must own was pleased to say he took panion: and whether he k-the lace and shoulder-knot of servitude and dependancwas so kind as to leave my discretion; and, not havin-my degrees, I am content ment. The privileges of certain number of chaplain-perhaps not one in ten of t-have any relation to the ne-belong to: the right gener-lains, except the domestic being nothing more than the place, who, if he happens to number of his noble maste-and the same time have fif-proper accoutrements, of h-perhaps there hath been n-said in the family since the coronet.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I wish you would writ-about natural antipathies, o The 20th of October, 1714, of King George I.

memorable instance to our present purpose. The oracle, being asked by Gyges, who was the happiest man, replied, Aglaüs. Gyges, who expected to have heard himself named on this occasion, was much surprised, and very curious to know who this Aglaüs should be. After much inquiry, he was found to be an obscure countryman, who employed all his time in cultivating a garden, and a few acres of land about his house.

Cowley's agreeable relation of this story shall lose its day's speculation.

This Aglaüs (a man unknown to men, But the gods knew, and therefore lov'd him then), Thus liv'd obscurely then without a name, Aglaüs, now consign'd to eternal fame.
For Gyges, the rich king, wicked and great, Presum'd at wise Apollo's Delphic seat, Presum'd to ask, O thou the whole world's eye, Deest thou a man that happier is than I?
The god, who scorn'd to flatter man, reply'd, Aglaüs happier is. But Gyges cry'd, In a proud rage, Who can that Aglaüs be?
We've heard as yet of no such king as he.
And true it was, through the whole earth around,
No king of such a name was to be found.
Is some old hero of that name alive,
Who his high race does from the gods derive?
Is it some mighty gen'ral that has done Wonders in fight, and godlike honours won?
Is it some man of endless wealth? said he,
None, none of these. Who can this Aglaüs be?
After long search, and vain inquiries past,
In an obscure Arcadian vale at last (Th' Arcadian life has always shady been), Near Sopho's town, which he but once had seen, This Aglaüs, who monarchs' envy drew, Whose happiness the gods stood witness to,
This mighty Aglaüs, was lab'ring found,
With his own hands, in his own little ground.
So, gracious God, if it may lawful be Among those foolish gods to mention thee, So let me act, on such a private stage,
The last dull scenes of my declining age;
After long toils and voyages in vain, This quiet port let my tost vessel gain;
Of heavenly rest this earnest to me lend, Let my life sleep, and learn to love her end.

No. 611.] MONDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1714.

Perfidus! sed duris genuit te cautibus horrens Caucasus, Hyrcanæque admovent ubera tigres.
VINO. Æn. iv. 366.

Perfidious man! thy parent was a rock,
And fierce Hyrcanian tigers gave thee suck.

I AM willing to postpone every thing, to do any least service for the deserving and unfortunate. Accordingly I have caused the following letter to be inserted in my paper the moment that it came into my hands, without altering one tittle in an account which the lady relates so handsomely herself.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I flatter myself you will not only pity, but, if possible, redress a misfortune myself and several others of my sex lie under. I hope you will not be offended, nor think I mean by this to justify my own imprudent conduct, or expect you should. No: I am sensible how severely, in some of your former papers, you have reproved persons guilty of the like mismanagements. I was scarce sixteen, and I may say, without vanity, handsome, when courted by a perjured man; who, upon promise of marriage, rendered me the most unhappy of women. After he had deluded me from my parents, who were people of very good fashion, in less than three months he left me. My parents would not see nor hear from me; and, had it not been for a servant who had lived in our family, I must certainly have perished for want of bread. However, it pleased

Providence, in my miserable condition, to oblige me, and married me, and I might be in a better condition, as I was at first, if I had not been so much obliged to you, that you should be so kind to me; and I am so much obliged to you, and compassion some of your papers, that I have wrong. I have do not know that without my husband obliged, through relations, to go to London. Then it is I am That man, or rather go to. Base villain his nauseous wife strives all the while destitute of friends worth inquiring opened to see his jewels. Then the hypocrite pretends practised all the while. I am not to I hate and abhor plainly perceive he makes it his business seeing him in always most in short, told all his fair; they tell the his companions, he tells it, think liar. If they boy return it, then I no ways agreeable my eyes from the upon it, and while until I have at last upon me. Nay, under that mist favours to one man will let those who this way of proceeding himself the person to the insolence unhappy women those things that horror! You have customs appear to sure, for the sake own it, but, like make it as infamous or expose our secret on the ear, and

"Your obedient

"P. S. I am in fortune, having on Wednesday, in the

I entirely agree Lesbia, that in circumstances is as behaviour when the truth I shall begin following observations

It is a mark of sending an affront lead a man into cowardice to affirm however, this probability to be high, it re-

My mother, wearing a faded and thin apron, Placed her foot upon the edge of Lillian's bed; I saw the pattern box chariot thrown,
 And, with the weight of an unwisely done—DANIEL n this leg of his trip, it is on the 29th until he has in most cases arranged for his return home with a bit more right :

 I agree, and will shew you the point you will see at the evening conference symposium so glad to do with you :

It is highly laudible to pay respect to a new predecessor of a worthy ancestor, not only in gratitude to those who have done good for us, but also as it is an encouragement to others to follow their example. But this is an honour to be given not demanded by the descendants of great men, but by who are apt to remain as it were, as they put us up, making comparisons to their ancestors. There is some probability of wisdom, strength, or wealth, cause the commendation, but of their having no place of pre-eminence; but we can have no merit, right we to claim any respect, because our father's will whether we would or no.

The following letter indicates the fully felt notion, in a new, and I think, not disagree-ble —

.. M.C. SPILLAI (K.)

d with our nment the ink spent great parent whose and the of es which his e well know ce to his pee on a small
 r they im-
 the on their a by a Span-give to the must be to and may not d have the Doubt, I have

When the genealogy of every family presented to the world probably be no man valued or despised on account of his birth. There is scarce a leg in the society who would not find himself indebted to some great name; nor any one of higher rank, who would not find one or several of his important persons deriving his ancestors. It would be a pleasant entertainment to see one personage upon a great father, under the same character they bore who chiefly acted their respective parts in the history. Suppose, for instance, a gentleman full of his illustrious family, seated in the neighbourhood of a village where a few poor peasants, who were his tenants, were labouring. He would look down upon his tenants—with his many various passions would be heard shepherds, and would station his tenants, peacocks in the garden, in the prospect of fifty thousand pounds. He would be content to sink or flutter in the sea of speculation, in a secure interval with a wife of proper rank and fortune and proper possessions, in the midst of splendour and disgrace. And how would he be affected by the probability, his tenants are in the country, in order to see whether, as the land is a new discovery, and might or might not

[illegible][illegible]

(1) 1990年1月1日起，凡在境内销售货物或提供应税劳务的纳税人，均应按销售额和规定的税率计算应纳税额，并不得抵扣任何税额。

Platy made a visit to our country garden, which was far from fine in this sort of business. I found him in a study pointing out members of his family, whom he had just taken out of the closet, as it was then called out in the year of the republic, and put in the parlour. Having the pleasure to have some of his blood in my veins, I attempted to cast my eye over the august and venerable plant; and asked my owner to inform me of some of the superfluous branches.

"We possess slightly over three or four of them," he said, "the late forefathers, whom he knew by tradition."

soon stopped by an alderman of London, received made my kinsman's heart go pit-a-ty. His confusion increased when he found the man's father to be a grazier; but he recovered himself upon seeing justice of the quorum at the assizes. Things went on pretty well as we sat our eyes frequently over the tree, when suddenly he perceived a merchant-tailor perched upon a bough, who was said greatly to have increased his estate; he was just going to cut him off if he had been gent. after the name of his son; who had dared to have mortgaged one of the manors his father had purchased. A weaver, who had got for his religion in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was pruned away without mercy; as was a yeoman who died of a fall from his own estate; great was our triumph in one of the trees which was beheaded for high-treason; which, however, was not a little allayed by another of the trees who was hanged for stealing sheep. Expectations of my good cousin were wondered at by a match into the family of a knight; unfortunately for us this branch proved barren: in other hand, Margery the milk-maid, being married to a bough, it flourished out into so many and so bent with so much fruit, that the old man was quite out of countenance. To compound this disgrace, he singled out a branch more fruitful than the other, which he told him he valued more than any in the tree, and bade him have good comfort. This enormous bough was that of a Welsh heiress, with so many Apartments that it might have made a little grove by itself from the trunk of the pedigree, which was composed of labourers and shepherds, arose in pride of farmers: this was branched out into seven, and ended in a sheriff of the county, knighted for his good service to the crown upon an address. Several of the names used to disparage the family, being looked upon as mistakes, were lopped off as rotten or superfluous; as, on the contrary, no small number of apartments without any titles, my cousin, to supply the defect of the manuscript, added esq. at the end of them.

The tree, so pruned, dressed, and cultivated, in a few days, transplanted into a large tub, and placed in the great hall, where it was the veneration of his tenants every Sunday, while they wait until his worship is gone to church; wondering that a man who has many fathers before him should not be made king, or at least a justice of the peace."

3.] FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1714.

Stadils florentem ignobilis et.

Virg. Georg. iv. 564.

Studious of less noisy praise.—DAYDEN.

I reckoned a piece of ill-breeding for one man to be the whole talk to himself. For this reason I keep three visiting-days in the week, I sit now and then to let my friends put in their words. There are several advantages hereby accruing to my readers and myself. As first, modest writers have an opportunity of being printed; again, the town enjoys the pleasure of variety; and posterity will see the humour of the present age, by the help of these little lights upon the private and domestic life. The benefits I receive thence are such as these: I gain more time for future speculation; I improve for the public my grievances; and by leastening the several letters to the Spectator, with little labour.

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"I was mightily pleased with your Friday. Your sentiments were worked up in such a manner upon every reader. But I have a remark; that while you are contentment, and a retirement of melancholy, and actions truly glorious. A reward of virtue; we then are with them; and though we are puffed up with exterior splendour, it is not as truly philosophy as the ruby, or the sparkling diamond, the fainter and less perfect. If there are any cities who lie concealed, impute it to them as a defect, not I believe it owing to their nature rather than of their education. The story of Aglaüs with a stranger to courts, nor is

What shall I do to
And make the age

was the result of a laudable ambition, until after frequent disquisitions himself the melancholy solitude when he despair. The soul of man is an animal, who withdraws himself from the stage, and cannot be drawn out; he refuses to answer his end with an honest ambition for example. The battles of the world have more than once made me weary. And, when I have seen a man celebrated by our poets, I am one of that distinguished number in vain I pant with the desire to be chained down in obscurity. I can take it in seeing them join their friendly lights to the throne. Farewell, I believe me to be with great

"Yo

"SIR, Mid

"Though you formerly were the subject of one or more of your papers, I am now a subject of one of your papers, who are so far from ruling their practice, that they never heard of such an art as masters of it than Tully's art, or whom you praise. The persons I am speaking of are beggars about this town. True, I appeal to any man of a degree softer than a stone, I do not pretend to more than my bours, I have oftentimes with money in my pocket only penniless, but destitute of bestowing of it any other

NOTED ESSAYISTS

se...
se... est... I ver
st...
to ex... still...
the...
the...
qu... e... cites... sta... traver

Se: 11

work, where one of a boy and a young woman affir ture, I said I chance to see quently in a le I was not contrary to posed. I was looked at at me with one with me aptly. The future, and ne, for I was r four or of course, the moving costs

ated to reduce lyd to apply at, and a few s to the ty of my lles, and space but that neous to re a way for the ar...

 sci...
 er...
 w... gu...
 and...
 m... ep...
 that...
 the...
 ou...
 we...
 p... ex...
 co...
 f... t...

of the AV
st 6 on 64
tr

And I am very sensible of the blessing yet I am not but mislike, because such advice from the saints seems to insult than comfort me, and reminds me much of what I was: which melancholy was so great, I cannot yet perfectly surmount, but I have comments on this head will make it a better thing.

To show you what a value I have for your talents, these are to certify the persons I directed to call some of them returns to his labours, if I may call them so, before the winter is over. I will but only confine myself to a statement where I have promised them all with my needs. I will therefore inform them by deciphering them on a carpet, and leaving assistance, myself sorrowfully refusing. It is to improve of this, as savouring the need masses, be pleased to acquaint me with a design you do better, and it shall be faithfully performed by the undertakers.

"Moumoula."

No. 614. MONDAY NOVEMBER 1, 1874.

2. 下列各句中，加粗的词语使用恰当的一项是 A. 他为人处事，总是以心平气和的态度来对待纷繁复杂的诸事。
 B. 同学们经常到这位名流大师那儿垂青，求教、探讨，总是受益匪浅。 C. 周末，我带着孩子到郊区游玩，见到了不少见所未见、闻所未闻的风景名胜。
 D. 他最近出版的小说，情节跌宕起伏，扣人心弦，真是让人叹为观止。

Volume 75

—We have sold almost the year of our stock, and have to be careful We are going to be careful to be sure The year will be a good one — DRYDEN

The following account hath been transmitted to me by the Governor, —

• My Sister Victoria

Having in some former papers taken care of the two states of virginity and marriage, and knowing that all people should be served in their turn, I this day drew out my drawer of widows, and went with several cases, to each, whereof I have obtained satisfactory answers by the post. The cases are as follow:—

Q. Whether Amoret be bound by a promise marriage to Pindander, made during her business

Q. Whether Seng-roma, having faithfully given notice to two several persons, during the absence of her husband, is not thereby put at liberty to a case which of them she pleases, not to be bound to for the sake of a new lover?

On the subject, whether she be obliged to fulfill a vow according to a vow made to her husband at the time of his procuring her with a diacon, the canonists being informed by a very pretty and clear demonstration, that such vows are that that is stated.

"Ah, then, madam, whether she hath not the gift of a woman, to respect herself as a gentleman's great friend, who passes very hard by her master's duty, and so is a great enemy to a gentleman?"

An angel is thus a creature both the creation of a wish, whether it be proper for her to marry a man who is younger than her eldest son.

A very plump well-spoken matron, who gave a great many good words, only doubt, what she was not obliged to conscience to shut up her "tongue" and "tongues," until such time as she had "tongued" her "tongue" of herself.

Sophronia, who seems by her pin-e and spectacles to be a person of condition, sets forth, that where she hath a great estate, and is but a woman, she is to be informed, whether she would not do better to marry Camillus, a very idle tall young man, who hath no fortune of his own, and consequently hath nothing else to do but to manage

As I speak of widows, I cannot but observe that, which I do not know how to account for; it is always more sought after than an old man of the same age. It is common enough among every people, for a stale virgin to set up a shop in a place where she is not known; where the large company, supposed to be given her by her husband, quickly recommends her to some wealthy squire, who takes a liking to the jolly widow, and would have overlooked the venerable spinster.
The truth of it is, if we look into this set of women, and, according to the different characters or circumstances wherein they are left, that widows may be divided into those who raise love and those who excite compassion.

As, not to ramble from this subject, there are things in which consists chiefly the glory of the widow—the love of her deceased husband, and the care of her children; to which may be added a third, the prudence of the former, such a prudent conduct as will do honour to both.

A widow possessed of all these three qualities is not only a virtuous but a sublime character.
There is something so great and so generous in the state of life, when it is accompanied with all its difficulties, that it is the subject of one of the finest among modern tragedies in the person of Andromache, both met with a universal and deserved applause, when introduced upon our English stage by Mr. Phillips.

The most memorable widow in history is Queen Hecuba, who not only erected the famous mausoleum, but drank up the ashes of her dead lord; and by enclosing them in a nobler monument than which she had built, though deservedly esteemed of the wonders of architecture.

The last lady seems to have had a better title to a deceased husband than any I have read of, since not the least of her first was remaining. Our moderns might think a husband a very bitter draught, and would have good reason to complain, if they did not accept of a second partner until they had such a troublesome method of losing the memory of the first.

I shall add to these illustrious examples out of ancient story, a remarkable instance of the delicacy of our ancestors in relation to the state of widowhood, as I find it recorded in Cowell's Interpreter.
East and West Euborne, in the county of Surrey, if a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her freebench in all his copy-lands, dum sola et casta fuerit, that is, while she remains single and chaste; but if she commits incon-tinency she forfeits her estate; yet if she will come to the court riding backward upon a black ram, with his tail in her hand, and say the words following, the steward is bound by the custom to readmit her to her freebench.

— Here I am,
Riding upon a black ram, Like a whore as I am;
And for my crinum cranum Have lost my vincum bahum;
And for my tall's game
Have done this wordly shame; Therefore I pray you, Mr. Steward, let me have my land again.

A record of this kind is to be found in the edition of Cowell's Interpreter of 1637, 4to

The like custom the Devonshire, and other

It is not impossible to present you with a representation of other western dames, on occasion; and I hope with a cavalcade of v

No. 615.] WEDNESDAY

Quæ-Mimeribus
Duramque o-Pejusque le-
Non ille p-Aut pat-

Who spend their time
By the large boun-
Who in a fixt un-
Smile at the do-
And scorn alike he-Who poison le-Loath to purcha-
But kindly for their fr-
And seal their country

It must be owned passion, since it is c-virtues to subdue it.
Our preservation, it to us as long as we to preserve. But as would be scarce wor-a perpetual dread of of religion and phi-necessary anxieties, object.

If we consider the
and the violent eff-how dangerous it is occasions. Some ha-madness, others hav-apprehensions. The in the space of one t-

O! nox quam long-
A tedious night ind-

These apprehensi-consciousness of guilt, and may excite our When the hand of against the impious, withstand him. We represented in the tormented with the apocryphal book of

“For when unrigthe holy nation; the the prisoners of d-bonds of a long n-eternal Providence.
hid in their secret s-dark veil of forgetfuand troubled with st-ness, condemned timorous, and, bei-always forecasteth nothing else but a reason offereth.—For clear light, and non-Over them only was of that darkness w-them; but yet we grievous than the dedly can be greatest gain in the phre it, either by rejection, or insert, to be sion, would g when cer g who is les re this are hat estimat may try ation, I can ent with the here in pain ation to the sting is de only the be as not to ar he delivers so n dly set do often to ries ties

s, y him, they racks er illustrated o pass. No projected, but may spoil it, pleasure, and may, by ten change in the st subtle pro own servants r, though the may be mach
e. As there its calamities, enemies. Ask eel the pangs he poor and ects of quiet
ains of body, structions pat
ly, when for res are sen e present is s of this life
d on them, ouch we feel rings, may I nature
ure I see wh are, they are e I see. One point which our feelings, beyond our strength is often peased, in his tender severity, toparade the soul from its body and miseries together.

It we look forward to him for help, we shall never be in danger of falling down those precipices which our imagination is apt to create. Like those who walk upon a line, if we keep our eye fixed upon our point, we may step forward securely: whereas an independent or cowardly glance on either side will infinitely destroy us.

No. 616.] FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1714

Q. To his home-est. Cotta, pos, this home-est Moor. Epig. 1. 10

A pretty fellow is but half a man.

Cicero hath observed that a jest is never more with a better grace than when it is accompanied with a serious countenance. When a pleasant thought plays in the features before it discovers itself in words, it raises too great an expectation, and so the advantage of giving surprise. Wit and humour are much less poeily recommended by a levity of phrase and that kind of language which may be distinguished by the name of Cant. Ridicule is never more striking than when it is concealed in gravity.
True wit our lies in the thought, and arises from the representation of images in odd circumstances and uncommon lights. A pleasant thought strikes by the force of its natural beauty; and the nature of a jest is rather pallid than heightened by that train of phrases and figures which is so much used among the pretenders to humour and pleasantry. The style of men are like our mountebanks they make a man a wit by putting him in a fantastic habit.

Our little burlesque authors, who are the delight of ordinary readers, generally abound in these peculiarities, which have in them more vivacity than wit.

I lately saw an instance of this kind of writing which gave me so lively an idea of it, that I could not forbear begging a copy of the letter from the gentleman who showed it to me. It is written by country wit, upon the occasion of the rejoicings at the day of the king's coronation.

" Past two o'clock, and a frosty morning

" DEAR JACK,

" I have just left the right worshipful and hi-myrindons about a sneaker of five gallons. The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before gave them the slip. Our friend the alderman was hid-seas over before the bonfire was out. We ha with us the attorney, and two or three other brags fellows. The doctor plays least in sight.

" At nine o'clock in the evening we set fire to the whore of Babylon. The devil acted his part tomercifully. He has made his fortune by it. We equipped the young fog with a tester apiece. Honest old Brown of England was very drunk, and showed his loyalty to the tune of a hundred rockets. The mag-drank the king's health, on their marrow-bones, and another Day's doable. They whipped us half a dozen goshals. Poor Tom Tyeet had like to have been down-hill with the end of a sky-rocket, that fell upon the bridge of his nose as he was drinking to king's health, and spoiled his tip. The mob was very loyal till about midnight, when they grew a little mutinous for more liquor. They had used have dumbedounded the justice; and his clerk came in to his assistance, and took them all down in black and white.

I had been huzzaed out of my seven made a visit to the women, who were gazed comfortably. Mrs. Mayoress clipped the glish. Clack was the word.

ot to tell thee that every one of the posse it cocked with a distich; the senators sent a cargo of riband and metre for the oc-richard, to show his zeal for the Protestant s at the expense of a tar-barrel and a ball. into the knight's great hall, and saw a very y of spinsters. My dear relict was amongst ambled in a country dance as notably as of them.

all his majesty's liege subjects love him as s good people of this his ancient borough!

[17.] MONDAY, NOV. 8, 1714.

Mimallonis implerunt cornua bombis, ptum vitulo caput ablatura superbo ris, et lynceum Maenas flexura corymbis, ingemmat: reparabilis adsonat Echo.

PEN. SAT. l. 29.

crooked horns the Mimallonian crew blasts inspir'd; and Basaris, who slew cornful calf, with sword advanced on high, from his neck his haughty head to fly.
Maenas, when, with ivy-bridles bound, ed the spotted lynx, then Evion rang around, from woods and floods repeating Echo's sound.

DRYDEN.

are two extremes in the style of humour, ich consists in the use of that little pert y which I took notice of in my last paper; in the affectation of strained and pompous is, fetched from the learned languages. The rs too much of the town; the other of the ing illustrates better than example, I present my reader with a letter of pedantic hich was written by a young gentleman ersity to his friend, on the same occasion, the same place, as the lively epistle pub- ny last Spectator.

AR CHUN,*

now the third watch of the night, the art of which I have spent round a capa- of china, filled with the choicest products e Indies. I was placed at a quadrangular metrically opposite to the mace-bearer. e of that venerable herald was, according most gloriously illuminated on this joy- on. The mayor and aldermen, those pil- constitution, began to totter; and if any board could have so far articulated, as to nded intelligibly a reinforcement of liquor, assembly had been by this time extended table.

celebration of this night's solemnity was the obstreperous joy of drummers, who, parchment thunder, gave a signal for the e of the mob under their several classes iminations. They were quickly joined by ous clank of marrowbones and cleavers, chorus of bells filled up the concert. A of stack-fagots cheered the hearts of the with the promise of a blaze; the guns had uttered the prologue, but the heavens stened with artificial meteors and stars of word for a chamber-companion and bed-fellow at our own making; and all from one end to another. We collected a largess of pled eleemosynary until ferous. There was a past swarthy demon at his el whispers and insinuation the fire, and then left his mobile were very sarcastic the old gentleman sever head-piece.* Tom Tyle maged by the fall of a s spoiled the gnomon of his of the commons grew so found work for our friend help of his amanuensis, and their crimes, with a d script at the next quarter.

I shall subjoin to the the following copy of an Italian poet, who was had had multitudes of admir- cident that happened und when a firelock, that had castle of St. Angelo, beg being kindled by a flash, hath written his poem in that I have already exe line in it is a riddle, and to consider it twice or th that the Cynic's tenement cast-coat a hog'shead, &c.

+ 'Twas night, and heaven An Argus now, did count In every window Rome
All bright and studded

A blazing chain of light And round her neck the
The Cynic's rolling tenement With Bacchus his cast-

The pile, still big with The Tuscan pile, did lie Where the proud tops of Whence giants sally, ad

Whilst now the multi-
And their thr'd eyes the A thousand iron mouths
And thunder out a drea
In treble notes the sma
The deep-mouth'd cant
The lab'ring pile now h Proofs of its travail, sig

The clouds envelop'd Quench'd ev'ry star, and New real thunder grum
And in dismalful murr Nor doth its answer'd cl But, whilst both parties While heav'n and earth
The doubtful cracks the Whether the claps of th Or else the burst of can Whether clouds rag'd be Or struggling clouds in But, O my Muse, the w
As ev'ry accident in ord

Tall groves of trees in Fictitious trees with pa These know no spring, In fire, and shoot their

* The pope's tiara, or triple crown.
+ This copy of verses is a translation of the style and manner of Camillo Quindici. His character and his writings are well known to Leo X., and his portrait and his courtiers are in the Vatican, p. 244; and Bayle's Diet.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

r head spread it is rest ture let burns mis out on the y. y'm del
and;
an;
als, and impout sh
know, u eer
show,
v.

10, 1711

uti no
im.
I Sat
ose:
se
aches p ctatois, given ers in very d to offer to you y of writing, n y itself; and in any of the

to my hands, tion, be a s inds of poetry rite letters, a it are equally language, and by giving the
at present of tood to mean ve been so use ied from the uced into two letters, but a ful occasion s in verse as al, and in pros and I must re latter, are the ng in the Ove heart will rest those of the ot his way, but time of the ation of the

flowing and riting, letters are of a quite d in the kind culine, though gh known to into the world he age. Our oned a to the bled with the dark sides of fined radiance,

and understand the delicacies, as well as the usual fates of conversation. He must have a lively in of wit, with an easy and concise manner of ex sion: every thing he says must be in a free and l engaged manner. He must be guilty of nothing that betrays the air of a recluse, but appear a man the world through. His illustrations, his argu ments, and the greatest parts of his images, must drawn from common life. Strokes of satire a criticism, as well as panegyric, judiciously tar in fact as it were by-the-hyot, give a wonder ful and ornament to compositions of this kind. B let our poet, while he writes epistles, though ze s familiar, still remember that he writes in verse and must for that reason have a more than ordin care not to fall into prose, and a vulgar diction, c cepting where the nature and humour of the ma do necessarily require it. In this point Horace ha been thought by some critics to be sometimes ca less, as well as too negligent of his versification; which he seems to have been sensible himself.

"All I have to add is, that both these manners writing may be made as entertaining, in their way, as any other species of poetry, if undertaken by persons duly qualified: and the latter sort may be managed so as to become in a peculiar manner corrective."

"I am," &c.
I shall add an observation or two to the remark of my ingenious correspondent; and, in the first place, take notice, that subjects of the most sublime nature are often treated in the epistolary way with advantage—as in the famous epistle of Horace to Augustus. The poet surprises us with his poem and seems rather betrayed into his subject than have aimed at it by design. He appears, like the ghost of a king unknown, with a mixture of firm ness and grandeur. In works of this kind, where the dignity of the subject hurries the poet into descriptions and sentiments seemingly unpremeditated, by a sort of inspiration, it is usual for him to feel himself, and fall back gracefully into the natural style of a letter.

I might here mention an epistolary poem, it published by Mr. Eusden, on the king's accession to the throne: wherein, amongst many other noble and beautiful strokes of poetry, his reader may observe the very happily observed.

NO. 6124. FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1714

data
I have prepared, or rather composed, for you.
Vide Quarta 359.
I have a letter as away.
A letter of the kind I have brought away.

I have often thought that if the several letters which have written to me under the character of the Spectator, and which I have not made use of, were published in a volume, they would not be an un entertaining collection. The variety of the subjects, styles, sentiments, and informations, which a translation to me, would had a very curious.
Very often, indeed, insensibly along through a great many pages. I know some authors who would pick up a secret history out of such materials, and make a book of an abridger by the copy. I shall therefore carefully preserve the original papers in order not apart for that purpose, to the end that they may be of service to posterity; but shall pretend not to myself with owning the receipt of several letters, lately come to my hands, the which whereof I am impatient for an answer sa, whose letter is dated from Cornhill, debe eased in some scruples relating to the astrologers.—Referred to the dumb man for

er.

who proposes a love-case, as he calls it, to -casuist, is hereby desired to speak of it to ster of the parish: it being a case of con-poor young lady, whose letter is dated Oc-6, who complains of a harsh guardian and brother, can only have my good wishes, he pleases to be more particular.

etition of a certain gentleman, whose name er got, famous for renewing the curls of dewigs, is referred to the censor of small emonstrance of T. C. against the profanathe sabbath by barbers, shoe-cleaners, &c., er be offered to the society of reformers.

ned and laborious treatise upon the art of returned to the author.

e gentleman of Oxford, who desires me to copy of Latin verses; which were denied a the university books. Answer: Nonumque in annum.

y learned correspondent who writes against gowns, and poke sleeves, with a word in of large scarfs. Answer: I resolve not to impositions amongst the clergy.

e lady who writes with rage against one of sex, upon the account of party warmth.

: Is not the lady she writes against reckoned as?

re Tom Truelove (who sends me a sonnet s mistress, with a desire to print it imme-to consider that it is long since I was in love.

I answer a very profound letter from my d the upholsterer, who is still inquisitive the king of Sweden be living or dead, by ng him in the ear, that I believe he is alive.

fr. Dapperwit consider, What is that long the cuckoldom to me?

e earnest desire of Monimia's lover, who de-himself very penitent, he is recorded in my the name of the faithful Castalio.

etition of Charles Cocksure, which the peti-yles "very reasonable," rejected.

emorial of Philander; which he desires may ched out of hand, postponed.

re S. R. not to repeat the expression "under " so often in his next letter.

etter of P. S., who desires either to have it entire, or committed to the flames; not to ed entire.

D. MONDAY, NOVEMBER, 15, 1714.

vi, hic est, tibi quem promitti sapius audis.

VINO. Æn. vi. 791.

said the promis'd chief!

we lately presented my reader with a copy full of the false sublime, I shall here come to him an excellent specimen of the true: t hath not been yet published, the judicious ill readily discern it to be the work of a and if he hath read that noble poem on the of peace, he will not be at a loss to guess at or.

THE ROYAL PROGRESS

Brunswick first appeared, each honest heart, on verse, disdained the rules of art; in the songsters, in unmeasur'd odes d Alcides, and dethron'd the gods.

In golden chains the king Or rent the turban from One, in old fables, and With nymphs and tritons Another draws fierce La And fills the infernal reg A third awakes some d Each future triumph fro Exploded fancies, that While the mind nausea
My Muse th' expected From clime to clime, #
His shining march desc Content to paint him, ne Their charms, if charms And from the theme un

By longing nations fo And call'd to guard the
With secret grief his go And Britain's crown wi While prayers and tears And crowds of mourner Not so he march'd whe In scenes of death, and When his hot courser pa And adverse legions sto His frontiers past, the H And cross the level field Here pleas'd the land o He greatly scorns the th O'er the thin soil, with Transplanted woods an Where ev'ry meadow v
From haughty tyrants With fruits and flowers And clothes the marsh Such wealth for frugal
And such thy gifts, cele

Through stately towns,
The pomp advances to Whole nations crowd a
And view the hero with

In Haga's towers he Propitious rise to swell Hither the fame of Eng
The vows and friendsh Mature in wisdom, his Takes in the blended
The world's great pair Secure in him, O Euro Henceforth thy kingdo
By rocks or streams, th
The Alps their new-ma Nor shall thy hills, Pyr

But see, to Britain's And leave the sinking t
The royal bark bound Breaks through the bill O'er the vast deep, gre A wat'ry prospect boun Ten thousand vessels, Bring gums and gold, a Behold the tributes ha
And see the wide horiz

Still is it thine: tho' Hail Albion's cliffs just Before the wind with a Till Thames receives t
The monarch hears the From trembling woods Nor misses yet, amid th
The roarings of the ho

As in the flood he sail He views his kingdom o
A various scene the w O'er rich enclosures an A lowing herd each fer
And distant flocks stray Fair Greenwich hid in (Shade above shade) u His woods ordain'd to And guard the island w

The sun now rolling
A blaze of fires renews Unnumber'd barks the Bright'ning the twilight rand,

eyes,
a breeze,
the seas,
the foe,
me,
same.
design'd
ure;
boat
host,
the skies,
re shed,
ways
al frame,
name.
t,
re.
throng
n'd.
d rude,
e,
e,
e, rn
aise,
ams,
way'd,
y'd.
17, 1714.
ix. 11.
Rowe.
ome observa-
make it the ride of man, tory writers,
nal, the imduration of these goods in which he makes his boast. It is be true that we can have nothing in us that only to raise our vanity, yet a consciousness of our in-merit may be sometimes laudable. The folly is to be no more. we are apt to pride ourselves in our less, or, perhaps, shameful things; and on the other man is out that disgraceful which is our truest glory.

Hence it is, that the lovers of praise take measures to attain it. Would a vain man, in his own heart, he would find that in others as his weaknesses as well as he himself, both, he can not have the impudence to expect the public eye.
Pride therefore flows from want of reflection and ignorance of ourselves. Knowledge and reason come upon us together.

The proper way to make an estimate of a self, is to consider seriously what it is we value. despise in others. A man who boasts of the goods of fortune, a gay dress, or a new title, is generally the mark of ridicule. We ought therefore to look to ourselves what we are so ready to laugh at in other men.

Much less can we with reason pride ourselves in those things, which at some time of our life shall certainly despise. And yet, if we will give ourselves the trouble of looking backward and forward on the several changes which we have already endured, and hereafter must try, we shall find in the greater degrees of our knowledge and wisdom serve only to show us our own imperfections.

As we rise from childhood to youth, we look with contempt on the toys and trifles which our hearts have hitherto been set upon. When we advance to manhood, we are held wise, in proportion to our shame and regret for the rashness and extravagance of youth. Old age fills us with mortifying reflections upon a life mispent in the pursuit of anxious wealth, or uncertain honour. Agreeable to this gradual change of thought in this life, it may be reasonably supposed that, in a future state, the wise man, the experienced, and the maxims of old age will be looked upon by a separate spirit in much the same light as an ancient man now sees the little foibles and toys of infants. The pomps, the honours, the policies, and arts, of mortal men, can be thought as trifling as hobby-horses, mock battles or any other sports that now employ all the cunning and strength, and ambition of rational beings from four years old to nine or ten.

If the notion of a gradual rise in beings from the meanest to the Most High be not a vain imagination, it is not improbable that an angel looks down upon a man as a man doth upon a creature which approaches the nearest to the rational nature. By the same rule, if I may indulge my fancy in the particular, a superior brute looks with a kind of pity on one of an inferior species. If they could reflect, we might imagine, from the gestures of some of them, that they think themselves the sovereigns of the world, and that all things were made for them.
Such a thought would not be more absurd in brute creatures than one which men are apt to entertain namely, that all the stars in the firmament were created only to please their eyes and amuse their imagination. Mr. Dryden, in his fable of the Cock and the Fox, makes a speech for his hero, the cock, which is a pretty instance for this purpose.

Then for me, said to Partlet, ' See, my dear, How this creature hath adorn'd the year,
How the oak-primrose and the violet spring.
And now essay their throats, thus'd to sing All in season ours, and I with pleasure see Mankind, and all the world, and aping me.'

THE SPECTATOR.

What I would observe from the whole is this, we ought to value ourselves upon those things which superior beings think valuable, since is the only way for us not to sink in our own hereafter."

622.] FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1714.

— Fallentis semita vitæ.—Hos. 1 Ep. xviii. 103.

— A safe private quiet, which betrays self to ease, and cheats away the days.—POPE.

MR. SPECTATOR,

In a former speculation you have observed, that greatness doth not consist in that pomp and wherein the generality of mankind are apt to it. You have there taken notice that virtue and security often appears more illustrious in the eye of superior beings, than all that passes for grandeur and significance among men.

When we look back upon the history of those who have borne the part of kings, statesmen, or commanders, they appear to us stripped of those outside ornaments that dazzle their contemporaries; and we find their persons as great or little in proportion to the eminence of their virtues or vices. The wise and generous sentiments, or disinterested conduct of a philosopher under mean circumstances of fortune, set him higher in our esteem than the mighty states of the earth, when we view them both through the long prospect of many ages. Were we to be the emblems of an obscure man, who lived up to the rectitude of his nature, and according to the rules of equity to be laid before us, we should find nothing in such a character which might not set him on a par with men of the highest stations. The following extract out of the private papers of an honest and worthy gentleman will set this matter in a clear light.

Your reader will, perhaps, conceive a greater esteem for him from these actions done in secret, and not as a witness, than of those which have drawn them the admiration of multitudes.

MEMOIRS.

In my twenty-second year I found a violent passion for my cousin Charles's wife growing upon me, wherein I was in danger of succeeding, if I had not that account begun my travels into foreign countries.

A little after my return into England, at a private meeting with my uncle Francis, I refused the offer of his estate, and prevailed upon him not to bequeath it to his son Ned.

I never told this to Ned, lest he should reproach me with the hardness of his deceased father: though he continued to speak ill of me for that very reason.

I prevented a scandalous lawsuit betwixt my brother Harry and his mother, by allowing her to take out of my own pocket, so much money as was the dispute was about.

I procured a benefice for a young divine, who is now a son to the good man who was my tutor, and has been dead twenty years.

I have ten pounds to poor Mrs. ———, my friend ———'s widow.

I dem. To retrench one dish at my table, until I have fetched it up again.

I dem. To repair my house and finish my garden in order to employ poor people after harvest.

I ordered John to set out Goodman D——'s sheep that were poor his fellow-servants

"Prevailed upon the farmer's son for him his gun again.

"Paid the apothecary that confessed herse

"Gave away my f
"Made the mind

justice of one mind, their notions to one

"Mem. To turn while she was eating

"When my neighbor
jured me, comes to f

"Mem. I have f
"Laid up my char lieve the poor in a s

"In the same year

part of their rents.
"As I was airing warmed my heart, for it as long as I li

"Mem. To charge monument for me; b

No. 623.] MONDAY

Sed mihi vel tellus Vel pater omnipotens Fallentes umbras E
Ante, pudor, quam Ille meos, primus q Abstulit; ille habea

But first let yawning And let me thro' the First let avenging J Drive down this bo Condemn'd with gl Before I break the p No: he who had m
For whom I lov'd o

I AM obliged to m following curious p communicate to the

"MR. SPECTATOR

"You may remember you an account of a
of East and West E and elsewhere. "I widow shall have wh in all his copyhold l that is, while she liv commit incontinenc if she will come in upon a black ram, say the words follow custom to re-admit h

"Here I am,
Riding upon
Like a whore
And for my c Have lost my
And for my t
Have done th
Therefore, I
my land

"After having in observes, that this i nature of any in Eng writing that letter, h been of great pains the black ram; and"

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

at bench, for saith, that a to the right by a crafty lands of the widows, for-would have h the good ram." The veral pleas-
,* that they

a great conts to see the
the widow
e in the last that finding might have the steward-
ohn Daunt-
, came next ne difficulty
as observe it,
to soften the m discum, speak plan-
land again.
this worldly ain, had the a which she h the rest of ell versed in
is occasion,
t hinder the

the widow
half-a-score f two years-er John, she l her lovers

which were our with her figure in the

to make her ard, as well quire himself

ject against ut it was reuse the yearved, that she se service of

o court, in-the death of his lifetime;
ider his own
fore her.

f a very corcused as not y her; upon ishment, and lack ex.

ho had long eter, having pet was by on the black of June, being

"Several widows of the neighbourhood, being brought upon their trial, they showed that they did not hold of the manor, and were discharged accordingly.

"A pretty young creature who closed the process, came ambling in, with so bewitching an air, that the steward was observed to cast a sheep's eye upon her, and married her within a month after the death of his wife.

"N. B. Mrs. Touchwood appeared according to summons, but had nothing laid to her charge; having lived irreproachably since the decease of her husband, who left her a widow in the sixty-third year of her age.

"I am, Sir," &c.

No. 624.] WEDNESDAY, NOV. 24, 1714.

Adire ut pie togam jubee componere, quisquis

And thou, maia, aut argenti pallet am-re.

Quis pias lavaria

Hon. 2 Sat. iii. 77

Sat. viii. and near, those whom proud thoughts do swell.

Thou that look pale by loving coin too well;

Whom luxury corrupts—

Cæcili

MANKIND is divided into two parts, the busy and the idle. The busy world may be divided into the virtuous and the vicious. The vicious again into the covetous, the ambitious, and the sensual. The idle part of mankind are in a state inferior to any one of these. All the other are engaged in the pursuit of happiness, though often misplaced, and are therefore more likely to be attentive to such means as shall be proposed to them for that end. The idle, who are neither wise for this world nor the next, are emphatically called by Doctor Tillotson, "fools at large." They propose to themselves no end, but run adrift with every wind. Advice, therefore, would be but thrown away upon them, since they would scarce take the pains to read it. I shall not fatigue any of this worthless tribe with a long harangue; but will leave them with this short saying of Plato, that "labour is preferable to idleness, as brightness to rust."

The pursuits of the active part of mankind are either in the paths of religion and virtue; or, on the other hand, in the roads to wealth, honours, or pleasure. I shall, therefore, compare the pursuits of avarice, ambition, and sensual delight, with the opposite virtues; and shall consider which of these principles engages men in a course of the greatest labour, suffering, and assiduity. Most men in the cool reasonings are willing to allow that a course of virtue will in the end be rewarded the most amply, but represent the way to it as rugged and narrow. If, therefore, it can be made appear, that men struggle through as many troubles to be miserable, as they do to be happy, my readers may, perhaps, be persuaded to be good when they find they shall lose nothing by it.

First, for avarice. The miser is more industrious than the saint: the pains of getting, the fears of losing, and the inability of enjoying his wealth have been the mark of satire in all ages. Were his repentance upon his neglect of a good bargain, his sorrow for being over-reached, his hope of improvement, and his fear of falling into want, directed to their proper objects, they would make so many different Christian graces and virtues. He may apply to himself a great part of St. Paul's catalogue of sufferings. "In journeyings often; in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils among false brethren. In weariness and painfulness, in watch as often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often," how much less expense might he "lay up to himself treasures in heaven!" Or, if I may in this case be allowed to add the saying of a great philosopher, he may "provide such possessions as neither arms, nor men, nor Jove himself."

In the second place, if we look upon the toils of ambition in the same light as we have considered one of avarice, we shall readily own that far less subtle is requisite to gain lasting glory than power and reputation of a few years; or, in other words, we may with more ease deserve honour than sustain it. The ambitious man should remember cardinal Wolsey's complaint, "Had I served God with the same application wherewith I served my king, he would not have forsaken me in my old age," the cardinal here softens his ambition by the specious pretence of "serving his king;" whereas his words, in the proper construction, imply, that, if instead of being acted* by ambition, he had been acted* by religion, he should have now felt the comforts of it, when the whole world turned its back upon him.

Thirdly, let us compare the pains of the sensual with those of the virtuous, and see which are heavier on the balance. It may seem strange, at the first view, that the men of pleasure should be advised to change their course, because they lead a painful life. Yet when we see them so active and vigilant in quest of delight; under so many disquiets, and the port of such various passions; let them answer, as they can, if the pains they undergo do not outweigh their enjoyments. The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the debasement of reason, the pangs of expectation, the disappointments in possession, the stings of remorse, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this unevenness of life, render it so silly and uncomfortable, that no man is thought wise until he hath got over it, or happy, but in proportion as he hath cleared himself from it.

The sum of all is this. Man is made an active being. Whether he walks in the paths of virtue or vice, he is sure to meet with many difficulties to prove his patience and excite his industry. The same if not greater labour, is required in the service of vice and folly as of virtue and wisdom; and he hath this easy choice left him, whether, with the strength he is master of, he will purchase happiness or repentance.

No. 625.] FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1714.

Amores

De tenero meditatur ungui.—HOR., 3 Od., vi. 23.

Love, from her tender years, her thoughts employ'd.

THE love-casulist hath referred to me the following iter of queries, with his answers to each question, or my approbation. I have accordingly considered the several matters therein contained, and hereby confirm and ratify his answers, and require the gentle querist to conform himself thereunto.

"SIR,

"I was thirteen the 9th of November last, and now begin to think of settling myself in the world: and so I would humbly beg your advice, that I must do with Mr. Fondle, who makes his addresses to me. He is a very pretty man, and bath the blacke saw. Though dresses like a ma a room like hi offers, and if he anybody else.

the house, because he is one of the eldest sister, who miss as long as they say. She fool of me, and like a confident resolved to marry her. But because prudent, I beg some questions. I get them printed doubt but you will I shall follow.

“When Mr. [redacted] hour together, and Answer. No

"May not I band, that has p money, and to k gain?"—No.

"Whether I, this whole year a merit, than my f him talk but at

"Whether I myself?"—No.

"Whether it refuse a lock of

"Should not did not pity a sake?"—No.

"Whether you
with the poor man

“Whether you have him, he will

"What shall me if I will mar-

The following
nor answer:—

"MR. SPEAC

"I wonder that you can take place you can take pleasure for, in a word, pleasure of in-pleasure of incre something new e entertainment of good ear for a communicative tempo of doing you great to make myself

to make myself
ber, where I th
press and catch

press, and catch
while it is warm eaters and take other times I lay in many a value line from corner standing. I repa standing, I repaired houses, where I have the news as

In short, Sir, I say goes. A piece of

been an hour in * Actuated.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

may it to my my expense which you may away from
at the time that, gentle of time, and fills. But I that I can for myself.
Once more,
calm news.
But I must
y letters to

1685, No. 7

1720-1711

and we have

ed it and con-

when I would

ness of the any sudden nd upon the inary when whatever apa visible ex-

of a part of

from a fall to a more respect, and other by a

on relation to playing her

and changes

me that is hark, and by did I that had I to be to me times

different, at solve it into so who have but passed to a new the stress

ner. But if

ity, it is by but, as we

in some of

mb, and we may see, the change has

of it is, be ing a study

net, and a view of plaes the story

ts, and it will be sure

its. And as

y in part be

ney of the facilities; but I believe is chiefly owing to the fact, the longer we have been in possession of being it less sensible is the gust we have of it; and the more requires of adventurous amusements to relieve from the staidty and weariness it brings along with it.

And as novelty is of a very powerful, so it is of a most extensive influence. Moralists have long since observed it to be the source of admiration, which increases in proportion to our familiarity with objects, and upon the rough acquaintance is either extinguished. But I think it hath not been even remotely remarked, that all the other passions depend considerably on the same circumstance. What is it but novelty that awakens desire, enhances delight, kindles anger, provokes envy, inspires horror? To this cause we must ascribe it, that love is kindled with fruition, and friendship itself is renewed by intervals of absence; hence menstrucles are hushed without bathing, and the most enamoured beauty without rapture. That emotion, the spark in which passion consists, is usually the effect of surprise, and, as long as it continues, it regulates the agreeable or disagreeable qualities of its object; but as this emotion ceases (and it ceases with the novelty) things appear in another light, and affect us even less than might be expected from their proper energy, for having moved us too much before.

It may not be a useless inquiry, how far the love of novelty is the unavoidable growth of nature, and in what respects it is peculiarly adapted to the present state. To me it seems impossible that a reasonable creature should rest absolutely satisfied in any acquisitions whatever, without endeavouring to better for, after its highest improvements, the mind hath an idea of an infinity of things still to be kind, worth knowing, to the knowledge of which therefore it cannot be indifferent; as by climbing a hill in the midst of a wild plain a man hath his prospect enlarged, and, together with that, the bounds of his desires. Upon this account, I cannot think he detracts from the state of the blessed angels, who are to be perpetually employed in their ascensions, and, ending in to eternity advancing into the boundless depths of the divine perfections. In this thought, there is nothing but what doth answer to the angelic spirits; provided still it be remote from that insatiable desire of more proceeding from not knowing what they possess; and the pleasure of new enjoyment is not with them measured by its novelty (which is a thing merely foreign and accidental) but by its real intrinsic value. After an acquaintance of thirty thousand years with the works of God, the beauty and magnificence of the creation fills the heart with the same pleasing wonder and jubilation as when Adam felt himself seated with as the first sight of his eyes upon this glorious scene. That acquaintance with unborrowed charms, and whatever hath once given satisfaction will always do it. It is not, as we think they have manifestly the advantage of us who are so much governed by sickly and changeable appetites, that we run with the greatest address and skill in the stupendous displays of Omnipotence, as being transcripts of the puny essays of human skill; though as disquisitions of the sublimest nature are yet cramped into some obscure corner of the human mind, to make room for new notions of no consequence at all, are even tired of health because not enlivened with alternate pain; and prefer the first reading of an indifferent author to the second or third perusal of one whose merit and reputation are established.

can think of: 'Surely, vain, and the man beyond judiced, who from the v that he is designed for in

No. 627.] WEDNESDAY
Tantum inter densas umbras Assidue veuebat; ibi hæret Montibus et sylvis studio He underneath the beech Thus to the woods and

THE following account some time ago, may be ment to such of my read-and nothing to do :—

“A friend of mine died he caught by walking to amongst his reapers. His greatest pleasure was in He had some humours with that good sense in His uneasiness in the c remarkable in a man of and his avoiding one p where he had used to p time, raised abundance village where he lived papers we found out th timated to his nearest f passionate lover in his c of letters he left b send you a copy of the subject, by which you true name of his mistre

"A long month's able to me, if the business not for the service of nature as to place her. I have furnished the house with fancy, or, if you please, I have learned to like nothing but a simple apartment designed for the use of that which you live in your house when I see it find it without its proper the most delicious prospect that England affords: I if the landscape that at the same time suggest the space that lies between "The gardens are have dressed up every h bowers and arbours in little paradise round me man in his solitude, but ner in my happiness.

be made for two person and satisfactions to me I already take my even orn a path upon the es I soothed myself with t by my side. I have hel with you in this retirem weary have sat down u of jessamines. The m rapture I use in these made me for some time a neighbouring young ut, and made rhood.

ave not forgot made a walk end to sow all h I hope you you talk of by

Belight have I day dreams do x weeks be at promised hap-

uptly in your for the play?
find no more my solitude, n, in the hand history:

week for an an-where I found rival. I will our to find out t which I had l woman.
I am," &c.

ER 3, 1714.

severum.
or. 1 Ep. ii. 43.
coll.

lations which tude and eter-
that part of
would give us ome.

greater plea-former, since that which is which is past

t possible for end; though, ernity which incomprehen-
ernal duration eternal dura-
use the philo-ential though which is natuverable argu-

t; especially eing virtuous improveable rong employle throughout deed of this nature, but is f towards the incomprehension.
existence, so s if we were ion or two of already past, if it be not may possibly ets; and yet, notwithstanding the long race that we shall the have run, we shall still imagine ourselves just starting from the goal, and find no proportion between that space which we know had a beginning, and what we are sure will never have an end.

"But I shall leave this subject to your management, and question not but you will throw it just such lights as shall at once improve and entertain your reader.

"I have, enclosed, sent you a translation* of the speech of Cato on this occasion, which hath accidentally fallen into my hands, and which, for cor-ciseness, purity, and elegance of phrase, cannot be sufficiently admired.

ACT V.—SCENE I.

Cato solus, &c.

Sic, sic se habere rem necesse promus est, Ratione vincis, do lubens manus, Plato.
Quid enim dedisset, quæ dedit frustra nihil, Æternitatis insitam cupidinem Natura? Quorsum hæc dulcis expectatio; Vitæque non explenda melioris sitis?
Quid vult sibi aliud iste redeundi in nihil Horror, sub imis quemque agens præcordiis?
Cur territa in se refugit anima, cur tremat Attonita, quoties, morte ne pereat, timeat?
Particula nempe est cuique nascentis indita Divinior; quæ corpus incolens agit; Hominique succinit, tua est æternitas.
Æternitas! O lubricum nimis aspicit, Mixtumque dulci gaudium formidine!

Quæ demigrabitur alia hinc in corpora?
Quæ terra mox incognita? Quis orbis novus Manet incolendus? Quanta erit mutatio?
Hæc intuenti spatia mihi quæque patent Immensa: sed caliginosa nox premit; Nec luce clara vult videri singula.
Figendus hic pes: certa sunt hæc hæc hactenus: Si quod gubernet numen humanum genus, (At, quod gubernet, esse clamant omnia) Virtute non gaudere certe non potest: Nec esse non beata, qua gaudet, potest.
Sed qua beata sede? Quoque in tempore?
Hæc quanta quanta terra, tota est Cæsaris.
Quid dubius hæret animus usque adeo? Brevis Hic nodum hic omnem expedit. Arma eni induat.

[Enst unum aduersus

In utramque partem facta; quæque vim inferant, Et quæ propulsent! Dextera intentat necem; Vitam sinistra: vulnus hæc dabit manus; Altera medellam vulneris: hic ad exitum Deducet, ictu simplici; hæc vetant morti.
Secura ridet anima mucronis minas, Ensesque strictos, interire necia.
Extinguet ætas sidera diuturnior; Ætate languens ipse sol obscurus Emittet orbi consenscenti jubar: Natura et ipsa sentiet quondam vices Ætatis; annis ipsa deficiat gravis:
At tibi iuventus, at tibi immortalitas: Tibi parva diuum est vita. Periment mutua Elementa sese et interibunt ictibus.
Tu permanebis sola semper integra, Tu cuncta rerum quassa, cuncta naufraga, Jam portu in ipso tuta, contemplabere, Compage rupta, corruent in se invicem, Orbesque fractis ingerentur orbibus; Illæsa tu sedebis extra fragmina.

ACT V.—SCENE I.

Cato alone, &c.

It must be so—Plato, thou reason'st well—Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire, This longing after immortality;
Or whence this secret dread, and inward horror, Of falling into nought? Why shrinks the soul Back on herself, and startles at destruction?
'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis Heaven itself that points out an hereafter, And intimates eternity to man.
Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!

Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass?
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me, But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it.

* This translation was by Mr. afterwards Dr. Hurd, now schoolmaster, then provost of Eton, and dean of Durham.

less will I hold. If there's a Power above us, And that there is all nature cries aloud (through all her works,) he must delight in virtue; and that which he delights in must be happy. but when, or where?—This world was made for Caesar.
I'm weary of conjectures—This must end them.

[Laying his hand on his sword.]

Thus am I doubly arm'd: my death and life, My bane and antidote, are both before me.
This in a moment brings me to an end; but this informs me I shall never die.
The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles at the drawn dagger, and defies its point.
The stars shall fade away, the sun himself grow dim with age, and Nature sink in years; but thou shalt flourish in immortal youth, unhurt amidst the war of elements, The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds.

o. 629.] MONDAY DECEMBER 6, 1714.

—Experiri quid concedatur in illos.
Quorum Flaminia tegitur cinis, atque Latina.
Jer. Sat. i. 170.

—Since none the living dare implead, Arraign them in the persons of the dead.—DAYDEN.

NEXT to the people who want a place, there are those to be pitied more than those who are solicited for one. A plain answer with a denial in it is looked on as pride, and a civil answer as a promise.

Nothing is more ridiculous than the pretensions people upon these occasions. Every thing a man has suffered, whilst his enemies were in play, was mainly brought about by the malice of the opposition party. A bad cause would not have been lost, if such a one had not been upon the bench; nor a fligate youth disinherited, if he had not got drunk one night by toasting an ousted ministry. I remember a tory, who, having been fined in a court of ice for a prank that deserved the pillory, declined upon the merit of it to be made a justice of peace when his friends came into power; and shall never forget a whig criminal, who, upon being in-dignified for a rape, told his friends, "You see what an suffers for sticking to his principles."

The truth of it is, the sufferings of a man in a party are of a very doubtful nature. When they such as have promoted a good cause, and fallen as a man undeservedly, they have a right to be rewarded and recompensed beyond any other preten-sions. But when they rise out of rashness or indiscretion, and the pursuit of such measures as have ruined than promoted the interest they aim at, which hath always been the case of many great men, they only serve to recommend them to the memory of violence or folly.

I have by me a bundle of memorials presented by several cavaliers upon the restoration of King Charles II., which may serve as so many instances to the present purpose.

Among several persons and pretensions recorded by the author, he mentions one of a very great estimate, who, for having roasted an ox whole, and distended a hog's head upon King Charles's birth-day, was desired to be provided for as his majesty in his great merit shall think fit.

Another put in to be Prince Henry's governor, having dared to drink his health in the worst manner.

A third petitioned for a colonel's commission, for having cursed Oliver Cromwell, the day before his death, on a public bowling-green.

And the most whimsical petition I have met with, that of B. B., Esq., who desired the honour of knighthood, for his torious roundhead.

There is likewise let his beard grow Charles I. until the desired in consider-councillor.

I must not omit memorialist had, who from a certain lord afterward appeared restoration, and with happy revolution, thereupon humbly
general.

A certain gentleman of great spirit, and "gentlemanly" begs that (in consideration of his great danger as captain of the guard)

I shall close my memorials with the which I recommend piece.

"The

"Humbly sheweth

"That your petitioner, Colonel W. H., lost at Edgehill fight.

"That your petitioner, in consequence of his fortune, has always kept hospitality with roundheads in half the year, as several names are underwritten.

"That your petitioner, for having dared to be a roundhead, and thereby lost his year's-day.

"That your said petitioner, being times imprisoned, having been a ringleader, which his zeal for the men of greater estate.

"That he the said
petitioner, being four-and-twenty boxes of majesty's title; and upon the head at a time as he hath been to this.

"That your petitioner, in proving his fortune, he verily believes, and that if he had been fallibly plundered.

"Your petitioner merits and sufferings have the place of reward, the customs, clerk or whatsoever else he And your petitioner

No. 630.] WEDNESDAY

Favete lingua
With mute art

HAVING no spare

there, I have ers:—

, Nov. 22.

as to suspend
orld most re-ons, by pub-
much oblige to hope that of your cor-

men of good like to music, ruple to own improving into me an un-
should have in them such ir own or the y be led into h are erected ay venture to son for disaf-which consists vented me in some divines uch greater, as claimed a most different s of the pro-

sacred world, they disagreed

he who are of ic which is in cellent, as it wayed by my served in the inks there is a of a volun-
are supposed those divine ve. We are ff our hearts, d, and there
ace and tran-
of praise the almost lost al-

ers frequently his particular, ular methods iety. When too often do takes care to es them with ve doubt that most moving bling or ex-
n. Who can described in ing awed into kind and enr, and not be passions, the

, is the natu-
more particu-
at the altar.
on the spirits

are more deep and lasting, as the grounds from which it receives its authority are founded more upon reason. It diffuses a calmness all around us, it makes us drop all those vain or immodest thoughts which would be a hinderance to us in the performance of that great duty of thanksgiving,* which, as we are informed by our Almighty Benefactor, is the most acceptable return which can be made for those infinite stores of blessings which he daily condescends to pour down upon his creatures. When we make use of this pathetic method of addressing ourselves to him, we can scarce contain from raptures! The heart is warmed with a sublimity of goodness! We are all piety and all love!

"How do the blessed spirits rejoice and wonder to behold unthinking man prostrating his soul to his dread Sovereign in such a warmth of piety as they themselves might not be ashamed of!

"I shall close these reflections with a passage taken out of the third book of Milton's Paradise Lost, where those harmonious beings are thus nobly described:—

Then crown'd again, their golden harps they took,
Harps ever tun'd, that, glitt'ring by their side, Like quivers hung, and with preambles sweet Of charming symphony they introduce The sacred song, and waken raptures high:
No one exempt, no voice but well could join Melodious part—such concord is in heaven!"

"MR. SPECTATOR,

"The town cannot be unacquainted that in divers parts of it there are vociferous sets of men who are called rattling clubs: but what shocks me most is, they have now the front to invade the church, and institute these societies there, as a clan of their have in late times done, to such a degree of insolence, as has given the partition where they reside, in a church near one of the city gates, the denomination of the rattling pew. These gay fellows, from humble lay professions, set up for critics, without any tincture of letters or reading, and have the vanity to think they can lay hold of something from the parson which may be formed into ridicule.

"It is needless to observe that the gentlemen, who every Sunday have the hard province of instructing these wretches in a way they are in no present disposition to take, have a fixed character for learning and eloquence, not to be tainted by the weak efforts of this contemptible part of their audiences. Whether the pulpit is taken by these gentlemen, or any strangers their friends, the way of the club is this: if any sentiments are delivered too sublime for their conception; if any uncommon topic is entered on, or one in use now modified with the finest judgment and dexterity; or any controverted point be never so elegantly handled; in short, whatever surpasses the narrow limits of their theology, or is not suited to their taste, they are all immediately upon the watch, fixing their eyes upon each other with as much warmth as our gladiators of Hockley-in-the-Hole, and waiting like them for a hit: if one touches, all take fire, and their nodde instantly meet in the centre of the pew: then, as by beat of drum, with exact discipline, they rear up into a full length of stature, and, with odd looks and gesticulations, confer together in so loud and clamorous a manner, continued to the close of the discourse, and during the after-psalm, as is not to be silenced but by the bells. Nor does this suffice them, without aiming to propagate their noise through all the church, by signals given to the adjoining seats, where others designed for this fraternity are sometimes placed upon trial to receive them.

* A proclamation issued the day before this paper was published for a thanksgiving for King George's accession, to be observed January 20th.

"The folly as well as rudeness of this practice is a nothing more conspicuous than this, that all that follows in the sermon is lost; for, whenever our parks take alarm, they blaze out and grow so tumultuous that no after-explanation can avail, it being impossible for themselves or any near them to give an account thereof. If any thing really novel is advanced, how averse soever it may be to their way of thinking, to say nothing of duty, men of less evity than these would be led by a natural curiosity to hear the whole.

"Laughter, where things sacred are transacted, is far less pardonable than whining at a conventicle; the last has at least a semblance of grace, and where the affectation is unseen may possibly imprint wholesome lessons on the sincere; but the first has no excuse, breaking through all the rules of order and decency, and manifesting a remissness of mind in those important matters which require the strictest composure and steadiness of thought: a proof of the greatest folly in the world.

"I shall not here enter upon the veneration due to the sanctity of the place, the reverence owing to the minister, or the respect that so great an assembly as a whole parish may justly claim. I shall only tell them, that, as the Spanish cobbler, to reclaim a profligate son, bid him have some regard to the dignity of his family, so they as gentlemen (for we citizens assume to be such one day in a week) are bound for the future to repent of, and abstain from, the gross abuses here mentioned, whereof they have been guilty in contempt of heaven and earth, and contrary to the laws in this case made and provided.

"I am, Sir, your very humble Servant,

"R. M."

No. 631.] FRIDAY, DEC. 10, 1714.

Simplex munditiis——Hor. 1 Od. v. 5.

Elegant by cleanliness——

I HAD occasion to go a few miles out of town, some days since, in a stage-coach, where I had for my fellow-travellers a dirty beau, and a pretty young quaker woman. Having no inclination to talk much at that time, I placed myself backward, with a design to survey them, and pick a speculation out of my two companions. Their different figures were sufficient of themselves to draw my attention. The gentleman was dressed in a suit, the ground whereof had been black, as I perceived from some few spaces that had escaped the powder, which was incorporated with the greatest part of his coat; his periwig, which cost no small sum, was after so slovenly a manner cast over his shoulders, that it seemed not to have been combed since the year 1712; his linen, which was not much concealed, was daubed with plain Spanish from the chin to the lowest button; and the diamond upon his finger (which naturally dreaded the water) put me in mind how it sparkled amidst the rubbish of the mine where it was first discovered. On the other hand, the pretty quaker appeared in all the elegance of cleanliness. Not a speck was to be found upon her. A clear, clean, oval face, just edged about with little thin plaits of the purest camoric, received great advantages from the shade of her black hood; as did the whiteness of her arms from her had clothed her very well suited all which, put me a great opinion of her innocence.

This adventure a few hints upon as one of the and shall record heads: as it is love; and as it

First, It is a agreed upon, that can go into confession. The end of this duty rises of the world a cleanliness as in any country is part of politeness of a female He satisfied of the

In the next the foster-mother commonly produced cleanliness pre person, kept in a heart from unamiable, while like a piece of bright, we look a new vessel the

I might observe us agreeable ourselves; that health; and the mind and body. But these reflect my readers, and that it bears a naturally inspiring

We find from lence of custom horror by being contrary, those who examples, fly shocking. It manner as to o inlets to all that only transmit ally surround thoughts are n those objects they are beautiful

"In the East makes cleanliness in colder countries: the Jew in some things purifications, a Though there is to be assigned tion undoubted cleanness of her read several in Deuteronomy, are but ill accounts they were only desert, which able for so many I shall conclude

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

Mahometan

ning had the p, which was fall upon the n coming in ands to bless ng; but the reshold and ered at these from Mecca:
sing; but as e received a d him. His him until he nadventency, hout washing

R, 13, 1714.

nebris.
Æn. vi. 545.
e, ich is natural mes into very uple," says a on the most found philo-gether in his at every step, ng." Every of this nature was Gregorio ks as he was id down and is death.—It nature which each of his letters in the e same man-of the Muses, bath wished f that sister-

followed Vir-even Milton
ne number of er reason; as d he finished he Æneid in ill agree with th no foundapect to these as something

efence of my th volume of ught seven a several grave
a subject; as,
se number of ful constella-
seven stars.
insisted that ad been the an-enty years suc-

he had made demonstrated in round the earth

seven was an odd number: suggesting at the same time that, if he were provided with a sufficient stock of leading papers, he should find friends read enough to carry on the work. Having by this means got his vessel launched and set afloat, he has committed the steerage of it, from time to time, to such as he thought capable of conducting it.

The close of this volume, which the town may now expect in a little time, may possibly ascribe each sheet to its proper author.

It were no hard task to continue this paper a considerable time longer by the help of large contributions sent from unknown hands.

I cannot give the town a better opinion of the Spectator's correspondents than by publishing the following letter, with a very fine copy of verses upon a subject perfectly new:—

"MR. SPECTATOR, Dublin, Nov. 30, 1714

"You lately recommended to your female reader the good old custom of their grandmothers, who use to lay out a great part of their time in needlework. I entirely agree with you in your sentiments, as I think it would not be of less advantage to themselves and their posterity, than to the reputation of many of their good neighbours, if they passed many of those hours in this innocent entertainment which are lost at the tea-table. I would, however, humbly offer to your consideration the case of the poetical ladies; who, though they may be willing to take any advice given them by the Spectator, yet cannot so easily quit their pen and ink as you may imagine. Pray allow them, at least now and then, to indulge themselves in other amusements of fancy when they are tired with stooping to their tapestry. There is a very particular kind of work, which of late several ladies here in our kingdom are very fond of, which seems very well adapted to a poetical genius: it is the making of grottos. I know a lady who has a very beautiful one, composed by herself; nor is there one shall in it not stuck up by her own hands. I here send you a poem to the fair architect, which would not offer to herself, until I knew whether this method of a lady's passing her time were approved of by the British Spectator; which, with the poem I submit to your censure, who am,

"Your constant Reader

"and humble Servant,

"A. B."

TO MRS. ———, ON HER GROTTO

A grotto so complete, with such design, What hands, Calypso, could have form'd but thine?
Each chequer'd pebble, and each shining shell, So well proportion'd and dispos'd so well, Surprising lustre from thy thought receive, Assuming beauties more than Nature gave,
To her their various shapes and glossy hue, Their curious symmetry they owe to you Not fam'd Amphion's lute, whose powerful call Made willing stones dance to the Theban wall, In more harmonious ranks could make them fall, Not evening cloud a brighter arch can shew, Nor richer colours paint the heavenly bow.

Where can unpolis'd nature boast a piece In all her mossy cells exact as this?
At the gay parti-colour'd scene we start,
For chance too regular, too rude for art.

Charm'd with the sight, my ravish'd breast is fir'd With hints like those which ancient bards inspir'd; All the feign'd tales by superstition told,
Th' enthusiast train of fabled nymphs of old, Thinks the spot sacred, and its genius you: Lost in wild raptures would the fain disclose How by degrees the pleasing wonder rose: Industrious in a faithful verse to trace The various beauties of the lovely place.

while she keeps the glowing work in view,
 In every maze thy artful hand pursue.
 Here I equal to the bold design, Had I boast such happy art as thine, Could rude shells in such sweet order place, Common objects such uncommon grace; I am, my well chose words in every line Softly temper'd should as sweetly shine.
 A fancy should my numbers warm, A gay piece should the description charm.
 With superior strength my voice I'd raise, Though grotto should approve my lays,
 To reflect the well-sung founder's praise.

3.] WEDNESDAY, DEC. 15, 1714.

ecce, cum se a coelestibus rebus referet ad humanas, magnificentiusque et dicet et sentiet.—CICERO.
 A contemplation of celestial things will make a man both think more sublimely and magnificently when he to human affairs

flowing discourse is printed, as it came to , without variation:—

“Cambridge, Dec. 12.

is a very common inquiry among the an-the number of excellent orators, under encouragements the most flourishing states e them, fell so far short of the number of excelled in all other sciences. A friend sed merrily to apply to this case an obser-Herodotus, who says that the most useful are the most fruitful in their generation; the species of those beasts that are fierce bievous to mankind are but scarcely con-The historian instances a hare, which aler breeds or brings forth; and a lioness ngs forth but once, and then loses all power tion. But leaving my friend to his mirth, opinion that in these latter ages we have use of complaint than the ancients had.
 s that solemn festival is approaching,* is for all the power of oratory, and which noble a subject for the pulpit as any reve-taught us, the design of this paper shall , that our moderns have greater advan-ards true and solid eloquence, than any celebrated speakers of antiquity enjoyed. first great and substantial difference is, that mon-places, in which almost the whole nplification consists, were drawn from the honesty of the action, as they regarded present state of duration. But Chris-it exalts morality to a greater perfection, gs the consideration of another life into on, as it proposes rewards and punishments nature and a longer continuance, is more affect the minds of the audience, natu-ed to pursue what it imagines its greatest d concern. If Pericles, as historians red shake the firmest resolutions of his ad set the passions of all Greece in a fer-en the present welfare of his country, or hostile invasions, was the subject; what pected from that orator who warns his gainst those evils which have no remedy, undergone, either from prudence or time? greater as the evils in a future state are at present, so much are the motives to under Christianity greater than those e moral considerations could supply us what I now mention relates only to the power of moving the at part of eloquence which I mean the marvellous Christian orator has the diction. Our ideas are revelation, the eye of re into eternity; the notion and refined, and the acc happiness or misery so contemplation of such ob a noble vigour, an invinc of any human considerat perfect orator some skill bodies; because, says he extensive and unconfine to treat of human affai write in a more exalted For the same reason the have recommended the glorious mysteries which to us; to which the nob the world are as much in excellent than its Crea knowing among the heath perfect notions of a futu some uncertain hopes, e or gathered by reason, th men would not be deter soul and body; but they state of punishment and account that Apelles pa side only towards the spe eye might not cast a blen so these represented the fairest view, and endeav thought was a deformity often observed, that whe orator in his philosophic argument to the mentio like one awaked out of a with the dignity of the su gination to conceive so with the greatness of his a glory round the sente settled as he was, he see plation of it. And nothin pect could have forced so he was to declare his res his persuasion of immor proved to be an erroneou to see all that Christianity would he have lavished ou in those noblest contemp ture is capable of, the re ment that follows it! He with pleasure, when the lay open and exposed to h imagination have hurried the mysteries of the inca have entered, with the fo affections of his hearers, a spite of all the opposition those glorious themes w painted in such lively and

“This advantage Chr with no small pleasure I l of Longinus, which is pre that critic's judgment, at script of the New Testame After that author has nu brated orators among the to these Paul of Tarsus, * Christmas.

he condemns partial critic, and preacher part of his opinion of St. Paul, such he untries which trines he was Sacred story ra called him speaker,' and as to the god uence. This character, con- he celebrated Demosthenes in speaking human; their arers, but still the voice of Paul above I can ascribe er of the doc- till the same ill the power, ke us break ples who met made use of: en he talked ed to us the in my judg- no one orator ps of his elo- be wondered y at Athens, hed, he con- out my reader of the best pts upon the re expressly in courts of herefore here to the laws; the Corinth- upon his own f others, are ples to those the best of discourse is, k for an ex- ge at, than to der the want himself tells ndard to suc- different per- y may learn, are, they are ; which St. e of, and the with certain

R 17, 1714.

le the gods.

then philoso- ral doctrines, they made human nature resemble the divine. Not much mistaken soever they might be in the several means they proposed for this end, it must be owned that the design was great and glorious. The finest works of invention and imagination are of very little weight when put in the balance with what refine and exalts the rational mind. Longinus excuses Homer very handsomely, when he says the poet made his gods like men, that he might make his men appear like the gods. But it must be allowed that several of the ancient philosophers acted as Cicero wishes Homer had done: they endeavoured rather to make men like gods than gods like men.

According to this general maxim in philosophy some of them have endeavoured to place men in such a state of pleasure, or indolence at least, as they vainly imagined the happiness of the Supreme Being to consist in. On the other hand, the most virtuous sect of philosophers have created a chimerical wise man, whom they made exempt from passion and pain, and thought it enough to pronounce him all-sufficient.

This last character, when divested of the glare of human philosophy that surrounds it, signifies more than that a good and wise man should so arm himself with patience as not to yield tamely to the violence of passion and pain; that he should learn so to suppress and contract his desires as to have few wants; and that he should cherish so many virtues in his soul as to have a perpetual source of pleasure in himself.

The Christian religion requires that, after having framed the best idea we are able of the divine nature, it should be our next care to conform ourselves to it as far as our imperfections will permit. I might mention several passages in the sacred writings on this head, to which I might add many maxims and wise sayings of moral authors among the Greeks and Romans.

I shall only instance a remarkable passage, to this purpose, out of Julian's Cæsars. The emperor having represented all the Roman emperors, with Alexander the Great, as passing in review before the gods, and striving for the superiority, lets them all drop, excepting Alexander, Julius Cæsar, Augustus Cæsar, Trajan, Marcus Aurelius, and Constantine. Each of these great heroes of antiquity lays in his claim for the upper place; and, in order to it, sets forth his actions after the most advantageous manner. But the gods, instead of being dazzled with the lustre of their actions, inquire by Mercury into the proper motive and governing principle that influenced them throughout the whole series of their lives and exploits. Alexander tells them that his aim was to conquer; Julius Cæsar, that his was to gain the highest post in his country; Augustus, to govern well; Trajan, that his was the same as that of Alexander, namely, to conquer. The question at length, was put to Marcus Aurelius, who replied with great modesty, that it had always been his care to imitate the gods. This conduct seems to have gained him the most votes and best place in the whole assembly. Marcus Aurelius being afterwards asked to explain himself, declares that, by imitating the gods, he endeavoured to imitate them in the use of his understanding, and of all other faculties and in particular, that it was always his study to have as few wants as possible in himself, and to do all the good he could to others.

Among the many methods by which revealed religion has advanced morality, this is one, that it has given us a more just and perfect idea of that Being whom every reasonable creature ought to imitate. The young man, in a heathen comedy, might justify his lewdness by the example of Jupiter; as, indeed, there was scarce any crime that might not be countenanced by those notions of the deity, which prevailed among the common people in the heathen world. Revealed religion sets forth a proper object for imitation in that Being who is the pattern, as well as the source, of all spiritual perfection.

While we remain in this life we are subject to innumerable temptations, which, if listened to, will make us deviate from reason and goodness, the only things wherein we can imitate the Supreme Being. In the next life we meet with nothing to excite our inclinations that doth not deserve them. I shall therefore dismiss my reader with this maxim, viz. "Our happiness in this world proceeds from the suppression of our desires, but in the next world from the gratification of them."

No. 635.] MONDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1714.

Sentio te sedes hominum ac domum contemplari; quæ si tibi parva (ut res) ita videtur, hæc celestia semper spectato; illa humana contemnit.—CICERO Soma. Scip.

I perceive you contemplate the seat and habitation of men; which if it appears as little to you as it really is, fix your eyes perpetually upon heavenly objects, and despise earthly.

THE following essay comes from the ingenious author of the letter upon novelty, printed in a late Spectator: the notions are drawn from the Platonic way of thinking; but, as they contribute to raise the mind, and may inspire noble sentiments of our own future grandeur and happiness, I think it well deserves to be presented to the public:—

"If the universe be the creature of an intelligent mind, this mind could have no immediate regard to himself in producing it. He needed not to make trial of his omnipotence to be informed what effects were within its reach: the world, as existing in his eternal idea, was then as beautiful as now it is drawn forth into being; and in the immense abyss of his essence are contained far brighter scenes than will be ever set forth to view; it being impossible that the great author of nature should bound his own power by giving existence to a system of creatures so perfect that he cannot improve upon it by any other exertions of his almighty will. Between finite and infinite there is an unmeasurable interval not to be filled up in endless ages; for which reason the most excellent of all God's works must be equally short of what his power is able to produce as the most imperfect, and may be exceeded with the same ease.

"This thought hath made some imagine (what it must be confessed is not impossible), that the unfathomed space is ever teeming with new births, the younger still inheriting a greater perfection than the elder. But, as this doth not fall within my present view, I shall content myself with taking notice that the consideration now mentioned proves undeniably, that the ideal worlds in the divine understanding yield a prospect incomparably more ample, various, and delightful, than any created world can do: and that therefore, as it is not to be supposed that God should make a world merely of inanimate matter, however diversified, or inhabited only by creatures of no higher an order than brutes, so the end for which he designed his reasonable offspring is the contemplation of his works, the enjoyment of himself, and in both to be happy; having, to this purpose, endowed them with correspondent faculties and desire a bare review of his own ideas, well pleased with the erecting this an intimate when consistent existence of divine vision to eternal countable hath capacity knowledge unsatisfied nature and present their present necessities understanding chained, he concerning the pass him; glorious big spaces of time and the steep a grovelling slides, and

"Think justice to the other state contemplation move from and be accounted for making veries. Heaton, from a understand another space open to his general law transport of the glorious more devout But, alas! a mind! taken in his newly escaped For my patience of it that I, who the Creator up and down long shoot trace out to be able to rapidity of chain of visit the so they are for the order, of those or regular de serve the and (if of theory) of from when In eternity I find it of for besides my soul, if my faculties able beings, advanced to a il of man, is cannot form ons we have

 , keeps his g nor hiding ine hath a he most are hearts prefer ur of their e singularity me when the vemes over-hs he hates?
 d of the folly ho followed he blandish-
 of the world, possessed of he Creator? and then to-nances of his nks itself to its expectalled to the perfect way re not spirits immersed in ust superior privilege of sociable beings, that of conversing with and knowing each other? What would they have done had matter never been created? I suppose, not have lived in eternal solitude. As incorporeal substances are of a nobler order, so be sure their manner of intercourse is answerably more expedite and intimate.

 This method of communication we call intellectual vision, as somewhat analogous to the sense of seeing, which is the medium of our acquaintance with this visible world. And in some such way can God make himself the object of immediate intuition to the blessed; and as he can, it is not improbable that he will, always condescending, in the circumstances of doing it, to the weakness and proportion of finite minds. His works but faintly reflect the image of his perfections; it is a second-hand knowledge: to have a just idea of him it may be necessary that we see him as he is. But what is that? It is something that never entered into the heart of man to conceive; yet, what we can easily conceive, will be a fountain of unspeakable, of everlasting rapture.
 All created glories will fade and die away in his presence. Perhaps it will be my happiness to compare the world with the fair exemplar of it in the Divine Mind; perhaps, to view the original plan of those wise designs that have been executing in a long succession of ages. Thus employed in finding out his works, and contemplating their Author, how shall I fall prostrate and adoring, my body swallowed up in the immensity of matter, my mind in the infinitude of his perfections!"

THE END.

BRITISH ESSAYS

---

T H E T A T

OR THE

LUCUBRATIONS

OF

ISAAC BICKERSTEDT

BY

SIR RICHARD STEELE

ASSISTED BY

ADDISON, SWIFT, HUGHES, HARRISON, FULLER, ASPLIN, CONGREVE, HENLEY, GREENWOOD, HARRISON, DARTMOUTH,

STEREOTYPE EDITION

---

London :

PRINTED BY W. LEWIS, FINCH-LANE FOR ISAAC, TUCKEY, A 14, HENRIETTA-STREET, COVENT-GARDEN.

---

1836.

1. The first part of the document is a list of names and titles.

The list includes the following names and titles:

- 1. The first part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 2. The second part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 3. The third part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 4. The fourth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 5. The fifth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 6. The sixth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 7. The seventh part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 8. The eighth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 9. The ninth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 10. The tenth part of the document is a list of names and titles.

The list includes the following names and titles:

- 1. The first part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 2. The second part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 3. The third part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 4. The fourth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 5. The fifth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 6. The sixth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 7. The seventh part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 8. The eighth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 9. The ninth part of the document is a list of names and titles.
- 10. The tenth part of the document is a list of names and titles.

I N D E X.

	No.
THE power represented in a dance . . . . .	11	Allegory of Virtue and its, advantages of . . . . .	240	to Hercules . . . . .
its, remarks on . . . . .	168	Application of, in Ho his manner of life . . . . .	59	Allen, (Mr.) founder of necessary qualification of an orator . . . . .	66	Almanac, Oxford, cons led by English clergymen . . . . .	66, 168	Alost, attempt to surpr air chief perfection . . . . .	167	Amanda, the happy wi
, an alleviation of . . . . .	233	Ambition, the foundati ments, a collection of them a good		Middle age of man n collany . . . . .	224	Becomes true honour ms of them . . . . .	228, 245, 257	No true happiness in young people . . . . .	104	Its refuge when disap be given by every body . . . . .	25	In grotesque . . . . .
ad for information, but out of fullness		The true object of la l perplexity of heart . . . . .	25	Aminadab, the quaker's descent into, and adventures in, the		Angelo, (Michael) his p pire of death . . . . .	154	ment censured . . . . .
is falls in love with the divine Hebe	44	Anger, the ill consequ orically defunct . . . . .	46	A tragical instance of sight for love . . . . .	47	Animals, cruelty toward reasonable amour . . . . .	47	Anne, (queen) eulogiu able of his applied on the receipt of a		Annihilation described b as . . . . .	115,	Annuities, how purchas of vice and imperfection censured	77	Anticyra, an island assi distinguished from esteem . . . . .	206	madmen . . . . .
related to esteem, in the fair sex . . . . .	206	Its product . . . . . l, described . . . . .	95	Compared to Montpel how governed . . . . .	54	Apollo, god of verse and imaginary, often most insupportable	148	Apology for great men in his magnanimity, and manner of		Apothecaries, great orat asing annuities . . . . .	36	Appetites, how to be gov Solomon) his observations on the town	83	Argyle (duke of) his cha on's invectives against women . . . . .	152	Aristæus, the character renders it most agreeable . . . . .	45	mastery of himself . . . . .
t when not spent in virtue . . . . .	46	Arms, an exercise of the y of the present, in regard to England	130	Arria, wife of Pætus, m (earl) appointed governor of Tournay	49	Arthur, (king) the first v num prescribed to a sick dog . . . . .	121	roasted ox . . . . .
, remarks on that comedy . . . . .	14	Artillery Company of L ist, picture in the palace of . . . . .	184	arms performed by the Great, his character, and irregu-		Aspasia, a most excellen of temper . . . . .	191, 209	The first of the beaute id with Cæsar . . . . .	6	Astræa, an unfortunate v table saying of his . . . . .	92	Asturias (prince of) ack table instance between him and his		crown of Spain . . . . .
ian . . . . .	209	Atheist in a storm . . . . .
of the tragedy of . . . . .	191	Athenians, a remarkable Franchese, foreman of the male jury		lie spirit and virtue . . . . . court of honour . . . . .	252	Atterbury, (dean) his eloq stimulated for . . . . .	10	ing . . . . .
	21	Attornies solve difficult as profitable to the mind as hunting		Avarice, what age of m ing . . . . .	146

INDEX.

	No.
its, ad	123	Betterton, invitation to his benefit 124	Account of his funeral four	25	Bickerstaff, (Isaac) his genealogy	11 his	122, 201	How his race was improved ling old	46	Epitome of his life nce	92	An adept in astronomy	2, 1 a	140	Of the society for the reformation of manners nd best	26	A benefactor to Grub-street 108	Gives advice for his own sake aigners	133	Expects hush-money ch king	17	Not in partnership with Lillie 77	D.d not compound with the milliners and toymen able in	153	Caught writing nonsense 153	His amours	91, 107, 117, 2 me who	136	A design to marry him 220	Contents of his scrutoire or bills	43	His will mer re	161	Extraordinary cures performed by him at his lodgings tug il	143	Disposes of his three nephews 17	Entertains his nephews and a lady Bicker-	1	Vindicated from injuring a person by satire	71
	7	Received at the theatre with extraordinary civility
	153	Entertained at the house of a friend who eats well 153	Purchases a ticket in the lottery
	157	Writes to the French king
	166	His adventures in a journey to the land's end 10	Bickerstaff, (Margery) methods used to divorce her from marriage
	26	Bickerstaff, (Samuel) his advice to his son and daughter 17	Bicknell, or Bignell, (Mrs.) a comedian, commended 63, 64	Acts the Country Wife 63, 61	Billingsgate scold, behaviour of 65	Birth, pride of 142	Bisset, (brigadier) his good office to Mr. Steele acknowledged e	6	Black Horse ordinary in Holborn, an adventure there tion at	45	Bladder and string, modern music applied 240	Blaregnies, victory of 38	Blindness cured by Mr. Grant, story of 31	Blockheads apt to admire one another of the	131	Blunder, (major) buys muskets without touch-holes 10	Boatswain, (Dampier's) contrivance to prevent being eaten
	61	Bodily wits
	195	Bombardiers, who to be accounted such 125, 174	Books, how to be valued
	127, 174	Booksellers, their complaint against parson Flaggius 175	Boufflers, (marshal) a letter from him to the French king after a battle aids of	148	Bourignon, (madame de) foundress of the pietists, her extraordinary gifts and talents 148	Bracegirdle, (Mrs.) an excellent player aviour	37	Brains, spirit of, in orange-flower water affec-	126	Breeding (fine) often mistaken es	81	Bribery, with coals, reflections on ences	3, 5, 29	A notable expedient to prevent it at elections cha-	9	An essay and poem on it 1, 71, 167		A solicitor in the temple of avarice Bridget Howd'ye, her lady's advertisement concerning her Brisk, (Sir Liberal) saved from sharpers Britain, particularly fruitful in religious

INDEX.

	No.
(colonel) a very pretty fellow . . .	24	Church mutes censured Postscript, remarks on that poem . . .	46	Thermometer, when i uelty towards them condemned . . .	134	Cibber, (Colley) a celeb (mons.) his satire on the French . . .	57	Cicero, his letters to his angry about the tucker . . .	109	Circumspection water, (Mr.) a drawcansir . . .	18	effects of it ad Penkethman, parallel between them . . .	188	Citizens distinguished fr nd Mr. Bickerstaff's funeral . . .	7	City politicians reprove y, character of that comedy . . .	19	Shower poetically des dy) described . . .	248	Clarinda makes an ill c article, used too frequently . . .	38	Clarissa, love of her ma QUE, meaning of that word . . .	171	Clement's (Thomas) p m applied by the Indian kings . . .	171	children (major-general) at Brussels . . .	1	Cleomira, confined for ed before Mons . . .	76	Clergyman, character f r unhappy marriage with Palamede . . .	198	Respect due to them o long a maid . . .	5	Deficient wherein of the same use to his friends . . .	211	Wherein their discour angel . . .	6	Their laziness the pr ulius) compared with Alexander . . .	259	sions acquitted in the court of honour . . .	156	The vanity of some (archbishop of) account of his Te- . . .	259	and powdered wig chus . . .	20	Clerk of a church repro the linen-draper indicted in the court . . .	43	The term explained nour . . .	24	Clidemira, a woman of exit of the person who performed that . . .	77	Coaches, vanity of ridin acter in the opera . . .	80	Why they should be r, character of that poem . . .	142	called in his merit . . .	2	Coach-painting, a meth an out of affection . . .	1	Cobbler on Ludgate-hill a to wear one . . .	14	tify his pride nt in their kinds and value . . .	182	Colchester, corporation modern men of wit . . .	240	Bickerstaff ze the place of poetry . . .	162	Comma, (Mrs.) a subtl (Frank) opposed to Fop Nice . . .	112	Commendation of one's Husband, a comedy born within the . . .	195	Commerce, a goddess in re . . .	161	Common prayer, advice
r.) got more by a short distich than . . .	261	Commonwealth, the rul Dryden gained by all his writings . . .	144	Companions, what sort a, an eminent prude . . .	162	Essential qualities of eauty in his character . . .	156	Company, its greatest p ior, his advice to Mr. Bickerstaff . . .	30	Compassion, how move ble of, a beautiful allegory . . .	178	Compassion instanced his will . . .	147	Often the weakest pa a great evil to a nation . . .	268	Competency, a guide in necessity of the office . . .	25	Complacency, a guide i r and British censors compared . . .	191	Complainers, their imp s punished severely after death . . .	134	Complaints concerning y, invention and use of it . . .	255	Complaisance, necessa s, (Michael) his discerning spirit . . .	72	Conjugal affection Venus described . . .	69	Conscience described elbow) for what purpose . . .	142	Consort, female, descr e, the style of it . . .	58	Constancy, necessary i a comedy, character of . . .	192	Contention described ter, (Job) his petition . . .	148	Between two ladies f s, a discourse concerning them . . .	15	Contradiction, an occas clerk, explained . . .	261	More odious than fla t in a garret . . .	4	Conversation, good-wil the toyman, his great genius in canes . . .	207	What only gives tru snuff-boxes . . .	111	The most necessary its value instanced in Scipio . . .	140	A general rule to be ness, necessary in a married state . . .		Rules for it a modern diet . . .		The use and abuse o
, manner of nursing them . . .		A medium to be obs me to provide for them . . .		What it chiefly turn ve of her makes coxcombs . . .		Humdrums in conve rtune disappointed . . .		Repartees Eve . . .		Copenhagen described ndecent and irregular behaviour at, . . .		Coppersmith, that nam oved . . .		Harry and Will, th with the sharpers

INDEX.

	No.		N.
	27	Dawks, (honest Icabod) the news-writer	16, 176
	107	Dead, who to be so accounted	96, 111, 118, 174
	107	Heard and adjudged	110
27.	126	Dressed in lace, &c. contrary to the act	118
	120	A dead man resuscitated	115
	126	Decius, the character of a lewd person	45
	107	Dedications, the abuse of them	43, 177
	157	Difference between ancient and modern dedi-
	123	cations	177
cham	19	A play dedicated to a city knight.	43 varice	123	Defiance, natural to the English	213
	82	Degeneracy of the age	183
	89	Delamira, account of her amours, and the virin it	169	tutes and management of her fan	52 er	31	Delicate, false, pernicious	145 one	461	Demosthenes, his speech to the Athenians	183
	86	Denmark, king of, runs for a prize at Dresden	23
89.	169	Account of his tour 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 21, 21, 25, 25, 33
f join-		Desire, two most prevalent desires implanted in 169	men by nature	26
	178	Destinies, their speech and present to Jupiter	16 250	Devotion, the pleasure and dignity of it, by ceeded-		Dr. South	211
5, 259.	265	Diana Forecast, letter from	20
	231	Diet, difference between ancient and modern	118
	57	Dimple, (lady,) her good breeding	166
	91	Dinner postponed	273
	96	Discourse, different talents in it	153
	191	The general subject of it	216 rio	91	Discretion a guard to one of Hymen's gates	120 18	Dissensions owing to the laziness of the clergy	68
	176	Dissimulation distinguished from simulation	213
29.	165	Distaff, Jenny, Mr. Bickerstaff's half sister, her e igno		visits, behaviour, and character	71, 143, 184
	215	Her discourse in love	10
	29	Reflections on her brother's writings	33
	155	Apology for the fair sex	217
	1	Conduct in an amour	54
	151	Her marriage, and character of her husband people			71, 79
	191	Sets up an equipage	143
	191	Her happiness with Tranquillus	101
	121	Distress, contemplation of, softens the mind, 29	and fetters the heart	82
	1	Divisions for the king of Denmark, at Dresden	33
	5	Divio, sale of his goods, celestial and terrestrial	42
	22	Ejected from his palace	99 se	35	Doctor, dumb, at Kensington	70
	85	Dodwell, some account of his opinions	187
	49	Dogget, a comedian, commended	7 wedish		His letter to Mr. Bickerstaff	120 58	His civilities to Mr. Bickerstaff at the theatre	122, 193 pretty		Dogs, a kennel of them to be disposed of	62 31	Account of the loss of a lady's lap-dog	47 31	Recipe for a sick dog	124 danced		Donne, (Dr.) his saying of Guicciardini	281 88	Dorchester stage-coach advertised	143 coach		Dover Cliff described by Shakspeare	117 180	Downes the prompter describes the state of the xes	118	stage	183
on, his		Dozers, who	205
	66	Dramatists, unskilful, remarks on them	191
	67	Dream of the band of lovers	120
	85	Of Jupiter and the destinies	146
	18	Of the region of liberty	161 our	256	Of the temple of Virtue	123 offices		Dress, plainness recommended	212 271	Improprieties therein censured	270 by Mr		Of rural squires	96
119		Drinking easy on	211

INDEX.

	No.
Drinking, the vice of the country	169
Drionio, the character of a sharper	56
Drum, who may be called so in conversation	153, 157
Drunkards die by their own hands	241
A warning to them	152
Drunkenness, the ill effects of it	205
What may be esteemed a sort of incest therein	252
Dryden, a saying of his on chastity	5
His verses on empire applied	12
Duel, inquiry into the genealogy of that monster	29
Duellers, how treated after death	26
Duelling and its terms explained	25, 29
Custom the source of it	29
Stripped of its pretensions to credit and reputation	25, 28
How used by different nations	28
Dialogue, and remarks on	30, 39
Dulcimer, who to be so accounted	157
Dulwich College, founded by a player	20
Dumb doctor at Kensington	70
Dumb conjuror	14
D'Urfy the lyric poet, account of his abilities	11
A panegyric of his	43
His Plotting Sisters commended	82
Writes state plays and political dances	11
Mistaken in a dedication	214
Dedication to his Modern Prophets	43
Dutch, their wit	129
Duvmvir, his way of life, and behaviour to his wife and mistress	54
EARL of Essex, character of that play	14
Earthquake pills	240
Ease, in writing	9
Eastcourt, (Dick) Mr. Bickerstaff's apothecary	130
Eaters, great, sacrifice sense to appetite	205
Eboracensis, a good governor so called	69
Ectasy, described by Dryden	6
Education, various errors of	189
Regulations proposed	189, 248
Letter on the subject	234
Proposals for reforming the education of the female sex	63, 248
Elbow-chair, where, and for what purpose to be provided	268
Elizabeth, (queen) the breakfast of her maids of honour	148
Elliott's project of a lottery	201
Elmira, character and manner of her life	53
Eloquence described	66, 70
Elpenor, a warning to drunkards	152
Elysium, joys of, by the author of Telemachus	156
Wherein its happiness may be supposed to consist	94
England, the figure it made in 1709	130
English, when they begin to sing	222
Engagements between them and the French	15, 63, 64
English tongue much adulterated	230
Enjoyment, only to be accounted true possession	63
Envy deforms every thing	227
Effects of it	174
Often occasioned by avarice	227
Epidene, an author, censured	63
Epigram on marriage	40
Epithets of Homer and Virgil compared	6
Epsom, diversions there	30
Adventures of a fortune-hunter there	47
Epsom-Wells, character of that comedy	7
Equanimity of temper, the greatest of human perfections	176

Equipage, p Esquires, th
Why ene
Esteem dist
How dist Eucrates, ef temper Evil, the gr Euphusius, to him Eustace, (M Eutrapelus,
Examiner, a Exercise of Extortion, o
Eye, langua
FAME, a u
The love o Inconveni
Difficult t Bank of Plan of th
Table of Mountain
Familiarities
Family scen
Fan, its mot Verses on Fardingal, (
The fardin
Fashion, abs
By whom Favonius, th
Feasts, cons
Felicia (Eng
state Fellows, vari
Female Con
Fencing, hov Fidget, a ge madness Fire-men de Fits cured by Flagelet, an how est Flatterers, tr
ones Flattery grat
Ill consequ Force of i Flavia, a tru
A coquette
A young l
An imagin
Flea, skeleto Fleming, (ge Florimel and Florinda, her
Florio, a gen
Flute, its effe
How match
Fly-blow, a f a knave Folio, (Tom)
criticism
A letter fro Fondness of v
Fools, how th
The way to Footman, wit

INDEX.

No.		No.
36	Ghosts of tyrants	196
113	Gimcrack, (sir Nicholas) a virtuoso, his will	216
54	His widow desires Mr. Bickerstaff's friendship	221
271	Glass, state weather-	214 y pro-	Glory, true, inseparable from merit	177 200	Gluttony, modern	26
251	Goatham petition	141
176	Goldsmiths distinguished from coppersmiths	81
177	Good breeding	30
170	Good fortune, the ready path to it	202
170	Goodly, (lady) her fondness for her children	236
202	Good-nature, an essential quality in a satirist	242
229	Good-natured old man, the best companion	45 21	Good will and charity, the basis of society	219 e 125	The quintessence of conversation	46 rs 207	Grammar, not rightly taught	234 11	Grandeur, wherein it truly consists	170
12	Great Britain particularly fruitful in religion	257 rn 135	Great men, behaviour of some of them to their dependents	196
111	Apology for their manner of bestowing favours	168
57	Greatness of mind, wherein it consists	1103
63	Greenhat, (Obadiah) his criticism upon Mr. Bickerstaff	59
84	Sir Humphrey, a candidate for alderman, his expedient to prevent bribery	74
82	Character of the Greenhats, and their relation to the Staffs	59
172	Greenhouse described	179 state 172	Grief, the benefit of it	181 gate in 236	Grogam, (Jeffery) his petition for interment	106 24	Guardeloop, (Mons.) the French tailor, married	17 e state 184	Guicciardini the historian, a prolix author	264 ing the 154	Guilt applies the satires	81 elon, 156	Gunner and gunster distinguished	88 2, 154, 156	Gunster in conversation, who to be so accounted	88 ts of it 156	Gyges, his invisible ring allegorically applied	138, 139 sed to 91, 154	The use Mr. Bickerstaff made of it	243 and a 7	HALL, serjeant, his letter to his comrade	87 58	Hamlet, various observations and criticisms on that character	35, 71, 106
91	Hammar, disputes between Protestants and Papists there	6 ed in a 94	Hammond, (John) recovery of his watch	121 ry and 17	Handkerchief, religious, much worn in England	187 14	Hannibal, the Carthaginian, his speech on being recalled from Italy	187 13	Hannibal, (sir) death and funeral of	115 against 15	Hanover, elector of, remonstrance of his minister to the council at Ratisbon	1 56	Signifies his intentions to the imperial court	4 57	Happiness, where the foundation must be placed	251 a pack 66, 68, 70	Hard words exploded	5 11, 56	Harpsichord, its music applied to conversation	15
65	With what instrument joined	15
126	Hart, the player, an ostentation of his	13 asts 24	Hassock, dispute concerning one	25
206	Hats, makers of, their petition against laced hats	27
11	Hautboy, in a female concert	15
48	Matched with the harpsichord	15
21	Hawksby, his raffling shop	5
66	Hercules, Prodigus' allegory concerning him	9
152	Hero, how distinguished from a plain honest man	9
152	Heroic virtue, wherein it consists	9
152	Heydey, (Jack) whom he reduced	5
152, 154	Hippocrates, the character of a generous physician	7
154	Historians, usefulness and variety of	117, 13
156	Historical paintings, the great advantage of them	30

INDEX.

	No.		No.
lord chief justice) his integrity	14	Industry, knights of	34 his description of a future state	132	Infidels how to be pun	132 erect in his epithets	6	Initial letters on a tor	6 liad, in a journal	56	Injuries, scales for we	56 fellows described	43	Innocence, its safest	43 as necessary in conversation as in	173	Inquietude, natural, i	173 amerce	219	Insipids, who to be ad	219 the seat of it	202	Instructions to Vander	202 ibed	101	Insurrections in Poit	101 of	250, 253, 256, 262, 265	Invention to have one	250, 253, 256, 262, 265 his excellencies	173	Inventory of playhou	173 account of him and his writings	242	Jointures, the mischie	242 se, Lancashire, its part in a female con	157	Jonson, (Ben) his ma	157 described by Shakspeare	90	Joseph the patriarch,	90 ty inspired by the muses	98	Journal of Homer's I	98 ue greatness without it	98	Journey to the Land'	98 nature considered in its true dignity	87	Ithuriel, the use Mr.	87 im, who	264	spear	264
ct for extirpating such	268	Juno, her method to r	268
ey, (squire) bubble at Bath	65	Justice of Lewis le G	65 oby, his complaint against a sexton at	241	gamesters	241
Paul's	205	Juvenal, account of, a	205 how to be satisfied	37	Ix, iniquity of that fa	37 a meeting of them described	233	KETTLEDRAW, in	233 man, his pleasures next to those of a	104	concert, matched	104 osopher	149	Kidney, master of St	149 ls, qualities necessary to make good ones	149, 150	Kings, wicked, how p	149, 150 ies of a bad husband	149	Kit, that instrument	149 makes a man an ill husband	149	Knaves proved fools	149 husband as bad as a foolish one	26	Knights of the indu	26 oney demanded	56	young heir	56 civil and mild, who	120	Knockers, exercise of	120 the god of marriage, a guard at the	119	LABOUR for the pul	120 ple of virtuous love	119	Ladies, treating them	119 the Supreme Being	56	Ladies, their trifling e	56 PRUCE made half mad with a smile	206	ideas of their soul	206 ch-a-one, what sort of men pass under	62	A lady thankful to	62 title	142	her fits	142
Harry) why he deserved a statue	149, 150	A young lady encha	149, 150 the best sort of canes	40	Lalo, (colonel) killed	40 g, matrimonial	97	Lamb, a modern diet	97 n inquiry concerning an idiot put the	127	Landlord distinguished	127 of London in great consternation	120	Landlord, Alexander,	120 guished from politicians	4, 7	Langham, (Dr.) the as	4, 7 more destructive than the plague	215	nerosity	215 in what manner inverted	225	Laughter, what, and w	225 her garments, complexion, and office	168	A weighty affair	168 (Mr.) a great painter	6	The distinguishing f	6 distinguished from a flatterer	98	Occasioned by scorn	98 chest generally the best jester	81	Immoderate, a sign	81 account of their discipline	119	Laura, her perfection	119 into an exact journal	246	Law, case of, answered	246 tion, the most active principle of the	168	Lazy, (lady) described	168 lity, two kinds of it	252	Learning, what it is, a	252 stibles, natural history of them	270	Only improves natu	270
tion, what idea that word should con	106	Le Brun's battle of Po	106 ce compared with absurdity	169	Legacy, Noy's, to recl	169 drunkenness	199	Leisure, how to employ	199
(Mr. Ralph)	171	Letters, directions for	171 hey described by Hamlet	58	Should be the produc	58 at distinguished from a landlord	10	in one from Switz	10 e of marriage drawn up by Mr. Bick		Penny-post, sent as ff		Levity, her post in the sings, their return to the civilities of		Lewis XIV. answer of r landlord		Libels, panegyrics may wife restored by Scipio		Libellers censured turned into philosophy		Distinguished from Liberty, its region des Library, female

INDEX

No.		No.
256	Machiavel, an office suited to him in a vision	123
120	Madmen, who, whither sent by the Romans	125 made 137	Difference between them and fools	49 137	An edifice intended for their reception and	125 s 108	cure	125, 174
92	Madness, the first symptoms thereof	174
92, 94	Chiefly occasioned by pride	174
94, 101	Madonella, her scheme	68
94	Account of a revolution in her platonic non-
250	nery	33
103	Mævius writes verses in commendation of his 49	own works	91
259	Maids of honour, their breakfast in queen 215	Elizabeth's time	145 reck- 54	Maintenon, (madam) her letter to Mons. Torcy	79 197	on the peace	259
96	Makebate, (Elizabeth) trial of	243 to a 84	Male coquette, his bed-equipage described	114
268	Widow-hood considered	134
40	Man, the middle link between angels and brutes	103 4	A creature made up of different extremes	246 ce and 8	The only imperfect creature in the universe	254
s wine 147	Mandeville, (sir John) some of his remains	47 191	Maria, account of the loss of her lap-dog	91 llation 211	Distracted in her choice between a man of	61 91	merit and a man of fortune	137 s than 211	Marinus, a good sea officer, exposed to a fellow	7
121, 174	of fire	49
166	Marlborough (John) duke of, his merit	130
82	5, 8, 18, 46, 55, 64, 66, 130, 137	192, 199
5	Marriage described	79, 188, 192, 223
47	The safest and happiest state this world affords	75
90	An account of marriage from experience	157
206	The caprices and hazards attending a married	40
247	state	79
149	Unhappy marriages, from what proceeding	233
5, 49	How men's minds and humours may be	233
47, 107	changed thereby	199
185	Table of marriage	95
4, 10	Epigram on	98
90	Verses on, from Milton	153
90, 95	Two ladies desire to marry the same man to	58
90	prevent parting	146
98	Settlements, by whom introduced	132
93, 150	Ill consequences attending them	51 it 49	A proposal for regulating them	20 35	A settlement drawn up by Mr. Bickerstaff	173
30, 139	Often overlook their enjoyments	89
83	Rendering it cheap discourages vice	27
104	Marrow-bone and cleaver, modern instruments	37
150	of music	66
120	Marseilles, account of an insurrection there	85
206	Martius' character of an unlearned wit	85
84, 117	Masquerade, a lady in danger of her life for	85
81	being left out of one	85 f them 50	Matchlock, (major) a member of the Trumpet	85
120	Club	85
conver- 153, 157	Mathematical sieve to sift impertinencies	85
126	In love, always poetical	85
215	Of sense the women's humble servants	85
68	Mercer, who could not enjoy a thousand pounds	85
186	a year	85
	Merit, obscure should be produced to public	85 view	85

INDEX.

	No.
ellows described	45	Northern parts, fruitful na, a professed mistress of mankind	49	Noses, a dissertation on opes, their use	119	Notch, (sir Jeffry) a achievements of London	28	Club m, when to commence	43	Nottingham, why you and Suckling, in a parallel case, show		there duty of man in love	40	Nova Zembla, account e's pleasure in the society of Adam	114	Novelists, effects of the who so in conversation	88	Noy, his expedient to
's spirit of contradiction	171	legacy
(Tom) the pantomime	51	Nurses, their abuses of the ogler, interview with Flavia	145	Nunnery, by a platon n families, whence it mostly arises	109	The manner of re section of one	119	nunneries (Tom) his knowledge of the fashion	166 of the order of insipids	166	OGLERS complained men distinguished from modest fellows	52	Dangerous described	52	Ogling gains women ent in men and women	52	Old age, wherein delig chief ornament of the fair sex	84	Old Bachelor, account vantages in men	86	Opera, in female conv ry, the genius thereof described	161	Italian, considered ous, a sharper	56	The understanding reflections on Africanus	30	Oppression, an attend lables, a disgrace to the English lan-		Orangerie described ge	230	Orator in a night-gow vested	62, 76	Orlando the fair, his l 83	Organ-loft, ladies treat ier compared to Anticyra	125	Orson, (Thicket) his er good fortune in the lottery prog-		Cleora licated	124	Osmyn, the civil husb to her	124	Oxford described at danger of her life for being left out of		Almanac considered masquerade	146	Discipline applauded r, (John) appointed Mr. Bickerstaff's		Puppet-show there number-keeper	103
al of the dead men	103	PACOLET, a guardia described by Milton	163	ance to Mr. Bicke saeties of	263	Account of his form n, described	9	His life of a month es of the playhouse, sale of them frus-		His checks and adn sd	44	Observations on gar anks, their artifices to ensnare the		Pætus, manner of his de ar	4, 240	of his wife
g, a proper dress for a beautiful lady	151	Painting the face cens res the spleen	47	Palamede, his infamou the food of our hardy ancestors	148	Panegyric, the nature ms, their history	56	A theme for Mr. Bie
		On Mr. Bickerstaff
Ralph) haberdasher of hats, his pen-		May be turned into n	270	Pantomimes, what sort ruth, a dangerous pamphlet	17	Paradise Lost fills the count Maurice of, killed	210	and pleasing ideas of, his gallantry	69	Parents, the folly of p ation act, its advantages	18	Generally err in ma ts prevalence	172	Parisatis, her manner great but too modest architect	52	from coquetry (Richard) indicted by major Punt		Paris Gazette burlesque e court of honour	256	Parrot, verses on one ers hurtful to weak heads	178	Parsimony, a favourite s in a panic	18	Party, all parties con ifts they are put to	19, 42	supple College proposed for them	18	The prevalence of p (ill) a fop	14	dice, in England (Signor) his excellencies on the stage	115	Partridge, (Mr. John) nger formerly in this island than at		sharpers nt	263	His death demonstra to be used by young people	83	Account of his funer clared to be no rake	27	A letter from him, int a prevailing part of eloquence among		of resuscitation 60	Walks, and denles h

INDEX.

	No.		No.
in his		Platonne described knave	96	Nunneries established by	32 interfeits	216	Players, why they should be esteemed	1 takes	130	Must forget they are before an audience	1 nois	129, 187	Instructed by Shakspeare	1 in con-		Blamed for inserting words	182 ow	153	Parallels between them	182 omparit	172	Playhouse, one only should be supported	1 y	9	At Amsterdam supports an almshouse	1 se	271	On fire in Denmark	1 if	236	Plays, proper incitements to good behaviour	1 ndents	196	Modern, described	3 chant	25	Pleasing, in conversation, a happy talent	4 t	176	Pleasure, deceitful	4
	169	Plenty, a goddess in the region of liberty	14
	158	Pliny, his letters to his wife	14
	158	His compliment and advice to Trajan	14
	165	Pluto, his palace and throne described	13
	64	Poetasters ridiculed	10 ith Mr.		Catalogue of the labours of one	10 188	Poetry, the foundation of	24 pany to		Efficacy of it on the mind	3 4	A remedy for the spleen	3 20	Sir Francis Bacon's account of it	10 nands	67	Poitou, insurrection at	1 f affec-		Politeness, affectation of	28 53	Politicians, distinction scarce discernible be-	4 161	tween them and idiots	4 e court		City reprover	152
	256	Politics universally prevail	23
	110	Polypragmon, character of a cunning fellow	191
	116	Pompey, a black boy, his complaint	24
	121	Pope, the, sick of the tooth-ache	12 he fair		In distress	5, 6, 7 13	His modesty overcome with regard to the	12
	135	Neapolitan horse	12
	170	Postman, the extraordinary talent of the au-	178
	43	thor of the	178
	170	Posture-master, his beholders censured	106 nmom-		Potatrix, (Elizabeth) catalogue of her ancestors	35
	78	Poverty, an attendant on Tyranny	162
	77	A terrible spectacle in the temple of Avarice	132
	78	Powell, (junior) a famous actor	3
	240	Disputes between him and Mr. Bicker-	44, 50, 113
	240	staff	44, 50, 113
	240	Why he locked up the legs of his company	142 mer of		An excuse for writing against him	51 7	Letter from Bath	50
s	8	Power, absolute, represented in a dance	10 209	Praise, true, generous and heroic spirits most	92 legant		sensible of it	92
	209	How coveted by great men	92 167	To be regarded only as relating to things	92 ribed	184	strictly true	92
	211	None valuable but from the praise worthy	177
	211	Prayer of lord chancellor Bacon	267
	212	Præ-Adamites threatened	69
	49	Precedence, a quarrel concerning, at the opera	16 lained		At Epsom	26
	101	Preliminaries of peace	20
aded	82	Refused by the French king	23, 24 merit,		Pretenders to poetry, a kind of madmen	117 41	Pretty fellow, who	20 iseller		What persons excluded that order	22
	269	Very pretty fellow, a woman's man in the	24
	212	first degree	24
	154	Pride, the cause and consequences of	127
	90	Makes men odious, and creates envy	156
	154	A remarkable instance of it in a robber	127 of the		The chief introduction to madness	127 253	Priesthood, when the highest honour	107

INDEX

envelope) the clear-starcher, her pe-	No.	Reptile, (Dick) a menting, a reproach to the English na-	118	Club, his character ff, (Mr.) admitted Mr. Bickerstaff's	134	His reflections on the nan	270	Reputation, the only juan allegory by	97	and establishing it modern, reflection on their character	11	Respect only to be proc t of a comedy so called	11	Retirement requires gre In words and thoughts explained	62	ness is, wherein superior to Papists	155	Revenge of two French in women the same as wisdom in men	172	Richard III, effects of r name for courtly hypocrites	102	Richards, (major-genera ished from coquettes	126	at Alicant art they bear in a female concert	157	Riches, the use and abu rit, the most essential quality in a		Ridicule, the ill effects o statesman	194	How to be used t motive to all actions	183	When the effect of rec instance of it in Regulus	183	Riding, a healthy exerc lo, his origin, character, and ill-		Riding contributes to be ers	45, 115	Rigid, the, an untracta Nicolini	115	be found in all part d of	20	Ring, invisible Illius at Oxford	45	Risibility the effect of r ty a suspicious circumstance in visiting	109	Rocheffoucault, his writi an enormity	32	Rochford, earl of, killed ance of	35	Roman ladies, of their g
Mr. Powell's, whence taken	115	Romps, how cured ow supplies the want of an act at	45	Rosin, (Will) the Wapp raband's in the Exchange	20	Royal Society, actions o believed by the Platonists	154	Ruffs, wherein necessary t, (Ned) how improved in writing	142	To be worn with the f (king) reproved by a philosopher	202	Rural wits s, apophthegm of	214	SACHARISSA, an exc his golden sayings	108	not courted doctors, their artifices	240	Sagissa, her intrigue dis tends to upholders	261	snuff he weakness of persons of	180	Sallust, wherein partial always pay the reckoning	45	Saltero, (Don) at Chels Epsom about precedence	36	cations, and relies omial, prevented	85	Cases referred to him s described	41	A curiosity in his mus his character of laziness	10	Sandford the player, wh Don) the first symptoms of his mad-	178	Sappho, a fine lady, h NG-SHOP kept by a lawyer at Hamp-		Bickerstaff rejudicial to the stomach	148	Saraband, (Mrs.) her p racterised	27	change it, advice to	143	Satire, in what cases use llow the fine speaker	197	When just must be di olonel) civilized at the sight of lady		The ordinary subjects Modish	10	Apology for it by Sha Is for, mostly attended by women	84	Satirists censured when observations on the English theatre	134	nature a attendant on licentiousness	161	Censures on the vain ce, artifice of	145	Satisfaction, a term in d William) an eminent oculist	145	Scævola, his fortitude o he exercise of the mind	147	the stage Mr. Bickerstaff	240	Scales for weighing inju rations or Instructions to Vander-		Scandal, a universal thin a poem	3	Scholar, many pretender is, the advantage of	248	Scipio, his generous treat Officer, a comedy, character of	20	Scoggin, (Mr.) what M great instance of public spirit	183	through him a prayer for the advancement of	5	Scold described tain particularly fruitful in religions	257	What usually makes w war discussed	155	Defence of one at Bill Scolding, a great enemy Remedies for Scorn, the cause of laug Scotland, simplicity decl Scotus, his way of distin Screens, who

INDEX.

	No.		No.
human	233	Spenser, the tenth canto of his fourth book	194 sure	233	transposed	194 ntures		Spindle, (Tom) how cured of the spleen	47 194	Spleen, its effects	189 slaves		A never-failing remedy for it	47, 83 6	Squibs, a branch of gunners, who to be so ac-
	171	counted	83
	190	Squires, country, described	83
Jenny		Staff of Life, his poem on the French king	21
	33	Stage or theatre, the use of	182
	170	Stanhope, (general) wounded	210, 212 d man	15	A query concerning	212 222	Stanwin, (general) his behaviour at Badajos	47 over-		Staremburg, (general) beats the army of the 88	duke of Anjou	171
	223	Takes Balaguier	76
	223	Statesman, what quality most essential to one	191
	199	State weather-glass, description and use of	214
	172	Statira, account of her distress	112
	172	Steele, (Mr.) his acknowledgement	271
	8, 68	Stentor, a singer of St. Paul's reproved	54
	111	Injuries done by his bawling	54
	41	Admonished by one St. Peter's	61
	8	Stocking, the custom of throwing it at weddings	181
	197	Stone-walls, comment on them	17
	112	Story-tellers, bagpipes in conversation	153
	59	Tedious	132, 251
	56	A project for suppressing them	268
	65	Their employment in Mr. Bickerstaff's Bedlam	174
	57	Style depraved by modern writers	231
	118	Of the scriptures more than human	233
	194	Sublime in writing, instanced in a simile in the 219	Campaign	43
og the		Summer-house described	179, 189 257	The plan of one defined	203 con-		Supper, encroachments on	263
	134	Supple, the, a compound in all parties	211
	21	Swearers, how reformed	13 es	51	Swearing, a folly without temptation	137 8	Sweden, king of, passes the Nieper	21 133	Success against the Muscovites	25, 54 terns	212	Defeated	49, 55, 54 tion	213	Switzerland, prospect of	91 131
	213	TABLE, who keeps the best	114
	26	Of respect and intimacy	215
	28	Tale-bearers, the use of them in Mr. Bicker-50	staff's Bedlam	175
er	103	Taliacotius, account of his cures	261 195	Talkativeness, a sign of folly and ill-breeding	241 music,		Taste of an age known by plays	42 78	Tea not used in the time of Elizabeth	148 85	Telemachus, his discoveries in the regions of 197	the dead	156
	35	Temper, command of it the greatest human
	112	perfection	176
lton	114	Temperance, preservative of health	210 ve	90	Temple of Avarice	123
	122	Of Honour	123
	135	Of Hymen	124
	163	Of Love, by Spenser	124
	47	Of Lust	125
	397	Of Vanity	127
	87	Of Virtue	127
	205	Tenderness inspired by the muses	129
	205, 211	No true greatness of mind without it	129 g it up	107	Teraminta, the unhappy, her story	44 92	Terrae Filius, his place supplied by Punch	46 accom-		Theatres, useful	7, 9
	62	Make a polite and moral gentry	1
92, 135		English, educated	13

INDEX.

	No.
(sir George) declared alderman	11	Virgil, more judicious on, on honour and title	171	His allegories (Tom) the vintner, instances of his	131	His writings leave in colouring liquors	131	Virginal, who so acco-(Tom) a stage-coach to his dancing-	180	tion school advertised	180	Virginity, how proper
, advice of, to Ulysses	152	Virtue of a beautiful men, their ignorance	212	Heroic, wherein it the significancy and abuse of	171	In common life impertinent use of	201	Virtuosi, ridiculous s sir Timothy) a profound critic, quarrels		A virtuoso's will with his mistress	115	Vision, of the mount a new religious order in England	129	Of Justice of that institution	24	Visits ridiculed from the name found out	31	Fashionable (Mons.) the French plenipotentiary		When unseasonable 9, 13, 19, 21, 23		A day-book kept o er to him from madam Maintenon	19	ULYSSES, adventu sense of the greatness of France	16	the dead a new religious order in England	129	Umbratilis, the imita y invested	35	Underhill, (Cave) a t ery of the besiegers there	59	Understanding, good ended	44, 62
observations on	83	Unnion and Valentin es reproved	210	Upholders, company ors described	244	Bickerstaff s, full of rules	244	Petition and propo nd, (lord) the English plenipotentiary	18	Permitted to bury y whom brought into fashion	142	Advertisement for men, when they deserve the title of gen-		tridge men	207	Upholsterer, the great y, materials for making one	22	His early visit ion of, how to be expressed	47	Much esteemed in sions illustrated	67	Carried to Bedlam useless to many	93	Letters of news fr not make a fool a wise man	93	Urbanus, his modesty of peace broken off	23	Vulgar, who to be ac , (sir Taffety) his amours at Epsom and inbridge	47	WAGS, the lowest p the Jubilee, a comedy	19	Waiting-maids, a pet m, (sir) the banker, character of	57	War, religious, discus his abused by the Romans with regard		War-horse to be let captives	63	Watch invented for , character of that family	63	Water, circumspectio in, (Tom) a hero in domestic life	213	Wax-work in German s, (Tom) defence of gamblers & sharpers	57	Wealth, a distinction et, a species of men in conversation	153	Wealthy persons fix in Sheer-lane	132	umstances (Sam) his visits to two old widows	266	Weather-glass, state variety of names to	218	Wedlock, picture of dge Wells, adventures and diversions at	47	Welch a nation of g r-cases, incomparable, where sold	142	Harp, an instrume y, commands an army against the		Whetters reproved gion of Liberty	161	Whigs, a religious or R, (Will) his speech concerning sharpers	56	Whisperers, censured ine, a soldier, story of	5	Whitaker's, admiral linarians, the order of	77	Widowhood, male, co of birth, the greatest under the sun	11	Wife, the most amiable s, happy in the possession of modesty	52	only by fools s, (Tom) his adventure with a merchant's		Scheme to govern o le	136	Infallible sign of w modern diet	148	Wildair, (Tom) how the character of an impartial chief jus-		Wilks, the comedian, e (Holt)	14	William III. of Eng udes of human life considered	170	Will's coffee-house es, (major) death of	21	Window-breakers wit
, the beautiful object of Orlando's af-		Wine, to whom and ctions	50	Present of, to Mr. a species of men in conversation	153,	Adulteration of compared with Homer	6	Brewers, the frea

INDEX.

	No.	No.
ded	131	Women, the happiness of mankind depends on	141 179	their education	141 ner of	12	Want regular education	61
	98	Natural to them to talk of themselves	10
	62	Of the present age, compared with those of	61
	57	the last	3)
	251	More subtle than men in their own affairs	247
	57	Their common failing	151
	29	Bad taste in dress	191
	45	Unmarried, instructions to them	52
	219	Wren, (sir Christopher) described under the	97
	46	name of Nestor	226
ke for	21	XERXES, why he burst into tears	201
	201	YOUNG, (Margery) life and adventures of	201 201

THE TATLER

were written and contributed to in the following proportion:—

4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.
--

THE TATLER

TO MR. ARTHUR MAYNWARING.

: state of conversation and business in this aving been long perplexed with Pretenders in clings; in order to open men's eyes against buses, it appeared no unprofitable undertaking lish a Paper, which should observe upon the ra of the pleasurable, as well as the busy part kind. To make this generally read, it seemed at proper method to form it by way of a of intelligence, consisting of such parts as gratify the curiosity of persons of all condi-and of each sex. But a work of this nature ng time to grow into the notice of the world, ened very luckily, that, a little before I had d upon this design, a gentleman had written ions, and two or three other pieces in my which rendered it famous through all parts of
; and, by an inimitable spirit and humour, it to as high a pitch of reputation as it could to arrive at.

his good fortune, the name of Isaac Bicker-sized an audience of all who had any taste of and the addition of the ordinary occurrences mon Journals of News brought in a multitude er readers. I could not, I confess, long keep opinion of the town, that these Lucubrations ritten by the same hand with the first works were published under my name; but, before he participation of that author's fame, I had found the advantage of his authority, to I owe the sudden acceptance which my labours in the world.

hardly a name no wit, beauty, valor scribed for the e
This is, indeed, an to express a suitab could be an additio the reflection, that occasion I can ever Your most

WHEN I send you a request, make you a request, I desire, that if you moments on it, you those excellent pie conversant. The pie here, will be very Greeks and Roman panions. I must the taste of many not observed until very proud that the which I know you are sure to have one's of a man, who so of eloquence and to you; not that my writings, but I have from your men.

May you enjoy relish of the happy you! I know not thing to you, than what you are; and know you now do fortune than you w dient, and most hu

LORD
AM.

rior grace inary char-my veneration name, in application
th you are our fellow-gation you th a private r take the and public

nds, that is at you have age when the hopes the house
nding to it, eloquence the expres-ment. The
to the just ship exerts ou win the m you, and are never iar to your even of a ee towards

n, conceal from you, but I brave and gaged in a the many ers of an-

to excel in upon the
there is no
s wanting, that one tion. The e assumed n, in com-
who utters s, that all our, com-
the heart

ou so, pass d are dis-d speech all men in r hearts I ee as you ut I resist is to me, a fame of s, attempt e only sure e wherein argument
e silent.

reant.

THREE

TO THE RT. HON. CHAS. LORD HALIFAX

From the Hovel at Hampton, April 7, 1711.

MY LORD,

WHEN I first resolv'd upon doing myself the honour, I could not but indulge a certain vanity, dating from this little covert, where I have frequent had the honour of your lordship's company, and received from you very many obligations. The elegant solitude of this place, and the greatest pleasures it, I owe to its being so near those beautiful mans wherein you sometimes reside. It is not retir'd from the world, but enjoying its most valuable blessings, when a man is permitted to share in your lordship's conversations in the country. All the bright images which the wits of past ages have left behind them in their writings, the noble plans which the greatest statesmen have laid down for administration of affairs, are equally the familiar objects of your knowledge. But what is peculiar to your lordship above all the illustrious personages that have appeared in any age, is, that wit and learning have from your example fallen into a new era. Your patron has produced those arts, which before shunn'd commerce of the world, into the service of life; and it is to you we owe, that the man of wit has turn'd himself to be a man of business. The false delicacy of men of genius, and the objections which others were apt to insinuate against their abilities for entering into affairs have equally vanished. And experience has shown, that men of letters are not only qualified with a greater capacity, but also a great integrity in the despatch of business. Your studies have been diverted from being the high ornament, to the highest use to mankind; and the capacities which would have rendered you the greatest poet of your age, have, to the advantage of Great Britain, been employed in pursuits which have made you the most able and unbiass'd patriot. Your vigorous imagination, an extensive apprehension, and a ready judgment, have distinguished you in all the illustrious parts of administration, in a reign attended with such difficulties, that the same talents, without the same quickness in the possession of them, would have been incapable of conquering. The natural success of your abilities, has advanced you to a seat in that illustrious house, where you were receiv'd by a crowd of your relations. Great as you are, in your honours and personal qualities, I know you will give an humble neighbour the vanity of pretending to a place in your friendship, and subscribing himself, my Lord,

Your Lordship's most obliged, and most devoted servant,

RICHARD STELL

PREFACE TO THE OCTAVO EDITION, 1711

IN the last Tatler I promised some explanation of passages and persons mentioned in this work, as well as some account of the assistances I have had in its performance. I shall do this in very few words; for when a man has no design but to speak plain truth, he may say a great deal in a very narrow compass. I have, in the dedication of the first volume, made my acknowledgments to Dr. Swift, whose pleasant writings, in the name of Bickerstaff, created an elevation in the town towards any thing that could appear in the same disguise. I must acknowledge, that, at my first entering upon this work, I entertain'd an uncommon way of thinking, and a turn ration peculiar to that agreeable gentleman, and his company very advantageous to one whose imagination was to be continually employed on obvious and common subjects, though, at the time, obliged to treat of them in a new and ingenious method. His verses on the 'Shower in the Morning,' and the 'Description of the Morning,' are pieces of the happiness of that genius, which could find such pleasing ideas upon occasions so barren to ordinary invention.

STEELE'S PREFACE TO THE TATLER

When I am upon the house of Bickerstaff, I must forget that genealogy of the family sent to me by post, and written, as I since understand, by Twisden, who died at the battle of Mons, and whose monument in Westminster Abbey, suitable to the respect which is due to his wit and his valour, I saw, through the course of the work, very many pieces which were written by unknown correspondents. Of this kind is the tale in the second number, and the epistle from Mr. Downes the prompter, and others which were very well received by the public.

But I have only one gentleman, who will be obliged to me, to thank for any frequent assistance to which indeed it would have been barbarous in me to have denied to one with whom he has lived in intimacy from childhood, considering the great friendship with which he is able to despatch the most engaging pieces of this nature. This good office he has performed with such force of genius, humour, wit, and learning, that I fared like a distressed prince, who calls in a powerful neighbour to his aid; I was assisted by my auxiliary; when I had once called in, I could not subsist without dependence on him.

The same hand writ the distinguishing characters of men and women under the names of 'Musical Instruments,' 'The Distress of the News-writers,' 'Inventory of the Play-house,' and, 'The description of the Thermometer,' which I cannot but reckon upon as the greatest embellishments of this work.

As far as I thought necessary to say relating to the great hands which have been concerned in these pieces, with relation to the spirit and genius of the work; and am far from pretending to modesty in making this acknowledgment. What a man is from the good opinion and friendship of his countrymen, is a much greater honour than he can possibly reap from it. But all the credit of the gentlemen above-mentioned, is accounted, has no pretensions made against that learned and judicious church, and the like. I mentioned this only to clear the imputation of being partial in opinion; and, I think, with the utmost frankness, I say it, though joined in it, which I have declared is acknowledged to the character of the Doctor for Dr. Atterbury, to my impartiality.

I really have a great deal to say, and am concerned for wit, if a man has a useful end, is but that one should value that he had some leisure.

As for this paper, I am carried away with giants and tyrants, gamblers and duellists, those knights too, apt to fly out against me is pressed therefore leave off windmills no more say of myself, that and prejudice, in bewailed the consequences whose fortune and while his estate is through a false sense of duellists, through the first of these or more to say of them all I have more to say to their being pressed applying to the duellists somewhere of the a bravo to God.'

THE TATLER.

[ TUESDAY, APRIL 12, 1709.

quid agunt homines—— nostri est farrago libelli. Jur. Sat. i. 85, 86. ate'er men do, or say, or think, or dream, motley paper seizes for its theme. P.

ALTHOUGH the other papers, which are published for the use of the good people of England, have certainly wholesome effects, and are laudable in their several kinds, they do not seem to come up to the design of such narrations; which, I humbly think, should be principally intended for the use of politic persons, neglect their own state. Now these being persons of state is both a charitable thing whereby such members of the common their reading, what end and purpose of from time to time what kind soever, I wish such my advice Thursday, and 5

BRITISH ESSAYIST.

something
air sex, in le of this ons, with-ent, gratis, forbidding eril. And at a very s work, as had settled and know-he is not ness only, stly to be shall not,
th musty hall divide in action ll as elsey prepare e following and enterinto's Chol's Coffee-n; foreign nt James's ffer on any wn Apartsider, that go daily to ly for his oe to the n Spanish,

e and that Kidney at these cons willing to my gratis especially ement, and s to enter-
own parts, y casting a it comes to sparingly,

are passed,
offend our etty gentle-en men of lamented,

ber, 1705,
as washing all, when a g lady who h, and the ap, and into do, out k, sits him
e at night;
body knew ly? but he n the morn-n church to se to play-never find his bosom.

In a word, his attention to any thing but his passion was utterly gone. He has lost all the money he ever played for, and been confuted in every argument he has entered upon, since the moment he first saw her. He is of a noble family, has naturally a very good air, and is of a frank, honest temper; but the passion has so extremely mauled him, that his features are set and uninformed, and his whole visage is deadened by a long absence of thought. He now appears in any alacrity but when raised by wine; which time he is sure to come hither and throw away a great deal of wit on fellows who have no sense farther than just to observe, that our poor lover has most understanding when he is drunk, and is less in his senses when he is sober.

The reader is desired to take notice of the article from this place, from time to time, for I design to be very exact in the progress this unhappy gentleman makes, which may be of great instruction to all who actually are, or who ever shall be in love.

Will's Coffee-house, April 8.

On Thursday last was acted, for the benefit of Mr. Betterton, the celebrated comedy called Love in a Ruff. Those excellent players, Mrs. Barry, Mr. Bracegirdle, and Mr. Dogget, though not at present concerned in the house, acted on that occasion. This has not been known so great a concourse of persons of distinction as at that time; the stage itself was covered with gentlemen and ladies, and when the curtain was drawn, it discovered even there, a very splendid audience. This unusual encouragement, which was given to a play for the advantage of a great actor, gives an undeniable instance, that the true relish for manly entertainments and rational pleasures is not wholly lost. All the parts were acted to perfection: the actors were careful of the carriage, and no one was guilty of the affectation of inserting witticisms of his own; but a due respect was had to the audience for encouraging this accomplished player. It is not now doubted but plays will revive and take their usual place in the opinion of persons of wit and merit, notwithstanding their late apostasy in favour of dress and sound. This place is very much altered since Mr. Dryden frequented it; what you used to see songs, epigrams, and satires, in the hands of every man you met, you have now only a pack of cards; and instead of the cavils about the turn of the expression, the elegance of the style, and the like, the learned now dispute only about the truth of the game. But however the company altered, all have shewn a great respect for Mr. Betterton; and the very gaming part of this house has been so touched with a sense of the uncertainty of human affairs (which alter with themselves even in a moment) that in this gentleman, they pitied Mr. Anthony of Rome, Hamlet of Denmark, Mithridates of Pontus, Theodosius of Greece, and Henry the Eighth of England. It is well known, he has been the condition of each of those illustrious persons for several hours together, and behaved himself in those high stations, in all the changes of the scene with suitable dignity. For these reasons, we intend to repeat this late favour to him on a proper occasion: lest he, who can instruct us so well in personate feigned sorrows, should be lost to us by suffering under real ones. The town is at present in a great expectation of seeing a comedy now in rehearsal, which is the twenty-fifth production of the honoured friend Mr. Thomas D'Urfey; who, besides his great abilities in the dramatic, has a peculiar talent in the lyric way of writing, and that with er wholly new and unknown to the ancient ks and Romans, wherein he is but faintly imiin the translations of the modern Italian operas.

St. James's Coffee-house, April 11.

tters from the Hague of the sixteenth say, that r-general Cadogan was gone to Brussels, with to disperse proper instructions for assembling whole force of the allies in Flanders in the begin-of the next month. The late offers concerning were made in the style of persons who think selves upon equal terms; but the allies have st a sense of their present advantages, that they not admit of a treaty, except France offers what is suitable to her present condition. At the time, we make preparations as if we were ed by a greater force than that which we are ing into the field. Thus this point seems now argued sword in hand. This was what a great al alluded to, when being asked the names of who were to be plenipotentiaries for the eng peace, he answered with a serious air, "There bout an hundred thousand of us." Mr. Kidney, has the ear of the greatest politicians that come er, tells me, there is a mail come in to-day with rs, dated Hague, April the nineteenth, N. S. h say, a design of bringing part of our troops the field, at the latter end of this month, is now ed to a resolution of marching towards the camp at the twentieth of the next. Prince Eugene was returned thither from Amsterdam. He sets out Brussels on Tuesday: the greater number of general officers at the Hague, have orders to go e same time. The squadron at Dunkirk consists ven vessels. There happened the other day, in road of Scheveling, an engagement between a steer of Zeeland and one of Dunkirk. The Dun-ker, carrying thirty-three pieces of cannon, was n and brought into the Texel. It is said, the ier of Monsieur Rouille is returned to him from court of France. Monsieur Vendosme, being reited in the favour of the duchess of Burgundy, command in Flanders.

Mr. Kidney added, that there were letters of the nteenth from Ghent, which give an account that enemy had formed a design to surprise two bat-ons of the allies which lay at Alost; but those alions received advice of their march, and retired Lendermond. Lieutenant-general Wood appeared his occasion at the head of five thousand foot, one thousand horse; upon which, the enemy drew without making any farther attempt.

From my own Apartment.

am sorry I am obliged to trouble the public with uch discourse upon a matter which I at the very mentioned as a trifle, viz. the death of Mr. Par-ge, under whose name there is an almanack come for the year 1709; in one page of which it is serted by the said John Partridge, that he is still ag; and not only so, but that he was also living e time before, and even at the instant when I writ his death. I have in another place, and in a er by itself, sufficiently convinced this man that s dead, and, if he has any shame, I do not doubt by this time he owns it to all his acquaintance; though the legs and arms and whole body of that s may still appear, and perform their animal ctions; yet since, as I have elsewhere observed, art his gone, the man is gone. I am, as I said, cerned that this little matter should make so ch noise; but since I am engaged, I take myself obliged in honour by the help of the well as my skill i as I see occasion, who pretend to b ally deceased. I to mend their m time, print bills of all such who s are good for not number of the de

No. 2.] THURSDAY

There has lain following poem.
useful for familie sidered, and ma gives it, is very b real accident wh ance. A young perately in love quality, but as i habitual self-wil young spark vent without being ad saluted her unt woman else. Be possession; and the support of manners. Upon relief from satiet with that for whi came home, but would stay long did I leave all th he—"Madam, s In a word, this n
ble appearances.
purpose, applies bottle he preten the conjurer.—"
for. The virtue sold it) is such, a scold (which fortune; as it v let her hold thre half hour after y not in humour fo is so ungraceful therefore take it

Miss Molly, a
Had wealth and From morn to ni
Which often lost
Sir John was Sigh'd out the u Possess'd, he the
But his dear Mo
Excess of fondne
Madam lov'd me
From whence so
As, "You're a f Though he an Her voice was s
When she began Then after a fair Supper and friu

To beg her uncle for some fresh supplies, Transported does the strange effects relate,
Her knight's conversation, and her happy state!
"Why, niece," says he—"I pry thee apprehend, The water's water—he thyself thy friend:
Such beauty would the coldest husband warm.
But your provoking tongue undoes the charm:
Be silent and complying.—You'll soon find, Sir John without a medicine will be kind."

St. James's Coffee-house, April 13.

Letters from Venice say, the disappointment of their expectation to see his Danish majesty has very much disquieted the court of Rome. Our latest advices from Germany inform us that the minister Hanover has urged the council at Ratisbone to exert themselves in behalf of the common cause, and take the liberty to say, that the dignity, the virtue, the prudence of his electoral highness, his master, was called to the head of their affairs in vain, if they thought fit to leave him naked of the proper means to make those excellencies useful for the honour and safety of the empire. They write from Berlin of the thirteenth, O. S. that the true design of general Flemming's visit to that court was to insinuate, that it will be for the mutual interest of the king of Prussia and king Augustus to enter into a new alliance; but that the ministers of Prussia are not inclined to his sentiments. We hear from Vienna, that his imperial majesty has expressed great satisfaction in their high mightinesses having communicated to him the whole that has passed in the affair of a peace. Though there have been practices used by the agents of France, in all the courts of Europe, to break the good understanding of the allies, they have had no other effect, but to make all the members concerned in the alliance more doubtful of their safety, from the great offers of the enemy. The emperor is roused by this alarm, and the frontiers of all the French dominions are in danger of being insulted the ensuing campaign. Advices from all parts confirm, that it is impossible for France to find a way to obtain so much credit as to gain any one potentate of the allies, or conceive any hope for safety from other prospects.

From my own Apartment, April 13.

I find it of very great use, now I am setting up for a writer of news, that I am an adept in astrological speculations: by which means, I avoid speaking of things which may offend great persons. But at the same time, I must not prostitute the liberal sciences so far, as not to utter the truth in case which do immediately concern the good of my native country. I must, therefore, contradict what has been so assuredly reported by the news-writers of England, that France is in the most deplorable condition, and that their people die in great multitudes. I will therefore let the world know, that my correspondent by the way of Brussels, informs me upon his honour, that the gentleman who writes the gazette of Paris, and ought to know as well as any man has told him, that ever since the king has been past his sixty-third year, or grand climacteric, there has not died one man of the French nation who was younger than his majesty, except a very few who were taken suddenly near the village of Hockstet in Germany; and some more who were straitened for lodging at a place called Ramilies, and died on the road to Ghent and Bruges. There are also other things given out by the allies, which are shifts below a conquering nation to make use of. Among others it is said there is a general murmuring among the nce, though at the same time, all my that there is so good an understanding that there is not one morsel carried out in the kingdom but what is delivered

THE TATLER.

ATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1709.

Will's Coffee-house, April 14.

g the comedy called the Country Wife, Drury-lane, for the benefit of Mrs. part which gives name to the play was herself. Through the whole action she pretty figure, and exactly entered into the part. Her husband, in the drama, to be one of those debauchees who run ces of the town, and believe when they y can marry and settle at their ease. ledge of the iniquity of the age, makes wife wholly ignorant of it, and place his want of skill to abuse him. The poet ions, where the propriety of the cha- mit of it, insinuates, that there is no st vice, but the contempt of it: and stural ideas of an untainted innocent, adual steps to ruin and destruction of condition run into, without the help ucation to form their conduct. The jealous coxcomb, which arises from his ims, and the aggravation of his pain, ords in which he sees her innocence, pleasant and instructive satire. The former, and the design of it, is a good of the age in which that comedy was hich time, love and wenching were the fe, and the gallant manner of pursuing re best recommendation at court. To to be imputed, that a gentleman of Mr. aracter and sense, condescends to re- sults done to the honour of the bed, reproof; but to have drawn a man of egard to such considerations had been d a poet had at that time discovered cknowing the manners of the court he rtuous character in his fine gentleman, how his ignorance by drawing a vicious the present audience. Mrs. Bignell ery happily, and had a certain grace in which gave us hopes of seeing her a yer, and in some parts, supply our loss ruggen. I cannot be of the same y friends and fellow-labourers, the Manners, in their severity towards ust allow, that a good play, acted before dience, must raise very proper incitements iour, and be the most quick and most thod of giving young people a turn of eeding. But as I have set up for a ian, I resolve to be a faithful one; and e this public occasion to admonish a nan, who came flustering into the box d let him know how much all his friends ntenance for him. The women sat in ing something that should shock their all the gentlemen in as much pain out to the ladies, and perhaps resentment nity which was offered in coming into in so disrespectful a manner. Wine y nothing that was rude, therefore he is n condition he never will hazard his re in this kind. As I just now hinted, f of the "Society for Reformation of Manners." We have lower the family of Bickerstaff, and exposing the abandoned to have notices from all take upon me only indec negligences, in such as shout After this declaration, if a giggle at church, or a great play, either shall be sure to paper; for, merely as a we these enormities.

After the play, we nat house, in hopes of meeting entertainment among the where there is a dearth at derful there should be so fo become merely mechanic, selves great that way by as as you may be a joiner or a good instance of this in now offered for sale, to wit bank: A Sequel to the adv occasioned by the glorious arms under the command of the last year in Flanders. stand that the author, fin take his advice, troubles him but has met with one Va arras, and makes very good fore, in order to celebrate claps together all that ca makes hangings:

Then artist, who does na In silk and gold, and see Dost figur'd arras anima Spin a bright story, or a By mingling threads, ca Delineate triumphs, or d

Well, what shall this we how great an hero the poe a very good horse:

Champing his foam, and Arch his high neck, and

Now as to the intrepidi constant application of the take that upon yourself: y him you employ raise him if he does it not, let him an

Let fame and victory in Hover with balanc'd win Above his head, &c.

A whole poem of this an ensuing campaign, as an canvass of a piece of tapes while the under parts are the adviser copies after direct. This method sh young beginners; for the capacities, that by the help receipt for a poem. A you the jig of the thing is, as can be said in his way wh your worthy. Waller an the expedience of 'Advice has transferred the work, Poets; that is to say, to calls them. Well, that therefore he directs his ge have a new set of hang

TUESDAY, APRIL 18, 1709.

'It is usual with persons who mount the stage for the cure or information of the crowd about them, to make solemn professions of their being wholly disinterested in the pains they take for the public good. At the same time, those very men who make harangues in plush doublets, and extol their own abilities to generous inclinations, tear their lungs in venduing drug, and show no act of bounty, except it be, that they lower a demand of a crown to six, nay, to a penny. We have a contempt for such paltry benefactors, and have therefore, all along informed the public, that we intend to give them our advices for our own sakes, and are labouring to make our labours come to some price in money, for our more convenient support in the service of the public. It is certain, that many other schemes have been proposed to me; as a friend offered to show me a treatise he had writ, which he called "The whole Art of Life; or, The Introduction to great Men, illustrate in a Pack of Cards." But, being a novice at a manner of play, I declined the offer. Another advised me, for want of money, to set up my coach, and practise physic; but, having been bred a scholar, I feared I should not succeed that way neither, therefore, resolved to go on in my present project. But you are to understand that I shall not pretend to raise a credit to this work upon the weight of a politic news only, but, as my Latin sentence in the title-page informs you, shall take any thing that offers for the subject of my discourse. Thus, new persons as well as new things, are to come under my consideration: as, when a toast or wit is first pronounced such, you shall have the freshest advice of their performance, from me, with a description of the beauty of manners, and the wit's style: as also, in what places they are advanced. For this town is new and good-natured enough to raise one without depressing another. But it is my design to avoid saying anything of any person which ought justly to displease; but shall endeavour, by the variety of the matter and style, to give entertainment for men of pleasure without offence to those of business.'

White's Chocolate-house, April 18.

All hearts at present pant for two ladies only, who have for some time engrossed the dominion of the town. They are, indeed, both exceeding charming, but differ very much in their excellencies. The beauty of Clarissa is soft, that of Chloe piercing. When you look at Clarissa, you see the most exact harmony of feature, complexion, and shape; you find in Chloe nothing extraordinary in any one of those particulars, but the whole woman irresistible: Clarissa looks languishing; Chloe killing: Clarissa never fails of gaining admiration; Chloe of moving desire. The gazers at Clarissa are at first unconcerned, as if they were observing a fine picture. They who behold Chloe, at the first glance discover transport, as if they met their dearest friend. These different perfections are suitably represented by the last great painter Italy has sent us, Mr. Jervas. Clarissa is by that skilful hand placed in a manner that looks artless, and innocent of the torments she gives; Chloe is drawn with a liveliness that shows she is conscious of, but not affected with, her perfections. Clarissa is a shepherdess; Chloe a country girl. I must own the design of Chloe's picture shows, to me, great mastery in the painter: for nothing could be better imagined than the dress he has given her of a straw hat and a ribbon, to represent that sort of beauty

THE TATLER.

enters the heart with a certain familiarity, and it into a belief that it has received a lover as an object of love. The force of their different is seen also in the effects it makes on their

The admirers of Chloe are eternally gay and rased; those of Clarissa, melancholy and ful. And as this passion always changes the man into a quite different creature from what before, the love of Chloe makes coxcombs; Clarissa, madmen. There were of each kind in this room. Here was one that whistles, sings, and cuts capers, for love of Chloe. He has just now writ three lines to Clarissa, taken a turn in the garden, then came back, then tore his fragment, then called for some te, then went away without it.

There is so many admirers in the house at present there is too much noise to proceed in my narrative that the progress of the loves of Clarissa and together with the bottles that are drunk each the one, and the many sighs which are uttered songs written on the other, must be our on future occasions.

Will's Coffee-house, April 18.

Persons from the Haymarket inform us, that on the night last the Opera of Pyrrhus and Demetrius was performed with great applause. This intelligence is not very acceptable to us friends of the stage; for the stage being an entertainment of the mind and all our faculties, this way of being pleased is a suspension of them for three hours together, giving up to the shallow satisfaction of the ears only, seems to arise rather from the weakness of our understanding, than an improvement of our diversions. That the understanding has in the pleasure is evident, from what these persons very positively assert; to wit, that a great performance was done in Italian; and a little fell into fits in the gallery, at seeing, not the scene and place, but languages and nations confused in the most incorrigible manner. His spleen is lately moved on this occasion that he is going to publish a treatise against operas, which, he thinks, is ready inclined us to thoughts of peace, and, if denied, must infallibly dispirit us from carrying on

He has communicated his scheme to the company, and declared in what manner things of the kind were first introduced. He has, upon this subject, considered the nature of sounds in general; made a very elaborate digression upon the London theatre wherein he has shown, from reason and philosophy why oysters are cried, card-matches sung, turnips and all other vegetables neither cried, or said, but sold, with an accent and tone natural to man nor beast. This piece seems taken from the model of that excellent discourse of Manly the school-mistress, concerning sam-

Advices from the upper end of Piccadilly, say that the fair is utterly abolished; and we hear Mr. B. has removed his ingenious company of mechanics to Greenwich. But other letters from Deptford, the company is only making thither, and not yet settled; but that several heathen gods and goddesses which are to descend in machines, landed at King's-head Stairs last Saturday. Venus and Mars went on foot from thence to Greenwich; Mars took ink in the town, and broke his landlord's head, which he sat in the stocks the whole evening; but the watchman giving security that he should do no mischief this ensuing summer, he was set at liberty. The melancholy part of all was, that Diana was taken in the act of committing by justice, put a stop to the dispute. But there goes Patient Grizzel next

It is credibly reported with Mr. Penkethman that audience as soon as days run in Drury-lane

St. James's

They write from St. N. S. that the grand was so far from entering into his mind, that he had he exhorted the Parliament declaring that this was for asserting their liberty

Letters from the House of N. S. say, they have reported that his election was fixed to the imperial throne put himself at the head except more effectual vigorously against the Upon this representation to several regiments despatched express the empire to desire an

These letters added Hague on the twenty enemy having made fifteen hundred horse soldier behind him, of Alost; the allies, out a strong body engaged the enemy at them prisoners, obliging making any farther in the morning, a fleet Scotland, were attacked the entrance of the advice of the event; that a Dutch man-of-war convoy to the said eighteen of the mercantile service of the States of their respective berg and Prussia are a few days; and the a battalion of Holstein are advancing thither twenty-first instant conference near Wob but the matter which public. His grace Prince Eugene cont

From my own

I have lately been and have just now received a packet from with an account that lets me understand greater prosperity, hands, since the day These letters immediately entered into a firm men of the nation, and the encouragement Those persons at the selves of such well of the people. liberations of n for his sin- of mankind, as dissipated world are the ness, and the next member all the public all the lan- is held in the ere honesty, art unsullied ne oppressed, ined himself resolution, ; famous for d singularly ferred a man eable to his h particular most refined of life, joined ss; a man conversation, negotiations, also of this ment of Pa- tions of the This minister ustrious and erties of the abvert them. are men of es the people st of a war, secure peace

g stationers, r the future,

709.

April 20.

hout a tear, ns here?

ught

lamentation, n of any de- the young e were none passion. So urses said a retenders to age, by say- e last, spoke d is not only s lost all his long a maid a with that enly voice? cies in one murder the s, and not a such is the t for honest ould hardly have a pattern left of the ancient worthies that and indeed, he has but very little encouragement persevere; but he has a devotion, rather than for his mistress, and says,

'Only tell her that I love, Leave the rest to her and fate;
Some kind planet from above May, perhaps, her passion move; Lovers on their stars must wait.'

But the stars I am so intimately acquainted that I can assure him he will never have her; for, you believe it? though Cynthia has wit, good fortune, and his very being depends upon her, termagant for whom he sighs is in love with a fellow who stares in the glass all the time he is with and lets her plainly see, she may possibly be rival, but never his mistress. Yet Cynthia, the unhappy man, whom I mentioned in my first narrative, pleases himself with a vain imagination, with the language of his eyes, now he has found she is, he shall conquer her, though her eyes are tent upon one who looks from her; which is odd with the sex. It is certainly a mistake in ancients, to draw the little gentleman LOVE as a bl boy; for his real character is, a little thief squints; for ask Mrs. Meddle, who is a confident spy upon all the passions in town, and she will you that the whole is a game of cross purposes. A lover is generally pursuing one who is in pursuit another, and running from one that desires to m him. Nay, the nature of this passion is so just represented in a squinting little thief (who is also in a double action), that do but observe Clarissa in time you see her, and you will find, when her e have made their soft tour round the company, i makes no stay on him they say she is to marry, i rests two seconds of a minute on Wildair, who n ther looks nor thinks on her or any woman el However, Cynthia had a bow from her the other d upon which he is very much come to himself; and heard him send his man of an errand yesterday, wit out any manner of hesitation; a quarter of an he after which he reckoned twenty, remembered he was sup with a friend, and went exactly to his appoi ment. I sent to know how he did this morning; a I find that he hath not forgot that he spoke to yesterday.

Will's Coffee-house, April 20.

This week being sacred to holy things, and public diversions allowed, there has been taken notice of, even here, a little treatise, called, 'A Project for the Advancement of Religion: dedicated to the Countess of Berkeley;' the title was so uncommon and promised so peculiar a way of thinking, that every man here has read it, and as many as have done so, have approved it. It is written with the spirit of one who has seen the world enough to undervalue it with good-breeding. The author must certainly be a man of wisdom as well as piety, and have spent much time in the exercise of both. The real causes of the decay of the interest of religion are set forth in a clear and lively manner without unseasonable passions; and the whole air of the book, as to the language, the sentiments, and the reasonings, show it was written by one whose virtue sits easy above him, and to whom vice is thoroughly contemptible. It was said by one of this company, alluding to the knowledge of the world the author seems to have: 'The man writes much like a gentleman, and goes heaven with a very good wien.'

St. James's Coffeehouse, April 20.

Letters from Italy say, that the Marquis de Prie, upon the receipt of an express from the court of Vienna, went immediately to the palace of cardinal Paulucci, minister of state to his holiness, and demanded, in the name of his imperial majesty, that king Charles should forthwith be acknowledged king of Spain, by a solemn act of the congregation of cardinals, appointed for that purpose: he declared, at the same time, that if the least hesitation were made in this most important article of the late treaty, he should not only be obliged to leave Rome himself, but also transmit his master's orders to the imperial troops to face about, and return into the ecclesiastical dominions. When the cardinal reported this message to the pope, his holiness was struck with so sensible an affliction, that he burst into tears; his sorrow was aggravated by letters which, immediately after, arrived from the court of Madrid, wherein his nuncio acquainted him, that, upon the news of his accommodation with the emperor, he had received a message to forbear coming to court; and the people were so highly provoked, that they could hardly be restrained from insulting his palace. These letters add, that the king of Denmark was gone from Florence to Pisa, and from Pisa to Leghorn, where the governor paid his majesty all imaginable honours. The king designed to go from thence to Lucca, where a magnificent tournament was prepared for his diversion. An English man-of-war, which came from Port Mahon to Leghorn in six days, brought advice, that the fleet, commanded by admiral Whitaker, was safely arrived at Barcelona, with the troops and ammunition which he had taken in at Naples.

General Boneval, governor of Comachio, had summoned the magistrates of all the towns near that place to appear before him, and take an oath of fidelity to his imperial majesty, commanding also the gentry to pay him homage on pain of death and confiscation of goods. Advices from Switzerland inform us, that the bankers of Geneva were utterly ruined by the failure of Mr. Bernard. They add, that the deputies of the Swiss Cantons were returned from Soleure, where they were assembled at the instance of the French ambassador, but were very much dissatisfied with the reception they had from that minister. It is true, he omitted no civilities or expressions of friendship from his master, but he took no notice of their pensions and arrears: what further provoked their indignation was, that, instead of twenty-five pistoles, formerly allowed to each member, for their charge in coming to the diet, he had presented them with six only. They write from Dresden, that king Augustus was still busy in recruiting his cavalry, and that the Danish troops that lately served in Hungary had orders to be in Saxony by the middle of May; and that his majesty of Denmark was expected at Dresden in the beginning of that month. King Augustus makes great preparations for his reception, and has appointed sixty coaches, each drawn by six horses, for that purpose: the interview of these princes affords great matter for speculation. Letters from Paris, of the twenty-second of this month say, that Marshal Harcourt and the Duke of Berwick were preparing to go into Alsace and Dauphiné, but that their troops were in want of all manner of necessities. The court of France had received advices from Madrid, that on the seventh of this month, the states of Spain, had, with much magnificence, acknowledged the prince of Asturias presumptive heir to the crown. This was performed at Buen-Retiro; the deputies took the oath cardinal Prie was signifi-

cil, to depart and that a duct him to

Letters from stant, infor-
the next day ness for open-grand pens-
Marlborough
Mr. Rouille diately to re-to her majesty important a

From

The nature
I shall always things (let t the time of
have been that I am s Tatler, any and writing anything th be set by me been hit up miration of accept of it I am going know to be deceased m would not h but also an lowest of follows:—

At the sie
the ranks, Pincent, in one Union, centinel; th dispute abo aggravations being the of even to stri revenge wh it without r die to be re whole mont ing; when,
other, they castle, wher and fell; th be trampled Valentine!
mediately re of the Fren brought him abbey of Se head: his carrying off rose up, tea the bleeding for me, who hast died?
by any mea removed wi with tears enmity. W were dresse

ies to him, air.

oble sentions had the to venture ot survive uch an obpeople, to glory may by Sallust) ation that raordinary asion, he ss was neility, for in eir valour, out to pard-d of their

This he r and Cato. discourse
our nation blic affairs enters me,
of Marlbo-on, to con-the fortune ce of forty s of human of a prince,
sat on one e the man
s downfall, such eleva-
exact prutemper, a ur. Those ss, so they o this, her the happy t, that she to lead a

9.

a fine lady, n say and putation of for she is lf-love; or y occasion, t is so like came into taff, I am Italian fant, wherein s in Para-ere is such hat I have sed by that on in two e the same ll Milton's al, in that of himself, ut there is the follow-
when he

While thus I call'd, and stray'd I knew not whith From whence I first drew air, and first beheld This happy light; when answer none return'd, On a green shady bank, profuse of flowers, Pensive I sate me down, there gentle sleep First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd My drowned sense, untroubled, though I thought I then was passing to my former state Insensible, and forthwith to dissolve.

But now I cannot forgive this odious thing, th Dryden, who, in his 'State of Innocence,' has giv my great grandmother Eve the same apprehension annihilation on a very different occasion; as Ada pronounces it of himself, when he was seized with pleasing kind of stupor and deadness, Eve fanci herself falling away, and dissolving in the hurry of rapture. However, the verses are very good, and do not know but what she says may be natural; will read them:

When your kind eyes look'd languishing on mine,
And wreathing arms did soft embraces join;
A doubtful trembling seiz'd me first all o'er, Then wishes, and a warmth unknown before;
What followed was all ecstasy and trance, Immortal pleasures round my swimming eyes did dance,
And speechless joys, in whose sweet tumults tost I thought my breath and my new being lost.

She went on, and said a thousand good things at random, but so strangely mixed, that you would be apt to say, all her wit is mere good luck, and not the effect of reason and judgment. When I made my escape hither, I found a gentleman playing the critic on two other great poets, even Virgil and Homer.
He was observing, that Virgil is more judicious than the other in the epithets he gives his hero. Homer's usual epithet, said he, is Πόδας ὤχους, or Πηδῶν; and his indiscretion has been often rallied by the critics, for mentioning the nimbleness of foot in Achilles, though he describes him standing, sitting, lying down, fighting, eating, drinking, or in any other circumstance, however foreign or repugnant to speed and activity. Virgil's common epithet to Aeneas, is Pius or Pater. I have therefore considered, said he, what passage there is in any of his hero's actions where either of these appellations would have been most proper, to see if I could catch him at the same fault with Homer: and this, I think, is his meeting with Dido in the cave, where Pius Aeneas would have been absurd, and Pater Aeneas a burlesque: the poet, therefore, wisely dropped them both for Dux Trojanus: which he has repeated twice in Juno's speech, and his own narration; for he very well knew, a loose action might be consistent enough with the usual manners of a soldier, though it became neither the chastity of a pious man, nor the gravity of the father of a people.

Grecian Coffee-house, April 22.

While other parts of the town are amused with the present actions, we generally spend the evening at this table in enquiries into antiquity, and think at things news which gives us new knowledge. Thus we are making a very pleasant entertainment to ourselves, in putting the actions of Homer's Iliad into an exact journal.

This poem is introduced by Chryses, king Chryseïs and priest of Apollo, who comes to re-demand his daughter, who had been carried off at the taking of that city, and given to Agamemnon for his art of the booty. The refusal he received enrages Apollo, who, for nine days, showered down darts upon them, which occasioned the pestilence.

The tenth day, Achilles assembled the council, and encourages Chalcas to speak for the surrender of Chryseis, to appease Apollo. Agamemnon and Achilles storm at one another, notwithstanding which, Agamemnon will not release his prisoner, unless he has Briseis in her stead. After long consultations, wherein Agamemnon gives a glorious character of Achilles's valour, he determines to restore Chryseis to her father, and sends two heralds to fetch away Briseis from Achilles, who abandons himself to sorrow and despair. His mother Thetis comes to comfort him under his affliction, and promises to represent his sorrowful lamentation to Jupiter; but he could not attend to it; for, the evening before, he had appointed to divert himself for two days, beyond the seas, with the harmless Ethiopians. It was the twenty-first day after Chryseis's arrival at the camp, that Thetis went very early to demand an audience of Jupiter. The means he used to satisfy her were, to persuade the Greeks to attack the Trojans; that so they might perceive the consequence of contemning Achilles, and the miseries they suffer if he does not head them. The next night he orders Agamemnon, in a dream, to attack them; who is deceived with the hopes of obtaining a victory, and also taking the city, without sharing the honour with Achilles.

On the twenty-second, in the morning, he assembles the council, and having made a feint of raising a siege and retiring, he declares to them his dream; and, together with Nestor and Ulysses, resolves on engagement.

This was the twenty-third day, which is full of accidents, and which continues from almost the beginning of the second canto to the eighth.

The armies being then drawn up in view of one another, Hector brings it about, that Menelaus and Paris, the two persons concerned in the quarrel, should decide it by a single combat, which tending to the advantage of Menelaus, was interrupted by a wardice infused by Minerva: then both armies engage; where the Trojans have the disadvantage; but fighting afterwards animated by Apollo, they repulse the enemy, yet they are once again forced to give ground, and their affairs were retrieved by Hector, who has a single combat with Ajax. The gods threw themselves into the battle: Juno and Minerva took the Grecians' part, and Apollo and Mars, the Trojans': Mars and Venus are both wounded by Diomedes. The truce for burying the slain ended the twenty-third day, after which the Greeks threw up a great trenchment, to secure their navy from danger. Councils are held on both sides. On the morning of the twenty-fourth day, the battle is renewed, but in a very disadvantageous manner to the Greeks, who are beaten back to their entrenchments. Agamemnon, being in despair at this ill success, proposes to the council to quit the enterprise, and retire from Troy. But, by the advice of Nestor, he is persuaded to regain Achilles, by returning Chryseis, and sending him considerable presents. Hereupon Ulysses and Ajax are sent to that hero, who continues inexorable in his anger. Ulysses, at his return, joins himself with Diomedes, and goes in the night to gain intelligence of the enemy: they enter into their very camp, where, finding the centinels asleep, they made great slaughter. Rhesus, who was just then arrived with recruits from Thrace, for the Trojans, was killed in that action. Here ends the tenth canto.

The sequel of the next article from

St. John

We hear from the pope has received a demand of acknowledgment, yet thought fit to say that they are that city, having from a visit made. The pope has his majesty, and curiosities and seventeen volleys taken out of the of the fourteen arrived there, in count, that the surrection, by and that the of marines, and stand to their but that he be his guards, as fend him. Wh diers murmured was generally zines, as the France had all came into Legat squadron was were taking in relief of Alicante. It is said that expedition from Leghorn.

They write should enter in Zinzendorf will the Count de Konsbruch a extraordinary very urgent with forts against H to oblige her tranquillity of

We are also ginable shifts emperor, and tution of Coma majesty should what had forme acknowledge k fused.

They hear a nople, dated that on the two took occasion, the Mussulmen were in the ga

Advices from ers of the coun new jealousies ances lately h Protestants an to divine ser church, as is land; but on curate, havin church, according to by a re-grace the

2.

the Duke of the sub-
was in: it of Alex-that ever enter into examining

It must
s of soul;
ayed by a his is seen histories, by the d.fer, after a d his sol-ly refused aviour in h against e conduct d here we phridding of spirit:
would go
wed him.
; but how he speech him of his r, Bayes's n his pro-
a fur-cap, ney would

I have his was well, the execu-
not leave in events, their fears at if none d go himassured of st forsook y were as e result of d with the m for the t the rest, t they are d them, as t mocking by instance

I have reg man, in st set out ou may be e given for f the siege inconsistent sometimes hours dull;
occasions,
tate or excuse the matter: for I find, by a calculation of my own nativity, that I cannot hold out with any tolerable wit longer than two minutes after twelve o'clock at night, between the eighteenth and nineteenth of the next month: for which space of time you may still expect to hear from me, but no longer; except you will transmit to me the occurrences you meet with relating to your amours, or any other subject within the rules by which I have proposed to work. If any gentleman or lady sends to Isaac Bickerstaff, Esq. at Mr. Morphew's, near Stationers'-hall, by the penny-post, the grief or joy of their soul, what they think fit of the matter shall be related in colours as much to their advantage, as those in which Gervass has drawn the agreeable Chloe. But since, without such assistance, I frankly confess, and am sensible, that I have not a month's wit more, I think I ought, while I am in my sound health and senses, to make my will and testament; which I do in manner and form following:—

Incipimus. I give to the stock-jobbers about the Exchange of London, as a security for the trusts daily reposed in them, all my real estate: which I do hereby vest in the said body of worthy citizens for ever.

Item, Forasmuch as it is very hard to keep land in repair without ready cash, I do, out of my personal estate, bestow the bear-skin, which I have frequently lent to several societies about this town, to supply their necessities; I say, I give also the said bear-skin, as an immediate fund to the said citizens for ever.

Item, I do hereby appoint a certain number of the said citizens to take all the custom-house or customs oaths concerning all goods imported by the whole city, strictly directing, that some select members, and not the whole number of a body corporate, should be preferred.

Item, I forbid all n——s and persons of q——ty to watch bargains near and about the Exchange, to the diminution and wrong of the said stock-jobbers.

Thus far, in as brief and intelligible a manner as any will can appear, until it is explained by the learned. I have disposed of my real and personal estate; but, as I am an adept, I have by birth an equal right to give also an indefeasible title to my endowments and qualifications, which I do in the following manner.

Item, I give my chastity to all virgins who have withstood their market.

Item, I give my courage among all who are ashamed of their distressed friends, all sneakers in assemblies and men who show valour in common conversation.

Item, I give my wit (as rich men give to the rich) among such as think they have enough already. And in case they shall not accept of the legacy, I give it to Bentivolio to defend his works, from time to time, as he shall think fit to publish them.

Item, I bestow my learning upon the honourary members of the Royal Society.

Now for the disposal of this body.

As these eyes must one day cease to gaze on Teraminta, and this heart shall one day pant no more for her indignation: that is to say, since this body must be earth; I shall commit it to the dust in manner suitable to my character. Therefore, as there are those who dispute, whether there is any such person as Isaac Bickerstaff or not; I shall excuse a persons who appear what they really are, from entering to my funeral. But all those who are, in the way of life, personæ, as the Latins have it, person assumed, and who appear what they really are no are hereby invited to that solemnity.

he body shall be carried by six watchmen, who never seen in the day.

Then, The pall shall be held up by the six most pretenders to honesty, wealth, and power, are not possessed of any of them. The two first, a lawyer and a complete justice. The two next, a quack and a projector. The third couple, a treasurer and a small courtier.

To make my funeral (what that solemnity, when to common men, really is in itself) a very farce; since all mourners are mere actors on these occasions, I shall desire those who are professedly such to attend mine. I humbly, therefore, beseech Mrs. to act once more, and be my widow. When I am gone away at the church-porch, I appoint the Sir John Falstaff, and the gay Sir Harry Wild to support her. I desire Mr. Pinkethman to be in the habit of a cardinal, and Mr. Bullock in that of a privy-counsellor. To make up the rest of the appearance, I desire all the ladies from the balcony to weep with Mrs. Barry, as they hope to be widows themselves. I invite all, who have nothing else to do, to accept of gloves and scarves.

Thus, with the great Charles V. of Spain, I leave the glories of this transitory world: yet, at the same time, to show you my indifference, and that my desires are not too much fixed upon any thing, I leave you, I am as willing to stay as to go: therefore I leave it in the choice of my gentle readers, whether I shall hear from them, or they hear no more from me.

White's Chocolate-house, April 25.

Yesterday being a time when you cannot well do without any but humble adventurers; and there being such a thing as low gallantry, as well as low policy, Colonel Ramble and myself went early this morning into the fields, which were strewn with shepherds and shepherdesses, but indeed of a different kind from the simplicity of those of Arcadia. Every one was conscious of more than what the representations of enamoured swains admit of. While we were surveying the crowd around us, we saw at a distance a company coming towards Pancras Church; though there was not much disorder, we thought we saw the figure of a man stuck through with a sword, and at every step ready to fall, if a woman by his side had not supported him; the rest followed him and two. When we came nearer this appearance, we should it be but Monsieur Guardeloop, mine and my friend's French taylor, attended by others, leading with him madam Depingle's maids to the church, in obedience to their espousals. It was his sword tucked so close above his waist, and the circumflex which was of his profession take in their walking, that he seemed to appear at a distance wounded and falling. The morning being rainy, methought the march of his wedding was but too lively a picture of wedded misery. They seemed both to have a month's journey to make the best of their way single; yet both were armed in arm; and when they were in a dirty bog, he was but deeper in the mire, by endeavouring to help out his companion, and yet without helping him. The bridegroom's feathers in his hat all drooped; his shoes had lost a heel. In short, he was in the whole person and dress so extremely soused, that he did not appear one inch or single thread about him married. Pardon me, that the melancholy still dwells upon me so far, as to reduce me to this. However, we attended them to the church, where we stayed to hear the irrevocable words pronounced upon our old servant, and made the best of our way to town. All married persons for four and twenty years, and went to visit where I knew you come from the corner of that order of merit, but without females, who of coquets. It is the mirrors of each other, the best of any man talks the best of himself, understands with you. You are to know each other daily; in town, think it will happen that they of addressing to time in the report he can convince a man of consequence accomplished lady. Thus he tells her at such a pass, with that detachment: on such a day after the week following of his men's only to answer him. They talk to each other approved. Thus he is ever distant, and never farther for ever, but

Will's

This evening there was acted for the first time he is a person of a peculiar talent of excellently well qualified for this play. I can say of bearing a sword, and that with such folly, that one can own hand; so rich a chastisement. Such happiness to play in parts. Therefore the merit of any good thing for Mr. Bullock for Mr. William P. excellent players in circumstances, and a different sort of delicate those grave scenes, tony and Ventidius, just, and the low part much humour and

St. James's

We are advised that in the twentieth instant, twenty new members have not yet taken. Thaurin is returned well re-established. He designs to set in command of the Duke of Savoy. His brother, count and a counsellor to Saadish to the Ukiah

March
to ena
H. on impulsi potenti
s. the me, wat me, and specially to enst line was

St. Mary's
nd. and the man receding
the re expressing deduced ed by the art, and receding
of Anpo's march. Let r, which receding

to enst
the re
receding
by ex who an ers to the, and one, and we ex ters from Denmark
nd. Dan
to enst
the re
and at the, with igned to
the re
receding

to enst
the re
and at the, with igned to
the re
receding

to enst
the re
and at the, with igned to
the re
receding

borough. The States are advised that the army So they were arrived on the frontiers of the Un It was said, as also, that the two regiments of W beholden, and four thousand troops from Willem Lorg, who are to serve in Flanders, are in full m clothing. Letters from Flanders say, that the gr convey of ammunition and provisions, which set from Ghent for Loebe, was safely arrived at Oening We hear from Paris, that the King has ordered th bilities on the coasts of Normandy and Bretagne be in readiness to march; and that the court was i comprehension of a descent to animate the people rise in the midst of their present hardships.

They write from Spain, that the pope's nuncio Madrid the tenth of April, in order to go to Ba yona; that the Marquis de Bay was at Badajoz observe the motions of the Portuguese; and that th count d'Estain, with a body of five thousand m was on the march to attack Gironne. The Duke Aragon has deposed the bishop of Lerida, as bein in violation of the interest of king Charles, and h summoned a convocation at Madrid, composed of th abbots, bishops, and states of that kingdom wherein he hopes they will come to a resolution send for no more bulls to Rome.

No. 8.] THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1709.

White's Club Int-house, April 26.

The play of the London Cuckolds was acted th evening before a suitable audience, who were ex tremely well diverted with that heap of vice and absurdity. The indignation which Eugene, who is a gentleman of a just taste, has upon occasion such humour nature fall so low in its delights, mad him, I thought, exultate upon the mention of th they very agreeably. Of all men living, said he, pity players (who must be men of good understand ing) to be capable of being such, that they ar obliged to repeat and assume proper gestures fi representing things of which their reason must b ashamed, and which they must disdain their audi ence for enjoying. The amendment of these low gra tifications is only to be made by people of condit by encouraging the representation of the noble cha racters drawn by Shakspeare and others, from where it is impossible to return without a strong impressi on of honour and humanity. On these occasions, dis tress is laid before us with all its causes and conse quences, and our resentment placed according to th merit of the persons afflicted. Were dreams of th nature more acceptable to the taste of the raw men who have genius would bend their studies t excel in them. How forcible an effect this would have on our minds, one needs no more than to ob serve how strongly we are touched by mere pic tures. Who can see Le Brun's picture of the hu tor at Paris, without entering into the charac of that fierce gallant man, and being accordingly sensible to an emulation of his constancy and courage.
When he is falling with his wound, the features ar at the same time very terrible and languishing; and there is such a stern faintness diffused through all his look, as is apt to move a kind of horror, as we as pity, in the beholder. This, I say, is an effect produced by mere lights and shades; consider also a representation made by words only, as in an accou nt given by a good writer. Catiline in Sallust makes out such a figure as Porus by Le Brun. It is said of him, Catiline vero longe a suis inter hostium castra repertus est: paululum etiam spirans, ferro et de auge animi, quam virus habuerat, in cultu stineus. 'Cataline was found killed, far from his own men, among the dead bodies of the enemy: he seemed still to breathe, and still retained in his face the same fierceness he had when he was living.' You have in that one sentence a lively impression of his whole life and actions. What I would insinuate was all this is, that if the painter and historian can do thus much in colours and language, what may not be performed by an excellent poet, when the character he draws is presented by the person, the manner, the look, and the motion, of an accomplished player? If a thing painted or related can irresistibly enter our hearts, what may not be brought to pass by seeing generous things performed before our eyes? Agensio ended his discourse, by recommending the proper use of a theatre, as the most agreeable and easy method of making a polite and moral gentry; which would end in rendering the rest of the people regular in their behaviour, and ambitious of laudable undertakings.

St. James's Coffee-house, April 27.

Letters from Naples of the ninth instant, N. S. advise, that Cardinal Grimani had ordered the regiment commanded by General Pate to march towards Trial, in order to embark for Catalonia; whither also a thousand horse are to be transported from Sardinia, besides the troops which come from the Milanese. An English man-of-war has taken two prizes, one a vessel of Malta, the other of Genoa, both laden with goods of the enemy. They write from Florence of the thirteenth, that his Majesty of Denmark had received a courier from the Hague, with an account of some matters relating to the treaty of a peace; upon which he declared, that he thought it necessary to hasten to his own dominions.

Letters from Switzerland inform us, that the effects of the great scarcity of corn in France were felt at Geneva; the magistrates of which city had appointed deputies to treat with the cantons of Bern and Zurich, to leave to buy up such quantities of grain within their territories as should be thought necessary. The protestants of Tockenburgh are still in arms about the consent of St. John, and have declared, that they will not lay them down, until they shall have sufficient security, from the Roman Catholics, of living undisturbed in the exercise of their religion. In the mean time, the deputies of Bern and Tockenburgh have frequent conferences at Zurich with the regency of that canton, to find out methods for quieting these disorders.

Letters from the Hague, of the third of May, advise, that the president Rouille, after his last conference with the deputies of the States, had retired to Bodegrave, five miles distant from Worden, and expected the return of a courier from France on the fourth, with new instructions. It is said, if his answer from the French court shall not prove satisfactory, he will be desired to withdraw out of these parts. In the mean time it is also reported, that his equipage, as an ambassador on this great occasion, is actually on the march towards him. They write from Flanders, that the great convoy of provisions, which set out from Ghent, is safely arrived at Lisle. Those advisers add, that the enemy had assembled near Toury a considerable body of troops, drawn out of the neighbouring garrisons. Their high mightinesses have sent orders to their ministers at Hamburg and Dantzic, to engage the magistrates of those cities to forbid the sale of corn to the French, and to signify to them, that the Dutch merchants will buy as much of that commodity as they can spare, the Hamburghers, Dutch, and on that occasion.

After the manner which town, and vicinities, which together, I call My valet de chambre, reading the gentleman, read Ovid, and of 'Bring Virgil's care of the care the most ex through it a of Elysian sincere lovers pain, compassion misspent the the seats of in my reading taken place of and lulled me awake, to mansions of wafted from waking though cast by a sudden passed with shaked its veil in a cradle. out offering all her harbor tall vessels of pieces on her have I lived in nature should myself that Oh! may that in which the interrupted my attention to the den start, in speechless aff calm, the waves turning their midst of the comely and ending under a sorrow of those article of death seemed to have kept her eyes ten thousand her tenderness greatness of gave her powerment; which looked up with being, rather back his head.

When the last instant kneeling, pressure she could able sorrow, attendants. panies the multitude while n, and all hero. To guardian cents, that an and its the island w give a s exposed

re. While y different oud overhabitants ed, except which the world, with er consort f time had s, when a the hemiboat rowed e adorned ft arm a of victory,
His visage the shield s genius.
the shore,
ne people,
No plea-imations of le to sus-e saw the s messens blessings out of its power or e celestial regard to
out of the atisfaction, voice and irits whis-
ess. The and all naut as soon
low reply, beria, the t such as him the eries and ich forced he back to erstaff for enty-sixth

April 28.

h the Old
n. In the re is excel-ttered de-order and but frets behaviour
the drama scene with he part of seasonable

stead of such agreeable works as these, the town has for half an age been tormented with insects called Easy Writers, whose abilities Mr. Wycherly one day described excellently well in one word: "That," say he, "among these fellows is called Easy Writing, which any one may easily write." Such jaunty scribblers are so justly laughed at for their sonnets on Phill and Chloris, and fantastical descriptions in them that an ingenious kinsman of mine, of the family of the Staffs, Mr. Humphrey Wagstaff by name, has, to avoid their strain, run into a way perfectly new, and described things actually as they happen; he never forms fields, or nymphs, or groves, where they are not; but makes the incidents just as they really appear. For an example of it: I stole out of his manuscript the following lines; they are a description of the morning, but of the morning in town, nay, of the morning at this end of the town, when my kinsman at present lodges:

Now hardly here and there an hackney coach Appearing, show'd the ruddy morn's approach.
Now Betty from her master's bed had flown,
And softly stole to discompose her own.
The slipshod 'prentice, from his master's door, Had par'd the street, and sprinkled round the floor;
Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous airs, Prepared to scrub the entry and the stairs.
The youth with broomy stumps began to trace The kennel-edge, where wheels had worn the place.
The small-coal man was heard with cadence deep, Till drown'd in shriller notes of chimney-sweep.
Duns at his lordship's gates began to meet:
And brick-dust Moll had scream'd thro' half the street:

The turnkey now his flock returning sees, Duly let out o' nights to steal for fees.
The watchful bailiffs take their silent stands;
And school-boys lag with satchels in their hands.

All that I apprehend is, that dear Numps will be angry I have published these lines; not that he has any reason to be ashamed of them, but for fear of those rogues, the bane to all excellent performance the imitators. Therefore, beforehand, I bar all descriptions of the evening; as a medley of verses signifying grey peas are now cried warm; that wenches now begin to amble round the passages of the playhouse: or of noon; as, that fine ladies and great beaux are just yawning out of their beds and windows in Pall-mall, and so forth. I forewarn also all persons from encouraging any draughts after my cousin; and foretell any man who shall go about to imitate him, that he will be very insipid. The family-stock is embarked in this design, and we will not admit of counterfeits. Dr. Anderson and his heirs enjoy his pills; Sir William Read has the cure of eyes, and Monsieur Rosselli only can cure the gout. We pretend to none of these things; but to examine who and who are together, to tell any mistaken man he is not what he believes he is, to distinguish merit, and expose false pretences to it, is liberty our family has by law in them, from an intermarriage with a daughter of Mr. Scoggin, the famous droll of the last century. This right I design to make use of; but will not encroach upon any of the above-mentioned adepts, or any other. At the same time, I shall take all the privileges I may, as an Englishman; and will lay hold of the late act of naturalization to introduce what I shall think fit from France. The use of that law may, I hope, be extended to people the polite world with new characters, as well as the kingdom itself with new subjects.

Therefore an author of that nation, called La Bru-

I shall make bold with on such occasions. The person I read of in that writer was Lord Timon. Timon, says my author, is the most generous of all men; but is so hurried away with that strong impulse of bestowing, that he confers benefits without reflection, and is munificent without laying obligations. For all the unworthy, who receive from him, have so little sense of this noble infirmity, that they look upon themselves rather as partners in a bounty, than partakers of a bounty. The other day, I went into Paris, I met Timon going out on horseback, attended only by one servant. It struck me with a sudden damp, to see a man of so excellent a disposition, and who understood making a figure so well, so much shortened in his retinue. But, passing his house, I saw his great coach break to pieces before his door, and, by a strange enchantment, immediately turned into many different vehicles. The first was a very pretty chariot, into which stepped his secretary's secretary. The second was hung a little lower; into that strutted the fat steward. In an instant followed a chaise, which was entered by the driver. The rest of the body and wheels were changed into go-carts, and run away with the nurses and brats of the rest of the family. It makes these misfortunes in the affairs of Timon the more astonishing is, that he has better understanding than those who cheat him; so that he knows not which more to wonder at, the indifference of the master, or the impudence of the servant.

White's Chocolate-house, April 29.

It is a matter of much speculation among the philosophers and oglers, what it is that can have made so great a change, as has been of late observed, in the behaviour of Pastorella, who never sat still a moment until she was eighteen, which she has now lasted by two months. Her aunt, who has the management of her, has not been always so rigid as she is at present date; but has so good a sense of the weakness of woman, and falsehood of man, that she resorted on all manner of methods to keep Pastorella, in a safe, in safety, against herself and all her admirers. At the same time, the good lady knew by experience, that a gay inclination, curbed too severely, would but run to the greater excesses for that aunt; she therefore intended to watch her, and take some opportunity of engaging her insensibly in her own interests, without the anguish of an admonition.

You are to know, then, that miss, with all her ogling and ogling, had also naturally a strong curiosity in her, and was the greatest eaves-dropper in the house. Parisatis (for so her prudent aunt is called) observed this humour, and retires one day to her closet, into which she knew Pastorella would peep, to listen to know how she was employed. It happened accordingly; and the young lady saw her governante on her knees, and, after a mental struggle, break into these words—'As for the dear creature committed to my care, let her sobriety of carriage, and severity of behaviour, be such as may make the noble Lord who is taken with her beauty, turn his designs to such as are honourable.' Here Parisatis let her niece nestle closer to the key-hole: she goes on: 'Make her the joyful mother of a numerous and wealthy offspring; and let her carriage be such, as may make this noble youth expect the blessings of a happy marriage, from the singularity of her life, in this loose and censorious age.' Miss, having heard enough, sneaks off for fear of discovery, immediately at her glass alters the sitting of her dress, then pulls up her tucker, and forms herself into the exact manner of a sincere convert. She appears in a fine young lady, as her aunt feigns in her choice. The countess of Pastorella's compliance in the manner and good judgment. I scarce remember of the usual peevishness of the young than the young whose good-naturedness off his admonition death; and did not until he came to me will: 'All the rest of my son Edward's life be squandered as for that purpose, generous disdain, deserved from so young man, and become a fine gentleman.

St. James's.

Letters from London dated from Estree of Galway arrived in time to see the quantity of provisions, and subsisting the troops for twenty-five days shall bring into the and twenty-four of Portugal will be. On the day these of Galway received was preparing for troops together excellency resolved Viciosa, to ascend hood, in order to Yesterday, in the camp to Major-general from the Duke of is come in with the May, N. S. which together a body design, as was convey on the march arrived at Menin place, the French attempt.

We hear from the first quality is a France, in order to the treaty of peace.

Letters from London Bernard has made his creditors than These advices Monsieur Torcy (by advising the treaty of partition negotiated with the cession of the crown, bon,) are all three of peace. The two are arrived at

It is confidently honourable the grace the Duke epistles of estaff and er as occa-

TO MR.

asion to go on me the with liberty the allow-of my sex.
h satisfac-
eased with pers in his on this oc-is a trea-
and the orld, upon
th an apcheme for akes this o woman;
operas, to ient to fill ction; she earned, or
e. In the a cuckold;
perfect se-while on ase of his se unrea-
ck to the educes all on of love:
bservation without a
there is brother is ughts and bliging inves to see,
res which insinuate.
any toler-
hopes of akes that y the bye.
behaviour.
ithout an ish; now, ray, Tom,
in perfect
the other
Damn it, stake: he t however is to be f beauty: handsome d at this the arts I his nurse r enemies n opinion, much that he gave me this account of himself: 'I am, madam, perfectunmoved at all that passes among men, and would give myself the fatigue of going among them: but when I do, I always appear the same thing to the whom I converse with. My hours of existence, being awake, are from eleven in the morning, eleven at night; half of which I live to myself, picking my teeth, washing my hands, paring my nails, and looking in the glass. The insignificance of my manners to the rest of the world, makes the laughers call me a Quidnunc, a phrase which neither understand, nor shall ever inquire what it mean by it. The last of me each night is at James's coffee-house, where I converse, yet never into a dispute on any occasion: but leave the undstanding I have, passive of all that goes through: without entering into the business of life. Al-thus, madam, have I arrived by laziness, to what others pretend to by philosophy, a perfect neglect the world.' Sure, if our sex had the liberty of fre-quenting public houses and conversations, we should put these rivals of our faults and follies out of countenance. However, we shall soon have the pleasure of being acquainted with them one way or other: for my brother Isaac designs, for the use of our sex, to give the exact characters of all the chief politicians who frequent any of the coffee-houses from St.

James's to the Exchange; but designs to begin with that cluster of wise-heads, as they are found sitting every evening from the left side of the fire, at the Smyrna, to the door. This will be of great service for us, and I have authority to promise an exact journal of their deliberations; the publication of which, I am to be allowed for pin-money. In the mean time, I cast my eye upon a new book, which gave me more pleasing entertainment, being a sixth part of Miscellaneous Poems published by Jacob Ton-son, which, I find, by my brother's notes upon it, is way inferior to the other volumes. There is, I seems, in this, a collection of the best pastorals that have hitherto appeared in England; but, among them, none superior to that dialogue between Sybil and Dorinda, written by one of my own sex; where all our little weaknesses are laid open in a manner more just, and with truer raillery than ever man yet hit upon.

Only this I now discern,
From the things thou'dst have me learn,
That womankind's peculiar joys From past or present beauties rise.

But, to resume my first design, there cannot be a greater instance of the command of females, than in the prevailing charms of the heroine in the play which was acted this night, called, 'All for Love; or The World well Lost.' The enamoured Anthony resigns glory and power to the force of the attractive Cleopatra, whose charms were the defence of her diadem against a people otherwise invincible. It is so natural for women to talk of themselves, that it is to be hoped, all my own sex at least will pardon me that I could fall into no other discourse. If we have their favour, we give ourselves very little anxiety for the rest of our readers. I believe I see a sentence of Latin in my brother's day-book of wit, which seems applicable on this occasion, and in contempt of the critics,

— Tristitiam et metus Tradam protervis in mare Creticum Portare ventis. Hor. i. Od. xxvi. 2.

No boding fears shall break my rest, Nor anxious cares invade my breast;

Puff them, ye wanton gales, away,
And plunge them in the Cretan sea.

R. Wynne.

But I am interrupted by a packet from Mr. Kidney, at St. James's coffee-house, which I am obliged to peruse in the very style and words which Mr. Kidney uses in his letter.

St. James's Coffee-house, May 2.

We are advised by letters from Bern, dated the first instant, N. S., that the Duke of Berwick arrived at Lyons the twenty-fifth of the last month, and commenced his journey the next day to visit the passes of the mountains and other posts in Dauphiné and Provence. These letters also informed us, that the series of the people in France are heightened to a great degree, that unless a peace be speedily concluded, half of that kingdom would perish for want of food. On the twenty-fourth, the Marshal de Thesse passed through Lyons, in his way to Versailles; and the battalions, which were marching from Alsace to reinforce the army of the Duke of Berwick, passed through that place. Those troops were to be reinforced by six battalions more.

Letters from Naples of the sixteenth of April say, that the Marquis de Prie's son was arrived there, with instructions from his father, to signify to the Emperor the necessity his imperial majesty was under, of desiring an aid from that kingdom, for carrying on the extraordinary expenses of the war. On the fourteenth of the same month they made a review of the Spanish troops in that garrison, and afterwards of the marines; one part of whom will embark with the Duke of Berwick, designed for Barcelona, and the rest are to be sent on board the galleys appointed to convoy provisions to that place.

We hear from Rome, by letters dated the twentieth of April, that the Count de Mellos, envoy from the King of Portugal, had made his public entry into that city with much state and magnificence. The pope has lately held two other consistories, wherein he made a promotion of two cardinals; but the acknowledgment of King Charles is still deferred.

Letters from other parts of Italy advise us, that the Doge of Venice continues dangerously ill; that the Prince de Carignan, having relapsed into a violent fever, died the twenty-third of April, in his eightieth year.

Advices from Vienna of the twenty-seventh of April import, that the Archbishop of Salzburg is dead, who is succeeded by Count Harrach, formerly bishop of Vienna, and for these last three years coadjutor to the said Archbishop; and that Prince Maximilian of Lichtenstein is likewise departed this world at his country seat called Cromaw in Moravia. These advices add, that the Emperor has named Count Zinzendorf, Count Goes, and Monsieur Consbruck, for his plenipotentiaries in an ensuing treaty of peace; and they hear from Hungary, that the imperialists have had several successful skirmishes with the malcontents.

Letters from Paris, dated May the sixth, say that the Marshal de Thesse arrived there on the twentieth of the last month, and that the Chevalier de Mail was sent thither by Don Pedro Ronquillo with a flag of truce, that the confederate squadron appeared before the castle on the seventeenth; and, having for some time cannonaded the city, endeavoured to land some troops for the relief of the castle; but General Stanhope, finding the passes well guarded, and the enterprise dangerous, demanded to capitulate for the relief which being granted him, the garrison, consisting of six hundred men, laid down their arms and received on board the Spanish fleet. These French and Swiss troops arrived a few days; and were ready to set out for the assistance of the Duke de Bezon for the relief of the castle.

The same advices say, that the price of provisions is sixpence a pot, which is not enough, even at present, for the people, to live in despair; that the Duke of Berwick, and, having passed through St. Germain, passed through the king's guards, and the mutineers were put to death; but four battalions pronounced that they expected to answer for their comrades. All the troops were thus lost among the show of authority, and saw all their imperfections presented to the people, who had obtained the truth, that the Dauphin went to the people, who upon the general calamity of the whole people, were daily Edicts are daily published, and papers, with as publicly the words were dropped, that he wants a Ravillion, this universal demand, which, it is feared, will come from Bordeaux, and the peasants are going into that city, without redress.

We are advised, that the tenth instant, the Duke of Torcy arrived by which he called upon Monsieur Rouille, he was known. The Duke of Torcy to Monsieur He made; but the Duke said, he would not do some of their business, would enter into his grace the Duke's ministers of the peace, expected there this is said, that Monsieur Pajot, director of the three persons known; but it is an ambassador from the states have provinces, desired to receive the property of France.

In the staff has received N. B. Under the subsequent communicated, ley, Esq., or No. 11.

F.
May 3.

he informs roic poem, d has only afflicted to t to someced in the sed, that I er genius n mine, I are a dew nothing bears it
his friends,
enemies;

he bow'd,

kind,

l;

hoan,

y

way,

are;

lit,

night;

bright,

sight)

ght;

golden urns,

et.'

et take the n a little

Phœbus,

Arail and

oes. But,

for which he pleased tes upon,

, and puts

e mortals

d or bad, lders; all

e so much asion, any st insigni-es of men.

vait till he his exit.

e spirits it

tion of it.

But it is to be supposed, that from this place you may expect an account of such a thing as a new play is not to be omitted. That acted this night is the newest that ever was writ. The author is my ingenious friend Mr. Thomas Durfey. This drama, called, 'The Modern Prophets,' and is a most answerable satire against the late spirit of enthusiasm. The writer had by long experience observed that, in company, very grave discourses had been followed by bawdry; and therefore has turned the humour the way with great success, and taken from his auditors all manner of superstition, by the agitations of pretence. Mrs. Bignell, whom he has, with great subtlety, made a lay-sister, as well as a prophetess; by which means she carries on the affairs of both worlds with great success. My friend designs to go on with another work against winter, which he intends to call, 'The Modern Poets,' a people no less mistaken in their opinions of being inspired, than the other. In order to this, he has by him seven songs, besides many allusions and biginities, which cannot be mistaken for anything but what he means them. Mr. Durfey generally writes state-plays, and is wonderfully useful to the world in such representations. This method is the same that was used by the old Athenians, to laugh out of countenance, or promote, opinions among the people. My friend has therefore, against this play is acted for his own benefit, made two dances, which may be a source of an universal benefit. In the first, he has represented absolute power in the person of a tall man with a hat and feather, who gives his first minister that stands just before him, a huge kick; the minister gives the kick to the next before; and so to the end of the stage. In this moral and practical jest you are made to understand, that there is, in an absolute government, no gratification but giving the kick you receive from one above you to one below you. This is performed to a grave and melancholy air; but on a sudden the tune moves quicker, and the whole company fall into a circle, and take hands and then, at a certain sharp note, they move round and kick as kick can. This latter performance makes to be the representation of a free state; where if you all mind your steps, you may go round and round very jollily, with a motion pleasant to yourselves and those you dance with; nay, if you please yourselves out, at the worst, you only kick and are kicked, like friends and equals.

From my own Apartment, May 4.

Of all the vanities under the sun, I confess that of being proud of one's birth is the greatest. At the same time, since, in this unreasonable age, the force of prevailing custom, things in which we have no hand are imputed to them; and that I am used by some people, as if Isaac Bickerstaff, though I write myself Esquire, was nobody; to set the world right in that particular, I shall give you a genealogy, as a kinsman of ours has sent it me from the herald's office. It is certain, and observed by the wisest writers, that there are women who are not nicely chaste, and men not severely honest, in all families; therefore let those who may be apt to raise aspersions upon ours, please to give us as impartial an account of their own, and we shall be satisfied. The business of heralds is a matter of great nicety, that to avoid mistakes, I shall give you my cousin's letter verbatim, without altering a syllable.

DEAR COUSIN,

Since you have been pleased to make yourself so famous of late by your ingenious writings, and some by your learned predictions; since Par-immortal memory, is dead and gone, who, he was, could not understand his own philomathical as he was, could not read tiny; since the Pope, the King of France, part of his court, are either literally or illy defunct; since, I say, these things d by any one but yourself) have come to o surprising a manner; it is with no small e the original of the Staffian race so little ie world as it is at this time; for which ou have employed your studies in astro-he occult sciences, so I, my mother being man, dedicated mine to genealogy, part it of our own family, which, for its an-number, may challenge any in Great he Staffs are originally of Staffordshire, its name from them: the first that I find s was one Jacobstaff, a famous and re-nomer, who, by Dorothy his wife had sons; viz. Bickerstaff, Longstaff, Wag-erstaff, Whitestaff, Falstaff, and Tipstaff. a younger brother, who was twice married, sons; viz. Distaff, Pikestaff, Mopstaff, and Raggedstaff. As for the branch e you spring, I shall say very little of it, is the chief of the Staffs, and called Bic-asi, Biggerstaff; as much as to say, the or Staff of Staffs; and that it has applied tronomy with great success, after the ur aforesaid forefather. The descendants taff, the second son, were a rakish disorpeople, and rambled from one place to il, in the time of Harry the Second, they ent, and were called Long-tails, from the hich were sent them as a punishment for of Thomas a-Becket, as the legends say. lways been sought after by the ladies; it be to show their aversion to popery, e to miracles, I cannot say. The Wag-nerry thoughtless sort of people, who have opinionated of their own wit; they have nselves mostly to poetry. This is the ous branch of our family, and the poorest. taffs are most of them prize-fighters or s; there have been so many of them y, that there are very few of that branch y left. The Whitestaffs are all courtiers, d very considerable places. There have of them of that strength and dexterity, ndred of the ablest men in the kingdom tugged in vain to pull a staff out of their e Falstaffs are strangely given to whoring g; there are abundance of them in and on. One thing is very remarkable of this that is, there are just as many women as There was a wicked stick of wood of this rry the Fourth's time, one Sir John Falor Tipstaff, the youngest son, he was an w; but his sons, and his sons' sons, have been the veriest rogues living; it is this nch that has stocked the nation with that awyers, attorneys, serjeants, and bailiffs, the nation is over-run. Tipstaff, being a used to cure the king's-evil; but his endants are so far from having that heal-that, by a touch upon the shoulder, they such an ill habit of body, that he can abroad afterwards. This is all I know of Jacobstaff; his younger brother Isaac-old you before, had five sons, and was ce; his first wife was a Staff (for they did not stand upon false whom he had one son, w a schoolmaster and well himself Distaff or Twice so he put his children ou have ever since been es linen manufactures, exc alogist. Pikestaff, the renter, was a man of bus fellow, and withal so pla Most of this family are a gedstaff was an unluck cloaths in getting birds' ing with a tame bear his in love with one of his help her to clean the chimney-sweeper. The are naturally as civil peop but alas! if they once ge down all before them.

his friends, and went stro Pipestaff was a wine-co unlawful issue of Longst

N. B. The Canes, the Wands, the Devil upon that goes by the name of relations.

I am,
 Dear

From the Herald's Office
 St. James's Court

As political news is n which we treat, we are so for that art of cookery mongers so much excel cellent and inimitable m time for your taste the you the day before, in c pickles from Holland.
 nothing to say to you f hope still to give you from ourselves: the wor cation, being capable of according to the laudab Holland; but, without fa have not mentioned in ou

Letters from Hanover month say, that the Prin there on the fifteenth, second of this month, i Flanders, where he ma Those advices add, that hereditary governor of F twenty-sixth of the last beauteous Princess of He magnificence suitable to

Letters from Paris sa jesty retired to Marley o our last advices from Spa of Asturias had made h in great splendour. The Don Joseph Hartado de Terra Firma de Veragua, nama in America. The mandated by the Marquis by six battalions of Spa ters from Lisbon advise, Portugal was at Elvas o last month, and would d ay at Ba-

Grace the

, and em-

s declared

om of his stories of

y privately

ny-post to

Morphew,

May 5th.

age-coach,

not, to set s; but in-have little h what is apacity for an elegant ish nation

ise in our fe, in pro-

wer. In-will find pleasure:

kards call

hanterers,

sets more,

en of wit.

ot of town and must ep him in

To day I are, which

as I could

are Pip,

at cards;

nd who is

Acorn, an meaning;

town.

N.

what! take n voweled

t does he y; do not

l bite you

sed curs—

g is? nay,

one would

en of wit,

be secure

Acorn, that have taken

r glorious sure!

Trim. Nay, he has bit you fairly enough; that is certain.

Ac. Pox! I do not feel it—How? where?

[Exeunt Pip and Trimmer laughing.]

Ac. Ho! Mr. Friendly, your most humble servant; you heard what passed between those fine gentlemen and me. Pip complained to me, that I had been voweled; and they tell me I am bit.

Friend. You are to understand, sir, that simplicity of behaviour, which is the perfection of good breeding and good sense, is utterly lost in the world; as in the room of it there are started a thousand little inventions, which men, barren of better things, take up in the place of it. Thus, for every character of conversation that used to please, there is an imposture put upon you. Him, whom we allowed, formerly for a certain pleasant subtilty, and natural way of giving you an unexpected hit, called a droll, is now mimicked by a biter, who is a dull fellow, that tells you a lie with a grave face, and laughs at you for knowing him no better than to believe him. Instead of that sort of companion who could rally you, and keep his countenance, until he made you fall into some little inconsistency of behaviour, at which you yourself could laugh with him, you have the sneerer who will keep you company from morning to night to gather your follies of the day (which, perhaps, you commit out of confidence in him) and expose you in the evening to all the scorers in town. For you man of sense and free spirit, whose set of thoughts were built upon learning, reason, and experience, you have now an impudent creature made up of vice only, who supports his ignorance by his courage, and want of learning by contempt of it.

Ac. Dear Sir, hold: what you have told me already of this change in conversation is too miserable to be heard with any delight; but, methinks, as these new creatures appear in the world, it might give an excellent field to writers for the stage, to divert us with the representation of them there.

Friend. No, no; as you say, there might be some hopes of redress of these grievances, if there were proper care taken of the theatre; but the history is that is yet more lamentable than that of the decay of conversation I gave you.

Ac. Pray, Sir, a little: I have not been in town these six years, until within this fortnight.

Friend. It is now some time since several revolutions in the gay world had made the empire of the stage subject to very fatal convulsions, which were too dangerous to be cured by the skill of little king Oberon who then sat in the throne of it. The lastness of this Prince threw him upon the choice of a person who was fit to spend his life in contentions, as able and profound attorney, to whom he mortgaged his whole empire. This Divito is the most skilful of all politicians; he has a perfect art in being unintelligible in discourse, and uncomeatable in business. But he, having no understanding in this polite way, brought in upon us, to get in his money, ladder danciers, jugglers, and mountebanks, to strut in the place of Shakspeare's heroes, and Jonson's humorists. When the seat of wit was thus mortgaged without equity of redemption, an architect arose, who has built the muse a new palace, but secured her no revenue; so that, instead of action there, we have been put off by song and dance. This latter help of sound has also begun to fail for want of voices; therefore the palace has since been put into the hands of a surgeon, who cuts any foreign fellow into a eunuch, and passes him upon us for a singer of Italy.

Ac. I will go out of town to-morrow.

Friend. Things are come to this pass; and yet the world will not understand, that the theatre has much the same effect on the manners of the age, as the bank on the credit of the nation. Wit and spirit, humour and good sense, can never be revived, but under the government of those who are judges of such talents; who know, that whatever is put in their stead, is but a short and trifling expedient, to support the appearance of them for a season. It is possible, a peace will give leisure to put these matters under new regulations, but, at present, all the assistance we can see towards our recovery is as far from giving us help, as a poultice is from performing what can be done only by the grand elixir.

Will's Coffee-house, May 6.

According to our late design in the applauded verses on the morning, which you lately had from hence, we proceed to improve that just intention, and present you with other labours, made proper to the place in which they were written. The following poem comes from Copenhagen, and is as fine a winter-piece as we have ever had from any of the schools of the most learned painters. Such images as these give us a new pleasure in our sight, and fix upon our minds traces of reflection which accompany us whenever the like objects occur. In short, excellent poetry and description dwell upon us so agreeably, that all the readers of them are made to think, if not write, like men of wit. But it would be injury to detain you longer from this excellent performance, which is addressed to the Earl of Dorset, by Mr. Philips, the author of several choice poems in Mr. Tonson's new Miscellany.

Copenhagen, March 9, 1709.

From frozen climes, and endless tracts of snow, From streams that northern winds forbid to flow, What present shall the muse to Dorset bring,
Or how, so near the pole, attempt to sing?
The hoary winter here conceals from sight All pleasing objects that to verse invite.
The hills and dales, and the delightful woods,
The flow'ry plains, and silver-streaming floods, By snow disguis'd, in bright confusion lie,
And with one dazzling waste fatigue the eye.

No gentle-breathing breeze prepares the spring, No birds within the desert region sing:
The ships unmov'd, the boisterous winds defy, While rattling chariots o'er the ocean fly.
The vast leviathan wants room to play,
And spout his waters in the face of day,
The starving wolves along the main sea prowl, And to the moon in icy valleys howl.
For many a shiny league the level main Here spreads itself into a glassy plain:
There solid billows of enormous size, Alps of green ice, in wild disorder rise.

And yet but lately I have seen, ev'n here,
The winter in a lovely dress appear.
Ere yet the clouds let fall the treasur'd snow, Or winds began thro' hazy skies to blow, At evening a keen eastern breeze arose;
And the descending rain unsully'd froze.
Soon as the silent shades of night withdrew,
The ruddy morn disclos'd at once to view The face of nature in a rich disguise, And brighten'd ev'ry object to my eyes:
For every shrub, and every blade of grass,
And every pointed thorn, seem'd wrought in glass, In pearls and rubies rich the hawthorn's show, While thro' the ice the crimson berries glow.

The th Seem
The st
Sees c
The sp
Gaz'd
The fr
That w
Who
The br
The cr
And in
Or, if a
And by
The tra
And jo

Like
Thro' f While
And ai
His wa
And wh
The tra
And wo
A tedio
And as

There h but the m gives us g ances, I s
I know; a den, in the circumstar my knowle

When
A watch
Till, gro
And elb
The plac
It moves
Till, swe
The grea
When fr
And pus
Then do
And sink

No. 13.]

Much hu into a mood
for which r Lincoln's I two, I sat d of these pla
sat a venera affable air—a very great me out.' 'the honour he, 'is wh you, I have without bei had any lit affair, you an enemy; w world is su though I m a good

 ns. In nage-
 and ma-ge e take are lent go-
 The quaaint
 e. The
 and
 and hat ven-
 and ink
 g ne rec-
 of ve will
 I
 t ver
 go-
 me
 g ad
 I
 w en-
 to de
 on a
 th-
 a
 o
 t
 is est
 of
 the ery ack ce, said ous 4 for ut
 and
 ing
 he ery one
 a sol-
 m ost
 in
 I
 rior
 for
 and then of her conduct in her behaviour, and such a people as this!—Pastorale had with him the assurance of being a foolproof, but what was that towards his society? To me only in present, is not to be surprised. He afterwards spoke so much against Mrs. Dimes for her, Mrs. Prim's mouth, Mrs.

Dimes's teeth, and Mrs. Ed's cheeks, that she was vexed that she was in; for, it is always the middle class that a lady takes all you detract from the rest of her sex to be right to her. In a word, they were so far, that I was dismissed, and she was meaner for that evening nine months, from the sixth of April, by a very remarkable token. The next as I said I went to see a common sweeper; never was a sweeper so glorified as my self, when I came five feet down, his being half of it was worn out, and with more expletives, that had nothing to do with any other parts of the texture; therefore, when he stood for his cloths in a morning, he would say, "John does not answer." "What a piece of work is there! What the devil, and not me, John be a very dog as you are!" I know no way to beget it by writing down all he said one morning he was dressing, and having it before him on the table when he came to pick his teeth. The last replied I was like of what he said for half an hour before, "What, a pox rot me! where is the wax and the little armmen, damn them, I warrant the meat at the house already! sounds, and confound them!" When he came to the glass, he takes up his eye. "It is this fellow is worse than I—what, do he was with pen and ink!" But, receding on, betrayed them to be his own words. The strange fact is, and an effect upon him, that he grew impatient, and was, and is leaning to speak with a tone, which makes him extremely short in his answers. As I observed before, a common sweeper has a keen wit that any idea on the sweeper side can give my word has yet mighty little to say, and to be substituted to me other vehicle of names to make up the defect of his usual expletives. When I began, he made use of "Odish dikings! Oh me, an more straggling!" and so forth; which gave me an idea of a wry. So I went to the next I find you the most. When we first take our place about the table, the prices of the potteries are in the market. In his, I found in one place to be of thinking, but strong passion, violent and a continual series of different changes, had to process. There appeared no middle condition between the pines, or the misery of a man's condition states. I was with him no less than a day, which was yesterday. In the evening, we were worth four thousand pounds more; we were arrived at six thousand; half an hour more we were reduced to one thousand; and for the week, we were down to two hundred; at five thousand at six, at ten, at seven, to one guinea, at eight, to nothing. This morning he became the owner of the mud who cleans his shoes; it is now pawning in Linch's Inn-Yield, and begs for nothing and ounces until he has made this money, and then he returns to Wlin's in the next morning in town.

This is ended our first discourse; and it is hoped I shall forgive me that I have picked so little out of my companion at our first interview. In the next discourse, he may tell me more pleasing incidents.
 For, though he is a familiar, he is not an evil spirit.

St. James's Coffee-house, May 9.

We hear from the Hague, of the fourteenth instant, N. S. that Monsieur de Torcy hath had frequent conferences with the grand pensioner, and the other ministers who were heretofore commissioned to treat with Monsieur Rouille. The preliminaries of a peace are almost settled, and the proceedings wait only for the arrival of the Duke of Marlborough; after whose approbation of the articles proposed, it is not doubted but the methods of the treaty will be public known. In the mean time, the States have declared an abhorrence of taking any step in this great affair, but in concert with the court of Great Britain, and other princes of the alliance. The posture of affairs in France does necessarily oblige that nation to be very much in earnest in their offers; and Monsieur de Torcy hath professed to the grand pensioner, that he will avoid all occasions of giving him the least jealousy of his using any address in private conversation for accomplishing the ends of his embassy. It is said, that as soon as the preliminaries are adjusted, that minister is to return to the French court. The states of Holland have resolved to make it an instruction to all their men-of-war and privateers, to bring into their ports whatever neutral ships they shall meet with, laden with corn, and bound for France; and, to avoid all cause of complaint from the potentates to whom these ships shall belong, their full demand for their freight shall be paid them there. The French Protestants residing in that country have applied themselves to their respective magistrates, desiring that there may be an article in the treaty of peace, which may give liberty of conscience to the Protestants in France. Monsieur Bosnage, minister of the Walloon church at Rotterdam, has been at the Hague, and hath had some conferences with the deputies of the States on that subject. It is reported there, that all the French refugees in those dominions are to be naturalized, that they may enjoy the same good effects of the treaty with the Hollanders themselves, in respect of France.

Letters from Paris say, the people conceive great hopes of a sudden peace, from Monsieur de Torcy's being employed in the negotiation; he being a minister of too great weight in that court, to be sent on any employment in which his master would not act in a manner wherein he might justly promise himself success. The French advices add, that there is an insurrection in Poitou, three thousand men having taken up arms, and beaten the troops which were appointed to disperse them; three of the mutineers, being taken, were immediately executed; and as many of the king's party were used in the same manner.

Our late act of naturalization hath had so great an effect in foreign parts, that some princes have prohibited the French refugees in their dominions to sell or transfer their estates to any other of their subjects; and, at the same time, have granted them greater immunities than they hitherto enjoyed. It has been also thought necessary to restrain their own subjects from leaving their country on pain of death.

No. 14.] THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1709.

From my own Apartment, May 10.

HAD it not been that my familiar had appeared to me, as I told you in my last, in person, I had certainly been unable to have found even words without meaning, to keep up my intelligence with the town; but he has checked me severely for my despondence, and ordered me to go on in my design of observing upon things, and forbearing persons; for, said he, the age you live in is such, that a good picture of any vice or virtue will none will much to yet all will of fear of be obliged. I took his mised him to the Pos aimed at vince him, themselves racters. I and nothing lowed I an preface, all for, if I ca and will fo former, I so

It would fore them trate, who of, vice: when it ca see throug have no pr verity to th past, chief licia. He laws of his in his own nal virtue, he was jud sel. The stood before The prison with guilt, all would b to his safe to destroy In this tin who happe thod for be sions: thes men, so li so base, th grew a ph tices? The old trial w called Tri learned ju all men at spared a p Tear-shift quality, b rogue wan for a thie petticoat, loose in h of Verus, leased eac them as c they stood whether t

Yesterd the Earl c line, and drawing t remarkab by word

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

tor makes circum-
spite of most ridipossible for privy. I such a er that in her is often s, and play, and pre-
and her to it,
to do.
This
enaveforces of whereat ould openly exas has great a ve of the ester, and how diffi-ly in that petition, s a com-tolence of does it man here her to-
of, or the ults come nate for rue, and le the sue has rest, and er, she noble lithas whether read he and
s and d a little re, and or, and but have en in the
and that nured it don't dion, she he, and kett not know nded that is ch. But s we d off with s, he has uch as as his violet has helped on and adjusted his elsthis, and his glass, sets his wig awry, tumbles his cravat, and in short, undresses himself to go into company.

Will Nice is so little satisfied with his dress, that the time he is at a visit, he is still mending it, and for that reason the more insufferable; for he w studies carelessness has, at least, his work the same done of the two. The widow is distracted when t take for her first move; for Nice is every way careful, that she tears his length of days; and Pa is so close, that she has apprehensions for her o be at with him. I am puzzled how to give idea of them; but, in a word, Careless is a and Nice a fool; both, you will say, very hopef debates for a gay young woman, just set at But there is a whisper, her mind will give her to Forer the gamester. This fellow has undone several women, that he will certainly succeed if he is duced; for nothing so much prevails with the part of that sex, as the glory of deceiving them as have deceived others.

Desunt multa.

No. James's Coffee-house, May 11.

Letters from Berlin, bearing date May the eleventh N.S. inform us, that the birth-day of her Prussia Majesty has been celebrated there with all possimagnificence; and the King made her, on that oc-tion, a present of jewels to the value of thirty three and crowns. The Marquis de Quesno, who has distinguished himself by his great zeal for the Protestan interest, was, at the time of the despatch of two letters, at that court, soliciting the King to take care, that an article in behalf of the refugees, admitting their return to France, should be inserted in the treaty of peace. They write from Hanover, of the fourteenth, that his electoral Highness had received an express from Count Merck, representing how necessary it was to the common cause, that he would please to hasten to the Rhine; for that nothing but his presence could quicken the measures towards driving the imperial army into the field. There are very many speculations upon the intended intervention of the King of Denmark and King Augustus. The latter has made such preparations for the reception of the other, that it is said, his Danish Majesty will be entertained in Saxony with much more elegance than he met with in Italy itself.

Letters from the Hague, of the eighteenth instant N.S. say, that his Grace the Duke of Marlborough arrived the night before at the Brill, after having been detained at sea, by adverse winds, two days longer than is usual in that passage. His Excellency the Lord Powis, and her Majesty's ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the states-general, so directed into the Veer in Zealand on Thursday last from whence he came to the Hague within a few hours after the arrival of his Grace. The Duke, soon after his coming to the Hague, had a visit from the governor of Holland. All things relative to the peace were in suspense until this interview; and a great variety of resolutions will be taken on that subject, for the troops of the allies have been ordered to be despatched to them, to move from their respective quarters, and march with all expedition to the frontiers, where the enemy are making their utmost efforts for the defence of their country. These advices further inform us, that the Marquis de Torv had received an answer from the court of France, to his letters which he had sent thither by an express on the Friday before.

*Mr. Bickerstaff has received letters from Mr.

THE TATLER.

Whipstaff, and Mrs. Rebecca Wagstaff; the chiefly to their being left out in the the family lately published; but my wit that draught, being a clerk in the e, and being at present under the dis-e chapter; it is feared, if that matter ched upon at this time, the young gen- lose his place for treason against the s.

's complaint is come to hand.'

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1709.

in my own Apartment, May 12.

ten a resolution hereafter, on any want e, to carry my familiar abroad with me, nised to give me very proper and just sons and things, to make up the history g day. He is wonderfully skilful in the men and manners, which has made me dinary curious to know how he came to on, and I communicated to him that . Pacolet, said I, 'I am mightily sur- you so good a judge of our nature and e, since you are a mere spirit, and have e of the bodily part of us.' He answered, e are mistaken; I have been one of you, month amongst you; which gives me an of your condition. You are to know, enter into human life have a certain m given to their being, which they only ge may be said to have arrived at; but e sometimes by fate, that such as die after death, to attend mankind to the astamen of being in themselves, which off by sickness or any other disaster. per guardians to men, as being sensible ity of their state. You are philosopher ow, that the difference of men's under- ceeds only from the various dispositions s; so that he who dies at a month old, e life as knowing, though more innocent, live to fifty; and after death, they have memory and judgment of all that passed ime, as I have of all the revolutions in turbulent condition of yours; and you had enough of it in a month, were I to my misfortunes.' 'A life of a month, one would think, much variety. But 'let us have your story.' proceeds in the following manner:

se of the most wealthy families in Great which I was born, and it was a very ous to me that it so happened, other- till, in all probability, been living; but nt to you all the occurrences of my short e existence, just as, by examining into ide in my brain, they appeared to me at The first thing that ever struck my senses over my head of one shrieking; after ough, I took a full jump, and found e hands of a sorceress, who seemed as if n long waking, and employed in some I was thoroughly frightened, and cried e immediately seemed to go on in some ration, and anointed me from head to they meant, I could not imagine; for d a great crowd about me, crying, 'An r!' upon which I grew a little still, and was a ceremony to be used only to great e such as made them what they call heirs. I lay very quiet; b of reason or provocation and binds my head as h then ties up both my leg down an horrid mixture trance into life, to begin was forced to it, or else great instrument in which was thus dressed, I was a fine young lady (my e have hugged me to dea me about, and there was look from the rest of th talked about my nose. pleased to see me; but longed to another family born is one of the most therefore crowds of relat gratulate my arrival; a Betty, the greatest romp such a height over her he of falling. She pinched chit, and threw me into a in to tend me. The g womanly employment of a strip and dress me a-new to see what ailed me: sh every joint about me. I lays me on my face in he a-nailing in all the pins, and screaming a lullaby exalt my voice above h nurse, the witch I first The girl is turned down as well to find what a granma's further curiosi visit was the cause of a understand, that I was any body that stood next open my lips; insomuch, ning, as to pretend myse prevent my being crann began a loud lecture upo of this age, who, for fe suckling their own offp immediately sent for; on wanton eye, and would s was in a consumption; t would frighten me inst Such exceptions were mad milch-wench, to whom to the breast. This care ing with the footman, e insomuch that I daily pi have been relieved had it tieth day of my life, a F who had writ upon Col and solemnly protested, of that method: upon w ears into a pail of water, tune to be drowned; a into a linguist until six until twenty-five, and be wife until sixty: which had not the enchantment broke by this philosoph should have otherwise li the steps of men; and, if you in your present wal from the aërial lacquey, the thoughts and purpos for.'

tely took threw a himself;

ourselves nobleman

rous birth ls with a

e, wherein

cozenage, game with is, imperored with

ool Fame,

he spectre scriptions

rance, and

my Lord

I do,' says

ays with,

panion.'

I saw the ids in the stole them soon after heard in,

ly money,

ith indif-

t Paolet

you looks ugs: that ay man of t what, as

s. He is an is cono a rash-

his whole

if he knew before the s you see,

ee against st all that re you dis-

from them e, and my is pocket.'

edy, called lady. In ere after it is turned ole men in invention,

lie. Such ie; who is

y; and is n wits, as

e. But, I

ge, which since the o first took there is a

at, all debe present

ge of crea-

was not so

ays means

genius, are such as show persons distinguished from the common level of mankind; such as placed happiness in the contempt of low fears and mean gratifications: fears which we are subject to with the vulgar; and pleasures which we have in common with beasts. With these illustrious personages, the wisest man was the greatest wit; and none was thought worthy of that character, unless he answered this excellent description of the poet:—

Qui ——— metus omnes et inexorabile fatum Subiecit pedibus strepitumque Acherontis avari.
Virg. Georg. ii. 492

Happy the man, ———
His mind possessing in a quiet state, Fearless of fortune, and resigned to fate.—Dryden

St. James's Coffee-house, May 13.

We had this morning advice, that some English merchant-ships, convoyed by the Bristol of fifty-four guns, were met with by a part of Monsieur du Ga Trouin's squadron, who engaged the convoy. The ship defended itself until the English merchants got clear of the enemy; but, being disabled, was herself taken. Within a few hours after, my Lord Dunsie came up with part of his squadron, and engaging the French, retook the Bristol (which, being much shattered, sunk;) and took the Glorieux, a ship of forty-four guns, as also a privateer of fourteen. Before this action, his lordship had taken two French merchant-men, and had, at the despatch of these advices, brought the whole safe into Plymouth.

No. 16.] TUESDAY, MAY 17, 1709.

White's Chocolate-house, May 15.

Sir Thomas, of this house, has showed me some letters from Bath, which give accounts of what passes among the good company of that place; and allowed me to transcribe one of them, that seems to be writ by some of Sir Thomas's particular acquaintance, and is as follows:—

DEAR KNIGHT, May 9, 1709.

I desire, you will give my humble service to all our friends, which I speak of to you (out of method) in the very beginning of my epistle, lest the present disorders, by which this seat of gallantry and pleasure is torn to pieces, should make me forget it. You keep so good company, that you know Bath is stocked with such as come hither to be relieved from luxuriant health, or imaginary sickness; and consequently is always as well stowed with gallants, as invalids, who live together, in a very good understanding. But the season is so early, that our fine company is not yet arrived; and the warm bath which in heathen times was dedicated to Venus, is now used only by such as really want it for health's sake. There are, however, a good many strangers among whom are two ambitious ladies, who being both in the autumn of their life, take the opportunity of placing themselves at the head of such as we are, before the Chloes, Clarissa's, and Pastorella's come down. One of these two is excessively in pain that the ugly being called Time, will make wrinkle in spite of the lead forehead cloth; and therefore hides with the gaiety of her air, the volubility of her tongue, and quickness of her motion, the injuries which it has done her. The other lady is but two years behind her in life, and dreads as much being laid aside as the former; and consequently has her nary precautions to prevent her reign over he is very discreet, and wonderfully turned ion; being never apparently transported h affection or malice. Thus, while Florimel g in public, and spreading her graces in s to gain a popular dominion over our s, Prudentia visits very cunningly all the lame, aetic, and the superannuated, who have inct classes of followers and friends. Among has found, that somebody has sent down ertificates of Florimel's age, which she has distributed to this unjoyful set of people, always enemies to those in possession of the ion of the company. This unprovoked in- by Prudentia, was the first occasion of our sions here, and a declaration of war between ls. Florimel has abundance of wit, which lavished in decrying Prudentia, and giving to her little arts. For an instance of her power, she bespoke the play of Alexander t, to be acted by the company of strollers, red us all to be there on Thursday last. e spoke to me to come, 'As you are,' said lover, you will not fail the death of Alex- ie passion of love is wonderfully hit—Sta- that happy woman—to have a conqueror at —But you will be sure to be there.' I, and thers, resolved to be of her party. But see stible strength of that unsuspected creature, woman.' Prudentia had counterplotted us, bespoken on the same evening the puppet- 'The creation of the world.' She had en- ery body to be there; and to turn our leader hile, had secretly let them know, that the lve was made the most like Florimel that seen. On Thursday morning the puppet- t, Adam and Eve, and several others who ore the flood, passed through the streets on k, to invite us all to the pastime, and the ation of such things as we all knew to be d Mr. Mayor was so wise, as to prefer these people the puppets, who, he said, were to t Christians; before the wicked players, who shew Alexander, an heathen philosopher. ort, this Prudentia had so laid it, that at ten ock footmen were sent to take places at the how, and all we of Florimel's party were to be shion, or desert her. We chose the latter. world crowded to Prudentia's house, because given out nobody could get in. When we Noah's flood in the show, Punch and his e introduced dancing in the ark. An honest ind of Florimel's, but a critic withal, rose up idst of the representation, and made many d exceptions to the drama itself, and told us, as against all morality, as well as rules of the at Punch should be in jest in the deluge, or hat he should appear at all. This was a just remark, and I thought to second him; as hissed by Prudentia's party: upon which, r Thomas, we, who were his friends, hissed . Old Mrs. Petulant desired both her s to mind the moral; then whispered Mrs. . 'This is very proper for young people to mch, at the end of the play, made Prudentia ment, and was very civil to the whole com- king bows until his buttons touched the . All was carried triumphantly against our (n the mean time, Florimel went to the dressed as fine as hands could make her, in see Prudentia pine away with envy. Instead he sat a full hour alone, and at last was entertained with this wh wiped her eyes with h and lamented the igno was stung with this, spoke the puppet-sh power, bespoke Ale came then to Alexand her daughters to mi man's fair words: 'F she, 'these soldiers a they are sometimes h you see, daughter l neighbour in the cou court'sy, good child, l mel was now mortified and Prudentia exalte served; Florimel invi Prudentia to the sh human affairs! the be prudes, the coquettes lants, all now wait up of things at this pres any new commotions, vice from,'

'Your aff

T

'MADAM,

'I have the hono yours, relating to an opera, by one of you eye-witness of the ac though she pressed b that design; for she reason, but her endeav herself. But, indee matter, than just th was taking your plac precedence, yet it is a the very life of femal the last consequences are from your beauti which are the bane o My writings are sacr always have the good tection; therefore t signify to all the worl thing that may in the your interest, reputat fore forgive me, that step made by any wh ticoats, and shall at a to make all mankind If they would consi needs not much argu their fate to be ob greatest rebels do onl Madam,

'Yo

St. James's

Letters from the F first instant; N. S. ad Marlborough, immed secretary to the pres quaint them therewit visited the duke, and name of the States-Ge into a conference vis affairs; and gave h-the same of peace of acting it. After sident re- Monsieur er's house h, prince iend. The pt secret; good un- 'e are apt ects from otiation, icular way f France; ted rather delivering appeared t; but in are better ent of the that this farquis is as sent a ns of his le to des-

d by ad- hich say, nmanding Saxon and t Mercy's d in the stores of place and my. f Bavaria 'ortugueze rn, olives, they have

May 18. is evening which was ry of con- r. There ces of it. Bacon, in reat com- a full de- me of the r said, he the com- red a god, e emperor ed of him lication to answered, ters that ned by no ething of 'Bucking- ' says the rtainly be with some is no help of whom all men speak well.' This is taking a man by un- prise, and being welcome when you have so surpris- him. The person flattered receives you into hi closet at once; and the sudden change of his hear- from the expectation of an ill-wisher, to find you hi friend, makes you in his full favour in a momen- The spirits that were raised so suddenly against you are as suddenly for you. There was another instance given of this kind at the table: a gentleman, wh- had a very great favour done him, and an empty- ment bestowed upon him, without so much as bein- personally known to his benefactor, waited upon th- great man who was so generous, and was beginnin- to say, he was infinitely obliged. 'Not at all,' say the patron, turning from him to another, 'had- known a more deserving man in England he shou- not have had it.'

We should certainly have had more examples ha- not a gentleman produced a book which he thought an instance of this kind: it was a pamphlet, call- 'The Naked Truth.' The idea any one would ha- of that work from the title was, that there wou- much plain dealing with people in power, and th- we should see things in their proper light, stripped- the ornaments which are usually given to the acti- of the great: but the skill of this author is such, th- he has, under that rugged appearance approved him- self the finest gentleman and courtier that ever wr- The language is extremely sublime, and not at all- be understood by the vulgar: the sentiments are me- as would make no figure in ordinary words; but me- is the art of the expression, and the thoughts a- elevated to so high a degree, that I question whether th- discourse will sell much. There was an ill-natur- fellow present, who hates all panegyric mortally 'P—— take him,' said he 'what the devil means th- Naked Truth, in speaking nothing but to the ad- tage of all whom he mentions? This is just such- great action as that of the champion's on a com- tion-day, who challenges all mankind to dispute wi- him the right of the sovereign, surrounded with li- guards.' The gentleman who produced the treat- desired him to be cautious, and said it was writ by a- excellent soldier, which made the company observ- more narrowly; and (as critics are the greatest con- jurors at finding out a known truth) one said, he w- sure it was writ by the hand of his sword-arm. I cou- not perceive much wit in that expression; but I- raised a laugh, and, I suppose, was meant as a hint upon valiant men. The same man pretended to be in the style, that it was an horse-officer; but not that is being too nice; for though you may know officers of the cavalry by the turn of their feet, I cou- imagine how you should discern their hands fr- those of other men. But it is always thus wit- pedants; they will ever be carping; if a gentleman a- a man of honour puts pen to paper. I do not doub- but this author will find this assertion too true, an- that obloquy is not repulsed by the force of arms. I will therefore set this excellent piece in a light to- glaring for weak eyes, and, in imitation of the crit- Longinus, shall, as well as I can, make my observa- tions in a style like the author's of whom I treat which perhaps I am as capable of as another, having 'an unbounded force of thinking, as well as a most exquisite address, extensively and wisely indulged to me by the supreme powers.' My author, I will da- to assert, shows the most universal knowledge of an- writer who has appeared this century: he is a po- and merchant, which is seen in two master-words 'credit blossoms,' he is a grammarian and a politi- cian; for he says, 'The uniting of the two kingdoms emphasis of the security of the Protestant succession. Some would be apt to say, he is a conjurer; has found, that a republic is not made up of body of animals, but is composed of men only, and of horses. 'Liberty and property have chosen their seat within the emulating circle of an human wealthe.' He is a physician; for he says, 'I see a constant equality in its pulse, and a justness of its vigorous circulation.' And again, 'I see strength of our constitution plainly appear in the ruddy and ruddy complexion of a well-conducted.' He is a divine: for he says, 'I cannot bless myself.' And indeed this excellent treatise had that good effect upon me, who am far from superstitious, that I also 'cannot but bless myself.'

THE TATLER.

St. James's Coffee-house, May 18.

Today arrived a mail from Lisbon, with letters of the thirteenth instant, N.S. containing a particular account of the late action in Portugal. On the seven-instant, the army of Portugal under the command of the Marquis de Fronteira, lay on the side of the river, and the army of the Duke of Anjou, commanded by the Marquis de Bay, on the other. The commander having an ambition to ravage the country, in a manner, in sight of the Portuguese, made a motion with the whole body of his horse, to pass the river, near the town of Badajos. The Portuguese, disdaining that such a motion should be offered to their arms, took a resolution to pass the river, and oppose the designs of the enemy. The Earl of Galway represented to the present posture of affairs was such on the part of the allies, that there needed no more to be at present in that country, but to carry on a more active part. But his argument could not avail in the council of war. Upon which a great detachment of the whole of the horse of the King of Portugal passed the river, and with some pieces of artillery did good execution on the enemy. Upon this, the Marquis de Bay advanced with his cavalry, and attacked the right wing of the Portuguese, who faced about, and fled, without waiting for the first encounter. But their foot repulsed the body of horse, in three successive charges, with great order and resolution. While this was going on, the British General commanded the brigade of Lord Pearce, to keep the enemy in diversion by a flank attack. This was so well executed, that the Portuguese infantry had time to retire in good order, across the river. But that brigade, which rescued the Marquis de Bay, was itself surrounded by the enemy, and Major Sarkey, Brigadier Pearce, together with several regiments, and that of the Lord Galway, were taken prisoners.

During the engagement, the Earl of Barrimore, advanced too far to give some necessary order, and was surrounded by a squadron of the enemy; but he managed to gallop up to the brigade of Pearce, and he remains also a prisoner. My Lord had his horse shot under him in this action; the Comte de Saint Juan, a Portuguese General, was taken prisoner. The same night the army encamped at Aronches, and on the ninth moved to a place where they lay when these despatches came.

Colonel Stanwix's regiment is also taken. The whole of this affair has given the Portuguese a new idea of the capacity and courage of my Lord, against whose advice they entered upon this important affair, and by whose conduct they were lution of that great who under the oppression of reflection of repeated unspeakable alacrity in the cause. He has a posture after the necessary disposition for any further attempt. camp they were in.

Letters from Brabant, advise, that of a peace seem confidently reported. be actually agreed. preparations for opening of the empire, the Palatinate, the motion towards the already arrived in. These advices add, Holland, having moved in Flanders, set out from that place.

No. 18.] SATURDAY

From
It is observed that much employ their time in that things useful to and they are busy in encyclics in a Great that every man is looked. It would be real capacities for works of general utility. body's business it want of public spirit only a student, and only remark things them to higher positions. thousand times less remedied; which is so frequent as in many gross errors of things wherein a of life. This is no letters when they are they are usually cut on sign-posts. I as well as any body Merchant Taylor's after the signs I observe same time, I must first gave me an which I have since. Many a man has a general want of skill that the painters cannot know the alive that day, how be wrong spelled, cousin now in town at Queen's College staff (he is a-kin to man, going to see a whole day by the written, 'this is the Bear.' He was set house of a fellow place mechanical

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

it us make not this a directed by down low se specia g he thus portable is ng denou goes on in s are con nections, as ot come by ere might orth B sto would not the gentle ne king on ie was sark k that to statue in distinguish y acquaint d sentence ace, to find n, the town
the town re both in ubiquity is afe at the nctly know rthography desman in all give me in repair ke in my e, who can or despatch mer for my for handling 0. by which Kingdom of tion. The emonstrate heir public ection, than their debts enue, which e which is f the com
the country
y, and the anxiety of retires from ot power to r, and the
to be seen processions, ations are y, who were se, h King on ajesty has ne entirely
, and shall tranquility d exhibit fourth day, delivered

his credentials on that day to the States-General.
Pompey sentary from the Queen of Great Britain, did also Count Zinzendorf, who bears the ar character from the Emperor.
Prince Eugene intended to set out the next day Brussels, and His Grace the Duke of Marlborough the Tuesday following. The Marquis de Tilly is day of going, but still continues there. There of the allies is to assemble on the seventh of month at Helldin; though it is generally believ that the preliminaries to a treaty are fully adjuste The approach of the peace strikes a pang thro out, andes, though that of a battle could never d and they almost repent of their bravery, that in such haste to humble themselves, and the Fe K 12. The Duke of Marlborough, though other the greatest general of the age, has plaind st himself unacquainted with the arts of husband a war. He might have grown as old as the Duke Ava, or Prince Waldeck in the Low Countries, yet have got reputation enough every year for reus noble man; for the command of general Flanders hath been ever looked upon as a post for life. For my part I cannot see how his Grace answer it to the world, for the great eagerness he shown to send a hundred thousand of the best flows in Europe a-begging. But the pri gentleman of the infantry will be able to shift themselves; a brave man can never starve in country stocked with hen-roosts. 'There is no ward of linen,' says my honoured progenitor Sir J Falstaff, 'in my whole company: but, as for it saves the worthy knight, 'I am in no great pain: shall find shirts on every hedge.' There is not sort of gentlemen whom I am much more concern for, and that is the ingenious fraternity of who have the honour to be an unworthy member; I me the news-writers of Great Britain, whether patri or post-boys, or by what other name or titles dignified or distinguished. The case of these gen men is, I think, more hard than that of the soldiers considering that they have taken more towns, fought more battles. They have been upon great and skirmishes, when our armies have lain still; given the general assault to many a place, when besiegers were quiet in their trenches. They ha made us masters of several strong towns even we before our generals could do it; and completed v tories, when our greatest captains have been del come off with a drawn battle. Where Prince Eug has slain his thousands, Boyer has slain his thousands. This gentleman can indeed be be enough commended for his courage and intrep during this whole war: he has had about him w an inexpressible fury; and, like the offended Me of ancient Rome, made such havoc among his co trians, as must be the work of two or three a to report. It must be confessed, the redoubt Buckley has shed as much blood as the former;
I cannot forbear saying (and I hope it will not like envy) that we regard our brother Buckley kind of Demi-cuir, who spares neither friend foe; but generally kills as many of his own as the enemy's. It is impossible for this ingenious of men to subsist after a peace: every one rememb the shifts that they were driven to in the reign of K Charles the Second, when they could not furnish a single paper of news without lighting up a fire in Germany, or a fire in Moscow. There co appeared a letter without a paragraph on an e quake. Prodiges were grown so familiar, that had lost their name, as a great poet of that age

THE TATLER.

umber Mr. Dyer, who is justly looked upon as the fox-hunter in the nation as the best man our country has produced, was famous for dealing in whales; inasmuch, in the last month's time (for I had the curiosity to see him on that occasion) he brought three whales up the river Thames, besides two of a sturgeon. The judicious and wary Mr. Dyer hath all along been the rival of Mr. Dyer, and got himself a reputation from his dealing in famines; by which, in those days, he was more popular than the great multitudes as he has lately done. In every dearth of news, Grand Cairo is unpeopled.

It is therefore visible, that our society will be improved by the peace than the soldiery itself, and that the Daily Courant is in danger of being reformed, my friend Dyer of being reduced to the best of the whole band of being reduced to nothing. I presume to offer any thing in my distressed brethren, I would humbly recommend an appendix of proper apartments, furs, pen, ink, and paper, and other necessaries should be added to the hospital of Chelsea, of such decayed news-writers as have been in the wars; and that, for their encouragement, they should compile the annals of their wars, who have been engaged in the same, and are still obliged to do duty after the same be thought to speak this out of an eye to interest; for as my chief scenes of action are in houses, play-houses, and my own apartments, I need no need of camps, fortifications, and fields to support me; I do not call for heroes and my assistance. Though the officers are the armies disbanded I shall still be safe, here are men, or women, or politicians, or poets, or nymphs, or swains, or cits, or being.

TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1709.

on my own Apartment, May 23.

nothing can give a man of any consideration, than to see order and distinction amongst men, especially when the rank of himself is member) is intruded upon, and have no pretence to that honour. The rank of Esquire is the most notoriously abused, of any class amongst men; inasmuch, it has almost the subject of derision: but I would say, this behaviour towards it promotes the ignorance of the people in its true nature, shall therefore as briefly as possible, do all true Esquires the justice to look into on this subject.

In the first ages of the world, before the invention of arms and settlements, when the noble passion of valour possessed the hearts of men, and they were not yet cultivated into the merciful civility which they have showed in latter centuries, natural for great and heroic spirits to retire to the woods, and caves, to lament their fate, and the cruelty of the fair persons who are the cause of their lamentations. The hero in this distress is in armour, and in a readiness to fight with any man, especially if distinguished by military qualifications: it being the nature of him to hate all merit, lest it should come to his observation of the cruel one by whom its possessor is neglected. A lover of this kind had always about him a number of men, and subordinate to him, to attend on his tions, carry an enchanted helmet when he was eating, and in his absence, when he was in any king's palace, perhaps his daughter, the tures of his valiant master was styled his Esquire, and attended his offices about him; was a man-usher, quick and accurate, and eloquent as the man himself, and thus qualified was to affirm, who was called a man of quality, these accomplishments, but, to the utter disgrace of the heralds, every pretender to nobility, even persons of the lowest institution. I have taken notice of this city, and looked over the office, for my better information, in the middle Temple, including the lists of the bar, the Inner, four thousand.

The whole buildings are in the adjacent street of the house, and the turning cannot meet one who is taking water. Every house in the streets is also governed by Soho-square, Bloomsbury, where the floors rise above the universities, where you find of our order. However, evil, it were to be supposed, that men of some figure, no pretence they have to rise from chivalry.

The countries of Great Britain are upon by innovation. Vain is the field: but shall they be mad after foxes; that they venture their necks immediately to commence a temperate, cleanly, and sober rural Esquires commit to wear shirts half a week. These men are also, to their food: an Esquire of dumplin every meal, in order: an Esquire of H devoured hogs' flesh: mercy on calves. But I protest against them; that it is not the quantity of eating, that shows I am most offended at the scribbling clerks, who are no reason that I know flourish at the end of the that, if you read the offices in the kingdom, directed to any but Esquire of clerks, and the rogues messages upon each other Gregory Goosequill, Esquire replies by a note, 'To Mr. with respect;' in a word, gerorum, a people of Es but, by the late act of assume that title, as the Englishmen. All these gentleman, as they are inwardly, and as they are outwardly, is not so much spotted as a weak shine, and could know that they are spotted, and in a position to take and no man not to be a sabbate, or every address, perfectly, to be should be before has by Bole, a marked by ay are cal to females y the most of a nature and The Trip the greatest he free of some time. Mr. Wicks at the alman of a as most the Cate our, which characters in rd in that, ge are coe t. Bole, n, th in th cent's M d, it is s up, it is an, it is the name a, it is for, it is es, it is elst, it is eting, it is s, it is n, it is n, it is son, it is s, it is es. That me, it is that it is s, th.

Sr,

I received yours, and am sensible of the address and capacity with which you have hitherto transacted the great affairs under your management. You will observe, that our wants here are not to be consisted; and that it is vanity to use artifices with the knowing men with whom you are to deal. Let me beg you, therefore, in this representation of our circumstances, to lay aside art, which ceases to be such when it is seen, and make use of all your skill to gain us the advantages you can from the enemy's jealousy of our other's greatness; which is the place where only you have room for any dexterity. If you have any pains for your unhappy country, or any affection for your distressed master, come home with peace. Oh heaven! do I live to talk of Lewis the Great, as the object of pity! The king shows a great uneasiness to be informed of all that passes; but, at the same time, is mortal at every one who appears in his presence, so he should rise an account of some new calamity. I know not in what terms to represent my thoughts; you, when I speak of the king, with relation to his day to death. Picture to yourself that immortal who stood in our public places represented us trophies, armour, and terrors, on his pedestal; and then, the invincible, the great, the good, the pious, the holy, which were the usual epithets we ascribed, both in our language and thoughts. I now consider him whom you knew the greatest and most glorious of monarchs, and now think you see the same man an unhappy Lazar, in the lowest circumstance of human nature itself, without regard to the state in which he is fallen. I write from his bedside; he is present in my chamber. I have many, many things to say, but my tears flow too fast, and my sorrow too big for utterance.

'I am, &c.'

There is such a veneration due from all men to the persons of princes, that it were a sort of dishonour to represent further the condition which the king is in; but it is certain, that, soon after the receipt of these verses, Monsieur Torcy waited upon his grace the Duke of Marlborough and the Lord Townshend, and that conference gave up many points, which had before said were such as he must return to France, where he could answer.

No. 29.] THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1709.

White's Chesham-house, May 21.

It is not to be imagined how far prepossession will run away with people's understandings, in cases when they are made, present uneasiness. The following narration is a sallicient testimony of the truth of this observation.

I had the honour on the other day of a visit from a gentle woman (a stranger to me) who seemed to be about thirty. Her complexion is brown; but the colour of her face has an agreeableness, which surpasses to be met with the fairest women. There appeared in her countenance a sprightly health; and her eyes shone with vivacity to become the language of complacency, which she brought into her face. She seemed sensible of the disadvantage, with which she was favoured, and she said, 'Madam, if you see before you the unhappiest woman, and therefore, as you are esteemed by the world both a great civilian, as well as an astrologer, I must desire your advice and assistance, in putting me in a method of obtaining a divorce from a marriage, which I know the law will pronounce void.' 'Madam,' said I, 'your grievance is of the nature, that you must be very ingenious in representing the causes of your complaint, or I cannot give you the satisfaction you desire. 'Sir,' she answers, 'I believe there would be no need of half our skill in the art of divination, to guess why a woman would part from her husband.' 'It is true,' said I; 'but suspicious, or guesses at what you mean, nay certainty of it, except you plainly speak it, are no foundation for a formal suit.' She clapped her hand before her face; 'My husband,' said she, 'is no more a husband' (here she burst into tears) 'than one of the Italian singers.'

'Madam,' said I, 'the affliction you complain of is to be redressed by law; but, at the same time, consider what mortifications you are to go through, in bringing it into open court; how will you be able to bear the impertinent whispers of the people present at the trial, the licentious reflections of the pleaders, and the interpretations that will in general be put upon your conduct by all the world? "How little will they say" could that lady command her passions!" Besides, consider, that curbing our desire is the greatest glory that we can arrive at in this world, and will be most rewarded in the next.' She answered, like a prudent matron: 'Sir, if you please to remember the office of matrimony, the first cause of its institution is that of having posterity. Therefore, as to the curbing desires, I am willing to undergo any abstinence from food as you please to enjoin me; but cannot, with any quiet of mind, live in the neglect of a necessary duty, and an express commandment, increase and multiply.' Observing she was learned, and knew so well the duties of life, I turned my arguments rather to dehort her from this public procedure by examples than precepts. 'Do but consider, madam, what crowds of beauteous women live in unneries, secluded for ever from the sight and conversation of men, with all the alacrity of spirit imaginable; they spend their time in heavenly raptures, in constant and frequent devotions, and at proper hours agreeable conversations.' 'Sir,' said she hastily, 'tell not me of Papists, or any of their idolatries.' Well then, madam, consider how many fine ladies are innocently in the eye of the world, and this gay town, in the midst of temptation: there is the witty Mrs. W—— is a virgin of forty-four, Mrs. T—— is thirty-nine, Mrs. L—— is thirty-three; yet you see they laugh, and are gay, at the park, at the playhouse, at balls, and at visits; and so much at ease, that all this seems hardly a self-denial.' 'Mr. Bickerstaff,' said she, with some emotion, 'you are an excellent quist; but the last word destroyed your whole argument; if it is not self-denial, it is no virtue. I presented you with an half-guinea, in hopes not only to have my conscience eased, but my fortune told. et—' Well, madam,' said I, 'pray of what age is your husband?' 'He is,' replied my injured client, 'fifty; and I have been his wife fifteen years.' 'How happened it you never communicated your distress, all this time, to your friends and relations?' She answered, 'He has been thus but a fortnight.' I am the most serious man in the world to look at, and yet could not forbear laughing out. 'Why, madam, in case of infirmity which proceeds only from age, the law gives no remedy.' 'Sir,' said she, 'I find you have no more learning than Dr. Case; and I am told of a young man, not five-and-twenty, just come from Oxford, to whom I will communicate this whole matter, I doubt not but he will appear to have seven times as useful and satisfactory knowledge than you and your boasted family.' Thus I have entirely lost my client; but if this tedious narrative preserves

Pastorella from years her sex to have my bound up with

This evening which Mr. E is what sup humble opin but it is adan skill to judge crowd of the May-fair, the broke, as we allowed still lady or gentle let them enq dispose of a May-fair has as well as of tiger will sell credibly infor three legs, fo I hear likew the gentlemen the town, and the heroes b queens beatin for her ingen the Exchange the term of jo to know of h hell, Punch, given so muc bute to the r sigh, 'That, would not off him in a post be seen from one hand, and brandy-shop, bring to my r Camilla, who voice, and to was in the h so thoroughly that when she think of retre in her own lo she did upon reduced that retirement, w the woods and sceptres she l solitude,

I wa
Yet
But, for fear known, she us Naq
E pe
I ve

Since I hav communicate received from where there manner of fu peculiar to t admire both people.

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

places shall be delivered up to the allies before the 1st of June. The trade between Holland and France shall be on the same foot as in 1664. The cities of Strasburg, Biscac, and Alsacia, shall be returned to the Emperor and empire; and the King of France pursuant to the treaty of Westphalia, 1648, shall only retain the protection of ten imperial cities, viz. Colmar, Schlestat, Haguenau, Molsheim, Ferkeln, Keisembach, Obrenheim, Rosheim, Weisenberg, and Landau.

Homburg, Fort-Louis, Fort-Khiel, and Nord-Balk shall be demolished, and all the fortifications on the Rhine to Philippsburg. The King of Prussia shall remain in the peaceable possession of New-Batavia. The affairs of Orange, as also the pretensions of his Prussian Majesty in the Franche-Comté, shall be determined at this general negotiation of peace. The Duke of Savoy shall have a restitution made of what has been taken from him by the French, viz. the town of Exilles, Chamont, Fenestrelles, and the valley of Pragelas.

No. 21 ] SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1709.

White's Chocolate-house, May 26.

A gentleman has writ to me out of the country a very full letter, and said things which I suppose with great violence to my vanity. There are many terms in my narratives which he complains want a pléning; and has therefore desired that, for the benefit of my country readers, I would let him know what I mean by a Gentleman, a Pretty Fellow, a Toast, a Coquet, a Critic, a Wit, and all other appellations of those now in the gayer world, who are in possession of those several characters; together with an account of those who unfortunately pretend to them. I shall begin with him we usually call a Gentleman, or man of conversation.

It is generally thought, that warmth of imagination, quick relish of pleasure, and a manner of becoming it, are the most essential qualities for forming this sort of man. But any one that is much in company will observe, that the height of good breeding is shown rather in never giving offence, than in doing obliging things. Thus he that never shocks you, though he is seldom entertaining; is more likely to keep your favour, than he who often entertains, and sometimes displeases you. The most necessary talent therefore in a man of conversation, which is what we ordinarily intend by a fine gentleman, is a good judgment. He that has this in perfection, is master of his companion, without letting him see it; and has the same advantage over men of any other qualifications whatsoever, as one that can see would have over a blind man of ten times his strength.

This is what makes Sophronius the darling of all who converse with him, and the most powerful with his acquaintance of any man in town. By the use of this faculty he acts with great ease and freedom among the men of pleasure, and acquits himself with skill and despatch among the men of business. As which he performs with such success, that, with a much discretion in life as any man ever had, he neither is, nor appears cunning. But as he does a good office, if ever he does it, with readiness and alacrity, so he denies what he does not care to engage in, in a manner that convinces you that you ought not to have asked it. His judgment is good and unerring, and accompanied with so cheerful a spirit, that his conversation is a continual feast, at which he helps some, and is helped by others, as such a manner, that the equality of society is perfectly kept up, and every man obliges as much as he is obliged: for it is the greatest and justest skill in a man of superior understanding, to know how to be on a level with his companions. This sweet disposition runs through all the actions of Sophronius, and makes his company desired by women, without being envied by men. Sophronius would be as just as he is, if there were no law; and would be as discreet as he is, if there were no such thing as calumny.

In imitation of this agreeable being, is made that animal we call a Pretty Fellow; who, being just able to find out, that what makes Sophronius acceptable is a natural behaviour, in order to the same reputation, makes his own an artificial one. Jack Dimple is his perfect mimic, whereby he is, of course, the most unlike him of all men living. Sophronius just now passed into the inner room directly forward; Jack comes as fast after as he can for the right and left looking-glass, in which he had just approved himself by a nod at each, and marched on. He will meditate within for half an hour, until he thinks he is not careless enough in his air, and come back to the mirror to recollect his forgetfulness.

Will's Coffeehouse, May 27.

This night was acted the comedy called 'The Fox'; but I wonder the modern writers do not use their interest in the house to suppress such representations. A man that has been at this will hardly like any other play during the season: therefore I humbly move, that the writings, as well as dresses, of the last age should give way to the present fashion. We are come into a good method enough (if we were not interrupted in our mirth by such an apparition as a play of Jonson's) to be entertained at more ease, both to the spectator and the writer, than in the days of old. It is no difficulty to get hats and swords, and wigs and shoes, and every thing else, from the shops in town; and make a man show himself by his habit, without more ado, to be a counsellor, a fop, a courtier, or a citizen, and not be obliged to make those characters talk in different dialects to be distinguished from each other. This is certainly the surest and best way of writing: but such a play as this makes a man for a month after over-run with criticism, and enquire, 'What every man on the stage said? what had such a one to do to meddle with such a thing? how came the other, who was bred after this or that manner, to speak so like a man conversant among a different people?' These questions rob us of all our pleasure; for, at this rate, no sentence in a play should be spoken by any one character which could possibly enter into the head of any other man represented in it; but every sentiment should be peculiar to him only who utters it. Laborious Ben's works will bear this sort of inquisition; but if the present writers were thus examined, and the offences against this rule cut out, few plays would be long enough for the whole evening's entertainment.

But I do not know how they did in those old times: this same Ben Jonson has made every one's passion in this play be towards money; and yet not one of them expresses that desire, or endeavours to obtain it, any way but what is peculiar to him only: one sacrifices his wife, another his profession, another his posterity, from the same motive; but their characters are kept so skilfully apart, that it seems prodigious their discourses should rise from the invention of the same author.

But the poets are a nest of hornets, and I will drive these some hard my brother

the author has made a
'The Nake
for writing the learned left between patrons.
dedicated h
H—rd.

F

SIR,

'Being
infallible yo to be your s under great ing to your would happ were preve people: I modesty to serve instea for two day or until you hands. Th relate a sing where I at useful for t

'Three y last indite the first de that she kep times appea magical her dreds of m presence al hot steam is stench: tha of that he wallowing before they

'It was off by nigh hanged, and mutter sou
the flesh af

'The thi sorcery, lo pieces of do children; t had a symp those in the

'This wa
the three l
their own which is lik their trials.

'But the man, will whole town should be s of him to solve the these ladies fellows wen evening, an second is house over-ed a bit of ure warts

the third dren, she is baked ;
ey eat too

olve those shall not s ; and so, gs for the usin, sman,

BEDSTAFF.

ath among of poison, first upon le, and so vital parts.
uld happen
the same seized on ver part of and these that they Pray, sir,
as much as t there, as into your d, and you

Whitaker,
d two fireniral Byng ons being Final, to se parts to man arrived proceeded t, in order Highness, ons of the

oops of the r in those e last year ;
nself with sses of the
be made valley of Marseilles of the corn

the twenty-Saxe-Zeitz ring to set the States that place ral Heister t Trenchin, rendezvous whence he f artillery, Denmark
nd on the twenty-fifth at Dresden, under a triple discharge of the artillery of that place ; but his majesty refused the ceremonies of a public entry.

Our letters from the Upper Rhine say, that the imperial army began to form itself at Ellingen ; where the respective deputies of the elector Palatine, the Prince of Baden Durlach, the bishoprick of Spire, &c. were assembled, and had taken the necessary measures for the provision of forage, the security of the country against the incursions of the enemy, and laying a bridge over the Rhine. Several vessels laden with corn are daily passing before Frankfort for the Lower Rhine.

Letters from Poland inform us, that a detachment of Muscovite cavalry, under the command of General Instand, had joined the confederate army ; and the infantry, commanded by General Goltz, was expected to come up within a few days. These succours will amount to twenty thousand men.

Our last advices from the Hague, dated June the fourth, N.S. say, that they expected a courier from the French Court, with a ratification of the preliminaries that night or the day following. His Grace the Duke of Marlborough will set out for Brussels on Wednesday or Thursday next, if the despatches which are expected from Paris do not alter his resolution. Letters from Majorca confirm the honourable capitulation of the Castle of Alicant, and also the death of the Governor, Major-General Richards, Colonel Sibourg, and Major Vignolles, who were all buried in the ruins of that place by the springing of a great mine, which did, it seems, more execution than was reported. Monsieur Torcy passed through Mer in his return, and had there a long conference with the Elector of Bavaria ; after which, the Prince spoke publicly of the treatment he had received from France, with the utmost indignation.

' Any person that shall come publicly abroad in fantastical habit, contrary to the present mode of fashion, except Don Diego Dismallo, or any other out of poverty, shall have his name and dress inserted in our next.'

' N. B. Mr. How'd'yecall is desired to leave those buttons.'

No. 22.] TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1709.

White's Chocolate-house, May 28.

I CAME hither this evening to see fashions ; and who should I first encounter but my old friend Cynthia (encompassed by a crowd of young fellows dictating on the passion of love with the gayest and imaginable ! ' Well,' says he, ' as to what I know of the matter, there is nothing but ogling with skin carries a woman ; but indeed it is not every fool that is capable of this art ; you will find twenty can speak eloquently, fifty that can fight manfully, and a thousand that can dress genteelly at a mistress, where there is one that can gaze skilfully. This requires an exquisite judgment, to take the language of his eyes to yours exactly, and not let yours talk too fast for hers ; as at a play between the acts, when beauty Frisk stands upon a bench full in Lindamira's face and her dear eyes are searching round to avoid the glaring open fool ; she meets the watchful glance of her true lover, and sees his heart attentive on her charms, and waiting for a second twinkle of her eye for its next motion.' Here the good company sneered ; but he goes on. ' Nor is this attending a slavery, when a man meets with encouragement and her eye comes often in his way : for after an evening so spent, and the repetition of four or five significant looks at him, the happy man goes home to his lodgings full of ten thousand pleasing images ; his brain is dilated, and gives him all the ideas and prospects which it ever lets into its seat of pleasure. Thus a kind look from Lindamira revives in his imagination all the beauteous lawns, green fields, woods, forests, rivers, and solitudes, which he had ever before seen in picture, description, or real life : and all with this addition, that he now sees them with the eyes of a happy lover, as before only with those of a common man. You laugh, gentlemen, but consider yourselves (ye common people that were never in love) and compare yourselves in good humour with yourselves out of humour, and ye will then acknowledge, that all external objects affect you according to the dispositions ye are in to receive their impressions, and not as those objects are in their own nature. How much more shall all that passes within his view and observation touch with delight a man who is prepossessed with successful love, which is an assemblage of soft affection, gay desires, and hopeful resolutions ?

Poor Cynthia went on at this rate to the crowd about him, without any purpose in his talk, but to vent a heart overflowing with sense of success. I wondered what could exalt him from the distress in which he had long appeared, to so much alacrity : but my familiar has given me the state of his affairs. It seems, then, that lately coming out of the play-house, his mistress, who knows he is in her livery, as the manner of insolent beauties is, is resolved to keep him still so, and gave him so much wages as to complain to him of the crowd she was to pass through. He had his wits and resolution enough about him to take her hand, and say, he would attend her to the coach. All the way thither my good young man stammered at every word, and stumbled at every step. His mistress, wonderfully pleased with her triumph, put to him a thousand questions, to make a man of his natural wit speak with hesitation ; and let drop her fan to see him recover it awkwardly. This is the whole foundation of Cynthia's recovery to the sprightly air he appears with at present.

I grew mighty curious to know something more of that lady's affairs, as being amazed how she could dally with an offer of one of his merit and fortune. I sent Paolet to her lodgings, who immediately brought me back the following letter to her friend and confidant, Amanda, in the country, wherein she has opened her heart and all its folds.

DEAR AMANDA,

The town grows so empty, that you must expect my letter so too, except you will allow me to talk of myself instead of others : you cannot imagine what pain it is, after a whole day spent in public, to want your company, and the ease which friendship allows in being vain to each other, and speaking all our minds. An account of the slaughter which these unhappy eyes have made within ten days last past, would make me appear too great a tyrant to be allowed in a Christian country. I shall therefore confine myself to my principal conquests, which are the hearts of beau Frisk and Jack Freeland, besides Cynthia, who you know, wore my fetters before you went out of town. Shall I tell you my weakness ? I begin to love Frisk : it is the best humoured impertinent thing in the world : he is always too in waiting, and will certainly carry me off one time or other. Freeland's father and mine have been upon a treaty without consulting me ; and Cynthia has been eternally wate

my friend
hopes to g snake does into his m ture, which nothing h therefore v and Cynthia knowing n
the venerat other, into old maxim no greater him posses ambition is therefore h upon me, b choose rath than one v
He that ju his opinion must be c advances.
give, and t ments for genius ; bu with any ot
I shall enjo single wom lowed and that of bein

My chief to my friend who has be father adm
There is co his manner general fault be confessed persons nov for the actor of them hav ever spoke Cave is so he pretends one foot in mirers of gratitude to who if he c it even then

But there from good made by m encouragem very much sion of the for himself complexion equal invita my book of finish a very I have the his hand, d principles o in the play vanity of an a page and my similes not pretend tragedies nd from enters of

when the
the hero
Besides
I have an who shall
, without is to kill or lose ce I shall

ed Fidelia, ent under y help to ger. Her s woman
st degree, ion: their can their oman half ch is the ole family to-morrow ertake the t of all his succeed, I anguishing ne young late to an reifully by tebrate her ended a aph) gives s devoured

Esquire,
o her Ma-respect,' is and of this cannot have in spite of being the

of. I pre-only; but,
ine. I am advice in matrimonial ts, and can into immease I have s recovered
t of the fit, are. These e affections ence to let ay discern eed in the ntleman of e of Great kness, and ually said, ho had too much tenderness of soul to have any authority with his wife; and she too little sense to give him any authority, for that reason. His kind wife observed this temper in him, and made proper use of it. But, knowing it was below a gentlewoman to wrangle, she resolved upon an expedient to save decorum, and wear her dear to her point at the same time. She therefore took upon her to govern him, by falling into fits whenever she was repulsed in a request, or contradicted in a discourse. It was a fish-day, when, in the midst of her husband's good-humour at table, she bethought herself to try her project. She made signs that she had swallowed a bone. The man grew pale as ashes, and ran to her assistance, calling for drink. 'No, my dear,' said she, recovering, 'it is down; do not be frightened.' This accident betrayed his softness enough. The next day she complained, a lady's chariot, whose husband had not hal his estate, had a craneneck, and hung with twice th air that hers did. He answered, 'Madam, you know my income; you know I have lost two coach-horses this spring:—down she fell.—'Hart- horn! Betty, Susan, Alice, throw water in her face.' With much care and pains, she was at last brought to herself, and the vehicle in which she visited wa amended in the nicest manner, to prevent relapses but they frequently happened during that husband whole life, which he had the good fortune to end in few years after. The disconsolate soon pitched upo a very agreeable successor, whom she very prudentl designed to govern by the same method. This ma knew her little arts, and resolved to break throug all tenderness, and be absolute master as soon as o casion offered. One day it happened, that a discour arose about furniture; he was very glad of the o casion, and fell into an invective against china, p testing he would never let five pounds more of l money be laid out that way as long as he breathe. She immediately fainted.—He starts up as amaze and calls for help.—The maid runs to the closet. He chafes her face, bends her forward, and beats ti palms of her hands: her convulsions increase, an down she tumbles on the floor, where she lies qui dead, in spite of what the whole family, from t nursery to the kitchen, could do for her relief.

While every servant was thus helping or lamec ing their mistress, he, fixing his cheek to be seemed to be following in a trance of sorrow; b secretly whispers her, 'My dear, this will never d what is within my power and fortune, you m command; but none of your artifices: you are qui in other hands than those you have passed yo pretty passions upon.' This made her almost in t condition she pretended; her convulsions now ca thicker, nor was she to be held down. The ki man doubles his care, helps the servants to thi water in her face by full quarts; and when t sinking part of the fit came again, 'Well, my dea said he, 'I applaud your action; but I must tal my leave of you until you are more sincere with m farewell for ever: you shall always know where hear of me, and want for nothing.' With that l ordered the maids to keep plying her with hartshe while he went for a physician: he was scarce at t stair-head when she followed, and, pulling him int closet, thanked him for her cure; which was so ab late, that she gave me this relation herself, to communicated for the benefit of all the volunt invalids of her sex.

St. James's Coffee-house, June 1.

Advices from Brussels of the sixth instant, N.

THE TATLER.

say his Highness Prince Eugene had received a letter from Monsieur Torcy, wherein that minister, after many expressions of great respect, acquaints him, that his master had absolutely refused to sign the preliminaries to the treaty which he had, in his Majesty's behalf, consented to at the Hague. Upon the receipt of this intelligence, the face of things at that place was immediately altered, and the necessary orders were transmitted to the troops (which lay most remote from thence) to move toward the place of rendezvous with all expedition. The enemy seems also to prepare for the field, and have at present drawn together twenty-five thousand men in the plains of Lentz. Marshal Villars is at the head of those troops; and has given the generals under his command all possible assurances, that he will turn the fate of the war to the advantage of his master.

They write from the Hague of the seventh, that Monsieur Rouille had received orders from the court of France, to signify to the States General, and the ministers of the high allies, that the King could not consent to the preliminaries of a treaty of peace, as it was offered to him by Monsieur Torcy. The great difficulty is the business of Spain, on which particular, his ministers seemed only to say, during the treaty, that it was not so immediately under their master's direction, as that he could engage for its being relinquished by the Duke of Anjou: but now he positively answers, that he cannot comply with what his minister has promised in his behalf, even in such points as are wholly in himself to act in, or not. This has had no other effect than to give the alliance fresh arguments for being diffident of engagements entered into by France. The pensioner made a report of all which this minister had declared to the deputies of the States General, and all things turn towards a vigorous war. The Duke of Marlborough designed to leave the Hague within two days, in order to put himself at the head of the army, which is to assemble on the seventeenth instant between the Scheld and the Lis. A fleet of eighty sail, laden with corn from the Baltic, is arrived in the Texel. The states have sent circular letters to all the provinces, to notify this change of affairs, and animate their subjects to new resolutions in defence of their country.

From my own Apartment, May 31.

The public is not so little my concern, though I am but a student, as that I should not interest myself in the present great things in agitation. I am still of opinion the French King will sign the preliminaries. With that view, I have sent him, by my familiar, the following epistle, and admonished him, on pain of what I shall say of him to future generations, to act with sincerity on this occasion.

London, May 31.

ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQUIRE, OF GREAT BRITAIN, TO LOUIS XIV. OF FRANCE.

'The surprising news which arrived this day, of your Majesty's having refused to sign the treaty your ministers have in a manner sued for, is what gives ground to this application to your Majesty, from one, whose name perhaps is too obscure to have ever reached your territories; but one, who, with all the European World, is affected with your determinations. Therefore, as it is mine and the common cause of mankind, I presume to expostulate with you on this occasion. It will, I doubt not, appear to the vulgar extravagant, that the actions of a mighty Prince of a private person, equally contented with the thrones shown, through great a value true fame like whom it is of honour of human life which attend it is that our it; and extend existence, in actions, after have this passion, which to honest at peace, eloquence have been p faculties, that have been of of prostitute upon such a contempt and misled your and made the imitable, the the great a Majesty is n your Majesty the most cruel which are u that it avails that you are successful w action passed have searched word, that y with every p to unjust an of the world ever if your your own s weaknesses convinced, t nary method it impossible on as to have many thousa formed by F hazard of th and glory of very little re such cannot what horror the vast dev your fellow the flattery success and illusion of n you proceed but when personal dis men forget heavens! is can the wret torments? c

'Your Ma you a railing fessor of reli they will be, which would offend in another, are passed over. The least of his faults and speeches which please, find favour, as if they came from him; nor can one wonder at this, because when he is wrong, he is not taken notice of; when he is in the right—By the way, it is felt enough, that the care people of better sense than this, will be endeavour at this character; but they are not contented with that, with some industry, to get the characters of fools, they cannot arrive at being called in to be merely 'Pretty Fellows.' Believe me, I have formed a person for this station, who, I think, will be gifted with a probable good nature, and he's very pretty wares and absurd contrivance to it; this felicity attending him to be so useful, and being in a manner necessary that he should be so; and in consequence, he is as well, good for nothing, as I and know a man, whose son has become a 'Pretty Fellow,' who is himself at all things, a very 'Pretty Fellow.'

One must not linger in this place, for we were told that halibuts, and speaking of such things, are supported by their influence and favour, and when there is not, neither ought there to be, any dispute or observation. But when we are in June 2. — On Monday, one may talk a bit be more at large. — Our men have then to mention three, when I begin with the first, "that we go," so a decision should be made as to whether to go or not, as our men Butler, then perhaps others, I think, have shouted into this order. They are concerned in the business, they landed from H. B. as yet. They are not yet, but they made their public entry, but the Party had, and so at Wapping. They have made their way, especially on the water-side, particularly today, the day of the first of the H. B. school; the second, Calverton, on the 10th, the third, Massicot. This fraternity is preparing to go, and also the town, by their ability in the case of the first, the second, and measure their time and meet to be at the new, and a power of drinking. H. B. school, the first, the second, the third, Calverton, by two quarts and a half, the third, Massicot, by a full pint. It is felt that the first of H. B. is so soon to talk, and Calverton, the second, the third, Massicot will be the only talk, and the first, the second, the third, Massicot will be the only talk.

A flock out of this denomination is such as, by considering all streams in life, have purchased the blessing of power and new life, as in the Carry, to the great increase of strength and vigor. For Deacons are called to possess less of earth and health and more of the Carry meritorious to them, as,

But even if these materializing spirits are proposed to be the cause of the French spirits, would crime at periods of national distress be limited to the 18th and 19th centuries? If these spirits are well intentioned, it is not doubtful that they would do good, as they already do in arms.

N. B. The man who stole Betty Pagan made a confession that he is allowed to be a very Pagan man. He was.

But we may proceed to the explanation of the

There is a great deal of property in the country, as I have said, and the property is so well distributed, that in twenty years it will be all sold off, and much upon the credit of the Government. The word, and the acceptance of it, among the people is, "Hurry, it is all a great deal to buy."

[illegible]

who use it immoderately to speak Latin, to the admiration rather than information of an audience. This application of a toast makes it very obvious that the word may, without a metaphor, be understood as an apt name for a thing which raises us in the most sovereign degree. But many of the wits of the last age will assert that the word in its present sense, was known among them in their youth, and had its rise from an accident at the town of Bath, in the reign of King Charles the Second.

It happened that, on a public day, a celebrated beauty of those times was in the Cross-Bath, and one of the crowd of her admirers took a glass of the water in which the fair one stood, and drank her health to the company. There was in the place a gay fellow half-fuddled, who offered to jump in, and swore, though he liked not the liquor, he would have the toast. He was opposed in his resolution; yet this whim gave foundation to the present honour which is done to the lady we mention in our liquors, who has ever since been called a Toast.

Though this institution had so trivial a beginning, it is now elevated into a formal order; and that happy virgin, who is received and drunk to at their meeting, has no more to do in this life but to judge and accept of the first good offer. The manner of her inauguration is much like that of the choice of a Doge in Venice; it is performed by balloting; and when she is so chosen, she reigns indisputably for that ensuing year; but must be elected a-new to prolong her empire a moment beyond it. When she is regularly chosen, her name is written with a diamond on a drinking-glass. The hieroglyphic of the diamond is to show her, that her value is imaginary; and that of the glass to acquaint her, that her condition is frail, and depends on the hand which holds her. This wise design admonishes her, neither to over-rate or depreciate her charms; as well considering and applying, that it is perfectly according to the humour and taste of the company, whether the toast is eaten, or left as an offal.

The foremost of the whole rank of toasts, and the most indisputed in their present empire, are Mrs. Gatty and Mrs. Frontlet; the first an agreeable, the second an awful beauty. These ladies are perfect friends, out of a knowledge, that their perfections are too different to stand in competition. He that likes Gatty can have no relish for so solemn a creature as Frontlet; and an admirer of Frontlet will call Gatty a maypole girl. Gatty for ever smiles upon you; and Frontlet disdains to see you smile. Gatty's love is a shining quick flame; Frontlet's, a slow wasting fire. Gatty likes the man that diverts her; Frontlet, him who adores her. Gatty always improves the soil in which she travels; Frontlet lays waste the country. Gatty does not only smile, but laughs at her lover; Frontlet not only looks serious, but frowns at him. All the men of wit (and coxcombs their followers) are professed servants of Gatty: the politicians and pretenders give solemn worship to Frontlet. Their reign will be best judged of by its duration. Frontlet will never be chosen more; and Gatty is a toast for life.

St. James's Coffee-house, June 3.

Letters from Hamburgh of the seventh instant, N. S. inform us, that no art or cost is omitted to make the stay of his Danish majesty at Dresden agreeable; but there are various speculations upon the interview between king Augustus and that prince, many putting politic constructions upon his Danish majesty's marching out Saxony, who recruited.

have invited His majesty has passed to Muscovites, towards Vol Stanislaus a

We hear
there is not
court is no public em
The general at Baden, b that the aff

Letters f instant, N. acquainted had refused adjusted wi Sunday morn

met a comm
Van Hesse were assem before them tations, rep had laid op a complian

her meanne Monsieur ministers o expressed t of the Frenc of the const proceed wit enemy. He from the H lay that nig next mornin

a design to troops in th
the general
Lis; the w instant; an will advanc

mean time French forc
Yesterday squadron u for Holland

Yesterda
squadron u
for Holland

I have th
gentleman
order the h

'Mr
'Thoug
your family the same g this post to manner un seen there

'Thoug
Yet,
Of late
Tha

LIFE.

executioner escapes the clutches of the hangman for doing it. I shall therefore hereafter consider, how the bravest men in other ages and nations have behaved themselves upon such incidents as we decide by combat; and show, from their practice, that the resentment neither has its foundation from true reason or solid fame; but is an imposture, made of cowardice, falsehood, and want of understanding. For this work, a good history of quarrels would be very edifying to the public, and I apply myself to the town for particulars and circumstances within their knowledge, which may serve to embellish the dissertation with proper cuts. Most of the quarrels I have ever known, have proceeded from some vain coxcomb's persisting in the wrong, to defend some prevailing folly, and preserve himself from the ignominy of owning a mistake.

By this means it is called 'giving a man satisfaction,' to urge your offence against him with your sword; which puts me in mind of Peter's order to the keeper, in 'The Tale of a Tub: if you neglect to do all this, damn you and your generation forever: and so we bid you heartily farewell.' If the contradictions in the very terms of one of our challenges were as well explained and turned into downright English, would it not run after this manner?

'Sir—Your extraordinary behaviour last night and the liberty you were pleased to take with me makes me this morning give you this, to tell you because you are an ill-bred puppy, I will meet you in Hyde-park an hour hence; and because you want both breeding and humanity, I desire you would come with a pistol in your hand, on horseback, an endeavour to shoot me through the head, to teach you more manners. If you fail of doing me this pleasure, I shall say you are a rascal, on every point in town; and so, sir, if you will not injure me more I shall never forgive what you have done already. Pray, sir, do not fail of getting every thing ready and you will infinitely oblige, sir, your most obedient humble servant, &c.'

From my own Apartment, June 6.

Among the many employments I am necessarily put upon by my friends, that of giving advice is the most unwelcome to me; and, indeed, I am forced to use a little art in the manner; for some people will ask counsel of you, when they have already acted what they tell you is still under deliberation. I have almost lost a very good friend the other day, who came to know 'how I liked his design to marry such a lady?' I answered, 'By no means; and I must be positive against it, for very solid reasons, which are not proper to be communicated.' 'Not proper to be communicated!' said he, with a grave air, 'I will know the bottom of this.' I saw him moved, and knew from thence he was already determined; therefore evaded it by saying, 'To tell you the truth, dear Frank, of all women living I would have her myself.' 'Isaac,' said he, 'thou art too late, for we have been both one these two months.'

I learned this caution by a gentleman's consulting me formerly about his son. He railed at his daughter's extravagance, and told me, 'in a very little time he would beggar him by the exorbitant bills which came from Oxford every quarter.' 'Make the rogue hit upon the bridle,' said I; 'pay none of his bills, I will but encourage him to further trespasses.' He looked plaguy sour at me. His son soon after sent up a paper of verses, forsooth, in print on the last public occasion; upon which, he is convinced that boy has parts, and a lad of spirit is not to be to ch cramped in his maintenance, lest he take ill rises. Neither father nor son can ever since en-re the sight of me.

These sort of people ask opinions only out of the ness of their heart on the subject of their persity, and not from a desire of information.

There is nothing so easy as to find out which opinion the man in doubt has a mind to; therefore the re way is, to tell him that is certainly to be chosen.
Then you are to be very clear and positive; leave no middle for scruple. 'Bless me! sir, there is no doubt for a question!' This rivets you into his heart; for you at once applaud his wisdom, and ratify his inclination. However, I had too much civels to be insincere to a man who came yesterday to know of me, with which of two eminent men in the city he should place his son? their names are Paulo and Avaro. This gave me much debate with myself, because not only the fortune of the youth, but his virtue also dependeth upon this choice. The men are equally wealthy; but they differ in the use and application of their riches, which you immediately see upon entering their doors.

The habitation of Paulo has at once the air of a nobleman and a merchant. You see the servants act with affection to their master, and satisfaction in themselves: the master meets you with an open countenance, full of benevolence and integrity: your business is despatched with that confidence and welcome which always accompany honest minds: his table is the image of plenty and generosity, supported by justice and frugality. After we had dined here, our affair was to visit Avaro: out comes an awkward fellow, with a careful countenance; 'Sir, would you speak with my master? may I crave your name?' After the first preamble, he leads us into a noble solitude, a great house that seemed uninhab-ited; but from the end of the spacious hall moves towards us Avaro, with a suspicious aspect, as if he had believed us thieves; and, as for my part, I approached him as if I knew him a cutpurse. We fell into discourse of his noble dwelling, and the great estate all the world knew he had to enjoy in it: and I, to plague him, began to commend Paulo's way of living. 'Paulo,' answered Avaro, 'is a very good man; but we, who have smaller estates, must cut our coat according to our cloth.' 'Nay,' says I, 'every man knows his own circumstances best; you are in the right, if you have not wherewithal.' He looked very sour; for it is, you must know, the utmost vanity of a mean-spirited rich man to be contradicted when he calls himself poor. But I resolved to vex him, by consenting to all he said; the main design of which was, that he would have us find out, he was one of the wealthiest men in London, and lived like a beggar. We left him, and took a turn on the Exchange. My friend was ravisht with Avaro: 'this,' said he, 'is certainly a sure man.' I contradicted him with much warmth, and summed up their different characters as well as I could. 'This Paulo,' said I, 'grows wealthy by being a common good; Avaro by being a general evil: Paulo has the art, Avaro the craft of trade.
When Paulo gains, all men he deals with are the better: whenever Avaro profits, another certainly loses. In a word, Paulo is a citizen, and Avaro a cit.' I convinced my friend, and carried the young gentleman the next day to Paulo, where he will learn the way both to gain and enjoy a good fortune. And though I cannot say I have, by keeping him from Avaro, saved him from the gallows, I have prevented his deserving it every day he lives:

for with Paulo being so for have been a v St.

We hear
Baron Imhoff
with the ch Wo.fembatte brought an with the tro returned to advices of t Majesty had at Dresden, meet his M Prussia has position will has sent the to Berlin or Minister of from his mas Botizau, the acquaints hi the Muscovi since his ma have revolted went over to so have take of his Swedi Advices fr
N. S., say, active campe
against the
and the Fr animate the victorious an had passed
the Duke of both there a publicly dec
their deput
from France to the issue
time, they h
published,
order to qui them that i
to procure Majesty's g
His grace
Eugene arriv
at an asse
thought pre have lately
ing the troo
would perpe expedition.

Advices fr
N. S., say,
active campe
against the
and the Fr
animate the victorious an
had passed
the Duke of both there a
publicly dec
their deput
from France
to the issue
time, they h
published,
order to qui
them that i
to procure Majesty's g
His grace
Eugene arriv
at an asse
thought pre
have lately
ing the troo
would perpe
expedition.

No. 26.]

I have re approbation James's, an clerks for e
before they those place the descrip
cluded, acc

SIR—'Y
me a noble

away with me a spirit which had lost its body in a duel. We were both examined. Me the whole assembly looked at with kindness and pity, but, at the same time, with an air of welcome and consolation: they pronounced me very happy, who had died in innocence; and told me, "a quite different place was allotted for my companion; there being a great distance from the mansions of fools and innocents: though, at the same time, said one of the ghosts, there is a great affinity between an idiot who has been so for a long life, and a child who departs before maturity. But this gentleman who has arrived with you is a fool of his own making, is ignorant out of choice, and will fare accordingly." The assembly began to flock about him, and one said to him, "Sir, I observed you came in through the gate of persons murdered, and I desire to know what brought you to your untimely end?" He said, "he had been a second." Socrates (who may be said to have been murdered by the commonwealth of Athens) stood by and began to draw near him, in order, after his manner, to lead him into a sense of his error by concessions in his own discourse. "Sir," said that divine and amicable spirit, "what was the quarrel?" He answered, "We shall know very suddenly when the principal in the business comes, for he was desperately wounded before I fell." "Sir," said the sage, "had you an estate?" "Yes, sir," the new guest answered, "I have left it in a very good condition, and made my will the night before this occasion." "Did you read it before you signed it?" "Yes, sure, sir," said the new comer. Socrates replies, "Could a man, that would not give his estate without reading the instrument, dispose of his life without asking a question?" That illustrious shade turned from him, and a crowd of impertinent goblins, who had been drolls and parasites in their life-time, and were knocked on the head for their sauciness, came about my fellow-traveller, and made themselves very merry with questions about the words Carte and Tierce, and other terms of fencers. But his thoughts began to settle into reflection upon the adventure which had robbed him of his late being; and, with a wretched sigh, said he, "How terrible are conviction and guilt, when they come too late for penitence!"

Pacolet was going on in his strain, but he recovered from it, and told me, 'It was too soon to give my discourse on this subject so serious a turn; you have chiefly to do with that part of mankind which must be led into reflection by degrees, and you must treat this custom with humour and raillery to get an audience, before you come to pronounce sentence upon it. There is foundation enough for raising such entertainments, from the practice on this occasion. Do not you know that often a man is called out of bed to follow implicitly a coxcomb (with whom he would not keep company on any other occasion) to ruin and death?—Then a good list of such as are qualified by the laws of these uncourteous men of chivalry to enter into combat (who are often persons of honour without common honesty;) these, I say, ranged and drawn up in their proper order, would give an aversion to doing any thing in common with such as men laugh at and condemn. But to go through this work, you must not let your thoughts vary, or make excursions from your theme: consider, at the same time, that the matter has been often treated by the ablest and greatest writers; yet that must not discourage you: for the properest person to handle it, is one who has roved into mixed conversations, and must have opportunities (which I shall give you) of seeing these sort of men in their pleasures and gratifications, among which pleasantly duels first taken away fighting to divert them

No. 27.]

PACOLET
the sword, the frequent with martial room left the readers, who people who
But in my last month, of all bad c

A RAKE lives, is on proceed not passions and for the cure and good-na and educat
have been wretch that his good qu him someti be never so desires run force of a li unlawful pl in to his re in the worl
against heav
who all call not a being goes on in no enjoyment relief from
It is possib indulgence;
character wh
in the worl
gout, or any a condition, and repents with broken impotent co reason is in miserable ci time in his
it. This is Rake has th is himself, a his natural eye of favour

But if v rogues are man hates h the evening
How ought if it were m selves ill-de say, he tha followers; a never expect sure, of all, a folly m and had been so high a theme as heart. For that, which then, so, world, by like nothing, a poor man's first attempt. Among the few to the family, he found her parent not to be to the house, he saw Paul and her, when the young girl, to write against him, had trial and loss, therefore he resolved to clamor his interest in the fall wine prison;

TO A LADY, ON HER PARTOT.

When men's hearts were gay, and love could not be vain;
The gods descend'd were sold in known to fair;
Some in a cloister, but yet a feather'd Jove Sung out the tale, and taught her how to live, There's no costal but his heart on would quit, For joy to him which might to these admit,
Some saw the woman bind at every glance,
Some with glad climes, and took an amorous trace, Some saw of beauty has forsok the dove; Henceforth the world be the land of love.

“I should have put on something to do it, but I did not; the paper from the old shop was all I had. I was in the store of my own, and I had no money to buy the dress off. I was sure that if I went to the change of Vienne, had I been there, I should have seen something a third of the size of the dress, with a slight variation, that to be a perfect success, by any way to succeed, and to be a advantage, to be a success. In the same would go on, and I would be the best of the bird to wives up, and I would be loved by women, must never be in the favour, or on his, and after it.”

From my own Apartment, June 19.

I take so many messages from young gentlemen who expect prominence and distinction, that I have a guess in what manner to acquaint you. The letter of the following letter tells me in a very plain manner, that you cannot get out of town until I have taken notice of him, and is very urgent to be embodied in, because he returns to his country in a few days. But take it in himself—

ISAAC BUCKERSTADT, ESQ. MONITOR-GENERAL OF GREAT BRITAIN.

SIR, St. Louis, June 5

"I had been at least six miles from the university when these two men met me, and so long in travel was recommended to one Charles Baddeley, a friend of Temple's who has supplied me with all the furniture I now ought to have. I don't like the time of it from what he said we had enjoyed, but I must consider it, and when I went visited him at his house, he told me, upon due consideration, that I must sell some few odd things in my room, to the value of about five or six pounds, to make me easy. I have complied therewith, in the favor of your cause, when I am equipped, in what part of the continent this town you will please me. Buy some good wine what I can, and I you shall find me."

I am, your most humble servant,

JIFFRY NICKNICK

I am very willing to encourage young beginners, but am extremely in the dark how to dispose of this fellow. I must see either his personal file in this matter; but I will read at Charles's, and know more of his smut-box, by which I can settle the matter. Though indeed, I know his full catalogue, I ought to be informed whether he takes Spanish Musty.

THE TATLER.

St. James's Coffee-house, June 10.

ers from the Low Countries of the seventeenth say: that the Duke of Marlborough and the of Savoy intend to leave Ghent on that day, n the army which lies between Pont d'Espiere urtray, their head-quarters being at Helchin. me day the Palatine foot were expected at ls. Lieutenant-general Dompere, with a body t thousand men, is posted at Alost, in order to Ghent and Brussels. The Marshal de Villars ill on the plain of Lenz; and it is said the of Vendosme is appointed to command in con- n with that General. Advices from Paris say, ur Voisin is made secretary of state, upon ur Chamillard's resignation of that employ- The want of money in that kingdom is so hat the court has thought fit to command all e of private families to be brought into the They write from the Hague of the eighteenth, e states of Holland continue their session; at they have approved the resolution of the general, to publish a second edict to prohibit e of corn to the enemy. Many eminent persons assembly have declared that they are of , that all commerce whatsoever with France be wholly forbidden: which point is under deliberation; but it is feared it will meet werful opposition.

] TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 1709.

White's Chocolate-house, June 13.

o suspended the business of duelling to a time, but that I am called upon to declare on a point proposed in the following letter.

SIR,

June 9, at night.

sire the favor of you to decide this question, calling a gentleman a Smart fellow is an r not? A youth entering a certain coffee- rith his cane tied to his button, wearing red- hoës, I thought of your description, and could bear telling a friend of mine next to me, enters a Smart Fellow." The gentleman it had immediately a mind to pick a quarrel , and desired satisfaction; at which I was zed than at the other, remembering what your familiar makes of those that had lost es on such occasions. The thing is referred judgements; and I expect you to be my since you have been the cause of our quarrel; r, your friend and humble servant.' lutely pronounce, that there is no occasion ce given in this expression; for a 'Smart is always an appellation of praise, and is a man e capacity. The true cast or mould in which e be sure to know him is, when his livelihood ation is in the civil list, and you see him a vivacity or mettle above the way he is in, le jerk in his motion, short trip in his steps, ed lining of his coat, or any other indica- ich may be given in a vigorous dress. Now, ssible insinuation can there be that it is a quarrel for a man to say, he allows a gentle- lly to be what his tailor, his hosier, and his e have conspired to make him? I confess, erson who appeals to me had said, he was not 'Fellow,' there had been cause for resentment; e stands to it that he is one, he leaves no man- e for misunderstanding. Indeed it is a entable thing, that there should be a dispute raised upon a man's takes pains to be t

But this point enquiring what are and communities of thence conclude wh so frequently or no of Italy has preserv letting one of their instrument; always mankind as unders little, as to make a and scars.

But what need w Our own ancient as spicuous examples of military achieve the noble Italians, their stead; and y perate fortune, for through all the d Artillery-Ground, c of the touch-hole of with as little concern see, to what scorn o out of a mere love o should take off the s favor of bold action motives men aspire common practice in bodies, our militia a corps of soldiers, per whether there is one any two of these ill institution, which w ber indeed to have which had like to b very field before all of them were justice of Birching-lane, ha Major General Mag street. Crabtree dr got and company. A and not understanding drawing bills on me Mr. Jeffrey Stitch of major-general's comp seen march by the d mission. The Lieut of the company, si repayment being as absolutely refuses. of nothing less than takes for his second and sends him with ment, wherein was w all the fury vanished neral gives satisfactio Hence it is, that kept in such subject where would our libe were suffered to exer force? If such officer bands above-mention swords, these dange an army as well as l the state. But the to that of gain; and richest is the bravest rise to a colonel in tv a major, my good frie to that honour by of gallantry. It is to avoid being sneered at for his singularity, and from a desire to appear more agreeable to his mistress, that a wise, experienced, and polite man complies with the dress commonly received; and is prevailed upon to violate his reason and principles, in hazarding his life and estate by a tilt, as well as suffering his pleasures to be constrained and soured by the constant apprehension of a quarrel. This is the more surprising, because men of the most delicate sense and principles have naturally in other cases a particular repugnance in accommodating themselves to the maxims of the world; but one may easily distinguish the man that is affected with beauty, and the reputation of a tilt, from him who complies with both, merely as they are imposed upon him by custom; for, in the former, you will remark an air of vanity and triumph; whereas, when the latter appears in a long facillier full of powder, or has decided a quarrel by the sword, you may perceive in his face, that he appeals to custom for an excuse. I think it may not be improper to inquire into the genealogy of this chimerical monster called a Duel, which I take to be an illegitimate species of the ancient knight-errantry. By the laws of this whim, the heroic person, or man of gallantry, was indispensably obliged to starve in armour a certain number of years in the chase of monsters, encountering them at the peril of his life, and suffer great hardships, in order to gain the affection of the fair lady, and qualify himself for assuming the belle air; that is, of a Pretty Fellow, or man of honour, according to the fashion; but, since the publishing of Don Quixote, and extinction of the race of dragons, which Suetonius says happened in that of Wantley, the gallant and heroic spirits of these latter times have been under the necessity of creating new chimerical monsters to entertain themselves with, by way of single combat, as the only proofs they are able to give their own sex, and the ladies, that they are in all points men of nice honour. But, to do justice to the ancient and real monsters, I must observe, that they never molested those who were not of a humour to hunt for them in woods and deserts; whereas, on the contrary, our modern monsters are so familiarly admitted and entertained in all the courts and cities of Europe (except France), that one can scarce be in the most humanized society without risking one's life; the people of the best sort, and the fine gentlemen of the age, being so fond of them, that they seldom appear in any public place without one. I have some further considerations upon this subject, which, as you encourage me, shall be communicated to you by, Sir, a cousin but one remove from the best family of the Staffs, namely, Sir, your humble servant, kinsman, and friend,

'TIM SWITCH.'

It is certain that Mr. Switch has hit upon the true source of this evil; and that it proceeds only from the force of custom, that we contradict ourselves in half the particulars and occurrences of life. But such a tyranny in love, which the fair impose upon us, is a little too severe; that we must demonstrate our affection for them by no certain proof but hatred to one another, or come at them (only as one does at an estate) by survivorship. This way of application to gain a lady's heart is taking her as we do towns and castles, by distressing the place, and letting none come near them without our pass. Were such a lover once to write the truth of his heart, and let her know his whole thoughts, he would appear indeed to have a passion for her; but it would hardly be called love. The billet-doux would run to this purpose:—

'MADAM
your interest whom I oblige Truman, than ing a manner
to-morrow
his guilt have a great that you also you, I will him. I am servant.'

FR.

I AM just since six, but nauseous ec-ciety were a great oppo-
they are the
of any two judgment,
same failure poverty of t
of this fac-
it. It is a p that of all ensuring him are of conse-
thing but w by which m a censor. 'I dispute on t mence. If which shoul prevents the armour, but but can gain has been hu that judge natural fac-be as much o
A thorough world. As ordinary occ examples on in his speech celebrated v sentence. I with these k of their nat-they were a relation to e course; so when repr-tion in his v such a char-
same man-nature, and Wit, who is be at a loss
only, that th fire in the u circumstance generally so profession.
the occasion
Thus, he is talks like no his own, wi people. The racter. He and you ing days

to
to without and answer was any is a Critic They have but keep in Deceit every man der: but I at Spence my v. h. a active has Spence able heart you let
g. a. a. d id to have filled the
d. i. c. e. e. ous Caval mal inter lation to dillions of t; among Marquis
Monsieur
the pre-himself, it
isid. i. c. e. remate governors entirely as
; but as that we we must ve are ex-esire you aint him power is for a time the d. e. nem; but
m. Your or fairly majesty is to see k by other t seem to pition of our people rance had his arms
th. s. we ney of the
s. King of
ach. on he Great and an-compound it equals not wish lose one ace you noted and doubt not but your Majesty's authorities will require the ratification of the state of your kingdom. So we bid you heartily farewell and we have the honour to meet you assembled in parliament. This happy expectation makes us wish to see at the event of another campaign, from which we hope to be raised from the misery of slaves to the condition of subjects. We are your Majesty's truly loved and loyal subjects, &c.

No. 20. SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1709.

From my own Apartment June 18.

THE violence, the anxiety, the tenderness, which I find in the mind of people in England, I am persuaded, will be time to much commended; but I doubt whether they will be ever rewarded. However, I will be on this fully in my work of reformation that bears my great design, I am studious to pro-my labours increasing upon me, therefore am particularly observant of the temper and inclinations of children and youth, that we may not give vice and folly supplies from the growing generation. It is hardly to be imagined how useful this study is, and what great evils or benefits arise from putting us in our tender years to what we are fit or unfit; therefore, on Tuesday last (with a design to sound their inclinations) I took three lads, who are under my guard-ship, assembling in a hackney-coach, to show them the town: as the lions, the tombs, Bedlam, and the other places which are entertainments to raw minds, because they strike forcibly on the fancy. The boys are brothers, one of sixteen, the other of fourteen, the other of twelve. The first was his father's darling, the second his mother's, and the third mine, who am their uncle. Mr. William is a lad of true genius; but, being at the upper end of a great School, and having all the boys below him, his arrogance is incor-porable. If I begin to show a little of my Latin, he immediately interrupts: 'Uncle, under favor, that which you say, is not understood in that manner.'
'Brother,' says my boy Jack, 'you do not shew your manners much in contradicting my uncle Isaac.' 'You queer cur,' says Mr. William, 'do you think my uncle takes any notice of such a dull rogue as you are?' Mr. William goes on, 'He is the most stupid of all my mother's children: he knows nothing of his book: when he should mind that, he is hiding or looming, his laws and marbles, or laying up farthings.
His way of thinking is, four-and-twenty farthings make sixpence, and two sixpences a shilling; two shillings and sixpence half-a-crown, and two half-crowns five shillings. So within these two months the close hanks has scraped up twenty shillings, and we will make him spend it all before he comes home.' Jack immediately claps his hands into both pockets, and turns as pale as ashes. There is nothing touches a parent (and such I am to Jack) so nearly as a provident conduct. This lad has in him the true temper for a good husband, a kind father, and an honest executor. All the great people you see make considerable figures on the exchange, in court, and sometimes in senates, are such as in reality have no greater faculty than what may be called human instinct, which is a natural tendency to their own preservation, and that of their friends, without being capable of striking out of the road for adventurers.
There is Sir William Scrip was of this sort of capacity from his childhood; he has bought the country round him, and makes a bargain better than Sir Harry Wildfire, with all his wit and humour. Sir Harry never wants money but he comes to Scrip, laughs at him half an hour, and then gives bond for the other thousand. The close men are incapable of placing merit any where but in their pence, and therefore gain it; while others, who have larger capacities, are diverted from the pursuit by enjoyments which can be supported only by that cash which they despise; and, therefore, are in the end slaves to their inferiors both in fortune and understanding. I once heard a man of excellent sense observe, that more affairs in the world failed by being in the hands of men of too large capacities for their business, than by being in the conduct of such as wanted abilities to execute them. Jack, therefore, being of a plodding make, shall be a citizen: and I design him to be the refuge of the family in their distress, as well as their jest in prosperity. His brother Will shall go to Oxford with all speed, where, if he does not arrive at being a man of sense, he will soon be informed wherein he is a coxcomb. There is in that place such a true spirit of raillery and humour, that if they cannot make you a wise man, they will certainly let you know you are a fool; which is all my cousin wants, to cease to be so. Thus, having taken these two out of the way, I have leisure to look at my third lad. I observe in the young rogue a natural subtilty of mind, which discovers itself rather in forbearing to declare his thoughts on any occasion, than in any visible way of exerting himself in discourse. For which reason I will place him, where, if he commits no faults, he may go farther than those in other stations, though they excel in virtues. The boy is well-fashioned, and will easily fall into a graceful manner; wherefore, I have a design to make him a page to a great lady of my acquaintance; by which means he will be well skilled in the common modes of life, and make a greater progress in the world by that knowledge, than with the greatest qualities without it. A good mien in a court, will carry a man greater lengths than a good understanding in any other place. We see a world of pains taken, and the best years of life spent in collecting a set of thoughts in a college for the conduct of life, and, after all, the man so qualified shall hesitate in his speech to a good suit of cloaths, and want common sense before an agreeable woman. Hence it is, that wisdom, valour, justice, and learning, cannot keep a man in countenance that is possessed with these excellencies, if he wants that inferior art of life and behaviour, called good-breeding. A man endowed with great perfections, without this, is like one who has his pockets full of gold, but always wants change for his ordinary occasions.

Will Courtly is a living instance of this truth, and has had the same education which I am giving my nephew. He never spoke a thing but what was said before, and yet can converse with the wittiest men without being ridiculous. Among the learned, he does not appear ignorant; nor with the wise indiscreet. Living in conversation from his infancy, makes him no where at a loss; and a long familiarity with the persons of men, is, in a manner, of the same service to him, as if he knew their arts. As ceremony is the invention of wise men to keep fools at a distance, so good-breeding is an expedient to make fools and wise men equals.

Will's Coffee-house, June 17.

The suspension of the play-house has made me have nothing to send you from hence; but calling here this evening, I found the party I usually sit with, upon the business of writing, and examining what was to be done for the women, and the opinion of this subject for I know it is an inexpressible pleasure there was a letter, but I face to face that I am more than any for, when I solid and I of her, join your mind language seldom such as he pleases more under and women. He that support this is much to see the whole possible, to sigh for her own sake to hope for I produced writ by two were both battle of gay-humour but a great this is his it is so nee peeping in no exactness

'MADAM am in, the company we shall go upon a fair left you to have ended drive you are more to permit you downright as his grave man of to Therefore shall come with quite say, I rest obedient, I

Now for folded and

'MADAM this evening day of bat that I shall hear I have love of h woman of going to a I meet it in your es is prefera I say, ma

He had on account that he had read "Temperance Guard Abolitionist," and had told that data as a very good part of the law; for when a man's name is put into his hand, the person that put it on is not to be put off or defendant, may put it on in any the day. Further, he said, and under fact that the court, that when the issue is joined by the defendant, or other capital crimes, the parties would not fight in their own people, but in the hands of the king, or any where else. The court in the law we had from the Saxons; and he said it, as the trial by ordeal, from the English. It is, I had agreed, said he, the southern and western nations never know any thing of it; for the ancient Romans would send and call names in, or the other is not an example of a challenge that is passed among them.

It is among the eastern nations, but another gentleman in mind of an account he had from a business of an East Indian; which was, that a Chinese had tricked and bubbled him, and that then he came to demand satisfaction the next morning, and like a true man of honour called him a son of a whore, a dog, and other rough appellatives used by persons conversant with winds and waves; the Chinese, with great tranquillity, desired him not to come near his festive, nor put himself into a passion, nor would he produce his wealth. Thus the east is more than the west in tranquillity.

There is a lot of the table a person of a considerable aspect, who asserted, that 'half the negroes, which are put upon those ages have been translated by writers who have given too great pains and magnificence to the exploits of their noble bear-garden, and made their gladiators, by fatal mistakes, greater than Gomer and others of Great Britain.' He informed the company, that he had consulted authorities for what he said, and that a learned antiquary, Humphrey Scarcecrow, esquire, of Hockley in the Hole, resorted to the Bear-garden, was then writing a discourse on the subject. He says by the following words, 'says this gentleman, that the lion names, which are used among us with great veneration, were no other than stage-fighters and writhes of the ancient bear-garden. The renowned Hercules himself earned a quarter-staff, as was then termed Clavizer. A learned chronicler is now proving what wood this staff was made of, whether oak, ash, or crab-tree. The first trial which he ever performed was with one Cacus, a deer of the forest, whose name was Typhonus, a giant of four or five hundred inches. Indeed it was unappropiately recorded, that once, that last with a sailor's wife, she made him stronger, or worse, for her own use, and dwindle away to nothing, she chopped him on an old rat-jacketed wooden bed, his that this great hero dropped like a dead sheep. Then his contemporary Theseus succeeded in the bear-garden, which he nour he told for many years. This candid duelist went to hell, and was the only one of that sect that ever came to a good end. As for Achilles and Hector (as the ballads are so frequently mentioned) they were pretty smart fellows, but they got at sword and buckler; but the true strength of the matter of it. His mother, who was a very strong woman, I have not a Blacksmith of Leno's strength, but she was a good weapons. There is a pair of trusty pikes in a song of Virgil that were famous for their strength and goodly appearance, they fought no sham prize,

The Roman back-garden was abundantly more important than any thing Greece could boast of.

it flourished most under those delights of mankind, Nero and Domitian. At one time it is recorded, four hundred senators entered the list, and thought it an honour to be cudgelled and quarterstaffed. I observe the Lanistæ were the people chiefly employed, which makes me imagine our bear-garden copied much after this, the butchers being the greatest men in it.

Thus far the glory and honour of the bear-garden stood secure, until fate, that irresistible ruler of sub-lunary things, in that universal ruin of arts, and politer learning, by those savage people the Goths and Vandals, destroyed and levelled it to the ground. Then fell the grandeur and bravery of the Roman State, until at last the warlike genius (but accompanied with more courtesy) revived in the Christian world under the puissant champions, Saint George, Saint Dennis, and other dignified heroes: one killed his dragon, another his lion, and were all afterwards canonized for it, having red letters before them to illustrate their martial temper. The Spanish nation, it must be owned, were devoted to gallantry and chivalry above the rest of the world. What a great figure does that great name, Don Quixote, make in history! How shines this glorious star in the western world! O renowned hero! O mirror of knighthood!

Thy brandish'd whinyard all the world defies,
And kills as sure as del Tobosa's eyes.

I am forced to break off abruptly, being sent for in haste with my rule, to measure the degree of an affront, before the two gentlemen (who are now in their breeches and pumps ready to engage behind Montague-house) have made a pass.

From my own Apartment, June 18.

It is an unreasonable objection, I find, against my labours, that my stock is not all my own; and, therefore, the kind reception I have met with, is not so deserved as it ought to be. But I hope, though it be never so true, that I am obliged to my friends for laying their cash in my hands, since I give it them again when they please, and leave them at their liberty to call it home, it will not hurt me with my gentle readers. Ask all the merchants who act upon consignments, where is the necessity (if they answer readily what their correspondents draw) of their being wealthy themselves? Ask the greatest bankers, if all the men they deal with were to draw at once, what would be the consequence? But, indeed, a country friend has writ me a letter which gives me great mortification; wherein I find I am so far from expecting a supply from thence, that some have not heard of me, and the rest do not understand me: his epistle is as follows:—

'DEAR COUSIN—I thought, when I left the town, to have raised your fame here, and helped you to support it by intelligence from hence; but, alas! they had never heard of the Tatler until I brought down a set. I lent them from house to house, but they asked me what they meant. I began to enlighten them, by telling who and who were supposed to be intended by the characters drawn. I said, for instance, Chloe and Clarissa are two eminent toasts. A gentleman, who keeps his greyhound and gun, and one would think might know better, told me, he supposed they were Papishes, for their names were not English. 'Then,' said he, 'why do you call live people toasts?' I answered, 'That was a new name found out by the wits, to make a lady have the same effect as burridge in the glass when a man is drinking. But, says I, Sir, I perceive this is to you all bamboozled. Diego'd to good laugh though he the town, be content and fame describe it, lest, like their own not know excuse me and only I conversatic

This even one of them yet really talked a go standing. panion am brisk air, the other, enough. but the se style, and pens to d 'Madam,' office.' U and sits in for my hea see how sh We sat do 'Two han Slim, 'Ay fewer the was as wit and so help have you f manners t greatest ta eats up all would thin how he tal roguish an Slim, who cries, 'Ye versation.'

It is so appeared when in pr

A mail the 12th, f at Torra A of the arm camp of J with a de According towards B de Bay de Olivenza, a large de visions tow and march from the S necessarily * * * Wh who fell u printers c g, in the lin," and ate, and by your u, taken se, shall les a set passion, I prevent otion that this and promise at an to rect them classes in om Clay-

onest Mr. ce in our

his, intely edition, I ary ques-len on my 1709.

rk, and at a preature of the con-nolled set to, to is, pretty
pleasure, y under-ish to, to makes her hundred and a half ive part, girl. She ed, sent,
her, and
of O'Connell, ha'nt, in pen in his in, and I bed, and oldest, and
For the her, and elf, and ckons, and ds are bently, she shes, in her sex;
the, and
I, and of, and rent, and out, and direction, way with dise, and because, if she should recant, she may then hate me perhaps, in the other extreme, for my tenuity. I am (with impatience) your most humble servant, CHARLES STURDY.

My patient has put his case with very much warmth, and represented it in so lively a manner, that I see both his torment and tormentor with great perspicuity. This order of Platonic ladies are to do it with in a manner peculiar from all the rest of the sex. Flattery is the general way, and the way in this case; but it is not to be done grossly. Every man that has wit, and humour, and railery, can make a good flatterer for women in general; but a Platonic is not to be touched with panegyric; she will tell you, it is a sensuality in the soul to be delighted that way. You are not therefore to commend, but silently consent to all she does and says. You are to consider, in her the scorn of you is no honour, but opinion.

There were, some years since, a set of these ladies who were of quality, and gave out, that virginity was to be their state of life during this mortal condition, and therefore resolved to join their fortunes and erect a nunnery. The place of residence was pitched upon; and a pretty situation, full of natural beauties and risings of waters, with shady covert, and flowery arbores, was approved by seven of the founders. There were as many of our sex who took the liberty to visit their mansions of intemperance; among others, a favourite rake of the time, who had the grave way to an excellence. He came in first; but on seeing a servant coming towards him with a design to tell him this was a place for him or his companions, up goes my grave respect to the maid; 'Young woman,' said he, 'one of the ladies are in the way on this side of the house, pray carry us on the other side toward the gardens; we are, you must know, gentlemen that are travelling England; after which we shall go into foreign parts, where some of us have already been. How he bows in the most humble manner, and kisses the girl, who know not how to behave to such a set of carriage. He goes on; 'Now you must know, we have an ambition to have it to say, that we have a protestant nunnery in England; but pray Mr. Betty—' 'Sir,' she replied, 'my name is Susan, at your service.' 'Then I heartily beg your pardon—' 'No offence in the least,' said she, 'for I have a coachman, whose name is Betty.' 'Indeed,' said he, 'I protest to you, that was more than I knew.' 'I spoke at random; but since it happens that I was wrong in the right, give me leave to present this gentleman to the favour of a civil salute.' His friend arose, and so on, until they had all saluted her. Betty means the poor girl was in the middle of the crowd of these fellows, at a loss what to do, without courage to pass through them; and the Platonic, a several peep-holes, pale, trembling, and fretful. Rake perceived they were observed, and therefore took care to keep Sukey in chat with questions concerning their way of life; when appeared at last Madamella, a lady who had writ a fine book concerning the reclus life, and was the projectrix of the foundation. She approaches into the hall; and Rake, knowing the dignity of his own mien and asper, and deputy from his company. She begins, 'Sir, am directed to follow the servant, who was sent out to know what affair could make strangers press upon sanctuary which we, who are to inhabit this place have devoted to heaven and our own thoughts.' 'Madam,' replies Rake, with an air of great distance.

with a certain indifference, by which he could enable dissimulation, your great intention has made noise in the world than you design it should; the travellers, who have seen many foreign institutions of this kind, have a curiosity to see, in its first efforts, the seat of primitive piety; for such it will be called by future ages, to the eternal honour of its founders: I have read Madonella's excellent graphic discourse on this subject.' The lady immediately answered, 'If what I have said could contribute to raise any thoughts in you that are for the advancement of intellectual and moral conversation, I should think myself extremely obliged.' He immediately fell back with the protest of veneration; then advancing, 'Are you then an admired lady? If I may approach lips which utter things so sacred'—He salutes her. His lady followed his example. The devoted within her amazement where this would end, to see Madonella receive their address and their company. Rake goes on—'We would not transgress rules; we may take the liberty to see the place you thought fit to choose for ever, we would go into parts of the gardens, as is consistent with the ties you have imposed on yourselves.' In short, Madonella permitted Rake to lead her to the assembly of nuns, followed by his friends, each took his fair-one by the hand, after due permission, to walk round the gardens. The conclusion turned upon the lilies, the flowers, the trees, and the growing vegetables; and Rake had lemn impudence, when the whole company stood before him, to say, that 'he sincerely wished men to rise out of the earth like plants; and that our women were not of necessity to be sullied with carnal appetites for the generation, as well as for that of our species.' This was spoken with so much fixed an assurance, that Madonella answered, under the notion of a pious thought, you deceive yourself in wishing an institution foreign to that of piety. These desires were implanted in us for other purposes, in preserving the race of men, and in affording opportunities for making our chastity more perfect. The conference was continued in this celestial strain, and carried on so well by the managers on either side, that it created a second and a third intermission, and without entering into further particulars, was hardly one of them but was a mother or daughter that day twelvemonth.

My unnatural part is long taking up and as long taking down; therefore Mr. Sturdy may assure himself, that he will fly for ever from a forward behaviour; when he approaches her according to this model, she will be all in with the necessities of mortal life, and descend to look with pity upon an unhappy man, who is so much in need of such body, and urged by such desires.

From my own Apartment, June 22.

The evils of this town increase upon me to so great a degree, that I am half afraid I shall not leave the place much better than I found it. Several worthy men and critics have applied to me, to give my opinion of an enormity which has been revived, after long suppression, and is called punning. I have had arguments ready to prove, that he cannot be a person of honour, who is guilty of this abuse of human nature. But the way to expose it is, like the expedient of curing drunkenness, showing a man in that condition; therefore I must give my reader warning, to expect a collection of these offences; without preparation, I thought it too adventurous to introduce the very same, and I hope, I shall not mention oaths at all. I shall deduce my very good friends, and whom, by his example, he is of the last age of this.

St. James's.

Last night arrived bring letters from the instant, N. S. with camped behind a series of Romiers on the far as Bethune: In their rear, and the line from Lens to caused an exact ground, and the which appeared so proper to attack the ever the Duke the designed it: his garrison at Looze, and advanced with an enemy. To favour assault, the ways in such manner, the thoughts of anything break of day next the night of the towards Tournay, the morning of the Villars was so convinced him, that he had the place, which is which reason, it is a small time, while by coming out of a general engagement garrison of Mons command of Marshal Walloons, and the grand army of the

No. 33.] SATURDAY

By MRS. JENNINGS

M

From my

My brother has and the work again very glad I have have for some time right idea of thing very odd light, and of my own sex. is necessary to make to keep the horrible rules of common

I gladly embrace with the resentment liberties of speech honoured names of my part: I had like to but the senseless sentiments of pleasure human life is becoming. My brother that the

the whole folly and we men's in them.
he is not re is very ll I have d without imposdd not be n one of way, and happens ions, and re view, a wrote, no he will it at a promis-y, to two from his of the, wa
the most st others, sports
by which for being for rob-

up to truly impertinent, as to admonish me she w lord's argument with. However, it struck me, sp city of a girl, that it may possibly be, has been might have been as favourable or more as now things of him; and as unlikely things as that he be period, if he should make me his wife. She ge mentioned this more to me; but I still in each places of he looks at this man, who easily over-are passion for him. It is so hard a thing to be the return of agreeable thoughts, that he cannot doubt my vision, my feel, my wish, my to meet.

That mistress of darkness, the holy Silence perceived how well the temper I was in, and how one day after evening, serious, needs take more back. When we were there, my lord passes on flushed me a flame. Mrs. Distaff says she, by not very well remember the concern I was in the first notice I took of your regard to the child and I have me, who had a tender friendship for another (even for grave) that I am vigilant in and a. She went on with much severity, and his of citation, prevailed on me to go with him to the country, and there spend the ensuing summer of the way of a man she saw I loved, and one who perceived a cloud of my ruin, by frequently declar-her to introduce him to me; which she also, by perused, except he would give his honour that he no other design but to marry me. To her ever noise, a week or two after, we went: there was the further end of her garden, a kind of wilderness in the middle of which ran a sort rivulet by an artificial stream. In this place I usually passed a retired hours, and read some romantic or poetical ment to close of evening. It was near that time the heat of summer, when gentle winds, soft in of water, and notes of nightingales, had given me an indolence, which added to that repose of twilight and the end of a warm day naturally thro upon the spirits. It was at such an hour, and i such a state of tranquillity I sat, when, to my prosecution amazement, I saw my lord walking toward me, whom I knew not until that moment to ha been in the country. I could observe in his ap-the perplexity which attends a man long with design and I felt, while he was coming forward, too reflect that I was betrayed; the sense of which me a resentment suitable to such a baseness, in when he entered into the bower where I was, he heart flew towards him, and, I confess, a certain once into my mind, with a hope that he might be make a declaration of honour and passion. Th threw my eye upon him with such tenderness as ga him power with a broken accent, to begin. "Ma —you will wonder—for it is certain, you must ha observed—that I fear you will misinterpret th selves—but by heaven, and all that is sacred, if y I could!—Here he made a full stand, and I was power to say. The consternation I am, even now not, I suppose, believe—a help, despicable man!—has that, the phoe!—He saw me in as great confusion him out, which attributing to the same causes, he ha the consciousness to throw himself at my feet, in of the stiffness of the evening, and then ran at declarations of my person, pure flames, constant eternal raptures, and a thousand other phrases draw from the images we have of heaven, which I must as a thousand of hell, when run over with me, and as a thousand. After which, he seized me in his arms, as doubt was too evident. In my utmost distress, I down on my knees—My lord, pity me, on my knees—the cause of virtue, as you were lately in that of wickedness. Can you think of destroying the labour of sole life, the purpose of a long education, for the service of a sudden appetite; to throw one at loves you, that doats on you, out of the company of the road of all that is virtuous and praiseworthy? Have I taken in all the instructions of piety, religion, and reason, for no other end, but to be the sacrifice of lust, and abandoned to scorn? Assume yourself, my lord; and do not attempt to vitiate a temple consecrated to innocence, honour, and religion. If I have injured you, stab this bosom, and let me die, but not be ruined by the hand I love.' The ardency of my passion made me incapable of uttering more; and I saw my lover astonished, and reformed by my behaviour: when rushed in Sempronia. 'Ha! faithless base man, could you then steal out of town, and work like a robber about my house for such brutish purposes?'

My lord was by this time recovered, and fell into a violent laughter at the turn which Sempronia designed to give her villainy. He bowed to me with the utmost respect: 'Mrs. Distaff,' said he, 'be careful hereafter of your company;' and so retired. The fiend Sempronia congratulated my deliverance with a flood of tears.

This nobleman has since very frequently made his addresses to me with honour; but I have as often refused them; as well as knowing that familiarity and marriage will make him, on some ill-natured occasion, call all I said in the harbour a theatrical fiction. Besides that, I glory in condemning a man, who had thoughts to my dishonour. If this method were the imitation of the whole sex, innocence would be the only dress of beauty; and all affectation by any other arts to please the eyes of men, would be banished to the stews for ever. The conquest of passion gives ten times more happiness than we can reap from the gratification of it; and she that has got over such a one as mine, will stand among Beaux and Pretty Fellows, with as much safety as in a summer's day among grass-hoppers and butterflies.

P.S. I have ten millions of things more against men, if ever I get the pen again.

St. James's Coffee-house, June 24.

Our last advices from the Hague dated the twentieth instant, N. S. say, that on the twenty-fifth, a squadron of Dutch men-of-war sailed out of the Texel to join Admiral Baker at Spithead. The twenty-sixth was observed as a day of fasting and humiliation, to implore a blessing on the arms of the allies this ensuing campaign. Letters from Dresden are very particular in the account of the gallantry and magnificence, in which that court has appeared since the arrival of the King of Denmark. No day has passed in which public shows have not been exhibited for his entertainment and diversion; the last of that kind which is mentioned is a carousal, wherein many of the youth of the first quality dressed in the most splendid manner, ran for the prize. His Danish Majesty condescended to the same; but having observed that there was a design laid to throw it in his way, passed by without attempting to gain it. The court of Dresden was preparing to accompany his Danish Majesty to Potsdam, where the expectation of an interview of three kings, had drawn together such multitudes of people, that many persons of distinction will be obliged to lie in tents, as long as those courts continue in that place.

No. 34.] TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1709.

BY ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQ.

White's Chocolate-house, June 25.

HAVING taken upon me to cure all the distempers which proceed from a cold, I have laboured, since I began, all the good that I could at my own loss, by the method of my operations in the most just to my patient, under their hands, and the good of the benefit of the of private advice.

I have cured in her eyes, from one cold languishing at my own power, of my ink, I have attentively looked into the true sense, not mislead, which I call looks right for half a-day will have a peculiar true cosmetic nature of it, a design to a it into down to look with it immediately new grace to great deal of whom it is a patient is in her first month knighted, or obtained any be prepared effect upon of taken in due it cured her whole neighbourhood.

The same old fellow, my sex. You will there is not myself. The going to Madam, namely, Dan of distinction their way to humour (as if they would not of Pretti if I thought among those was the more.

To put the must not raise importance; the kit.' The end of the road enough to me world so equal name-sake in a condition their charms half that air, for, by the far, when a I think, has dishd torch

My method is, to dive to the bottom of a sore before I pretend to apply a remedy. For this reason, I sat by an eminent story-teller and politician, who takes half an ounce in five seconds, and has mortgaged a pretty tenement near the town, merely to improve and dung his brains with this prolific disorder. I observed this gentleman, the other day, in the midst of a story, diverted from it by looking at something at a distance, and I softly hid his box, as he returns to his tale, and, looking for his box, cries, 'And so, sir—' then, when he should have taken a pinch, 'as I was saying—' says he, 'has nobody seen my box?' His friend beseeches him to finish his narration; then he proceeds: 'And so, sir—where can my box be?' Then turning to me, 'Pray, sir, did you see my box?' 'Yes, sir,' said I, 'I took it to see how long you could live without it.' He resumes his tale, and I took notice that his utterance was much more regular and fluent than before. A pinch supplied the place of 'As I was saying,' and 'So, sir,' and he went on currently enough in that style which the learned call the aspid. This observation easily led me into a philosophic reason for taking snuff, which is done only to supply with sensations the want of reflection. This I take to be an ὀφθαλμία, a nostrum; upon which I hope to receive the thanks of this board: for as it is natural to lift a man's hand to a sore, when you fear any thing coming at you; so when a person feels his thoughts are run out, and he has no more to say, it is as natural to supply his weak brain with powder at the nearest place of access, viz. the nostrils. This is so evident, that nature suggests the use according to the indigence of the persons who take this medicine, without being prepossessed with the force of fashion or custom. For example; the native Hibernians, who are reckoned not much unlike the ancient Boeotians, take this specific for emptiness in the head, in greater abundance than any other nation under the sun. The learned Sotus, as sparing as he is in his words, would be still more silent if it were not for this powder.

However low and poor the taking of snuff argues a man to be in his own stock of thoughts, or means to employ his brains and his fingers; yet there is a poorer creature in the world than he, and this is a borrower of snuff; a fellow that keeps no box of his own, but is always asking others for a pinch. Such poor rogues put me always in mind of a common phrase among school-boys when they are composing their exercise, who run to an upper scholar, and cry, 'Pray give me a little sense.' But, of all things I commend me to the ladies who are got into this pretty help to discourse. I have been these three years persuading Sagissa to leave it off; but she talks so much, and is so learned, that she is above contradiction. However, an accident the other day brought that about, which my elquence could never accomplish. She had a very pretty fellow in her closet, who ran thither to avoid some company that came to visit her: she made an excuse to go in to him for some implement they were talking of. Her taster gallant snatched a kiss; but, being unused to snuff, some grains from off her upper lip made him sneeze aloud, which alarmed the visitants, and has made a discovery, that profound reading, very much intelligence, and a general knowledge of who and who are together, cannot fill her vacant hours so much, but she is sometimes obliged to descend to entertainments less intellectual.

White's Chocolate-house, June 29.

I know no manner of news from this place, but that Cynthia, inexorable C with the good pitched upon will undoubtedly strain of fan deference that choose for his truth spoken letter.

'MADAM—Lucy, and give request I made admitted to was desiring this, severe rules above the little of giving up therefore hope generous past opportunity pretend to you with my be received; of sex should from the ord plainness and much as ot Instead of s should be gl beautiful, as as any woma I regard all direct them madam, the of its becom Lucy send n mise you I things; thou shall approo seeing you, most obedie

Having ta next winter observations the actors, I the laws of a part of the s so refined at sentation of are admirab the actors w by which w their behavi course as fol

'Speak th to you, tripp it, as many crier spoke much with y in the very whirlwind o beget a temp it offends perrwig-pat very rags, to for the most plicable dur a fellow wh herods Here your tutor;

the action;
'erstep not overdone is both at the 'twere the wn feature, nd body of this, over-he unskilful grieve; the vance, o'er-
be players, praise, and ut, neither he gate of cutted, and of nature's them well,
This should t play your for them;
as laugh, to rs to laugh
' necessary
red; that's tion in the 9.

I an assist-
one would he learned,
thor of the

I to give us nily of the t insinuate, t house in it is either,
ceedings in at our most celebrated cedency to Saturn. I disgrace of Distaff and an persons, ts, for their f spleen on
n. I shall cestors, and therto had,
e, the pre-

popular lady f Bellatrix, etrix, Coc-trix, Porta-mtrix, De-Mercatrix, rix, Pistrix.

BATRIX.

7.

July, N.S. nce Eugene, Villars had garrison of owards that place, and came before it early on the morning of twenty-seventh. As soon as they came into the ground, the prince of Nassau was sent with a strong detachment to take post at St. Amand; and, at the same time, my Lord Orkney received orders to himself himself of Montagne: both which were successfully executed; whereby we were masters of the Scheld and Scarpe. Eight men were drawn out of each troop of dragoons and company of foot in the garrison of Tournay, to make up the reinforcement which was ordered to join Marshal Villars. On the advice, that the allies were marching towards Tour-nay, they endeavoured to return into the town, but were intercepted by the Earl of Orkney, by whom the whole body was killed or taken. These letters shew that twelve hundred dragoons (each horseman carrying a foot-soldier behind him) were detached from Mons to throw themselves into Tournay, but, on the appearance of a great body of horse of the allies, retired towards Comle. We hear that the garrison does not consist of more than three thousand five hundred men. Of the sixty battalions designed to be employed in this siege, seven are English, five two of guards, and the regiments of Argyle, Trapp Evans, and Meredith.

No. 36.] SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1709.

BY MRS. JENNY DISTAFF, HALF-SISTER TO
MR. BICKERSTAFF.

From my own Apartment, June 30.

MANY affairs calling my brother into the country the care of our intelligence with the town is left me for some time; therefore you must expect to advices you meet with in this paper, to be such more immediately and naturally fall under the consideration of our sex. History, therefore, written by a woman, you will easily imagine to consist love in all its forms, both in the abuse of, and obedience to that passion. As to the faculty of writing itself, it will not, it is hoped, be demanded that strength and ornament shall be so much consulted, as truth and simplicity; which latter qualities we may not justly pretend to beyond the other sex. While therefore, the administration of our affairs is in hands, you shall from time to time have an account of all false lovers, and their shallow pretences for breaking off; of all tergiversant wives who have wedlock a yoke; of men who affect the entertainments and manners suitable only to our sex, and women who pretend to the conduct of such affairs are only within the province of men. It is necessary further to advertise the reader, that the usual place of resort being utterly out of my province or observation, I shall be obliged frequently to change the distance of places as occurrences come into my way. The following letter I lately received from Epnom.

Epnom, June 28.

'It is now almost three weeks since what you wrote about happened in this place: The quarrel between my friends did not run so high as I find your accounts have made it. The truth of the fact you shall have very faithfully. You are to understand, that the persons concerned in this scene were Lady Autumn and Lady Springly: Autumn is a person of great breeding, formality, and a singular way practised the last age; and Lady Springly a modern imperiment of our sex, who affects as improper a familiarity as the other does distance. Lady Autumn knows a hair's breadth where her place is in all assemblies and conversations; but Springly neither gives nor takes place of any body, but understands the place to signify no more, than to have room enough to be at ease wherever she comes. Thus, while Autumn takes the whole of this life to consist in understanding punctilio and decorum, Springly takes every thing to be becoming, which contributes to her ease and satisfaction. These heroines have married two brothers, both knights. Springly is the spouse of the elder, who is a baronet; and Autumn, being a rich widow, has taken the younger, and her purse endowed him with an equal fortune, and knighthood of the same order. This jumble of titles, you need not doubt, has been an aching torment to Autumn, who took place of the other on no pretence, but her carelessness and disregard of distinction. The secret occasion of envy broiled long in the breast of Autumn; but no opportunity of contention on that subject happening, kept all things quiet until the accident of which you demand an account.

'It was given out among all the gay people of this place, that on the ninth instant several damsels, swift of foot, were to run for a suit of head-cloaths at the Old Wells. Lady Autumn on this occasion invited Springly to go with her in her coach to see the race. When they came to the place, where the governor of Epsom and all his court of citizens were assembled, as well as a crowd of people of all orders, a brisk young fellow addresses himself to the younger of the ladies, viz. Springly, and offers her his service to conduct her into the music-room. Springly accepts the compliment, and is led triumphantly through a bowing crowd, while Autumn is left among the rabble, and has much ado to get back into her coach; but she did it last; and as it is usual to see by the horses my lady's present disposition, she orders John to whip furiously home to her husband; where, when she enters, down she sits, began to unpin her hood, and lament her foolish fond heart, to marry into a family where she was so little regarded; she that might —. Here she stops; then rises up, and stamps and sits down again. Her gentle knight made his approach with a supple beseeching gesture. "My dear!" said he—"Tell me no dears;" replied Autumn, in the presence of the governor and all the merchants—"What will the world say of a woman that has thrown herself away at this rate?" Sir Thomas withdrew, and knew it would not be long a secret to him; as well as that experience told him, he that marries a fortune is of course guilty of all faults against his wife, let them be committed by whom they will. But Springly, an hour or two after, returns from the Wells, and finds the whole company together. Down she sat, and a profound silence ensued. You know a premeditated quarrel usually begins, and works up with the words some people. The silence was broken by Lady Autumn, who began to say, "There are some people who fancy, that if some people"—Springly immediately takes her up, "There are some people who fancy, if other people"—Autumn repartees, "People may give themselves airs; but other people, perhaps, who may make less ado, may be, perhaps, as agreeable as people who set themselves out more." All the other people at the table sat mute, while these two people, who were quarrelling, went on with the use of the word people, instancing the very accidents between them, as if they kept only in distant hints. Therefore, says Autumn, reddening, "There are some people will go abroad in other people's coaches, and leave those with whom they went to shift for themselves; and if, perhaps, those people have married the y beholden t smartly an humour in receiving t body is ne ness." Up desired her which her the ear,—

"I knew w people;" a
To it they husband ra their husba company is knot of ma another wh
their husba
pany; and,
out of the
know, there these adver
day. It is of mutton, quisitely de his address our hopes o
I am dear J

This day services to existence f condition b solutely de and compl illustrious the warm o
the disaster
the same but the ma last momen racter of he drank poi tinual punc
The old he this moder wholly ben An ordina sions, but and raises this worthy that when Therefore, thinks tha thousand n
not words, heard of, i for life. S ment more imagined, without ha utter his n world, and added, that year of him in it, and the knight, going on b ary, sure, she that disturbs but a room or a is more to be tolerated, than one who draws er whole parishes and counties, and sometimes an estate that might make him the blessing nament of the world around him) has no other nd ambition, but to be an animal above dogs orses, without the relish of any one enjoyment is peculiar to the faculties of human nature. I it will be here said, that talking of mere country s at this rate, is, as it were, to write against ine and Orson. To prove any thing against the men, you must take them as they are adorned education; as they live in courts, or have re-instructions in colleges.

I am so full of my late entertainment by Mr. y, that I must defer pursuing this subject to r day; and waive the proper observations upon ferent offenders in this kind, some by profound nce on small occasions, others by degrading upon great circumstances. Expect, therefore, of the whisperer without business, the laughter at wit, the complainer without receiving inand a very large crowd, which I shall not ll, who are common (though not commonly ed) impertinents, whose tongues are too vofor their brains, and are the general despisers omen, though we have their superiors, men se for our servants.

Will's Coffee-house, July 3.

ery ingenious gentleman was complaining this g, that the players are grown so severe critics, ey would not take in his play, though it has as fine things in it as any play that has been writ he days of Dryden. He began his discourse his play with a preface.

ere is,' said he, ' somewhat (however we pal-) in the very frame and make of us, that sub-ur minds to chagrin and irresolution on any ncy of time or place. The difficulty grows on ckened imagination, under all the killing stances of danger and disappointment. This not only in the men of retirement and fancy, the characters of the men of action; with this fference, the coward sees the danger, and under it; the hero, warmed by the difficulty, and rises in proportion to that, and in some akes use of his very fears to disarm it. A re-instance of this we have in the great Cæsar, he came to the Rubicon, and was entering part, perhaps the most hazardous he ever certainly the most ungrateful) a war with his men. When his mind brooded over personal , perhaps his anger burned with a desire of But when more serious reflections laid him the hazard of the enterprize with the consequences which were likely to attend it, ted by a special circumstance, "What figure d bear in the world, or how be excused to y! What shall he do?"—His honour, as his religion, bids him arm; and he sounds inations of his party, by this set speech:

Cæsar to his Party at the Rubicon.

at Jove, attend, and thou my native soil, in my triumphs, glutted in my spoil; ess with what reluctance I oppose rms to thine, secure of other foes. passive breast can bear disgrace like mine? or!—For this I conquer'd on the Rhine, r'd their ten years' drudgery in Gaul, ur'd their fate, and sav'd the Capitol.

I grew by every
The crowd, when Impatient of the Brave actions d Like birds obs
Giddy with rul
They throw the
And Gods! to Assume the pat
Farewell, my fr
To your bare pi Must lay that h
To serve the va Expos'd to all i Deserve of those To rods and ax Play with my g This, shall the
Or do me justic

St. James

There has arriv we have no manne to give you for suc on foot concerning advices. There ar seventeen squadro of Tournay; the g but eleven battalio the twenty-ninth c brought advice, to Prussia, and his m days, to come to letters mention, th of Sapieha and L Paris, confirm the want of provisions, it; which is, tha returned to court, crowds about the and bread, bread a

Mrs. Distaff has this paper, to turn of her own sex, an greatest vexations this end written Second Word, wit Reply, very proper persons either ill-b this tract a digressi ing the words I W

A gentlewoman v a maid who can wh ment of her family.
starch, lisp, and tr encouragement in l

No. 38.] THURS

BY MRS. JENNY

MR

From my

I FIND among m letter verbatim, wh press so long as he no other end, but to have already had up

'SIR,

'The end of all benefit and instruct readers: to which

courteous Umbra. He is a fine man indeed, but the soft creature bows below my apron-string, before he takes it: yet, after the first ceremonies, he is as familiar as my physician, and his insignificance makes me half ready to complain to him of all I would to my doctor. He is so courteous, that he carries half the messages of ladies' ails in town to their midwives and nurses. He understands too the art of medicine as far as to the cure of a pimple, or a rash. On occasions of the like importance, he is the most assiduous of all men living, in consulting and searching precedents from family to family; then he speaks of his obsequiousness and diligence in the style of real services. If you sneer at him, and thank him for his great friendship he bows, and says, 'Madam, all the good offices in my power, while I have any knowledge or credit, shall be at your service.' The consideration of so shallow a being, and the intent application with which he pursues trifles has made me carefully reflect upon that sort of men we usually call an impertinent: and I am, upon mature deliberation, so far from being offended with him, that I am really obliged to him; for though he will take you aside, and talk half an hour to you upon matters, wholly insignificant, with the most solemn air, yet I consider, that these things are of weight in his imagination, and he thinks he is communicating what is for my service. If, therefore, it be a just rule, to judge of a man by his intention, according to the equity of good breeding, he that is impertinently kind or wise to do you a service, ought in return to have a proportionable place both in your affection and esteem; so that the courteous Umbra deserves the favour of all his acquaintance; for though he never served them, he is ever willing to do it, and believes he does it.

As impotent kindness is to be returned with all our abilities to oblige; so impotent malice is to be treated with all our force to depress it. For this reason Flyblow (who is received in all the families in town, through the degeneracy and iniquity of their manners) is to be treated like a knave, though he is one of the weakest of fools: he has by rote, and at second-hand, all that can be said of any man of figure, wit, and virtue, in town. Name a man of worth, and this creature tells you the worst passage of his life. Speak of a beautiful woman, and this puppy will whisper the next man to him, though he has nothing to say of her. He is a fly that feeds on the sore part, and would have nothing to live on if the whole body were in health. You may know him by the frequency of pronouncing the particle but; for which reason I never heard him spoke of with common charity, without using my but against him: for a friend of mine saying the other day, 'Mrs. Distaff has wit, good-humour, virtue, and friendship;' this oaf added, 'But she is not handsome.' 'Coxcomb! the gentleman was saying what I was, not what I was not.'

St. James's Coffee-house, July 6.

The approaches before Tournay have been carried on with great success; and our advices from the camp before that place of the eleventh instant say that they had already made a lodgment on the glacis. Two hundred boats were come up the Scheld with the heavy artillery and ammunition, which would be employed in dismounting the enemy's defences, and raised on the batteries the fifteenth.

A great body of miners are summoned to the camp, to countermine the defences of the enemy.

We are convinced of the weakness of the garrison by a certain a to consult the citadel are assured advancing General de letter, giv concluded to break, a of battle.

congratula action; an the Marsha
Mrs. Di
Monday ev
Bickerstaff
gives her se
It is to be appears du

No. 39.]

As I am to my fell feel within torrent of perly pursu the excellen and beautif late excurs in their hig honour and proportion learning; a received an an Earl wa artificer, in knowledge other place their unde pleasing t their lives years expe every thing select and their palac sweetness equally ad philosophy dour as we tants with whether he when I loo faces of th chancellors human life rational be ployed in transitory unworthy great decre he were to wast thou Who shut thou shalt make life But, ala
the busine of fortun coordi-

and ment, r e twelve to all t iversity which, th et insti his stud t of the erm, I ex lowly, and assistance at the is all we arded the his sear ned his lately re its vert to us. I ed on ex
s the dian; he be even d eight Oxford
ered from add nt of this and, not of opinion his joy in esent se of been the follow
Excell court reign, takes, we ear of cannote
this within not ap rm. The on argu
n qu ern, I
it was ignore ed in
of Ar dian con back, and moral ing, we enour
of an ried in f Ox
we e rep ing p
are
to We ot ap war-
ack.

where in fact I take to be a better guide than a
of opinions, which are usually biased. I judge in this case, as King Charles the Second vic-talled his navy with the bread which it has dogs close of several pieces thrown be-com, rather than trust to the assertions of the victuallers. Mr. Cowper, and other learned criminals, already urged the authority of this aimark behalf of their clients. We shall, therefore go with all speed in our cause; and doubt not but enjoy what we at the end what we lost in the beginning, by protecting the term for us, until We have enjoyed our right. And the University Oration may be a prey, &c.

From my own Apartment, July 7.

The subject of duels has, I find, been started with so good success, that it has been the frequent subject of conversation among gentlemen; and a dialogue of that kind has been transmitted to me verbally yesterday. The points concerned in it are more common and experience in the manners of men, as have taken upon the truest foundation, as well as the most of this city.

Mr. Sage.—It were in my power every man, if he has sword, unless in the service, or punct defend his life, person, or goods from violence; nor is abstracted from all punctures or whims of honour, should ride the wooden horse in the Tilt-yard, such first offence; for the second, stand in the penalty; and for the third, be prisoner in Boleyn life.

Col. Plume.—I remember that a rencounter or duel was common among the officers in the service in the parliament-army, that, on the contrary, it was disgraceful, and as great an impediment to advance in the service, as being bashful in the company.

Mr. Work.—Yet I have been informed by some of the officers, that their reputation for brave and gallant men, that they were much more in mode among the peers than they have been during this last war.

Col. Plume.—That is true too, Sir.

Mr. Sage.—By what you say, gentlemen, one should think that our present military officers are comparatively of a more temperate and both those tempers, and the more the more discontented, nor much more so.

Mr. Work.—That difference of temper in regard to duels, which appears to have been, between the civil and military gentlemen of the sword, was not I can say, very great. For in the latter, nor of a civil gentleman, unless there were some of the best of the civilian had engaged in that party. But gallantry and military, which is agreeable to the honour of the country, and by the court, as promoting its policy and it was as natural that the military party should be more ready to recommend themselves to the public than the civil, and sold parties should devote themselves to the civil.

Mr. Sage.—I have never read of a duel among the Romans, and yet their morality used moral liberty than the Romans than any one may do now without being reproached.

Mr. Work.—Perhaps the Romans were of a more temperate and brutal manners reflected on to them, but were only of them; and that a man's reputation was not at all cleared by cutting the person's head off who had reflected upon it; but the custom of the Romans had fixed the scandal in the action, whereas now it lies in the reproach.

Mr. Sage.—And yet the only sort of duel that one

THE TATLER.

ive to have been fought upon motives truly e and allowable, was that between the ad Curiatii.

Mrk.—Colonel Plume, pray what was the f single combat in your time among the

I suppose, that as the use of clothes con-ough the fashion of them has been mutable; though still in use, have had in all times icular modes of performance.

Plume.—We had no constant rule, but geducted our dispute and tilt according to that had happened between persons of among the very top fellows for bravery try.

Mrk.—If the fashion of quarrelling and tilting ten changed in your time, Colonel Plume, a t fight, yet lose his credit for want of un-ing the fashion.

Plume.—Why, Sir Mark, in the beginning of an would have been censured for want of or been thought indigent of the true notions , if he had put up with words, which, in the ptember following, one cou d not resent withing for a brutal and quarrelsome fellow.

Mrk.—But, Colonel, were duels and rencontres fashion in those days?

Plume.—Your men of nice honour, Sir, were ing all censure of advantage which they might be taken in a rencontre; therefore l seconds, who were to see that all was upon e, and make a faithful report of the whole but in a little time it became a fashion for ads to fight; and I will tell you how it
l.

ge.—Pray do, Colonel Plume, and the method at that time, and give us some notion of the upon which your nice men quarrelled in those Plume.—I was going to tell you, Mr. Sage, ornet Modish had desired his friend Captain opinion in some affair, but did not follow it; ich captain Smart sent major Adroit (a very fellow of those times) to the person that had his advice. The major never enquired into rel, because it was not the manner then among topping fellows; but got two swords of an gth, and then waited upon Cornet Modish, him to choose his sword, and meet his friend Smart. Cornet Modish came with his friend ace of combat; there the principals put on ops, and stripped to their shirts, to show that nothing but what men of honour carry about d then engaged.

Mrk.—And did the seconds stand by, sir?

Plume.—It was a received custom until that at the swords of those days being pretty long, principals acting on both sides upon the deand the morning being frosty, Major Adroit hat the other second who was also a very fellow, would try a thrust or two, only to em warm, until the principals had decided er, which was agreed to by Modish's second, sently whipt Adroit through the body, dis-in, and then parted the principals, who had no harm at all.

ge.—But was not Adroit laughed at?

Plume.—On the contrary, the very topping ere ever after of opinion, that no man, who that character, could serve as a second, fighting; and the Smarts and Modishes heir account in it, the humour took without

Mr. Sage.—Pray, C continue?

Col. Plume.—Not soon as it became a fa-thought their honour proffer themselves a friends had a quarrel, a dozen of a side.

Sir Mark.—Bless nued, we should have pretty fellows; for th to officer, animate, an sir, how did that soci of mode?

Col. Plume.—Why law among the comba pened to have the first yield as vanquished might encourage the relling to the destru fellows; and as soon the very topping fello upon their honour to that time, the Modish Europe, have extolled

Sir Mark.—Our v to be the successors a quarrel so little fa-exposed to it by any sense.

Mr. Sage.—But, C account of duels, tha avoiding all advantag the combatants.

Col. Plume.—Tha
were equal.

Mr. Sage.—Yes, s strong man had insul an unpractised sword

Col. Plume.—The

Mr. Sage.—But, s vantage that way; fo to hit his man at two whose hand shakes debauch in pleasures the holsters) will not the person he shoots that one can get no h has it all rug, as the a trick to make the g play upon the square

Sir Mark.—In tru must be murder in a whatever it may app

Col. Plume.—I ha they would not fight

Mr. Sage.—I bel would outdo the gra

Sir Mark.—And long swords. But fellow can stay to ch sulted by a bully wi at the same time which will certainly are in mode. Pray, hectors of your time

Col. Plume.—Sir, nerally worn in thos

Mr. Sage.—In an Sir Mark, give me knights-errant (who those ancient times)

suitably, to that character; and though he is out in supposing he has principalities, while he drinks gruel and lies in straw, yet you shall see him keep the port of a distressed monarch in all his words and actions. These two persons are equally taken into custody: but what must be done to half this good company, who every hour of their life are knowingly and wittingly both fools and madmen, and yet have capacities both of forming principles and drawing conclusions, with the full use of reason?

From my own Apartment, July 11.

This evening some ladies came to visit my sister Jenny; and the discourse after very many frivolous and public matters, turned upon the main point among the women, the passion of love. Sappho, who always leads on this occasion, began to show her reading, and told us, that Sir John Suckling and Milton had, upon a parallel occasion, said the tenderest things she ever read. 'The circumstance,' said she, 'is such as gives us a notion of that protecting part, which is the duty of men in their honourable designs upon, or possession of women. In Suckling's tragedy of Brennoralt he makes the lover steal into his mistress's bed-chamber and draw the curtains; then, when his heart is full of her charms, as she lies sleeping, instead of being carried away by the violence of his desires into thoughts of a warmer nature, sleep, which is the image of death, gives this generous lover reflections of a different kind, which regard rather her safety than his own passion. For, beholding her as she lies sleeping, he utters these words:—

"So misers look upon their gold, Which, while they joy to see, they fear to lose:
The pleasure of the sight scarce equalling The jealousy of being dispossest by others.
Her face is like the milky way i' th' sky, A meeting of gentle lights without name!"

"Heav'n! shall this fresh ornament of the world, These precious love-lines, pass with other common things

Amongst the wastes of time? what pity 'twere!"

"When Milton makes Adam, leaning on his arm, beholding Eve, and lying in the contemplation of her beauty, he describes the utmost tenderness and guardian affection in one word:

"Adam with looks of cordial love, Hung over her enamour'd."

"This is that sort of passion which truly deserves the name of love, and has something more generous than friendship itself; for it has a constant care of the object beloved, abstracted from its own interests in the possession of it."

Sappho was proceeding on the subject, when my sister produced a letter sent to her in the time of my absence, in celebration of the marriage state, which is the condition wherein only this sort of passion reigns in full authority. The epistle is as follows:

"DEAR MADAM,

"Your brother being absent, I dare take the liberty of writing to you my thoughts of that state, which our whole sex either is, or desires to be in. You will easily guess I mean matrimony, which I hear so much decried, that it was with no small labour I maintained my ground against two opponents; but as your brother observed of Socrates, I drew them into my conclusion, from their own concessions; thus:

"In marriage are two happy things allow'd, A wife in wedding-sheets, and in a shroud.
How can a marriage state then be accus'd, Since the last day's as happy as the first?"

THE TATLER, No. 10.

"If you may conclu talking aga

"I observ and turnin
she was so
'Nay,' say have mean wonder so for life, wh placed; fe give half h shown to t be ashamed had the c What mor
'What mor
in England Then she s him beau, what not, i rose up; a done which that renders

No. 41.]

T

THERE is
our nation,
thing that are more a have crosse same dang else how is the last mo in our very of the town it my busin never have been sent is the way
company;
so little co
arms."

"An Exere
be perfo pith, 1
Woolfe, Hopson,
general;
John Sh
William
Robert O

"The be through M street, Fin
St. Anne's
Noble-stre smiths'-hal fire, and s march roun Honey-lan your salute up Aldersg cross-stre March off

ing's-head-
to divisions that pass, court; but
-lane, the
the General
forces the and enters lieutenant-time, the
out of the ral's body
to divisions marches on,
give way:
court, but gh Paul'siers, while y, but are in Black-retire soon time those rear with ke to the l marches n up, finds and makes on engage

nt of this tion, may in fighting er. These soon—but ey—finds give great the Lien-defeat, is f war, and as lost, in y he lately es's. The wards, is s method, court and se leaders ed or field part of the rmed near wanting a ho, being mpartially can never e dark as ary hero,

l's-alley;
tly styled emy along al battle.
er of rain,
on, which parations.
a tanta
t.
rg. iv. 86.
il fray,

Dryden.

way of

conversation in this place, which usually turned upon the examination of nature, and an inquiry into the manners of men. There is one in the room so very judicious, that he manages impertinents with the utmost dexterity. It was diverting this evening to hear a discourse between him and one of these gentlemen. He told me, before that person joined us that he was a questioner, who, according to his description, is one who asks questions, not with a design to receive information, but an affectation to show his uneasiness for want of it. He went on in asserting that there are crowds of that modest ambition, as to aim no farther than to demonstrate that they are in doubt. By this time Will Whynot was sat down by us. 'So, gentlemen,' says he, 'in how many days, think you, shall we be masters of Tournay? Is the account of the action of the Vivarois to be depended upon? Could you have imagined England had so much money in it as you see it has produced? Pray, sirs, what do you think? Will the Duke of Savoy make an irruption into France? But,' says he, 'time will clear all these mysteries.' His answer to himself gave me the altitude of his head, and to all his questions, I thus answered very satisfactorily. '—Sir, have you heard that this Slaughterford never owned the fact for which he died? Have the newspapers mentioned that matter? But, pray, can you tell me what method will be taken to provide for these Palatines? But this, as you say, time will clear.' 'Ay, ay,' says he, and whispers me, 'they will never let us into these things beforehand.' I whispered him again. We shall know it as soon as there is a proclamation.—He tells me in the other ear, 'You are in the right of it.' Then he whispered my friend to know what my name was; then made an obliging bow, and went to examine another table. This led my friend and me to weigh this wandering manner in many other incidents, and he took out of his pocket, several notes or tickets to solicit for votes to employments: as, Mr. John Taplash having served all offices, and being reduced to great poverty, desires your vote for singing-clerk of this parish.' Another has had ten children, all whom his wife has suckled herself; therefore humbly desires to be a schoolmaster.

There is nothing so frequent as this way of application for offices. It is not that you are fit for the place, but because the place would be convenient for you, that you claim a merit to it. But commend me to the great Kirleus, who has lately set up for midwifery, and to help child-birth, for no other reason, but that he is himself the 'Unborn Doctor.' The way is, to hit upon something that puts the vulgar upon the stare, or touches their compassion, which is often the weakest part about us. I know a good lady who has taken her daughters from their old dancing-master to place them with another, for no other reason but because the new man has broke his leg, which is so ill set, that he can never dance more.

From my own Apartment, July 13.

As it is a frequent mortification to me to receive letters wherein people tell me, without a name, they know I meant them in such and such a passage; so that very accusation is an argument, that there are such beings in human life, as fall under our description, and that our discourse is not altogether fantastical and groundless. But in this case I am treated as I saw a boy was the other day, who gave out pocky bills: every plain fellow took it that passed by, and went on his way without further notice: and at last came one with his nose a little abridged; who knocks the lad down, with a 'Way, you son of a w—e,

THE TATLER.

think, 'I am p—d?' But Shakspeare has the best apo'ogy for this way of talking the public errors: he makes Jacques, in the old, 'As you like it,' express himself thus:

who cries out on pride, an therein tax any private party? woman in the city do I name, that I say, the city woman bears st of princes on unworthy shoulders? in come in and say that I mean her, such a one as she, such is her neighbour?
at is he of basest function, tys his bravery is not on my cost? ng that I mean him, but therein suits ly to the mettle of my speech. then! How then? Then let me see wherein guine hath wrong'd him: If it do him right, he hath wrong'd himself: if he be free, then my taxing like a wild goose flies, n'd of any man.'

SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1709,

From my own Apartment, July 15.

NO over some old papers, I found a little written by my great-grandfather, concerning and thought his manner of treating that not unworthy any remark. He there has a concerning a possibility, that in some cases a man may receive an injury, and yet be to himself that he deserves it. There are of fine things said on the subject; but wrapped up in so much jingle and pun, as the wit of those times, that it is scarce e; but I thought the design was well the following sketch of an old gentleman's or in this case, where two are rivals for the g, and propose to obtain it by presents, he up the judge's honesty, by making him reward, ought not to complain when he cause by a better bidder. The good old ins thus:

for man once a judge besought, judge aright his cause, with a pot of oil salutes his judger of the laws.

friend," quoth he, "thy cause is good." e glad away did trudge: his wealthy foe did come fore this partial judge.

g well fed this churl presents, ad craves a strain of law:— hog received—the poor man's right as judged not worth a straw.

ewith he cry'd, "O! partial judge, y doom has me undone;
n oil I gave, my cause was good, t now to ruin run."

man," quoth he, "I thee forgot, d see thy cause of foil;
g came since into my house, d broke thy pot of oil."

Will's Coffee-house, July 15.

course happened this evening to fall upon drawn in plays; and a gentleman remarked, was no method in the world of knowing the taste of an age, or the observations of the comedies. There was as Ben Jonson's brittle piece of a foppery; entertained us on the where so observable characters of women in this. It is not to be of genius in Shakspeare small a figure in his that he drew women that sex had not in the versation; and their ch mothers, sisters, daughters not then among the virtuosæ, free-thinkers was then hardly such but vanity had quite conspicuous woman of best housewife. Were an assembly of matrons the learned Lady Wood would not believe the creature so unlike any

'But these ancients to see in the same age who love things praised Methinks I now see her our first parent, with her had spectators, and be in her aspect. Her conduct of her mind, which is passion, knowledge, and

"There dwells the

'In the midst of the reputation of all that beholds least affectation, she contemplation of her own labours which bestowed it. Her knowledge of a long time on in a steady course of virtue, and adds to the last age, all the freedom of language and mien of the highest degree; her thoughts of a cottage and her pleasures. Aspasia is not only live up to the lives of the ancient sages and plans which the inimitable. This lady without appearing but without tasting the pleasure with as much industry character is so particularly fixed on her only, by say, she will be the last

'But, alas! if we have many dozens are there who is acquainted with who has the appearance of one virtue: she has the absence of vice, but the history of it; and it is a criminal gratification only a restraint, which is so perfectly opposite that as vice is terrible of reproach, so virtue attended with applause Aurengezebe's scymitar, made by Will Brown in Piccadilly.

A plume of feathers, never used but by Oedipus and the earl of Essex.

There are also sword, halberts, sheep-hooks, cardinals' hats, turbans, drums, gallipots, a gibbet, a cradle, a rack, a cart-wheel, an altar, a helmet, a back-piece, a breast-plate, a bell, a tub, and a jointed-baby.

These are the hard shifts we intelligencers are forced to; therefore our readers ought to excuse us, if a westerly wind blowing for a fortnight together, generally fills every paper with an order of battle; when we show our martial skill in every line, and according to the space we have to fill, we range our men in squadrons and battalions, ordraw out company by company, and troop by troop; ever observing that no muster is to be made but when the wind is in a cross-point, which often happens at the end of a campaign, when half the men are deserted or killed. The Courant is sometimes ten deep, his ranks close: the Postboy is generally in files, for greater exactness; and the Postman comes down upon you rather after the Turkish way, sword in hand, pell-mell, without form or discipline; but sure to bring men enough into the field; and wherever they are raised, never to lose a battle for want of numbers.

No. 43.] TUESDAY, JULY 19, 1709.

— Bene nummatum decorat suadela, Venusque. Hor.
The goddess of persuasion forms his train,
And Venus decks the well-bemoneyed swain. Francis.

White's Chocolate-house, July 18.

I WRITE from hence at present to complain; that wit and merit are so little encouraged by people of rank and quality, that the wits of the age are obliged to run within Temple-bar for patronage. There is a deplorable instance of this kind in the case of Mr. D'Urfey, who has dedicated his inimitable comedy, called 'The Modern Prophets,' to a worthy knight, to whom, it seems, he had before communicated his plan, which was, 'To ridicule the ridiculers of our established doctrine.' I have elsewhere celebrated the contrivance of this excellent drama; but was not, until I read the dedication, wholly let into the religious design of it. I am afraid it has suffered discontinuance at this gay end of the town, for no other reason but the piety of the purpose. There is, however, in this epistle, the true life of panegyrics: performance; and I do not doubt but if the patron would part with it, I can help him to others with good pretensions to it; viz. of 'uncommon understanding,' who will give him as much as he gave for it. I know perfectly well a noble person, whom these words (which are the body of the panegyric) would fit to a hair.

'Your easiness of humour, or rather your harmonious disposition, is so admirably mixed with your composure that the rugged cares and disturbance that public affairs bring with it, which does so vexatiously affect the heads of other great men of business, &c. does scarce ever ruffle your unclouded brow so much as with a frown. And what above all is praiseworthy, you are so far from thinking yourself better than others, that a flourishing and opulent fortune, which, by a certain natural corruption in its quality, seldom fails to infect other possessors with pride, seems in this case as if only providentially disposed to enlarge your humility.'

'But I find, Sir, I am now got into a very large field, where, though I could with great ease raise a number of plants in relation to your merit of this plauditory nature; yet for fear of an author's general vice, and that the plain justice I have done you should, by my proceeding, and others' mistaken judgment, be imagined flattery, a thing the bluntness of my nature does not care to be concerned with, and which I also know you abominate.'

It is wonderful to see how many judges of these fine things spring up every day by the rise of stocks and other elegant methods of abridging the way to learning and criticism. But I do hereby forbid all dedications to any persons within the City of London; except Sir Francis, Sir Stephen, and the Bank, will take epigrams and epistles at value received for their notes; and the East India Company accept of heroic poems for their sealed bonds. Upon which bottom our publishers have full power to treat with the City in behalf of us authors, to enable traders to become patrons and fellows of the Royal Society, as well as to receive certain degrees of skill in the Latin and Greek tongues, according to the quantity of the commodities which they take off our hands.

Grecian Coffee-house, July 18.

The learned have so long laboured under the imputation of dryness and dulness in their accounts of the phenomena, that an ingenious gentleman of our society has resolved to write a system of philosophy in a more lively method, both as to the matter and language, than has been hitherto attempted. He read to us the plan upon which he intends to proceed. I thought his account, by way of fable of the worlds about us, had so much vivacity in it, that I could not forbear transcribing his hypothesis, to give the reader a taste of my friend's treatise, which is now in the press.

The inferior deities having designed on a day to play a game at foot-ball, kneaded together a numberless collection of dancing atoms into the form of seven rolling globes: and, that Nature might be kept from a dull inactivity, each separate particle is endued with a principle of motion, or a power of attraction, whereby all the several parcels of matter draw each other proportionably to their magnitudes and distances into such a remarkable variety of different forms, as to produce all the wonderful appearances we now observe in empire, philosophy, and religion. But to proceed:—

* At the beginning of the game, each of the globes, being struck forward with a vast violence, ran out of sight, and wandered in a straight line through the finite spaces. The nimble deities pursue, breathless most, and spent in the eager chase; each of them might hold of one, and stamped it with his name;

Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, and so of the rest. To prevent this inconvenience for the future, the seven are condemned to a precipitation, which in our ferrier style we call gravity. Thus the tangential and centripetal forces, by their counter-struggle, make the celestial bodies describe an exact ellipse.

* There will be added to this an appendix, in defence of the first day of the term according to the Oxford manack, by a learned knight of this realm, with an eulogy for the said knight's manner of dress; owing that his habit, according to this hypothesis, the true modern and fashionable; and that buckles are not to be worn, by this system, until the tenth March in the year 1714, which, according to the imputation of some of our greatest divines, is to be the first year of the millenium; in which blessed age all habits and who ever constancy of profane and a never-fading points in attested by satisfaction

We were the question very good which a ge writing on though he from the an an occasion animates a with regard and the time in a modern so forced a meet with weight of what he is what he him act: but for a poet, is spectator mind is w ideas hurry nothing so himself from uttering his highest act with tranqu thoughts so perplexity.

sedate cour amidst the r stupid and credit to the them wonder may give in tion, but is is applied: of on the s beauty; but rather than Hercules, h similes in th impression on that of a that I am great as even the poem c of a minister the most ac nature, a con vengeance. the General have all the that was still

"'Twas then That, in th Amidst co Examn'd In peacefu To fainting Inspir'd re And tang

d,

act;
reform,
storm."

noble and nation and on this new, and ry ideas of ed, in so e familiar ronicle as ory of our ted to his

his. Orid.
love.

o, len, I was ve what he turned to a gay gilt the coachuys with

I asked owned that ion inter-ing Æscues, Isage, nd is the Hebe, the ellent and ure is the s the most nger to the most succine. But a natural led himself ays given any of her has done rt to pered by the by all the

he was re-
the most
kill failed, artist was e the faded a generous en life, but s skill and beautiful physician sharpening his fortune who fell in nd the un-ent of her is disaster, essary and increasing

unwieldy stores, and providing, in the midst of incapacity for enjoyment of what he had, for a supply of more wants than he had, calls for in youth its But these low considerations are now no more, as love has taken place of avarice, or rather is become avarice of another kind, which still urges him pursue what he does not want. But, behold! metamorphosis; the anxious mean cares of a usurer are turned into the languishments and complaints of a lover. "Behold," says the aged Æsculapius, submit; I own, great love, thy empire; pity, Hel the top which you have made. What have I to with gilding but on pills? Yet, O fair! for thee I amidst a crowd of painted deities on my chariot, bi-toned in gold, clasped in gold, without having a value for that beloved metal, but as it adorns I person, and laces the hat of thy dying lover. I am not to live, O Hebe! give me but gentle death Εὐθανασία, Εὐθανασία, that is all I implore."

When Æsculapius had finished his complaint Pacolet went on in deep morals on the uncertainty of riches, with this remarkable exclamation: O wealth how impotent art thou! and how little dost thou supply us with real happiness, when the usurer himself can forget thee for the love of what is as foreign to his felicity as thou art!

Will's Coffee-house, July 19.

The company here, who have all a delicate taste for theatrical representations, had made a gathering to purchase the moveables of the neighbouring playhouse, for the encouragement of one which is settling up in the Haymarket. But the proceedings at auction, by which method the goods have been sold this evening, have been so unfair, that this general design has been frustrated; for the imperial man made for Cyrus was missing, as also the chariot and two dragons; but, upon examination, it was found that a gentleman of Hampshire had clandestinely bought them both, and is gone down to his country seat; and that on Saturday last he passed through Staines, attired in that robe, and drawn by the two dragons, assisted by two only of his own horses. This theatrical traveller has also left orders with the Hall to send the faded rainbow to the scourer's, when it comes home, to despatch it after him. At the same time, Christopher Rich, Esq. is invited to bring down his setting sun himself, and be box-keeper to a theatre erected by this gentleman near Southampton. Thus, there has been nothing but artifice in the management of this affair; for which reason, beg pardon of the town, that I inserted the invention in my paper; and solemnly protest, I knew nothing of this artful design of vending these rarities: but meant only the good of the world, in that, and in other things which I divulge.

And now I am upon this subject, I must do myself justice in relation to an article in a former paper wherein I made mention of a person who keeps a pug-pet-show in the town of Bath: I was tender in naming names, and only just hinted, that he makes larger promises when he invites people to his dramatic representations, than he is able to perform; but I am credibly informed, that he makes a profane, low jester, whom he calls Punch, speak to the dishonour of Isaac Bickerstaff with great familiarity; and, before all my learned friends in that place, takes upon him to dispute my title to the appellation of esquire. I think I need not say much to convince all the world that this Mr. Powel, for that is his name, is a pragmatical and vain person, to pretend to argue with me on any subject. Mecum certasse feretur; that is to say

I be an honour to him to have it said he cond with me; but I would have him to know, that look beyond his wires, and know very well the trick of his art; and that it is only by these that the eye of the spectator is cheated, and red from seeing that there is a thread on one of s's chops, which draws it up, and lets it fall at discretion of the said Powel, who stands behind days him, and makes him speak saucily of his s. He! to pretend to make prologues against -But a man never behaves himself with decency own case; therefore, I shall command myself, never trouble me further with this little fellow, s himself but a tall puppet, and has not brains gh to make even wood speak as it ought to and I that have heard the groaning board, can se all that his puppets shall be able to speak as as they live. But, Ex quovis ligno non fit virius. 'Every log of wood will not make a ary.' He has pretended to write to me also the Bath, and says, he thought to have deferred me an answer until he came to his books; but my writings might do well with the waters: I are pert expressions, that become a school-boy than one that is to teach others; and when I said a civil thing to him, he cries, 'Oh! I thank or that—I am your humble servant for that.' Mr. Powel, these smart civilities will never run men of learning: I know well enough your dess to have all men automata, like your puppets; se world is grown too wise, and can look through thin devices. I know your design to make a to this; but be sure you stick close to my words; you bring me into discourses concerning the ment of your puppets, I must tell you, 'I am, nor have been, nor will be, at leisure to er you.' It is really a burning shame this man be tolerated in abusing the world with such entations of things: but his parts decay, and he much more alive than Partridge.

From my own Apartment, July 14.

ust beg pardon of my readers, that for this time, s, I fear, huddled up my discourse, having been usy in helping an old friend of mine out of He has a very good estate, and is a man of but he has been three years absent from town, cannot bear a jest; for which reason, I have, with pains, convinced him that he can no more live han if he were a downright bankrupt. He was ad of dear London, that he began to fret, only lly; but being unable to laugh and be laughed took a place in the northern coach for him and nily; and hope he is got to-night safe from all rs, in his own parlour.

St. James's Coffee-house, July 20.

a morning we received by express the agreeable of the surrender of the town of Tournay on the eighth instant, N. S. The place was assaulted attacks of general Schuylenberg, and that of Lottum, at the same time. The action at those parts of the town was very obstinate, and ies lost a considerable number in the beginning dispute; but the fight was continued with so bravery, that the enemy, observing our men to sters of all the posts which were necessary for a attack, beat the chamade, and hostages were ed from the town, and others sent from the bein order to come to a formal capitulation for rrender of the place. We have also this day advice, that Sir John Leake, who lies off Dunkirk, had in-corn from the Ba-had fallen in with land. The French to the Duke of A

No. 45.] SATURDAY

Credo pudicitiam
In terris—
In Saturn's re-
There was that

White's

THE other day
town, and strolling insensibly carried very agreeable q which surrounded From one angle o
'Sir, sir!'—This same voice cry, b come forward!' I called me by my and I should be in distress. The obey the summon in at the backg servant, who car came into a gallo fine lady dressed she were going to and disconsolate
As I came near, do not you know recollected her wh the simplicity of at your good fath countenance with unlike the fashio did not easily re habit was then de and beautiful: wh Nothing can spea aspect; yet your ling!'—'It is,' sa meet with one I k that is not an utt

'When your fr wide world with fortune; but rath in the dangers t exposed, in an become mere wor betray those who sense, and obey t their being. The abandoned Deciu art or purpose of satisfaction of h frequently seeing where mixed com himself for the brought to pass.
his brutal desires hopes of accompl expectations he private terrors of months prevail u intention, I still

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

hither, or thither, or yonder, demanding satisfaction. In such a case, he must be owned a Smart Fellow. Yet, he is not to be so towards the ladies, but to be of a kind character, distinct from any you have been led upon. A young gentleman would not be caught in a laced gown, red stockings, and long wig; he must be tantamount to red hair, and a dirty, raggedy was engaged when Pamenon entered a suit, dressed in his ruffish. A young man would be thus mightily by living down some of the extravagance of the play, and by writing a treatise on the dramatic poetry, so much favoured, and so little understood, by the learned world.

From its being conveyed in a cart, after the Persian manner, all the parts being rented by a person, as the custom was before Eschylus, and the behaviour of Pucelle, as if he had won the prize, may possibly detract its antiquity, and settle its chronology, as well as some of our modern critics. Its actual transitions from mournful to merriment, from the hanging of a lover to dancing upon the roof, from the stalking of a ghost to a lady's presence, with a play, you may discover such a decorum, as not to be found elsewhere than in our tragicomedy. But I forget myself; it is not for me to dictate thought fit, dear cousin, to give you these hints, show you that the Beadstuffs do not walk between letters to no purpose; and that though we had told up the train of arts and sciences, yet, in other pages, we are now and then let into our little secrets. Then you will hate kindness.

— BENJAMIN BEADLESTAFF.

From my own Apartment, Jan. 22.

I am not lathered safe, but never spent time with little satisfaction as this evening; for, you must know, I was five hours with three merry, and two bore me woe. The former sang catches; and the latter ended with laughing at the woe they read. We, says Tom Belling, 'you scholars, Mr. Beadstuffs, are the worst company in the world.'—A says he, 'opposite you are dull to night, prythee be merry.' With that I hozaed, and took a grand leap the table, then came clover upon my legs, and took laughter. 'Let Mr. Bickerstaff alone,' says one of the honest fellows; 'when he is in a good humor, he is as good company as any man in England.' If he had no sooner spoke, but I snatched his hat off his head, and I clapped it upon my own, and thrust out a laughing wind upon which we fell laughing; and, in an hour. One of the honest fellows got his nose in the interim, and let me a sound slap on the back, upon which he got the laughter of my nose, and it was such a twing on my nose, that, as he was much merrier than I, I was to be merrier; but resolved to keep up the good nature of the company, and after following as loud as I could possibly, I drank off a bumper of claret, that made me stare again. 'Now,' says one of the honest fellows, 'Mr. Iscariot is in the right, there is no good to be got out of what signifies jumping, or anything else, after one has drunk; let us drink at once.' We did so for a several drink, until eleven, and then I retired to bed, and, after the manner of the good Persian, began to reflect upon the past day of my life. I remember nothing but that I am a fool, and that it is my way to write deep and foolish things I have heard in the last conversation furnish my paper, I can from this only tell you of sufferings and my hangs.

I named Pythagoras just now; and I protest to you, as he believed men after death entered into other species, I am now and then tempted to think other animals enter into men, and could name several on two legs, that never discover any sentiments above what is common with the species of a lower kind; as we see in these bodily wits with whom I was to-night, whose parts consist in strength and activity; but their boisterous mirth gives me great impatience for the return of such happiness as I enjoyed in a conversation last week. Among others in that company we had Florio, who never interrupted any man living when he was speaking; or ever ceased to speak, but others lamented that he had done. His discourse ever arises from the fulness of the matter before him, and not from ostentation or triumph of his understanding; for though he seldom delivers what he need fear being repeated, he speaks without having that end in view; and his forbearance of calumny or bitterness is owing rather to his good-nature than his discretion; for which reason he is esteemed a gentleman perfectly qualified for conversation, in whom a general good-will to mankind takes off the necessity of caution and circumspection.

We had at the same time that evening the best sort of companion that can be, a good-natured old man. This person, in the company of young men, meets with veneration for his benevolence; and is not only valued for the good qualities of which he is master, but reaps an acceptance from the pardon he gives to other men's faults: and the ingenious sort of men with whom he converses, have so just a regard for him, that he is rather an example, than a check to their behaviour. For this reason, as Senecio never pretends to be a man of pleasure before youth, so young men never set up for wisdom before Senecio; so that you never meet where he is, those monsters of conversation, who are grave or gay above their years. He never converses but with followers of nature and good sense, where all that is uttered is only the effect of a communicable temper, and not of emulation to excel their companions; all desire of superiority being a contradiction to that spirit which makes a just conversation, the very essence of which is mutual good-will. Hence it is, that I take it for a rule, that the natural, and not the acquired man, is the companion. Learning, wit, gallantry, and good breeding, are all but subordinate qualities in society, and are of no value, but as they are subservient to benevolence, and tend to a certain manner of being or appearing equal to the rest of the company; for conversation is composed of an assembly of men, as they are men, and not as they are distinguished by fortune: therefore, he who brings his quality with him into conversation, should always pay the reckoning; for he came to receive homage, and not to meet his friends. But the din about my ears from the clamour of the people I was with this evening, has carried me beyond my intended purpose, which was to explain upon the order of merry fellows; but I think I may pronounce of them, as I heard good Senecio, with a spice of the wit of the last age, say, viz. 'That a merry fellow is the saddest fellow in the world.'

No. 46.] TUESDAY, JULY 26, 1709.

Non bene conveniunt, nec in una sede morantur, Majestas et amor. ———— Ovid. Met. ii, 88.

— Love but ill agrees with kingly pride.

White's Chocolate-house, July 25.

We see every day volumes written against that tyrant of human life called Love; and yet there is no

THE TATLER, No. 11.

help found inroads

After this particular

expectation of the h

Aurenge

cities of mien ind

and appe

potentate

the hour near the cauopy)

audience usury, an helping limb for joyous y present b of the m

this. L

self after sary to a interesta

tection.

happy m wit to c

their imp

to his in his conte side, in c

Aurenge

ligence w jewels, w be affixe wears co heap of i visage, to spot calle peror's p genius, i

But we not to g relief (in proper an

This emp

day at five his publi

low purs

Will's; ;

given to tifying th

the empe

like a mis

but, with

of others, master o

own cater

Aurenge

his dishes whom the following

There

name of

was purch only part salage is ing is un

the mann matrons e support

urs of the disposed nd every bited by of every hate con-
their cares, fit to give the enter-st is, that as his set void what ry answer eror has a

be noted, duced is reception.

st delivers h is fixed hen he is io, march-use, intro-st of the
When the

et speaks s mansion sdom dis-
innocence, memory at the wise
'devoted.'
y go out to be supsher, with m with a peror.

unhappy her inno-
tion—cretia."— s immedicoroners
; and the process at

at a naked her duke, es Auren-she calls e, and is age. This akes Auss who are
For which
e by one,
try girl—hink that s ?"—'I ord—It
ror laughs matron :
tness will others of e who be isterhood and cock-
and they rough the whole assembly ; and Aurengezebe, certifying that he keeps them for state rather than use, tells them they are permitted to receive all men into their apartments ; then proceeds through the crowd, among whom he throws medals shaped like half-crowns, and returns to his chariot.

This being all that passed the last day in which Aurengezebe visited the women's apartments, I consulted Pacolet concerning the foundation of such strange amusements in old age : to which he answered, ' You may remember, when I gave you an account of my good fortune in being drowned on the thirtieth day of my human life, I told you of the disasters I should otherwise have met with before I arrived at the end of my stamen, which was sixty years. I may now add an observation to you, that all who exceed that period, except the latter part as it is spent in the exercise of virtue and contemplation of futurity, must necessarily fall into an indecent old age ; because, with regard to all the enjoyment of the years of vigour and manhood, childhood returns upon them : and as infants ride on sticks build houses in dirt, and make ships in gutters, by a faint idea of things they are to act hereafter ; so old men play the lovers, potentates, and emperors for the decaying image of the more perfect performances of their stronger years : therefore, be sure to insert Æsculapius and Aurengezebe in your next bill of mortality of the metaphorically defunct.'

Will's Coffee-house, July 24.

As soon as I came hither this evening, no less than ten people produced the following poem, which they all reported was sent to each of them by the penny-post from an unknown hand. All the battle writers in the room were in debate, who could be the author of a piece so martially written ; and every body applauded the address and skill of the author in calling it a postscript : it being the nature of a postscript to contain something very material which was forgotten, or not clearly expressed in the letter itself. Thus the verses being occasioned by a march without beat of drum, and that circumstance being nowise taken notice of in any of the stanzas, the author calls it a postscript, not that it is a postscript, but figuratively because it wants a postscript. Common writers, when what they mean is not expressed in the book itself, supply it by a preface ; but a postscript seems to me the more just way of apology ; because, otherwise, a man makes an excuse before the offence is committed. All the heroic poets were guessed at for its author ; but though we could not find out his name, yet one repeated a couplet in Hudibras, which spoke his qualifications :

' I th' midst of all this warlike rabble, Crowdero march'd, expert and able.'

The poem is admirably suited to the occasion : for to write without discovering your meaning, bears a just resemblance to marching without beat of drum.

ON THE MARCH TO TOURNAY WITHOUT BEAT OF DRUM.

' The Brussels Postscript.

' Could I with plainest words express That great man's wonderful address, His penetration, and his tow'ring thought ;
It would the gazing world surprise, To see one man at all times wise,
To view the wonders he with ease has wrought,

THE TATLER.

g schemes approach his mind, eezes of a southern wind, rate a sultry glorious day; fannings with a useful pride, hty heat do softly guide, ing clear'd the air, glide silently away.

is immensity of thought ly form'd, and gently wrought, er always softening life's disease; rtune, when she does intend ely frown, she turns his friend, his judgment, and applauds his ease.

at address in this design ow, and will for ever shine, ts a Waller but to do him right; hole amusement was so strong, te he doom'd them to be wrong, may's took by a peculiar slight.

Madam, all mankind behold ast ascendant, not by gold, our wisdom and your pious life; im no more than to destroy which does Europe's ease annoy, ersed a reign of shame and strife.'

James's Coffee-house, July 24.

n of the quill, the ingenious society of having with great spirit and elegance ed the world, that the town of Tournay the twenty-eighth instant; there is for me to say, but to congratulate the here, that we have reason to hope for y of thanking Mr. Withers next winter for the service he has done his country. ves better of his friends than that gen-distinguishing character it is, that he ers with the familiarity, and enjoys his he generosity, of a fellow-soldier. His ke of Argyle had also an eminent part on of this important place. That illus-discovers the peculiar turn of spirit and oul, which only make men of high birth useful to their country; and considers imaginary distinction, unless accom-the practice of those generous virtues ought to be obtained. But, that our y is arrived at its present height, and ll ranks so passionately affect their share inly owing to the merit and conduct of General; for, as the great secret in ough not in nature, has occasioned many ries; and the fantastic notion of being rested in friendship has made men do a erous actions above themselves; so, resent grandeur and fame of the Duke gh is a station of glory to which no one re, yet all carry their actions to a higher ing that great example laid before them.

THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1709.

ugunt homines—est farrago libelli. Jur. Sat. i. 85, 86.

en do, or say, or think, or dream, they paper seizes for its theme. P.

Mit's Chocolate-house, July 18.

Sir Thomas has communicated to me on Epsom of the twenty-fifth instant, n general, a very good account of the re of affairs in that place; but that the tranquillity and correspo begins to be interrupted b Trippet, a fortune-hunter, to give diversion; and wh let him be sensible that people will indulge a splen sible to be at ease, when scandal of our species set ventures. It will be muc laugh Sir Taffety into reas his foppery by any serio gentleman that made it a and ever run into the way insolence. The rule will b they are never mortified, receive and despise them sured, that it is your igno your good graces; or, tha tance prevents their being shunned and avoided. Be sanguine a complexion, t hard for the fair one he at of the chace, without being ease, to fall into the mout from. But the history of as his character.

It happened that, when tune-hunter, he chose T action, where were at the same design. The knig elder must be the better makes all his sail that way do always in an egregio which made our hero triu as public as was possible. less vain of his public add one cause is not half so re lover. Wherever they me aloud, chose each other pe the most conspicuous p church, and practised, in the remarkable particula persons who admire one tible to the rest of the seemed as much made fo Eve, and all pronounced b making; but the night b versally approved, the yo good fortune even of her e at most of their interview for the charms of a fop, a made for that order of unable to see so rich a pe to Sir Tafferty, that a co three suits, was all the pe love vanished that mome the next morning. It is has been ever since eng has not appeared in his love and fortune until he there is at present a yo and fortune, who has at impertinent to infest the this assembly, Sir Taffe manner, with all the acc ensnare the heart of a w merit, which often is o laughed at for her sake. are in much pain for the from the perseverance of much more so from the toward which they give fantastical es of the imperfecof derision equent, as an in her o violently

oger, civi-
application d serve all ever other or diurnal.
a never-erience in e cure on y, through ural stock with: he e imagin-Martyrs,' emplations urine, or on I found hm, and a magazines covered the it, until I
that the
by poetry.
a diffusive ians; and made my numbers When the use, with unexpected pare withers in this the effects nted by no or you are nals carry
something ough it is y by itself.
n, and that so a pretty per was a strongly: ad writ a l when he r finishing ne French days took been sent reat probapeace. I d I knew
o well, as se than his Postscript;
my own,
num of his t all other e hope, we em.
ave found
physician
or having

it himself. Therefore, I am at hand for all maladi arising from poetical vapours, beyond which I never pretend. For being called the other day to one love, I took indeed their three guineas, and gave them my advice, which was to send for Æsculapit Æsculapius, as soon as he saw the patient, cries out 'It is love! it is love! Oh! the unequal pulse! the are the symptoms a lover feels; such sighs, such pangs, attend the uneasy mind; nor can our art, all our boasted skill, avail.—Yet, O fair! for the —Thus the sage ran on, and owned the passion which he pitied, as well as that he felt a greater pain than ever he cured: after which he concluded, 'And I can advise is marriage: charms and beauty will give new life and vigour, and turn the course of nature to its better prospect.' This is the new way and thus Æsculapius has left his beloved powder and writes a receipt for a wife at sixty. In short my friend followed the prescription, and married youth and beauty in its perfect bloom.

'Supine in Silvia's snowy arms he lies, And all the busy cares of life defies:
Each happy hour is fill'd with fresh delight, While peace the day, and pleasure crowns the night

From my own Apartment, July 27.

Tragical passion was the subject of the discourse where I last visited this evening, and a gentleman who knows that I am at present writing a very de tragedy, directed his discourse in a particular manner to me. 'It is the common fault,' said he, 'of your gentlemen who write in the buskin style, that you give us rather the sentiments of such who behold tragical events, than of such who bear a part in the themselves. I would advise all who pretend to the way to read Shakspeare with care and they will so be deterred from putting forth what is usually called tragedy. The way of common writers in this kind rather the description than the expression of terror. There is no medium in these attempts, and you must go to the very bottom of the heart, or it is all mere language; and the writer of such lines is no more poet, than a man is a physician for knowing the names of distempers, without the causes of them. Men of sense are professed enemies to all such empty labours: for he who pretends to be sorrowful, and is not, is a wretch yet more contemptible than he who pretends to be merry, and is not. Such a tragedian is only maudlin drunk.' The gentleman went on with much warmth; but all he could say had little effect upon me: but when I came hither, I so far observed his counsel, that I looked into Shakspeare. The tragedy I dipped into was 'Henry the Fourth. In the scene where Morton is preparing to tell Northumberland of his son's death, the old man does not give him time to speak, but says,

'The whiteness of thy cheeks Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand; Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless, So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone, Drew Priam's curtain at the dead of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burnt;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue,
And I my Piercy's death, ere thou report'st it.'

The image in this place is wonderfully noble and great, yet this man in all this is but rising towards his great affliction, and is still enough himself as you see, to make a simile. But when he is certain of his son's death, he is lost to all patience, and gives up all the regards of this life; and since the last of

on him, he calls for it upon all the let not nature's hand flood confin'd; let order die.

 world no longer be a stage, ention in a ling'ring act; spirit of the first-born Cain bosoms, that each heart being set curses, the wide scene may end, is be the burier of the dead.'

this one scene has convinced me, that d the concern of great men, must noble, and as susceptible of high y whom he represents: I shall there-drama for some time, and turn my s and griefs somewhat below that of less moving. A misfortune, proper otice of, has too lately happened: the ria has three days kept her chamber the beauteous Fidelia, her lap-dog-id not shed more tears for her sparrow. r the more concerned is, that we know elia was killed or stolen; but she was rous-window when the train-bands ver since. Whoever gives notice of ve, shall be rewarded with a kiss of

URDAY, JULY 30, 1709.

tutem verba putant, ut gna ————— Hor. Ep. vi. 31. k on virtue as an empty name.

my own Apartment, July 29.

bliged Pacolet to entertain me with egarded persons of his own character . We chose to take our walk on as we were coming from hence, in s far as Garraway's, I observed two ut just landed coming from the water-t there was something uncommon in aspect; but though they seemed by se related, yet was there a warmth in s if they differed very much in their e subject on which they were talking. emed to have a natural confidence ingenuous freedom, in his gesture; plain, but very graceful and becoming;
 e midst of an overbearing carriage, equently looking round him, a sus-ras not enough regarded by those he feared they would make some attack is person was much taller than his l added to that height the advantage his hat, and heels to his shoes so gh, that he had three or four times i he not been supported by his friend. il stop as they came within a few ce where we stood. The plain gen-to Pacolet; the other looked upon displeasure; upon which I asked him were? when he thus informed me of id circumstances:

member, Isaac, that I have often told eings of a superior rank to mankind; visit the habitations of men, in order m some wrong pursuits in which they aged, or divert them from methods them into errors for the future. He ly reflect upon the occurrences of his life, will find he has been so difficulties, and received favohave expected such benefit cross events from some unse-appointed his best laid desigrive from the interventions o-are benevolent or hurtful to attend his steps in the trac-ness, and of pleasure. Before in the manner I do now, I you in your evening walk throwing some accident in y-by of a funeral, or the ap-solemn object, given your and changed a night you had jollity, into an exercise of s-I was the old soldier who n-Chelsea-fields, and pretend-wooden leg, and could not git short off, on purpose that reflections you did on that s-your hack. If you rememvery merry on that fracture I thought I should next w-of that leg? as is usually olose limbs are sensible of pa-even after those limbs are keeping you then in the st-Boyne prevented an assignaled you into more disasters.

'To be short: those two yonder are such as I am; th-are mere shades and figures, the other Verisimilis. The dians and representatives of They are now going to visit town, to see how their int-or flourish, and to purge the false imputations they daily me: ce and conversation of tsimilis frowned when he fir-provoked at is, that I told strutted and dressed with s-kept himself within his ov-lacquey, and wore only that he is now with. This frets you must know, he has pre-up for himself, and gets an unthinking part of mankind son of the first quality: tho-the world was wholly owing nion.'

This encounter was very was resolved to dog them, a company me. I soon perce-the gesture of the persons; each other in discourse, the w-cast down his eyes, and d-had a painful superiority ov-ther discourse they took leav-went down towards Thame-present, at least, at the oadhouse; and the other made the city. It is incredible immediately appeared in the got rid of his uneasy comp-cock of his hat a-new, set had an appearance that at-tion for him and his interest 'For my part,' said I to Pac-you are mistaken in calling quality; for he looks much are upon very little business, but to make up quarrels; and he is only a general referee, to whom every man pretends to appeal, but is satisfied with his determination, so far as it promotes his own interest. Here it is, that the soldier and the courtier make their exchanges, according to Verisimilis's manner, and the more so, but according to that of Umbra. Among these men, honour and credit are not valuable possessions in themselves, or pursued out of a principle of justice, but merely as they are serviceable to ambition and to commerce. But the world will never be in any manner of order or tranquillity, until men firmly can mediate conscience, honour, and credit, as in their own interest; and that, without the concurrence of the former, the latter are but impostures upon ourselves and others. The force these delusions have, is not seen in the transactions of the busy world only, but they have also their tragedy over the fair sex. Were you to ask the unhappy lady, what pains of reflection, preferring the consideration of her honour to her conscience, has given her? she could tell you, that it has forced her to drink up, in a gallon, this winter, of Tom Dassagap's 'straws,' that she still pines away for fear of being a mother; and knows not the moment she is such, she shall be a madwoman; but if conscience had as strong a rule upon the mind as honour, the first step to her unhappiness and ruin had never been made; she had still continued as she is, beautiful. Were men so self-denial and studious of their own good, as to let the dictates of their reason and reflection, and not the passions of others, conscience would be the soul ruler of his mind; and the words truth, liberty, reason, equity, and religion, would be but synonymous terms for that only guide which makes us pass our days in our own favour and approbation."

No. 49.] TUESDAY, AUGUST 2, 1709.

Quodquid vult hemine——nostris est farraze litelli.

Jur. Sat. l. 8. v.

Whether men do, or say, or think, or dream, Our motion paper seizes for its theme. P.

What's Chel-sto-house, August 1.

The ingratiation of honest names and works upon improper subjects, has made so regular a confession, that we are apt to sit down with our eyes, well or ill satisfied with the methods we are favoured with, without attempting to deliver ourselves from the tyranny under which we are reduced by such innovations. Of all the laudable motives of human life we have suffered so much in this kind, as love, under which revered name a brutal desire called forth, is frequently concealed and admitted; though they differ as much as a nation from a prostitute, or a companion from a buffoon. Poland, the other day, has been pining this misfortune with much indignation, and explained us for having, some time since, quoted those excellent lines of the satirist:

"To love and reflect, if they have brought The nation love, the passion is forgot."

"How could you," said he, "leave such a hint as that? How could Aspasia and Sempronia enter into your imagination at the same time, and you never declare to us the different receptions you gave them?"

The figures which the ancient mythologists and ets put upon Love and Lust in their writings are very instructive. Love is a beauteous blind child, adorned with a quiver and a bow, which he plays with, and shoots around him, without design or direction; he intimates to us that the person beloved has no intention to give us the anxieties we meet with, but that the beauties of a worthy object are like the charms of a lovely infant; they cannot but attract our concern and fondness, though the child so guarded is as insensible of the value you put upon it as it is that it deserves your benevolence. On the other side, the sages, figured Lust in the form of a satyr; of shape, part human, part bestial; to signify that the followers of it prostitute the reason of a man to pursue the appetites of a beast. This satyr is made to haunt the paths and coverts of the wood-nymphs and shepherdesses, to lurk on the banks of rivulets, and watch the purling streams, as the sorts of retired virgins; to show, that lawless sire tends chiefly to prey upon innocence, and has something so unnatural in it, that it hates its own sake, and shuns the object it loved, as soon as it has made it like itself. Love, therefore is a child that complains and bewails its inability to help itself, and begs, for assistance, without an immediate reflection on knowledge of the food it wants: Lust, a watchful thief, which seizes its prey, and lays snares for its own relief; and its principal object being innocence, never robs, but it murders at the same time.

From this idea of a Cupid and a Satyr, we may settle our notions of these different desires, and accordingly rank their followers. Aspasia must, therefore, be allowed to be the first of the beauteous orders.

Love, whose unaffected freedom, and conscious innocence, give her the attendance of the graces in her actions. That awful distance which we bear toward her in all our thoughts of her, and that careful familiarity with which we approach her, are plain instances of her being the truest object of love of any of her sex. In this accomplished lady, love is the constant effect, because it is never the sign. Yet, though her mien carries much more citation than command, to behold her is an immediate check to loose behaviour; and to love her is a liberal education; for, it being the nature of all love to create an imitation of the beloved person in the lover, a regard for Aspasia naturally produces decency of manners, and good conduct of life in her mirrors. If, therefore, the giggling Leucippe could but see her train of fops assembled, and Aspasia move by them, she would be mortified at the veneration with which she is beheld, even by Leucippe's unthinking equipage, whose passions have long been leave of their understandings.

As charity is esteemed a conjunction of the good qualities necessary to a virtuous man, so love is the happy composition of all the accomplishments that make a fine gentleman. The motive of a man's life is seen in all his actions; and such as have the beauteous boy for their inspirer, have a simplicity of behaviour, and a certain evenness of desire, which runs like the lamp of life in their bosoms; while they who are instigated by the satyr, are ever tormented by jealousies of the object of their wishes; and desire what they scorn, and as often consciously and knowingly embrace where they are mutually different.

Florio the generous husband, and Limberham, the bad keeper, are noted examples of the different effects which these desires produce in the mind. Miranda, who is the wife of Florio, lives in the continual enjoyment of new instances of her husband's friendship; ambition to no satisfaction; and life is all that he behaves himself with a certain apathy above rapture and absence with friendship: the sorrows lessen.

On the other Limberham, he is an old woman, an antiquated ham's father; wench by fits, her jealous guard, and in the furniture of dress, make in the town; part of Limberham capable of being moveable. But his spies that since his last magnificently is worth a pi smile is a cut between Corin this great eco Limberham p lousy, the fav opportunity of is hated and d common evils wench but of to know what Messalina reig

Messalina she has left the offspring, to gress of desire keeper! How and skuttles necessary affairs return to the scene of wanton does he, while his imagination the spruce nigance of his but admits, and the gallantry, for this they p that bugbear, either vice or without the re being, with sn regulation of of enjoyment. wood's, a speed this point with man in the pla at his spouse the following

Oh marriage Let debauchee Who, in their Both thee and How can the Chloris, for Chloe, for Betty, nor my lady, nor for the ready chamber-maid, nor distant baroness; woma was his mistress, and the whole sex his seraglio. His form was always irresistible: and if we consider that not one of five hundred can bear the least favour from a lady without being exalted above himself; if also we must allow, that a smile from a side-box has made Jack Spruce half mad; we cannot think it wonderful that Orlando's repeated conquests touched his brain: so it certainly did, and Orlando became an enthusiast in love; and in all his address contracted something out of the ordinary course of breeding and civility. However, powerful as he was, he would still add to the advantages of his person that of a profession which the ladies always favour, and immediately commenced soldier. Thus equipped for love and honour, our hero seeks distant climes and adventures, and leaves the despairing nymphs of Great Britain, to the courtship of beaux and witlings till his return. His exploits in foreign nations at courts have not been regularly enough communicated unto us, to report them with that veracity which we profess in our narrations: but after many feats of arms (which those who were witnesses to them have suppressed out of envy, but which we have faithfully related from his own mouth in our public streets) Orlando returns home full, but not loaded with years. Beaux born in his absence made it the business to decry his furniture, his dress, his manner, but all such rivalry he suppressed (as the philosopher did the sceptic, who argued there was no such thing as motion) by only moving. The beauteous Villars, who only was formed for his paramour, became the object of his affection. His first speech to her was as follows:

'MADAM,

'It is not only that nature has made us two the most accomplished of each sex, and pointed to us to obey her dictates in becoming one; but there is also an ambition in following the mighty persons you have favoured. Where kings and heroes, as great as Alexander, or such as could personate Alexander, have bowed, permit your general to lay his laurels. According to Milton;

The fair with conscious majesty approv'd His pleaded reason.

Fortune having now supplied Orlando with necessaries for his high taste of gallantry and pleasure, his equipage and economy had something in them more sumptuous and gallant than could be received in our degenerate age; therefore his figure, though highly graceful, appeared so exotic, that it assembled all the Britons under the age of sixteen, who saw his grandeur, to follow his chariot with shouts and acclamations: which he regarded with the contempt which great minds affect in the midst of applauses. I remember I had the honour to see him one day stop, and call the youths about him to whom he spake as follows:

'Good bastards—Go to school and do not lose your time in following my wheels: I am loth to hurt you, because I know not but you are all my own offspring: hark ye, you sirrah with the white hair, I am sure you are mine: there is half-a-crown. Tell your mother, this, with the half-crown I gave her when I got you, comes to five shillings. Thou hast cost me all that, and yet thou art good for nothing. Why, you young dogs, did you never see a man before?' 'Never such a one as you, noble general,' replied a truant from Westminster. Sirrah, I 'believe thee: there is a crown for thee. Drive on, coachman.'

This vehicle though sacred to love, was not adorned with doves: such a hieroglyphic denoted too languishing a passion. Orland, therefore, gave the eagle, as being of a constitution which inclined him rather to seize his prey with talons, than pine for it with murmurs.

From my own Apartment, August 2.

I have received the following letter from Mr. Powell of Bath, who, I think, runs from the point between us; which I leave the whole world to judge.

TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQ.

'SIR,

Bath, July 28.

'Having a great deal of more advantageous business at present on my hands, I thought to have deferred answering your Tatler of the twenty-first instant until the company was gone and season over; but, having resolved not to regard any impertinencies of your paper, except what relate particularly to me, I am the more easily induced to answer you, as I shall find time to do it. First, partly lest you should think yourself neglected, which I have reason to believe you would take heinously ill. Secondly, partly because it will increase my fame, and consequently my audience, when all the quality shall see with how much wit and raillery I show you—I do not care a farthing for you. Thirdly, partly because being without books, if I do not show much learning, it will not be imputed to my having none.

'I have travelled Italy, France, and Spain, and fully comprehended whatever any German artist in the world can do; yet cannot I imagine why you should endeavour to disturb the repose and plenty which, though unworthy, I enjoy at this place. It cannot be, that you take offence at my prologues and epilogues, which you are pleased to miscall foolish and abusive. No, no, until you give a better, I shall not forbear thinking that the true reason of your picking a quarrel with me was, because it is more agreeable to your principles, as well as more to the honour of your assured victory, to attack a governor. Mr. Isaac, Mr. Isaac, I can see into a mill-stone as far as another, as the saying is; you are for sowing the seeds of seditions and disobedience among my puppets, and your zeal for the good old cause would make you persuade Punch to pull the string from his chops, and not move his jaw when I have a mind he should harangue. Now, I appeal to all men, if this be not contrary to that unaccountable and uncontrollable dominion, which by the laws of nature I exercise over them; for all sorts of wood and wire were made for the use and benefit of man: I have, therefore, an unquestionable right to frame, fashion, and put them together as I please; and having made them what they are, my puppets are my property, and therefore my slaves; nor is there in nature any thing more just, than the homage which is paid by a less to a more excellent being: so that by the right, therefore, of a superior genius, I am their supreme moderator, although you would insinuate, agreeably to your levelling principles, that I am myself but a great puppet, and therefore have but a co-ordinate jurisdiction with them. I suppose, I have now sufficiently made it appear, that I have a paternal right to keep a puppet-show, and this right I will maintain in my prologues on all occasions.

'And, therefore, if you write a defence of yourself against this my self-defence, I admonish you to keep within bounds; for every day will not be so propitious to you as perhaps my restlessness, and it is not my duty to take heed but cannot easily passion.

'I order to which of whether I please, to let warm my fire whether the by word or sure? and for it, give

'But if puppet-shows that I do not care solemnly to approve. O the mayor for the private word about to be mumbled author of a to be said a fling the cause wins the game with a duce-ace made

'And so country, and true, unless Mr. you are not farewell; and Proper can now almost from Paris, London and

No. 51.] S. W.

CONTINUAT

FORTUNE he dressed, supposed to equal value usual for the to fly from with a great appeared in it alighted mien sure always distaste. Yet the ornaments dresses, as wear. Orland with other things became For this reason his economy vince the p measures w

[illegible][illegible]

From my Apartment, August 5.

Letters from Country and other places have been sent me in answer to what I have said in respect to my criticism on Mr. Powell; and advice is warmly given me to keep to subjects more proper than those on which I have written. But the writers of these letters mistake the use and service I propose to do with my pen. I will be such observations for years to come. I base on that title of this paper gives me leave to say all that I please, and in inserting it, I shall not omit to look out here and in every other place, for purpose intended, or proposed by the writer, so that, suppose two great divines should argue, and fight each other with warmth and levity, unbecoming their subject or character, all that they say ought to be printed, that phrase very proper to be inserted here. The acknowledged truth is, that in all writings which are intended to be published, you shall have from me a selection of all that shall be proper to the purpose, and to the benefit of the gentle reader. I will show a warm and ever powerful, and what to pursue. First, I shall have a national slave preparing, in which I shall insert every page and paragraph, and as that time shall make hold with for my own use. The same time will be as benefited in speech; for all the expressions in talk fall to me. I shall write a number of the hard divisions to be extracted, and I shall be troubled, and cross, I shall be in the court—with submission, no less. I shall offer—and, I think I have well considered this matter; for I would be very far from trifling with your lordship's time, or trespassing upon your patience—however, thus I will venture to say—and so forth. Or else, when a sufficient self-conceited coxcomb is bringing out something in his own praise, and begins, 'Without vanity, I must take this upon me to assert.' There is also a trick which the fair sex have, that will greatly contribute to swell my volumes: as, when a woman is going to abuse her best friend, 'Pray, says she, 'have you heard what is said of Mrs. such-a-one? I am heartily sorry to hear any thing of that kind of one I have so great a value for; but they make no scruple of telling it; and it was not spoken of to me as a secret, for now all the town rings of it.' All such flowers in rhetoric, and little refuges for malice, are to be noted, and naturally belong only to Tatlers. By this method, you will immediately find folios contract themselves into octavos, and the labours of a fortnight got over in half a day.

St. James's Coffee-house, August 5.

Last night arrived a mail from Lisbon, which gives a very pleasing account of the posture of affairs in that part of the world, the enemy having been necessitated wholly to abandon the blockade of Olivenza. These advices say, that Sir John Jennings is arrived at Lisbon. When that gentleman left Barcelona, his Catholic Majesty was taking all possible methods for carrying on an offensive war. It is observed with great satisfaction in the court of Spain, that there is a very good intelligence between the general officers: Count Staremberg and Mr. Stanhope acting in all things with such unanimity, that the public affairs receive great advantages from their personal friendship and esteem to each other, and mutual assistance in promoting the service of the common cause.

This is to give notice, that if any able-bodied Palatine will enter into the bonds of matrimony with Betty Pepin, the said Palatine shall be settled in a freehold of forty shillings per annum in the county of Middlesex.

No. 52.] TUESDAY, AUGUST 9, 1709.

White's Chocolate-house, August 7.

DELAMIRA RESIGNS HER FAN.

LONG had the crowd of the gay and young stood in suspense, as to their fate, in their passion to the beauteous Delamira; but all their hopes are lately vanished, by the declaration that she has made of her choice, to take the happy Archibald for her companion for life. Upon her making this known, the expence of sweet powder and jessamine are considerably abated; and the mercers and milliners complain of her want of public spirit in not continuing longer a secret which was so much the benefit of trade. But so it has happened; and no one was in confidence with her in carrying on this treaty, but the matchless Virginita, whose despair of ever entering the matrimonial state made her, some nights before Delamira's resolution was published to the world, address herself to her in the following manner:

'Delamira! you are now going into that state of life wherein the use of your charms is wholly to be applied to the pleasing only one man. That swimming air of your body, that janty bearing of your head over one shoulder, and that inexpressible beauty in your manner of playing your fan, must be lowered into a more confined behaviour; to show that you would rather shun than receive addresses for the excellences manner of friendship statue, not think myself acquainted unasked, a Delamira that dexter 'all she has rare beauty left her by family) with skill beholders; more to d umphs, I mable rare highest g her, and peculiar rendered i tress of Cupid is t skill in pla it, to let h able lovers your Cupid never be s tinued she seem to se each other fan, which use in our the waving appear in motion of comes into as a fly do elder siste is, is as g consequen play for a looked and success in you think you a shor with it.

'Cymon a wonderf seems to t other sent leader in as I passe impertine Sampler is Cymon is without n full three nation to and hope of your t that it w enchantr bestows a not overlo despair th that prop and your an account meeting figure. Therefore, dear Delamira, give me those tions; a modest fellow never has a doubt adable to his grave.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 11, 1709.

White's Chocolate-house, August 10.

THE CIVIL HUSBAND.

and character of the inconstant Osmyn excuse for the little notice taken by his his departure out of this life, which was blesome to Elmira, his faithful spouse, self. That life passed between them after r, is the reason the town has just now lady with all that gaiety, after having et but three months, which other women me under fifteen, after such a disaster. he daughter of a rich and worthy citizen, er to Osmyn with a portion which might ed her an alliance with our noblest houses, er in the eye of the world, where her ot been now to be related: for her good d made her the object of universal esteem polite part of mankind, from whom she anished and immured until the death of

It is now full fifteen years since that ady was given into the hands of the happy o, in the sense of all the world, received me a present more valuable than the f both the Indies. She was then in her e, with an understanding and discretion nferior to the most experienced matrons. t beholden to the charms of her sex, that y was preferable to any Osmyn could meet l; for, were all she said considered with-to her being a woman, it might stand the a of the severest judges. She had all the her own sex, with all the conversation-ments of ours. But Osmyn very soon ted with the charms of her person by and of her mind by want of taste; for he that loose sort of men, who have but one setting any value upon the fair sex; who en brides but as new women, and conselect them when they cease to be such. erit of Elmira could not prevent her mere wife within a few months after her nd Osmyn had so little relish for her n, that he complained of the advantages of pouse,' said he to one of his companions, discreet, so good, so virtuous, and I know bat I think her person is rather the object han of love: and there is such a thing as ch causes rather distance than passion.' eing no medium in the state of matrimony, gan to take the usual gradations to become ksome of all beings. They grew in the ery complaisant; and having at heart a wledge that they were indifferent to each gies were made for every little circumstance thought betrayed their mutual coldness. but a few months, when they showed a f opinion in every trifle; and, as a sign of y of affection, the word 'perhaps,' was in all their discourse. 'I have a mind to rk,' says she; 'but perhaps, my dear, ant the coach on some other occasion.' very willingly carry her to the play; but had rather go to lady Centaur's and play They were both persons of good dis-soon found that they mortally hated each eir manner of hiding it. Certain it is, that there are some g pure affection, and a m as much as for poetry o

Osmyn began too la his own heart, and use to correct it, and argue and passion for his wif excellent qualities, his the high value he saw did put upon her. I condition, that though a prevailing power over the strength of the hes the weakness of the struggled in vain to re that reason resolved to the country, and pass the noble diversions of a disappointed lover, n stag, fox, or hare living Besides that country-sp he hoped also that his the very sense of seein would think her life end communicated his desig as now she did all thing to be relieved or afflic place. This unexpect resolve to be as obligin he could not prevail u took a resolution at leas municate frankly to her to excuse the indiffer disposed his household he and his lady travelle convenience of discours miles out of town, w purpose:

'My dear, I believe I going to tell you I do told you I did. We ar together, with only one agreeable, survivorship mine is all gone for you it with decency to the with discretion?'

The lady answered, w on the extravagance of h

'My dear, you have court, and I have not be that sort of life. In spoken with great warm civility. Men are long hate, and short in expre they love. Therefore, r still; and it is no matte we love or hate; and t are beholden to me fo hated and despised you yet neither in languag visible but that I loved I know you go out of to beasts, and conversatio so, my life, 'from this learned cooks who ha plasters, and conserves become a notable woma a note or two lower, jealousy or anger. The keen passions, by employ and lessening the easi my dear, with much ale apt, but as you?

great but ars, until give them ma aside.

perite and extremely per in our per is no with goes huph as you day esential to estate to the one,
ise in that ught to be lity of in n't being of all the condemn s, dignity ce, sent lows, but

f dian, of ove, meets its for my as near to ad: I feel he note so con a de mons, and our prime
he. I was ey could:
e; let him it be more self as the ness: and ever more

back and ed, it was fortune, or at his first ive, he said of his way
e. In the his n't be of Rome.
d, and to his, a new ing, a new great, and a with his prop, except
e. When ens which at his,

e.
old fear:

When the hero has spoken this sentiment, you are telling that is great which cannot be expected to be one, who so first position is the contempt of death so high a degree, as to make his exit a thing which in itself, and not a part of his case, but that of heaven and fate.

St. James's Coffee-house, August 10.

Letters from Brussels of the fifteenth instant, N. say that Marshal-general Ravignan returned on the eighteenth with the French king's answer to the intended contribution for the citadel of Tournay, which is, that he does not think fit, to sign that capitulation, even if the allies will grant a cessation of arms in general.
During the time in which all acts of hostility were to have ceased between the citadel and the besiegers.
Soon after the receipt of this news, the enemy's cannonade began to play. There are two attacks against the citadel, commanded by General Lottin and General Schuylenberg, which are both carried on with great success; and it is not doubted but the citadel will be in the hands of the allies to-day the last day of this month. Letters from Ipses say, that only a small part of the garrison of that place was made up of two bodies, each consisting of 1000 ranked, who being dispersed the same day, and after that time appeared in the market-place at the middle following, and seized all manner of provisions, but were with much difficulty quelled. The garrison has not punished any of the offenders, the assault being universal in that place, and to that the officers found those disorders, that the amnesty may be continued of the necessity of paying those troops, and supplying them with provisions.
These advices add, that on the fourteenth the Marquis d'Este passed express through Brussels from the Duke of Savoy, with advice that the king of his royal highness had forced the retrenchments of the enemy in Savoy, and defeated that body of men, who guarded those passes under the command of the Marquis de Thoury.

No. 54. SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1769.

White's Chocolate-house, August 12.

OF THE GOVERNMENT OF AFFECTION.

WHEN labour was pronounced to be the portion of man, that doom reached the affections of his body, as well as his person, the matter on which he was to feed, and all the animal and vegetable world about him. There is, therefore, an assiduous care and sollicitation to be bestowed upon our passionate and affectionate; for they, as they are the exercises of our souls, like our hair and bounds, look horrible becoming, as we cut or let them grow. All this grave pretence is meant to assign a reason in nature for the unaccountable behaviour of Dumvir, the husband and keeper. Ten thousand ladies had the unhappy man escaped, had he made a compact with himself to be upon his guard, and not permitted his various eye to be in so many different quarters upon him, as in his days he has been perplexed with.
But indeed, at present, he has brought himself to be convinced only to one prevailing mistress: between him and his wife, Dumvir passes his hours in all the vicissitudes which attend passion and affection, without the intervention of reason. Laura his wife, and Laura's his mistress, are all with whom he has had, for some months, the least amorous commerce.
Dumvir has passed the noon of life; but cannot aw from those entertainments which are pare only before that stage of our being, and after that season, are rather punishments than ctions: for palled appetite is humorous, and e gratified with sauces rather than food. For end Duumvir is provided with a haughty, ous, expensive, and fantastic mistress, to he retires from the conversation of an affable, e, discreet, and affectionate wife. Laura s him after absence, with an easy and unaf-complacency; but that he calls insipid: rates him for his absence, and bids him from whence he came; this he calls spirit re; Laura's gentleness is thought mean; s insolence, sprightly. Were you to see him own house, and his mistress's lodgings; to he appears an obsequious lover, to Laura an pus master. Nay, so unjust is the taste of ir, that he owns Laura has no ill quality, but e is his wife; Phillis no good one, but that she is stress. And he has himself often said, were he d to any one else, he would rather keep Laura ny woman living; yet allows, at the same that Phillis, were she a woman of honour, have been the most insipid animal breathing. her day Laura, who has a voice like an angel, to sing to him. 'Fie, madam,' he cried, 'we se past all these gaieties.' Phillis has a note e and as loud as that of a milk-maid: when gins to warble, 'Well,' says he, 'there is such ing simplicity in all that wench does.' In a the affectionate part of his heart being cory, and his true taste that way wholly lost, he ntracted a prejudice to all the behaviour of and a general partiality in favour of Phillis. ot in the power of the wife to do a pleasing nor in the mistress to commit one that is seable. There is something too melancholy in lection on this circumstance, to be the subject ery. He said a sour thing to Laura at dinner her day; upon which she burst into tears. the devil, madam,' says he, 'cannot I speak own house?' He answered Phillis a little ly at supper the same evening, upon which rew his periwig into the fire. 'Well,' said he, art a brave termagant jade: do you know, that fair wig cost forty guineas?' Oh Laura! or this the faithful Cromius sighed for you in How is thy condition altered, since crowds of hung on thy eye, and watched its glances? It many months since Laura was the wonder and of her own sex, as well as the desire and of ours. At plays and at balls, the just turn of haviour, the decency of her virgin charms, ed, yet added to diversions. At public devoer winning modesty, her resigned carriage, irtue and religion appear with new ornaments, the natural apparel of simplicity and beauty. inary conversations, a sweet conformity of rs, and a humility which heightened all the encies of good breeding and education, gave re slaves than all the pride of her sex ever woman wish for. Laura's hours are now in the sad reflection on her choice, and that al vanity, almost inseparable from the sex, of ag she could reclaim one that had so often ed others; as it now is, it is not even in the of Duumvir himself to do her justice: for though and merit are things real and independent on nd opinion, yet agreeableness is arbitrary, and stress has much the advantage of the wife. enever fate is so kind to her and her spouse as to end her days and indifference for view, who may a predecessor. Agla lived in assemblie entertainment, and of love, but the too Aglaura comes to will endear the me the mean time, it i virtue of a wife is justly valued until

From my own

As we we have men are our subje omitted, if there behaviour any thi Therefore, the offe epistles, though it place sacred from d duty to remark up is himself only gu a criminal levity at it.

St. J.

'Mr. Bick

*'It being mine others, that your p reform any irregul the following as on Myself, and a grea the divine service a scandalized by the that cathedral. T always very exact a I believe nobody b to roar and bellow that he frightens d are daily used to h a punning Camb worship a Bull-offe is no more fit than of a choir: yet, n friend, I suppose, t when present, to d and anthem, by an
of the bridge at the ing lions in the an grievance, which, t worthy people des inserting this epist the matter your ow that discord in a ch in the church in obligation upon us certain of your para approved by us.*

'You

It is wonderful t lamentation, and th the offender never received the follow Heralds-office, near

*'DEAR COUSIN.
share in the impar mands at present y* our young aking proof right

me hours,
ie coaches,
etween us,
most noisy please to ome other the overhorses as rightened,
disasters, but it is will avoid without a entor's re-ful lovers, longer ago hey swore until death.

vice a-day is missing
I give no proofs of ly Coriana to Stentor, urch-door,
within the ver at that he number

Ecl. iv. 1.

5.

ch concern tions, and e are very netimes to The slow
ents which t, as they l be given nied with r the eyes are very lease our
It may y circum-
cure done d, and on sight, at an oculist.
gton, and
manner.
l the eyes
relations, pinner of he should se of his regard for when one ew sense, Caswell, sired the ould be cured, to keep silence; and let the patient make his own observations, without the direction of any thing he had received by his other senses, or the advantage of discovering his friends by their voices. Among several others, the mother, brethren, sisters, and young gentlewoman, for whom he had a passion, were present. The work was performed with great skill and dexterity. When the patient first received the dawn of light, there appeared such an ecstasy in his action, that he seemed ready to swoon away in the surprise of joy and wonder. The surgeon stood before him with his instruments in his hands. The young man observed him from head to foot; all which he surveyed himself as carefully, and began to compare him to himself; and, observing both his hands, seemed to think they were exactly all except the instruments, which he took for parts of his hands. When he had continued in this amusement some time, his mother could no longer bear the agitations of so many passions as thronged upon him; but fell upon his neck, crying out, 'My son! my son!' The youth knew her voice, and could speak no more than 'Oh me! are you my mother?' and faints. The whole room, you will easily conceive, were very affectionately employed in recovering him; but, above all, the young gentlewoman who loved him, and whom he loved, shrieked in the loudest manner. That voice seemed to have a sudden effect upon him as he recovered, and he showed a double curiosity in observing her as she spoke and called to him, until at last he broke out, 'What has been done to me? Whither am I carried? Is all this about me the thing I have heard so often of? Is this the light? Is this seeing? Were you always thus happy, when you said you were glad to see each other? Where is Tom, who used to lead me? But I could not now methinks, go any where without him.' He offered to move, but seemed afraid of every thing around him. When they saw his difficulty, they told him until he became better acquainted with his new being he must let the servant still lead him. The boy was called for and presented to him. Mr. Caswell asked him, 'what sort of thing he took Tom to be before he had seen him?' He answered, 'he believed there was not so much of him as himself; but he fancied him the same sort of creature.' The result of this sudden change made all the neighbourhood throng to the place where he was. As he saw the crowd thickening, he desired Mr. Caswell to tell him how many there were in all to be seen. The gentleman, smiling, answered him, that 'it would be very proper for him to return to his late condition, and suffer his eyes to be covered, until they had recovered strength: for he might remember well enough, that by degrees he had from little and little come to this strength he had at present in his ability of walking and moving; and that it was the same thing with his eyes, which,' he said, 'would lose the power of continuing to him that wonderful transport he was now in, except he would be contented to lay aside the use of them, until they were strong enough to bear the light without so much feeling as he knew he underwent at present.' With much reluctance he was prevailed upon to have his eyes bound in which condition they kept him in a dark room, until it was proper to let the organ receive its sight without further precaution. During the time of this darkness, he bewailed himself in the most distressed manner; and accused all his friends, complaining that 'some intantation had been wrought upon him, and some strange magic used to deceive him into an opinion that he had enjoyed what they call sight.'

THE TATLER.

He added, 'that the impressions then let in upon his soul would certainly distract him if he were not so at that present.' At another time, he would strive to name the persons he had seen among the crowd after he was couched, and would pretend to speak, in perplexed terms of his own making, of what he in that short time observed. But on the sixth instant, it was thought fit to unbind his head, and the young woman whom he loved was instructed to open his eyes accordingly; as well to endear herself to him by such a circumstance, as to moderate his ecstasies by the persuasion of a voice which had so much power over him as hers ever had. When this beloved young woman began to take off the binding of his eyes, she talked to him as follows.

'Mr. William, I am now taking the binding off, though when I consider what I am doing, I tremble with the apprehension, that though I have from my very childhood loved you, dark as you were, and though you had conceived so strong a love for me, you will find there is such a thing as beauty, which may ensnare you into a thousand passions of which you are now innocent, and take you from me for ever. But, before I put myself to that hazard, tell me in what manner that love, you always professed to me, entered into your heart; for its usual admission is at the eyes.'

The young man answered, 'Dear Lydia, if I am to lose by sight the soft pantings which I have always felt when I heard your voice; if I am no more to distinguish the step of her I love when she approaches me, but to change that sweet, and frequent pleasure for such an amazement as I knew the little time I lately saw; or if I am to have any thing besides, which may take from me the sense I have of what appeared most pleasing to me at that time, which apparition it seems was you; pull out these eyes, before they lead me to be ungrateful to you, or undo myself. I wished for them but to see you; pull them out, if they are to make me forget you.'

Lydia was extremely satisfied with these assurances; and pleased herself with playing with his perplexities. In all his talk to her, he showed but very faint ideas of any thing which had not been received at the ears; and closed his protestation to her, by saying, that if he were to see Valentia and Barcelona, whom he supposed the most esteemed of all women, by the quarrel there was about them, he would never like any but Lydia.

St. James's Coffee-house, August 15.

We have repeated advices of the entire defeat of the Swedish army near Pultowa, on the twenty-seventh of June, O. S.; and letters from Berlin give the following account of the remains of the Swedish army since the battle: Prince Menzikoff, being ordered to pursue the victory, came up with the Swedish army, which was left to the command of general Lewenhaupt, on the thirtieth of June, O. S. on the banks of the Boristhenes; whereupon he sent general Lewenhaupt a summons to submit himself to his present fortune; Lewenhaupt immediately despatched three general officers to that prince, to treat about a capitulation; but the Swedes, though they consisted of fifteen thousand men, were in so great want of provision and ammunition, that they were obliged to surrender themselves at discretion. His czarish majesty despatched an express to General Goltz, with an account of these particulars, and also with instructions to send out detachments of his cavalry, to prevent the king of Sweden's joining his army in Poland. That prince made his escape with a small party by sea, thought he of Volhynia instant say body held deputies of termine the application new diffic Letters from of Savoy's. also two in royal high manner; the Thaur are D'Albigni. from thepe communica Some forced castle of L General R with ten R horse; his Genevre, s phin on duke of B prevent su quarters a army in sev with the M visions for Dauphiné ries. He l who suffere where they the spot, for among who from the D the ninete non being a account the ratify the c of Tournay great vigou several of the others, whi security of the caution confederate loss. Mar and applie new lines b Marlboroug general rev

No. 56.]

Quiesc

—

Whate

By hu

W

THERE is who puzzle about the p He has but I am might which they was born. asking who what we ca I thought i the same th

the most men we only with st to use
besides,
or to our that our common a sort of like the privileges not tied a gentle-n, would t told my instinction, le among who had ding and the ruin of y are ad-
into heat age, tem-bate is to man had
; but fell true idea just, or to acceptance to the constituegan; and bringing are guilty,
'sharpers,' tly, under y custom men, and ference to men withdled a debt n may lose
nust you:
ntries can t, but they his tolera-
all sorts of t amongst her of the e: so that n ensnared n could be xplain the ne severity
the greatest e or coffee-ous declazeal, and ght be ad-less in-the snare of had never et so little traordinary luced; but ply himself named—the ridicu-
a new and thought fit lost certain estate will bring in within seven years: besides which, he proposes to marry, to set all right. He was, therefore, indolent enough to speak of this matter with great impartiality. 'When I look around me,' said this easy gentleman, 'and consider in a just balance us bubbles, elder brothers whose support our dull fathers contrived to depend upon certain acres, with the rooks, whose ancestors left them the wide world I cannot but admire their fraternity, and condemn my own. Is not Jack Heyday much to be preferred to the knight he has bubbled? Jack has his equipage his wenches, and his followers: the knight, so far from a retinue, that he is almost one of Jack's. However, he is gay, you see, still; a florid outside—His habit speaks the man—And since he must unbutton, he would not be reduced outwardly, but stripped to his upper coat. But though I have great temptation to it, I will not at this time give the history of the losing side; but speak the effects of my thoughts, since the loss of my money, upon the gaming people. This ill fortune makes most me contemplative and given to reading; at least it has happened so to me; and the rise and fall of Sharper in all ages has been my contemplation.'

I find, all times have had of this people: Homer in his excellent heroic poem, calls them Myrmidons who were a body that kept among themselves, so had nothing to lose; and therefore never spare either Greek or Trojan, when they fell in their way upon a party. But there is a memorable verse, which gives us an account of what broke that whole body and made both Greeks and Trojans masters of the secret of their warfare and plunder. There is nothing so pedantic as many quotations; therefore, I shall inform you only, that in this battalion there were two officers called Thersites and Pandarus: they were both less renowned for their beauty than their wit but each had this particular happiness, that they were plunged over head and ears in the same water which made Achilles invulnerable; and had ever after, certain gifts which the rest of the world were never to enjoy. Among others, they were never to know the were the most dreadful to the sight of all mortals never to be diffident of their own abilities, never to blush, or ever to be wounded but by each other. Though some historians say, gaming began among the Lydians, to divert hunger, I could cite many authorities to prove it had its rise at the siege of Troy; and that Ulysses won the sevenfold shield at hazard. But be that as it may, the ruin of the corps of the Myrmidons proceeded from a breach between Thersites and Pandarus. The first of these was leader of a squadron, wherein the latter was but a private man but having all the good qualities necessary for a partisan, he was the favourite of his officer. But the whole history of the several changes in the order of sharpers, from those Myrmidons to our modern method of address and plunder, will require that we consult some ancient manuscripts. As we make the enquiries, we shall diurnally communicate them to the public, that the Knights of the Industry may be better understood by the good people of England. These sort of men, in some ages, were sycophants or flatterers only, and were endued with arts of life to capacitate them for the conversation of the rich and great; but now the bubble courts the impostor, and pretends at the utmost to be but his equal. To clear up the reasons and causes in such revolutions, and the different conduct between fools and cheats, shall be one of our labours for the good of this kingdom. How, therefore, pimps, footmen, fiddlers, and lackeys are elevated into companions in this present age, shall

THE TATLER.

ed for from the influence of the planet n this island; the ascendancy of which er Sol, who is a patron of the muses and rofessions, has been noted by the learned ry, to be the cause, that 'cunning and ore esteemed than art and science.' It owed also, to the memory of Mr. Partridge, l-street in the Strand, that in his answer y question, At what hour of the night to trap in June 1705? he has largely disder the character of Reynard, the manner g all Sharpers as well as him. But of points, after more mature deliberation.

James's Coffee-house, August 17.

'TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQ.

I have nothing at present new, but that and by some Owlars, old people die in letters from Paris of the 10th instant, N. S.
Monsieur d'Andre, Marquis d'Oraison, died ive; Monsieur Brumars, at one hundred ears, died for love of his wife, who was at her death, after seventy years cohabicholas de Boutheiller, parish-preacher at being a bachelor, held out to one hundred n. Dame Claude de Massy, relict of Peter de Monceaux, grand audienccr of ed on the seventeenth, aged one hundred Letters of the seventeenth say, Monsieur le Lamoignon died on the seventh instant, great piety and virtue; but having died age is concealed for reasons of state. On h, his most Christian Majesty, attended pphin, the Duke of Burgundy, the Duke ss of Berry, assisted at the procession early performs in memory of a vow made he Thirteenth, in 1638. For which act of Majesty received absolution of his confessor sch of all inconvenient vows made by hims, sir, your most humble servant,

' HUMPHREY KIDNEY.'

from my own Apartment, August 17.

I acknowledge several letters which I have ved; among others, one subscribed Philanother Emilia, both which shall be honoured. ird from an officer in the army, wherein I would do justice to the many gallant ich have been done by men of private or officers of lower stations, during this that their families may have the pleasure we lived in an age, wherein men of all their proper share in fame and glory. othing I should undertake with greater an matters of this kind; if, therefore, they quainted with such facts would please to te them by letters, directed to me at ew's, no pains should be spared to put proper and distinguishing light. o admonish Stentor, that it was not admis voice, but my publication of it, which creased the number of his hearers.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1709.

Will's Coffee-house, August 19.

is evening representing a complaint sent the country from Emilia. She says, her there have so little sense of what a refined town is, that she, who was a celebrated low, is, in that dull part of the world, in so little esteem, that th a Tongue-Pad. Old T to keep her wit until s admonish her, that bot for a fine court-lady is house-wives, as one of ing-room. It is therefo one can attain at, to un men we make the best where the beauteous and ceptable, it is certainly pleasing in all conversat is so thirsty after the re his company is for any and for want of knowin is never chosen by othe tity of behaviour which which if he transgresse fate with Delia's bea because all know it is course Emilia can take if she could have as g having every quality, a of themselves with one, with a sense of her m which is now the subj object of their imitation value of herself, she m of that uncommon crea

White's Choccol

Since my last, I hav Trump, to desire that gamesters the justice to Sharpers, who are not he presented me with smith, in little, who, half a plumb, by mean false dice. I must c reason in what he asse and accosted me in t wonderful to me, M pretend to be a man of Knights of the Industr when there are so ma practice of baser metho though you know the Briton, but allow I am Copperamith, for all Lombards. I get my n gets his by their distre communicates his grie them by extortion. If,
to the merit of the p more blameable, he tha or he that cheats a foc indifferently liable to ad he who adds to them, v certainly a worse subje man whose prosperity all which, he that bot out of necessity; he th of choice.'

I allowed Trump the which is the height o confess, that Copperm impudent of all Sharpe credit, and is a robber contemplation of this w on the wonderful succe the meanest capacities recollect an observatio

[illegible]

before their natural: with this they weave a mantle over their heads, which descends down their sides, hides, hides their features, and hides y from knowing men by their faces. This nation has besides this, their God and their king. The granite is every day at a certain hour, to a temple they call the temple of the upper end of that temple there are some men consecrated to their God, where the people attend some mysteries which they call holy men and removed us. The great men make a visit on at the foot of the altar, standing with their backs to the priest and the holy mysteries, and the people directed towards their king, who is seen on his knees before them, and to whom they seem to direct the views of their hearts, and all their devotion. Besides in this custom, there is to be remarked a great subordination; for the people appear adoring the prince, and their prince adoring God. The Indians of this region call it —, It is from four to five degrees of latitude, and more than one hundred leagues by sea from the Iraguá at Havana.

Letter, from Hampstead says, there is a country graveyard there, of a kind which is utterly new. It has his courage, which he takes himself to be able to give proofs of every hour he lives. He is fighting with the men, and contradicting the women. A lady, who sent to me, supercalculated this description out of Suckling:

'I am a man of war and might,
 And know thus much, that I can fight Whether I am rith' wrong or right, Devoutly

No woman under heaven I fear, Now oaths I can exactly swear;
 And forty heaths my brain will bear.
 Most steady!

No. 58. TUESDAY, AUGUST 23, 1799.

Wet's Channel-house, August 22

"Poor Cynthia, who does me the honor to take me now and then very freely of his most secret passions, and tells me his most private thoughts, engaged to me, that though he is in his very power, he is not ruled all his desires, and he was to be entrusted with a fine lady as he is called." "That one passion for Carless has taken up," said he, "my whole soul; and all my affection is stretched, as you may observe ordinary from my return by the sunshining."

This was a declaration not to be made but upon the best opinion of man's singularity; yet as man is subject of matter as such a speech would be, I think, that elasticity is an inferior quality, and some advanced in men is in women. The mighty Sir, who is Blinde says in the comedy, "I was a trifle out of his time" was of that mind, and I celebrate it as an outburst of good sense. When he is with the company, and merrily, and public success is high in pitch at Rome, as at present in England, yet, I believe, there was no man in the day to whom that General of all ridiculous in Italy, even in the following account of him.

Spent at four-and-twenty years of age, had the greatest victory; and a multitude of persons of each sex and all conditions, fell into his power.
Among others, an agreeable virgin in her early bloom and beauty. He had too sensible a spirit to see the most lovely of all objects without being moved by passion: besides which, there was no obligation of honour or virtue to restrain his desires towards one who was his by the fortune of war. But a noble indignation, and a sudden sorrow which appeared in her countenance, when the conqueror cast his eyes upon her, raised his curiosity to know her story. He was informed, that she was a lady of the highest condition in that country, and contracted to Indibilis, a man of merit and quality. The generous Roman soon placed himself in the condition of that unhappy man, who was to lose so charming a bride; and, though a youth, a bachelor, a lover, and a conqueror, immediately resolved to resign all the invitations of his passion, and the rights of his power, to restore her to her destined husband. With this purpose he commanded her parents and relations, as well as her husband, to attend him at an appointed time. When they met, and were waiting for the general, my author frames to himself the different concern of an unhappy father, a despairing lover, and a tender mother, in the several persons who were so related to the captive. But, for fear of injuring the delicate circumstances with an old translation, I shall proceed to tell you, that Scipio appears to them, and leads in his prisoner into their presence. The Romans, as noble as they were, seemed to allow themselves a little too much triumph over the conquered; therefore, as Scipio approached, they all threw themselves on their knees, except the lover of the lady: but Scipio observing in him a manly sullenness, was the more inclined to favour him, and spoke to him in these words:

'It is not the manner of the Romans to use all the power they justly may: we fight not to ravage countries, or break through the ties of humanity. I am acquainted with your worth, and your interest in this lady: fortune has made me your master; but I desire to be your friend. This is your wife; take her, and may the gods bless you with her! But far be it from Scipio to purchase a loose and momentary pleasure at the rate of making an honest man unhappy.'

Indibilis's heart was too full to make him any answer; but he threw himself at the feet of the general, and wept aloud. The captive lady fell into the same posture, and they both remained so, until the father burst into the following words: 'O divine Scipio! the gods have given you more than human virtue. O glorious leader! O wondrous youth! does not that obliged virgin give you, while she prays to the gods for your prosperity, and thinks you sent down from them, raptures, above all the transports which you could have reaped from the possession of her injured person?' The temperate Scipio answered him without much emotion, and saying, 'Father, be a friend to Rome,' retired. An immense sum was offered as her ransom; but he sent it to her husband, and smiling, said, 'This is a trifle after what I have given him already; but let Indibilis know, that chastity at my age is a much more difficult virtue to practise than generosity.'

I observed Cynthia was very much taken with my narrative; but told me, 'this was a virtue that would bear but a very inconsiderable figure in our days.' However, I took the liberty to say, that 'we ought not to lose our idea of things, though we had debauched our true relish in our practice; for, after we have done laughing, solid virtue will keep its place in men's opinions; and though custom made it not so scandalous as it ought to be, to ensnare innocent women, and triumph in the falsehood; such actions, as we have here related, must be accounted true gallantry, and they are re-

A man in town, that speaking he that had e were a sta see very m and more not thus, man in Eng he talks me

Will Da grammarians and myself room; and enough for particle Fo well know for he had the day, w the first m therefore, t it, he shou the pleasur 'Faith, ge humble; a conversati enlarge yo though I t the partic As simila selves, to always se the liberty error and in your im the knowl with all me For. You ference, v There is of quant Much. B to be incor creet use o controversi gage you v point, Wh or forced it standing t like famili the Irishm a lodging, house. If of a quite could not for what t

Martius found lear for he did wise debat reflect upo wonder the genius for another er blind man, way of ste short-sight marching all scope ;

ing, makes rstanding s convert learning endowed happy in e ways of nows that f using it.

2. defeat of
for some pest, and e, which course he unhappy life. His th great t has had
, for his nt Piper, st violent
disarmed, battle was e Swedish
day, and Muscovy honour and 709.

l. al renown ous, and birds. I heroes and method of represent e shadow like them
s. Some e it; and oath, and post exact where the ne chase.
discourse
ters from e is a late
ing-shop;
erson who of tender-his maid ping and
r. He is rest of the ho appear bank, and ss. This pass that the soft gn to the ksly, who leave off
ht to do, re in the
of digres-ls would oon, who has kept the pack for many successions of hunting seasons. Actæon has long tracts of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of sorcery, and has been ever since, some part of the year, a deer, and in some parts a man. While he is a man, such is the force of magic, he no soon grows to such a bulk and fatness, but he is again turned into a deer, and hunted until he is lean; upon which he returns to his human shape. Many attempts have been tried, and many resolutions taken by Actæon himself, to follow such methods as would break the enchantment; but all have hitherto proved ineffectual. I have therefore, by midnight watching and much care found out, that there is no way to save him from the jaws of his hounds, but to destroy the pack, which, by astrological prescience, I find am destined to perform. For which end, I have set out my familiar, to bring me a list of all the places where they are harboured, that I may know where to sound my horn, and bring them together, and take an account of their haunts and their marks, again another opportunity.

Will's Coffee-house, August 24.

The author of the ensuing letter, by his name, and the quotations he makes from the ancients, seems a sort of spy from the old world, whom we moderns ought to be careful of offending; therefore, I must be free, and own it a fair hit where he takes me, rather than disoblige him.

• SIR,

‘Having a peculiar humour of desiring to be somewhat the better or wiser for what I read, I am always uneasy when, in any profound writer, for I read in others, I happen to meet with what I cannot understand. When this falls out it is a great grievance to me that I am not able to consult the author himself about his meaning, for commentators are a sect that has little share in my esteem: your elaborate writings have, among many others, this advantage, that their author is still alive, and ready, as his extensive charity makes us expect, to explain whatever may be found in them too sublime for vulgar understandings. This, sir, makes me presume to ask you, how the Hampstead hero's character could be perfectly new when the last letters came away and yet Sir John Suckling so well acquainted with it sixty years ago? I hope, sir, you will not take this amiss: I can assure you, I have a profound respect for you, which makes me write this with the same disposition with which Longinus bids us read Homer and Plato. When in reading, says he, any of those celebrated authors, we meet with a passage to which we cannot well reconcile our reasons, we ought firmly to believe, that were those great wits present to answer for themselves, we should, to our wonder be convinced, that we only are guilty of the mistake that we before attributed to them. If you think fit to remove the scruple that now torments me, it will be an encouragement to me to settle a frequent correspondence with you; several things falling in my way, which would not, perhaps, be altogether foreign to your purpose, and whereon your thought would be very acceptable to your most humble servant.

‘OBADIAH GREENHAT.’

I own this is clean, and Mr. Greenhat has convinced me that I have writ nonsense, yet I am not at all offended at him.

Scimus, et hanc veniam petimusque damusque vicissim.
Hor. Ars. Poet. ver. xi.

I own th' indulgence—Such I give and take. Francis.

This is the true art of raillery, when a man turns another into ridicule, and shows, at the same time, he is in good humour, and not urged on by malice against the person he rallies. Obadiah Greenhat has hit this very well: for, to make an apology to Isaac Bickerstaff, an unknown student and horary historian, as well as astrologer, and with a grave face to say, he speaks of him by the same rules with which he would treat Homer or Plato, is to place him in company where he cannot expect to make a figure; and make him flatter himself, that it is only being named with them which renders him most ridiculous.

I have not known, and I am now past my grand climacteric, being sixty-four years of age, according to my way of life; or, rather, if you will allow punning in an old gentleman, according to my way of pastime; I say, as old as I am, I have not been acquainted with many of the Greenhats. There is indeed one Zedekiah Greenhat, who is lucky also in his way. He has a very agreeable manner; for when he has a mind thoroughly to correct a man, he never takes from him any thing, but he allows him something for it; or else he blames him for things wherein he is not defective, as well as for matters wherein he is. This makes a weak man believe he is in jest in the whole. The other day he told Beau Prim, who is thought impotent, 'that his mistress had declared she would not have him, because he was a sloven, and had committed a rape.' The beau bit at the banter, and said very gravely, 'he thought to be clean was as much as was necessary; and that as to the rape, he wondered by what witchcraft that should come to her ears; but it had indeed cost him a hundred pounds to hush the affair.'

The Greenhats are a family with small voices and short arms, therefore they have power with none but their friends: they never call after those who run away from them, or pretend to take hold of you if you resist. But it has been remarkable, that all who have shunned their company, or not listened to them, have fallen into the hands of such as have knocked out their brains, or broken their bones. I have looked over our pedigree upon the receipt of this epistle, and find the Greenhats are a-kin to the Staffs. They descend from Maudlin, the left-handed wife of Nehemiah Bickerstaff, in the reign of Harry the Second. And it is remarkable, that they are all left-handed, and have always been very expert at single rapier. A man must be very much used to their play to know how to defend himself; for their posture is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward: and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard.

There have been, also, letters lately sent to me, which relate to other people: among the rest, some whom I have heretofore declared to be so, are deceased. I must not, therefore, break through rules so far as to speak ill of the dead. This maxim extends to all but the late Partridge, who still denies his death. I am informed, indeed, by several, that he walks; but I shall with all convenient speed lay him.

St. James's Coffee-house, August 24.

We hear from Tournay, that on the night between the twenty-second and twenty-third, they went on with their works in the enemy's mines, and levelled the earth w day at eight we were re mine than killed only night, we also, seven and twenty enemy had enemy's ma were destro who are im service. Th or three da of the citad son is brou bread and reduced to this siege unknown to parties und apprehensio them, or cre and all thi more terrib of a soldier great cheer have also g Annecy, an Franché C much super that both have reason event.

No. 60.]

W

To proce
I ought to day to day acquaintanc hands of th to relate t the uncomm then to go
You are student of since he l common di in whoring vices he h last by the dons who h his father v but as sea frequent lo condition, impatient o in contriv way of life and in wh is never w a man an a therefore n
of this ext the pleasur which his received th but frequ behave him

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

fortune, ted, that men fall; generally ed, there- ving him ease, and Tristram order, the it to the LDAIR.

t of this er's hand, ristram's; which his e capable. rit to his and for a I think I looked y here is in he letters I believe, ice of the order for ment on mediately efully to.

After he alked six his door, ighly this table and oset, and ain about astonish-by stories had been ces which en taken ing clear y gravely a design s him to self into efore he resolved e did so, mention money: you, Sir an affair Tristram, re me to re I have d me— bill of a or a con- ooks and thousand e shows e. Sir d finding at the writing the name, there was a certain sto- n one letter, which the father, and he agreed sho- ce to such directions as he desired might be no- carnately honoured, he forthwith gave the man. The possession of four thousand pounds gave young gentlemen a new train of thoughts; he be- to reflect upon his birth, the great expectations was born to, and the unsuitable ways he had to pursued. Instead of that unthinking creature was before, he is now provident, generous, and disre- The father and son have an exact and regular re- spondence, with mutual and unreserved confi- on each other. The son looks upon his father as the best tenant he could have in the country, and the father finds the son the most safe banker he c- have in the city.

Will's Coffee-house, August 26.

There is not any thing in nature so extravagant but that you will find one man or other that has practised or maintained it; otherwise Harry Spode could not have made so long an harangue as he did here this evening, concerning the force and efficacy of well-applied nonsense. Among ladies, he positively averred, it was the most prevailing part of eloquence, and had so little complaisance as to say, 'a woman is never taken by her reason, but always by her passion.' He proceeded to assert, 'the way to say that, was only to astonish her.' I know,' continued he, 'a very late instance of this; for being at accident in the room next to Strephon, I could not help over-hearing him, as he made love to a certain great lady's woman. The true method in your application to one of this second rank of understanding is not to elevate and surprise, but rather to coax and amaze. Strephon is a perfect master in this kind of persuasion: his way is, to run over with soft air a multitude of words, without meaning or connexion; but such as do each of them apart give pleasing ideas, though they have nothing to do with each other as he assembles them. After the common phrases of salutation, and making his entry into the room, I perceived he had taken the fair nymph's hand and kissing it said, "Witness to my happiness, y groves! be still, ye rivulets; Oh! woods, caves, fountains, trees, dales, mountains, hills, and streams! oh fairest! could you love me?" To which I overheard her answer, with a very pretty lisp, "Oh! Strephon you are a dainty creature: why do you talk these tender things to me? but you men of wit—" "Is then possible," said the enamoured Strephon, "that she regards my sorrows! Oh! pity, thou belovest me to a heart over-loaded! If rapture, solicitation, desire, and pleasing anxiety—But still I live, in the most afflicting of all circumstances, doubt—Can any charmer name the place and moment?"

"There all those joys insatiably to prove,

With which rich beauty feeds the glutton live."

"Forgive me, madam: it is not that my heart is weary—its chain, but—" This incoherent stuff was answered by a tender sigh, "Why do you put your wit to a weak woman?" Strephon saw he had made some progress in her heart, and pursued it, by saying that "He would certainly wait upon her at such a hour in Rosamond's pond; and then—the sun, the dews, and rural powers of the place, sacred and available to love; love, the mover of all noble hearts should hear his vows repeated by the streams and echoes." The assignation was accordingly made. The style he calls the unintelligible method of speaking to

THE TATLER.

I will engage, had this gallant spoken as, she had never understood him half so well as we may take it for granted, that he will be as a very cold lover, who discovers to that he is in his senses.'

At my own Apartment, August 26.

A wing letter came to my hand, with a view to have the subject recommended to our particularly the Smart Fellows; who are to repair to Major Touch-hole, who can help to lock those that are only fit for exercise.

Just ready for the press,

Triumphant; or London's Glory:

The whole art of encampment, with the method of marching armies, marching them off, posting the lining hollow squares, and the various ways of saluting with the half-pike; as it was by the trained-bands of London this year, and seven hundred and nine, in that nursery the Artillery Ground. Wherein you have not how to form a strong line of foot, with salutes between each platoon, very useful to breaking in of horse. A civil way of the military ceremony; wherein the salute from his horse, and, at the head of his salutes the lieutenant-colonel; and the colonel, to return the compliment, courtesies, and after the same manner salutes exactly as it was performed, with applause, on the 5th of July last. Likewise of a new invention, made use of in the red to quell mutineering captains; with several others alike useful for the public. To which is an appendix by Major Touch-hole; proving that of discipline now used in our armies to be defective: with an essay towards an amendment: dedicated to the lieutenant-colonel of the regiment.

Mr. Kerstaff has now in the press, 'A defence of the Smart Fellows against the class of the Smarts: a dissertation upon the gravity which becomes persons. Illustrated by way of fable, and a comparison of the nature of the elephant, the cow, the horse, and the dromedary, which have motions of gravity and grace. To this is added a treatise on the elephant, according to Pliny, against the bringing of foreigners into the forest. Adapted to some circumstances. Together with allusions to the same as declare against the poor Palatines.'

TUESDAY, AUGUST 30, 1709.

White's Chocolate-house, August 29.

Many phrases which have crept into conversation, especially of such company as frequent there is not one which misleads me more, than of a 'Fellow of a great deal of fire.' This is a new term, Fire, has done much good in the world, it has made them troublesome to every body.

You see in the very air of a 'Fellow of a great deal of fire' something so expressive of what he would be, that it were not for self-preservation a man to be out.

Last night the fate to drink a bottle with two firemen, who are indeed dispersed, like the stars, in all quarters, and to be met with one of the most different education. One of my companions was a scholar with Fire; and the other a soldier of the same name. The man would fall into dispute in a manner of provocation or decision without words, and would swear an oath to express his opinion. He was a mere scholar, and my companion was a person of no note. The particularity of the second terrible. The which in some measure reconciles towards each other. The person of no note brought to be convinced of anything, any otherwise than by the other to me, and make them alternately enjoyed conversant with books, which makes them both. The which makes them both books is necessary to company, and the knowledge of true relish of books: but makes one pass for a fine gentleman. I pass my time with the to do justice to his passion, and let me alone. let it rest there; I must within his shallow observation: to all which he contempt of those of his content for delighting in their duty. Thus it is much animal life, and repair to our armies, and reasonable men, under

The word has not been used by lovers, to supply them than it has been to support them in being every fool of their order is Colonel Truncheon, ready on all occasions; his life, but is ever positive out of obstinate opinion.

It is very unhappy for it is possible for such a and a set of common with no other accompaniment freedom, for men of these ought to pretend to carry it so far, as to offend or not; for the differs from true spirit of a mettlesome horse. A to all the waiters who affronted at the company makes the drawers and footman at home, known without danger.

This is not the Fire of a young man of good fortune. He commands him in its orb: he is the victor of the machine. His offices of life with reason in the manner of doing laudable pursuits, is that a man of merit; who every gay coxcomb of wrong, and dare to pe-

Will's Coffee-house

It is a common of her reputation and possessions. She is a more sensible person, and her restrictions are such, that she is not so much in the way of the world as the other. She is not so much in the way of the world as the other. She is not so much in the way of the world as the other.

5, that the steel excludes her from the society of the world. She is not so much in the way of the world as the other. She is not so much in the way of the world as the other.

and in the eyes of the world. She is not so much in the way of the world as the other. She is not so much in the way of the world as the other.

26. She is not so much in the way of the world as the other. She is not so much in the way of the world as the other.

from it; for it is very just that she who values herself only on her beauty, should be regarded by others on no other consideration.

There is certainly a liberal and a pedantic school among women, as well as men; and the male lists accordingly. She, therefore, that is bred in freedom, and in good company, considers men according to their respective characters and distinctions, while she that is looked up from such observation will consider her father's butler, not as a butler, but as a man. In like manner, when men converse with women, the well-bred and intelligent are best pleased with an observation suitable to their different talents and accomplishments, without respect to the sex; while a mere woman can be observed under consideration but that of a woman; and there can be no reason for placing any value upon her, for losing time in her company. Wherefore, I am of opinion, that the rule for pleasing long is, to obtain such qualifications as would make them so worthy to be not women.

Let theauteous Cleomira then show us her face, and know that every stage of life has its peculiar charms, and that there is no necessity for fifty-three. That childish colouring of her cheeks is not so ungraceful, as that slupe would have been with her face were its real countenance. She has count and ought to know, that if she will not follow nature will follow her. Time, then, has made the person which had, when I visited her grandfather a beautiful bloom, sprightly air, and soft utterance, now no less graceful in a lovely aspect, an awful manner, and maternal wisdom. But her heart was so set upon her first character, that she neglects to repent at her present; not that she is against more stayed conduct in others, for she recommends gravity, circumspection, and severity of countenance to her daughter. Thus, against all odds, she is the sagacious mother the fine lady.

But these great evils proceed from an unaccountable wild method in the education of the latter part of the world, the women. We have no such thing as a standard for good breeding. I was the other day at my Lady Wealthy's, and asked one of her daughters how she did? She answered, 'She never conversed with men.' The same day I visited my Lady Pleasant's, and asked her daughter the same question. She answers, 'What is that to you, you old thing?' and gives me a slap on the shoulder.

I defy any man in England, except he knows the family before he enters, to be able to judge whether he shall be agreeable or not when he comes in. You find either some odd old woman, who is permitted to rule as long as she lives, in hopes of her death, not to interrupt all things; or some important young woman who will talk steadily upon the standard of looking beautifully. I will not answer for it, but it may be, that I take all other old fellows, for a needless for the fashions and manners which prevailed when I was young and in fashion myself. But certain it is, that the taste of grace and beauty is much lowered. The fine women they show me now-a-days are at best but pretty girls to me. I have seen Sacharissa, when all the world repeated the poems she inspired; and Villaria, when a youth and king was her subject. The Things you follow and make songs on now, should be sent to turn or be down to bobbing or bone-lace: they are indeed neat and so are the sempstresses; they are pretty, and so are their hand-maids. But that graceful notion that awful mien, and that winning attraction, which grew upon them from the thoughts and conversation not with in my time, are now no more seen. Tell me I am old : I am glad I am so ; for I do see your present young ladies.

THE TATLER.

These among us who set up for any thing of decorum, do so mistake the matter, that they offend on their side. Five young ladies, who are of no name for their great severity of manners, and lary behaviour, would lately go no where with others but to an organ-loft in a church ; where had a cold treat, and some few opera songs, to great refreshment and edification. Whether prudent persons had not been as much so if it had been done at a tavern, is not very hard to find. It is such silly starts and incoherences as, which undervalue the beautiful sex, and thus in our choice of sweetness of temper and civility of manners, which are the only lasting qualities of woman. But I must leave this important matter, at present, for some matters which press for attention ; as you will observe in the following ‘ London, August 26, Artillery Ground.

DEAR SIR,

It is natural for distant relations to claim kindred in a rising family ; though at this time zeal to my country, not interest, calls me out. The city forces are shortly to take the field, all good protestants will be pleased that their arms and valour should be with equal lustre. A council of war was lately held by the Honourable Colonel Mortar being president. In many debates, it was unanimously resolved, that Major Blunder, a most expert officer, should be ordered for Birmingham, to buy arms, and to prove the locks on the spot, as well to prevent any disappointment in the day of battle. The Duke being a person of consummate experience, and invested with a discretionary power. He knew an ancient story, that securing the rear, and getting a glorious retreat, was the most celebrated rule of conduct. Accordingly such measures were taken to prevent surprise in the rear of his arms. When Pallas herself, in the shape of rust, could not find them. They were drawn into close order, embodied, and arrived securely without touch. Great and national actions deserve popular applause ; and as praise is no expense to the public, my dearest kinsman, I communicate this to you, well to oblige this nursery of heroes, as to do to my native country.

‘ I am,

‘ Your most affectionate kinsman,

‘ OFFSPRING TWIG.’

My war-horse, belonging to one of the colonels of Artillery, to be let or sold. He may be seen adorned with ribbands, and set forth to the best advantage, the next training day.’

[ ] THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1709.

White’s Chocolate-house, August 31.

A place being frequented by persons of consequence, I am desired to recommend a dog-kennel to those who shall want a pack. It lies not far from the street, and is kept by two who were formerly in the French service ; but left plundering for a more orderly life of keeping dogs : besides according to their expectation, they find it more profitable, as well as more conducing to the safety of the kin, to follow this trade, than the beat of drum. Their resident dogs to whelp in, and the scent. The blood-hounds, which

A L

Jowler, of a right Rockwood, of the courtesy of England Pompey, a tall hound from France, and known

These two last hounds Ringwood, a French breed, a fine open hound, always in the house, a good nose, French

There is also another hound, and knows perfectly

Ten setting-dogs

Four mongrels of

And twenty who

These curs are so too keen at the spot

the keepers can come from the north run

indeed, defended

but they proved at twenty-five pounds

which they filled the noise in the neigh obliged to hasten to where they are kept strangers, whose be in such a manner, other virtuosi, who lost the intention of proceed on their jour

If these hounds

some good purchas near Saint James’s

may be altogether dogs are few, and during their stay in

of the peace may visit their harbour sex may allow his hangman to cut off

distinction-sake, th

from the mongrels

are regulated, you to Paris, at the u

house belonging to

of Pall Mall, and k

It were to be wis

of ; for it is a ve tolerated in cities, the ‘ Common Hu

bailliffs, expel them the walls ; though

keep them, to the

but it is desired, t curs, or have been marks, and the h and I do not doubt well, as to have th they appear. In t entertain this kind timely notice that let them go unreg admonish my fell instruct them how are going about th

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the bon-but is as to see a
but he is,
he best of

From my own Apartment, August 31.

course of h is Mr.
ld follow, ickness of thoughts,
told him
and," says e boy who o tell of a tion, and e between it has ex-
?" "Why," trench me the story a then to The gen-suspect of no means son," and y said it was comprehenout: "It was such a strange h as much ly expres-a way for he first is expressed acted in amity, and of in this courses of me within is compiled.
perfection
d would riest be it is, you eir attenbut being
h) in the Court is other day n, and she had Besides
d collected ss was a a of a few nner, ref H. had's nner, and y County, had, and I two weeks to unite me," she took my

I have been just now reading the introduction to the history of Cutiline by Sallust, an author who is very much in my favour: but when I reflect upon his professing himself wholly disinterested, and, at the same time, see how industriously he has availed himself of saying any thing to the praise of Cato, to what virtue the commonwealth owed its safety, my esteem lessens my esteem for that writer: and is it argument, among others, for laughing at all who pretend to be out of the interests of the world, to profess purely to act for the service of mankind without the least regard to themselves. I do not deny that the rewards are different: some find riches, others at honour, by their public service. However, they are all pursuing some end to their selves, though indeed those ends differ as much as right and wrong. The most grateful way, then, should think, would be to acknowledge, that we aim at serving ourselves: but at the same time make it appear it is for the service of others that we have the opportunities.

Of all the disinterested professors I have ever heard of, I take the boatswain of Daupner's ship to be the most rapid, but the most excellent. You are to know that, in the wild searches that navigators making, they happened to be out at sea, far distant from any shore, in want of all the necessaries of life, inasmuch that they began to look, as well at hunger, on each other. The boatswain, a fat, healthy, fresh fellow, and attracted the eyes of the whole crew. In such an extreme necessity, all forms of superiority were hid aside: the captain and lieutenant were safe only by being carried, and the unhappy boatswain in danger only by being worsted. To be short, the company were unanimous and the boatswain must be cut up. He saw the intention, and desired he might speak a few words before they proceeded; which being permitted, he delivered himself as follows:

GENTLEMEN SAILORS,

"Can be it that I should speak it for any private interest of my own; but I take it that I should not do with a good conscience, if I did not care for you, that I am not second. I say, gentlemen, justice and the testimony of a good conscience, as well as I love of my country, to which I hope you will all seem, oblige me to own, that Black Kate at Deptford has made me very unsafe to eat; and, I speak with shame, I am afraid, gentlemen, I should persue you."

This speech had a good effect in the boatmen's favour; but the surgeon of the ship protested he had cured him very well, and offered to eat the first steak of him himself.

The boatswain replied, like an orator, with a remembrance of the people, and in hopes to gain them, that this was hearty, and if he could be for their service, and thank'd the surgeon for his information. "However," said he, "I must inform you for your good, that I have ever since my cure, been very thirsty and dispassionate; therefore, I presume, it would be much better to tip me, and drink me off, than sit me at once, and have no men in the ship fit to drink." As he was going on with his harangue, the fresh mate arose, and gave the crew hopes of a better report at the nearest shore, to which they sail next morning.

Most of the self-denials we meet with are of this sort; therefore, I think he acts fairest who owns, he least to have brother's fare, without that he gives himself up with pleasure to it for the preservation of his fellows.

THE TATLER.

James's Coffee-house, August 31.

From the Hague of the sixth of September, that the governor of the citadel of Tournay ordered their highnesses the Duke of Marlborough and the Prince of Savoy to surrender that the thirty-first of the last month, on terms not allowed them by those princes, hostilities thereupon renewed; but that on the place was surrendered, with a seeming granted to the besieged, above that of terms of war: for they were forthwith to be to Conde, but were to be exchanged for of the allies, and particularly those of were mentioned in the demand. Both being stretched towards Mons with the diligence, that of the allies, though they took a much more difficult road, arrived first at that town, which they have now actually and the quarter-master-general was, at the despatching these letters, marking the the encampment of the covering army.

Sellers, or others whom this advertisement may concern.

Mr. Aaron, the unborn poet, gives notice, that all treatises, as well in verse as prose, with son, and translates out of all languages, turning or study. A bookseller will treat for his pastoral on the surrender of the citadel of Tournay, he is in his proposals before the news of a victory for any other town. A undertaker for either play-house, may have written by him; or, if it shall suit their satire upon operas; both ready for next

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1709.

White's Chocolate-house, September 2.

ENJOYMENT OF LIFE WITH REGARD TO OTHERS.

Never thought it the greatest diminution to glory imaginable, that in their institution triumphs, they led their enemies in chains were prisoners. It is to be allowed that honour to the superiority of heroes above the kind, must needs conduce to the glory and of a nation; but what shocks the imagination upon is, that an unhappy man, who was no more to the victor but by the chance of war, led like a slave at the wheels of his chariot. These other circumstances of a triumph, that allowed in a civil war, lest one part should triumph while the other was making acclamations; could not be granted, except such a number in battle; that the general should be who made a false muster of his dead; that, had great and politic ends in their being, and tended to the apparent benefit of the realm. But this behaviour to the contrary, no foundation in nature or policy, only the insolence of a haughty people, who over barbarous nations, by acting what they say for those very barbarians to practise.

It seems wonderful, that a man should take care, that to compensate a victorious officer, no power should be in him in the empire on which he sits, that the consults them at his table that ever thought to make the prisoners one of the improved the gladness he had made a much greater appeared unhappy on his man appeared great.

But we will wave at accidents, and turn our the part of human life, and business we contend for. Romans did on more. Over our fellow-creatures to be found, who would happy, than be really happy. This men attempt by such houses, numerous serious pursuits of an ambitious

Bromeo and Tabio. Each other, and rivals in nature so good to please as to give him little more wherein the other is useful of doing this, and never Bromeo has been many be making, but he adds thought, when Tabio says yet he never would hear are in this posture. Well, to be sincere, they make an agreeable seat appurtenances what he them to the same ground of all things under at second-hand is the very strange madness, that these occasions can tell himself. As for my part, I hate all ostentation. In adapting our affairs to Upon which, the next whatever he hears his him in; but their manner their time of life, in understandings, equal continue to the last day now, Tabio has heard, chased two hundred a last settled the account he thought himself to seem a very fantastical but there is nothing so favouring rather to go far towards an easy fortune standard that would not

Will's Coffee

Mr. Dactyle has been his eloquence upon the ridicule: and seemed to was generally in it some society of liberal men, the circumstances of his talent, continued he, his sword, not to be drawn or to bring pretenders to true light. But we have sart on the right, which he executed so fully, that he pierced through it, and won a noble post. The Prince of Orange had the good fortune in a wood on the left; after which the whole body of the confederates, joined by the French, marched up and engaged the English, who were drawn up at some distance from the woods. The dispute was very warm for some time; but towards noon, the French began to give ground on one wing to the other; which advantage was observed by our general, the whole army was then with fresh vigour, and in a few hours the day terminated in the entire defeat of the enemy.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1709.

caret ora cuore nostro? Hor. 1 Od. ii. 36.

coast, encircled by the briny flood,
Is not the glorious tribute of our blood.

From my own Apartment, September 5.

N I lately spoke of triumphs, and the be-of the Romans on those occasions, I knew, by l in astrology, that there was a great event hing to our advantage; but, not having venpon me to tell fortunes, I thought fit to defer tion of the battle near Mons until it hap-which moderation was no small pain to me : ould wrong my art, if I concealed that some of all intelligencers had signified to me the news n from Paris, before the arrival of Lieutenant-Graham in England. All nations, as well as , have their good and evil genius attending out the kingdom of France has three, the last of is neither for it nor against it in reality ; but some months past acted an ambiguous part, tempted to save its ward from the incursions powerful enemies, by little subterfuges and which a nation is more than undone when it eeds to practise. Thus, instead of giving counts and representations of things, they at is indeed true, but at the same time a al, when all the circumstances come to be Pacolet was at the court of France on night last, when this genius of that kingdom either in the shape of a post-boy, and cried at Mons was relieved, and the Duke of rough marched. Pacolet was much astonished account, and immediately changed his form, e to the neighbourhood of Mons, from whence the allies had really marched; and began aire into the reasons of this sudden change, feared he had heard a truth of the posture French affairs, even in their own country. pon diligent enquiry among the aerials who d those regions, and consultation with the uring peasants, he was able to bring me the g account of the motions of the armies since fired from about that place, and the action allowed thereupon.

On Saturday the seventh of September, N. S. the rate army was alarmed in their camp at by intelligence, that the enemy were marching k the Prince of Hesse. Upon this advice, ke of Marlborough commanded that the troops immediately move; which was accordingly ed, and they were all joined on Sunday the at noon. On that day, in the morning, it d that, instead of being attacked, the ad-vanguard of the detachment, commanded by the of Hesse, had dispersed and taken prisoners a party of the ene observe the march moved from Quiv and inclined to the The ninth, the M their march, until sessed themselves o

As soon as they ca up intrenchments arrived within few but the Duke of M for the arrival of pected from the sie these troops were s on for an action th resolved to engage

It will be necessary of the action, and time of the engagement an idea of the place. instant, were both Dour, Blaugies, Sar Prince of Savoy on the forces of Great those of the high as a large interval of left of the whole. The paths of the woods, trenchments over-against of the Duke of M there were also two over-against the ar posture of the French the signal was given the charge.

The Dutch army Hesse, attacked with and, after a very obstinate trenchment of the Duke of Marlborough the left, had with through Sart, and with trenchments they as the Duke had made the main body of the in the front of his army in the ordinary course advantage hardly to appear impracticable to just overcome great commanded the troops until further order. left of our line, which been engaged. The very great, and the further progress, enforced. The right after their coming back the enemy with began to incline to treat of the French were immediately be this advantage on the Orkney to march with talions, to force the on the plain between which being performed into the plains, covered themselves in good attempted no more

100

[illegible]

A 657 THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1993

Q. What is the date of the above-mentioned _____ _____ to the Bureau of the _____, Int. Soc. 1878

But I am not a doctor, and I am not a nurse—But I am a knight, shall this robe be mine, all?

Wolfe &amp; Cooper, 1995, No. 4, p. 7.

I have better this country, and especially its constitutional institutions, in these days of the victory, but found our room, which was to have been to be so full of guests, and a party upon a celebration an occasion for a more elegant into the action, in addition to the deep and fearful of the success of the country. It is natural to believe easy and well thought of, and a certain role, that they are trials to a great occasion who speak all the against the truth of it, who and then arguing at our happiness, that they wish it other.
When I came into the room, a gentleman said to me: "It says here we have so great an occasion, but why have we not the names of the great? Why is not an exact relation of the character of our general? I'd like to see the world." Why do we not know where and when to apply it? I must confess, why do we not give an account of the progress and gain? But we are to be glad with some notices we are competitors, and first of all, since this is depriving the despotism of the world, which we prefer to fight, and to sit down satisfied with such a contribution, comes, which have the words of triumph, but do not the spirit of it. I whispered Mr. Green:
"Pray, who can that dissatisfied man be?" He assumed his character you have not yet considered. You are a friend of both parties, he mentioned a battlespace, but this is a battle-line. He is a fellow that lives in a government, and that, though he is an enemy, suffers less because they know his impotence. He is to earn the weight of an advantage before the company of Mr. Green. It was going on his opponent's side. So George I. don't think it fit to take up this case in the following manner:

Contention. The action you are in regard to the proof, is greater than ever I have performed in my age, and the value of it I observe in my disposition for little critics are like all other you are not concerned, the more you ought to be convinced you ought to be pleased. If this action is happened in the time of the Romans, and such things been acted in the first place would not be a foot of the world which passed but had been consecrated to a new duty, may be meritable by the death of him who exposed it for the sake of his country. It had been such some argument at the entrance; Here the Peter of Arto drew his sword, and said "March!" Be-Weber, after having accomplished fame for a long excited himself like a common soldier. He returned who was wounded at the beginning of the day, and carried off as dead, returned to the field, and Contentment. The action you are in, regarded as a whole, proved to be greater than ever before performed in any age, and the value of it I observe in many indications; for little crises are like all other important ones, resolved, the more you fight, and are convinced you ought to be pleased. If this crisis had happened in the time of the Romans, and such things been acted in the past, it alone would not be a foot of the wall which passed but had been consecrated to some deity, and be memorable by the death of him who even died for the sake of his country. It had been said, some monument at the entrance; Here the Duke of Argyll drew his sword, and said 'March!' He Worth, after having accomplished fame for 25 years, expired himself like a common soldier. He-Roch, who was wounded at the beginning of the day, and carried off as dead, returned to the field, and received his death. Medals had been struck for our general's behaviour when he first came into the plain. Here was the fury of the action, and here the hero stood as fearless as if invulnerable. Such certainly had been the cares of that state for their own honour, and in gratitude to their heroic subjects. But the wood intrenched, the plain made more impassable than the wood, and all the difficulties opposed to the most gallant army and the most intrepid leaders that ever the sun shone upon, are treated by the talk of some in this room as objections to the merit of our general and our army; 'but,' continued he, 'I leave all the examination of this matter, and a proper discourse on our sense of public actions, to my friend Mr. Bickerstaff; who may let beaux and gamblers rest, until he has examined into the reasons of men's being malecontents, in the only nation that suffers professed enemies to breathe in open air.'

From my own Apartment, September 7.

The following letters are sent to me from relations; and though I do not know who and who are intended, I publish them. I have only writ nonsense, if there is nothing in them; and done a good action, if they alarm any heedless men against the fraternity of the Knights, whom the Greeks call Πάγκαλις.

'MR. BICKERSTAFF, Bath, August 30.

'It is taken very ill by several gentlemen here, that you are so little vigilant, as to let the dogs run from their kennels to this place. Had you done your duty, we should have had notice of their arrival; but the sharpers are now become so formidable here, that they have divided themselves into nobles and commons; beau Bogg, beau Pert, Rake, and Tallboy, are of their upper house; broken captains, ignorant attorneys, and such other bankrupts from industrious professions, compose their lower order. Among these two sets of men there happened here lately some unhappy differences. Esquire Humphry came down among us with four hundred guineas; his raw appearance, and certain signals in the good-natured muscles of Humphry's countenance, alarmed the societies; for sharpers are as skilful as beggars in physiognomy, and know as well where to hope for plunder, as the others to ask for alms. Pert was the man exactly fitted for taking with Humphrey, as a fine gentleman; for a raw fool is ever enamoured with his contrary, a coxcomb; and a coxcomb is what the booby, who wants experience, and is unused to company, regards as the first of men. He ever looks at him with envy, and would certainly be such, if he were not oppressed by his rusticity or bashfulness. There arose an entire friendship by this sympathy between Pert and Humphrey, which ended in stripping the latter. We now could see this forlorn youth for some days moneyless, without sword, and one day without his hat, and with secret melancholy pining for his snuff-box; the jest of the whole town, but most of those who robbed him.

'At last fresh bills came down, when immediately their countenances cleared up, ancient kindness and familiarity renewed, and to dinner he was invited by the fraternity. You are to know, that while he was in his days of solitude, a commoner, who was excluded from his share of the prey, had whispered the esquire, that he was bit, and cautioned him of venturing again. However, hopes of recovering his snuff-box, which was given him by his aunt, made him fall to play after dinner; yet, mindful of what he was told, tell them, presently Tallboy's fifty-cuffs, followed, and the esquire resolutely challenged. His friends interposed, but he was persuaded to beat him, and then, in the house, consulting information, he was conscious of the watchful the friends were found, or declaring how take care of candour, but and some of the esquire's gained a great the company, and the members, and the

'I cannot behold the that of providing a remedy, to enjoy estates, pounds, with nations, and the nation hunger or and, in the Could you all this, the morality, the war, and a good natural public or private would I could you some of the fraternity to you in session; the terity, and vice, may laws. In

'MR. B.

'I heartily against the nations against opportunity your labour the hottest soft smile, without say, so happy account I recurs: a woman escaped you concern you pursue you not flatter desire you whole secret Swiss at the his sweeten the favour.

0, 1709.

i. 85, 86.
ream,
P.

ening was er, who is oking and e eloquent body, the word that omplished
olic, is the fe. Thus, ee recom-
must be e to great expected;
beauty in to talk on urself, the

ple of that quity, had st Demos-es.' Eloquent among e, having nosthenes, gs. After antagonist.
both, but are,' said that great ected had nosthenes
e oration.'
y are very ches read is somes thoughts or another common eated, an ve, 'that he looked are none of Great ned body of speak-

d gesture, ll enage,
t of them ading the tended to ion, even re, as one f without ral obser-

other day
regard to memory soft and our attenno small mended ng to the criticism

of Longinus, an action which would have been approved by Demosthenes. He has a peculiar force in his way, and has many of his audience who could not be intelligent hearers of his discourse, were there not explanation as well as grace in his action. The art of his is used with the most exact and honest skill: he never attempts your passions until he has convinced your reason. All the objections which I can form, are laid open and dispersed before he uses the least vehemence in his sermon; but when he thinks he has your head, he very soon wins your heart; and never pretends to show the beauty of holiness, until he hath convinced you of the truth of it.

Would every one of our clergymen be thus careful to recommend truth and virtue in their proper figure and show so much concern for them as to give them all the additional force they were able, it is not possible that nonsense should have so many hearers: you find it has in dissenting congregations, for a reason in the world, but because it is spoken extempore: for ordinary minds are wholly governed by their eyes and ears, and there is no way to come to their hearts, but by the power over their imaginations.

There is my friend and merry companion Daniel. He knows a great deal better than he speaks, and can form a proper discourse as well as any orthodox neighbour. But he knows very well, that to bar out 'My beloved!' and the words 'grace!' 'regeneration!' 'sanctification!' 'a new light!' 'the day! the day, my beloved, the day! or rather the night, the night is coming!' and 'judgment will come when we least think of it!' and so forth.—He knows, to be vehement, is the only way to come at his audience. Daniel, when he sees my friend Greenhat come in, can give a good hint and cry out, 'This is only for the saints! the regenerated!' By this force of action, though mixed with all the incoherence and ribaldry imaginable, Daniel can laugh at his diocesan, and grow fat by voluntary subscription, while the parson of the parish goes to law for half his dues. Daniel will tell you, 'it is not the shepherd, but the sheep with the bell, which the flock follows.'

Another thing, very wonderful this learned body should omit, is, learning to read; which is a most necessary part of eloquence in one who is to serve at the altar: for there is no man but must be sensible, that the lazy tone, and inarticulate sound of our common readers, depreciates the most proper form of words that were ever extant, in any nation or language, to speak our own wants, or his power from whom we ask relief.

There cannot be a greater instance of the power of action, than in little parson Dapper, who is the common relief to all the lazy pulpits in town. This smart youth has a very good memory, a quick eye, and a clean handkerchief. Thus equipped, he opens his text, shuts his book fairly, shows he has no notes in his bible, opens both palms, and shows all is fair there too. Thus, with a decisive air, my young man goes on without hesitation; and though from the beginning to the end of his pretty discourse, he has not used one proper gesture; yet, at the conclusion, the churchwarden pulls his gloves from off his hands; 'Pray, who is this extraordinary young man?' Thus, the force of action is such, that it is more prevalent, even when improper, than all the reason and argument in the world without it. This gentleman concluded his discourse by saying, 'I do not doubt but if our preachers would learn to speak, and our readers to read, within six months should not have a dissenter within a mile of a Great Britain.'

From my own Apartment, September 9.

A letter from a young fellow, who complains at 'he was bred a mercer, and is now just his time; but, unfortunately (for he has no education suitable to his present estate) has left him one thousand pounds per annum. The young man is sensible, that he is so that he fears he shall never be genteel as long as; but applies himself to me, to know what to take, to help his air, and be a fine gen-ys, 'that several of those ladies who were his customers, visit his mother on purpose in his way, and fears he shall be obliged to gainst his will; for,' says he, 'if any of them ask me, I shall not be able to deny her. I am,' further, 'utterly at a loss how to deal with or though I was the most pert creature in the when I was foreman, and could hand a woman first quality to her coach as well as her own man-usher, I am now quite out of my way and as in their company. They commend my to my face. No one scruples to say, I should make the best husband in the world, a man of education. Mrs. Would-be watches all cities to be alone with me: therefore, good kerstaff, here are my writings inclosed; if find any flaw in my title, so as it may go to their, who goes to St. James's coffee-house, site's, and could enjoy it, I should be extremely well pleased with two thousand pounds to my trade, and live in a way I know I should rather than be laughed at all my life among company. If you could send for my cousin, made him to take the estate on these terms, nobody know it, you would extremely oblige first sight, I thought this a very whimsical; however, upon more mature consideration, not but admire the young gentleman's prudent good sense; for there is nothing so as living in a way a man knows he does not

I consulted Mr. Obadiah Greenhat on this and he is so well pleased with the man, that half a mind to take the estate himself; but, second thoughts, he proposed this expedient: 'I'd be very willing,' said he, 'to keep the here it is, if we could make the young man easy; therefore, I humbly propose, he should drinking for one half-year, and make a sloven and from thence begin his education a-new: 'a maxim, that one who is ill-taught is in a condition than he who is wholly ignorant; a spruce mercer is farther off the air of a fine man, than a downright clown. To make our any thing better, we must unmake him what indeed proposed to flux him; but Greenhat said, 'that if he recovered, he would be as prime as ever he was.' Therefore he would have it and our friend is to drink until he is car-and tun-bellied; after which, we will send him to smoke and be buried with his ancestors where, I am, indeed, desirous he should have the estate, because he has such a just sense of his abilities, as to know that it is an access to him to be a man of fortune.

He seems to understand, that a gentleman's part of all others the hardest to pass through propriety of behaviour; for though he has a support without art, enjoying that circumstance and you see, among common appellations dictions to that chance fortune to bear it: change the circumstance Harry Lacker is so shall give his estate him a dancing-master and values him so much of making him happy giving his land to so

Now I am upon enjoy, I forbid all quality, or, who do that requires so much Park with six horses highest insolence. do it merely because pretension. But, as well, it shall be the chief distinction horses only, and a of their coach. This who designs very so course upon the subject give us rules on the duties and qualifications well as that of husband of economy without appearing in the world all who are sudden poor.

—Sunt certa p Ter purè lecto pot

And, like a charm
If thrice read o'er,

I have notice of a sort than hitherto account of their way giving only a bare n

'Sir,

There are another who kennel about C at the corner of Bue den: two of them are now in ruins; but as pernicious as if broken down. The curs by the name of all biters, when their estates are one good bite to succeed ever after come to smelling of a crust. these as soon as you crease; and your cat knowledged by, Sir

St. James's C

We have received borough's camp, where the great and glorious on the eleventh ins wounded and prisoner expected from our first

the enemy on the left
the whole
have had and carry regiments led into march into troops to who lost entrench-Sart and 1709.

12.

by it, how person. I world what now little flow-sub-
spite of ate reprim-
the same for four-rearing of ormed he-same sort.
ye-call, as x and dice
nst them, Esculapius
However, es before on in their first sight part of my urity, but behaviour arts, is as my own

d in their ous their with very fit to erect in rules,
bers into ree tables, in exactly

the third,
l number ame At in their he world;
mous for,
ether in r be more Neither he person

n renown e manner
me order
At these ty: for if ous than cedence.

No person who has not been dead a hundred years must be offered to a place at any of these tables; and because this is altogether a lay-society, and that sacred persons move upon greater motives than that of fame, no person celebrated in holy writ or any ecclesiastical men whatsoever, are to be introduced here.

At the lower end of the room is to be a side-table for persons of great fame, but dubious existence such as Hercules, Theseus, Æneas, Achilles, Hector and others. But because it is apprehended, that there may be great contention about precedence the proposer humbly desires the opinion of the learned, towards his assistance in placing every person according to his rank, that none may have just occasion of offence.

The merits of the cause shall be judged by plurality of voices.

For the more impartial execution of this important affair, it is desired, that no man will offer his favour to his friend, scholar, or poet; and that the learned will be pleased to send to Mr. Bickerstaff, at Mr. Maypole's, near Stationers'-hall, their several lists for the first table only, and in the order they would have them placed; after which, the proposer will compare the several lists, and make another for the public, wherein every name shall be ranked according to the votes it has had. Under this chamber is to be a dark vault for the same number of persons of evil fame.

It is humbly submitted to consideration, whether the project would not be better if the persons of true fame meet in a middle room, those of dubious existence in an upper room, and those of evil fame in a lower dark room.

It is to be noted, that no historians are to be admitted at any of these tables; because they are appointed to conduct the several persons to their seats, and are to be made use of as ushers to the assemblies.

I call upon the learned world to send me their assistance towards this design, it being a matter of too great moment for any one person to determine. But I do assure them, their lists shall be examined with great fidelity, and those that are exposed to the public, made with all the caution imaginable.

In the mean time, while I wait for these lists, I am employed in keeping people in a right way to avoid the contrary to fame and applause; to wit—blame and denision. For this end, I work upon that useful project of the penny-post, by the benefit of which it is proposed, that a charitable society be established; from which society there shall go every day, circular letters to all parts within the bills of mortality, to tell people of their faults in a friendly and private manner, whereby they may know what the world thinks of them, before it is declared to the world that they are thus faulty. This method cannot fail of universal good consequences: for, it is further a idea, that they who will not be reformed by it, must be contented to see the several letters printed, which were not regarded by them, that when they will not take private reprehension, they may be tried further by a public one. I am very sorry I am obliged to print the following epistles of that kind, to some persons, and the more because they are of the fair sex.

This went on Friday last to a very fine lady:—

‘MADAM,

‘I am highly sensible that there is nothing of a tender a nature as the reputation and conduct of ladies; and that when there is the least stain on

into their fame, it is hardly ever to be washed out. When I have said this, you will believe I am extremely concerned to hear, at every visit I make, that your manner of wearing your hair is a mere affectation of beauty, as well as that your neglect of powder has been a common evil to your sex. It is to you an advantage to show that abundance of fine tresses: but I beseech you to consider, that the force of your beauty, and the imitation of you, costs Eleonora great sums of money to her tire-woman for false locks, besides what is allowed to her maid for keeping the secret, that she is gray. I must take leave to add to this admonition, that you are not to reign above four months and odd days longer. Therefore, I must desire you to raise and friz your hair a little, for it is downright insolence to be thus handsome without art; and you will forgive me for entreating you to do now out of compassion, what you must soon do out of necessity.

I am, Madam,

'Your most obedient,

'and most humble servant.'

This person dresses just as she did before I writ; as does also the lady to whom I addressed the following billet the same day:

'MADAM,

'Let me beg of you to take off the patches at the lower end of your left cheek, and I will allow two more under your left eye, which will contribute more to the symmetry of your face; except you would please to remove the ten black atoms on your ladyship's chin and wear one large patch instead of them. If so, you may properly enough retain the three patches above-mentioned. I am, &c.

This, I thought, had all the civility and reason in the world in it; but whether my letters are intercepted, or whatever it is, the lady patches as she used to do. It is to be observed by all the charitable society, as an instruction in their epistles, that they tell people of nothing but what is in their power to mend. I shall give another instance of this way of writing: two sisters in Essex-street are eternally gaping out of the window, as if they knew not the value of time, or would call in companions. Upon which I writ the following line:

'DEAR CREATURES,

'On the receipt of this, shut your casements.'

But I went by yesterday, and found them still at the window. What can a man do in this case, but go on, and wrap himself up in his own integrity, with satisfaction only in this melancholy truth, that virtue is its own reward; and that if no one is the better for his admonitions, yet he is himself, the more virtuous in that he gave those advices?

St. James's Coffee-house, September 12.

Letters of the thirteenth instant from the Duke of Marlborough's camp at Havre, advise, that the necessary dispositions were made for opening the trenches before Mons. The direction of the siege is to be committed to the Prince of Orange, who designed to take his post accordingly, with thirty battalions and thirty squadrons on the day following. On the seventeenth Lieutenant-General Cadogan set out for Brussels, to hasten the ammunition and artillery which is to be employed in this enterprise; and the confederate army was extended from the Haine to the Trouille, in order to cover the siege. The loss of the confederate army was extended from the Haine to the Trouille, in order to cover the siege. The loss of

W

Of all the excel, there mended to of transition not whether certain, that the Mercure other learned things present pulpits, and learned; are attempt this was discour the Boristh and puts me The Danube that unhappy the banks by our last strong a fort places which thinks, less tent, but li princes are of men of le of all small clude my pr advertise in the subu

'Whereas

nate as to re prohibit all both univers denomination Achilles have same part.

'We do houses betw king of Swe tween the d very appreh politicians l occasion, a free the tow

No. 68.] T

From

The prog be very muc will please Fame with in our h, whose d econo-

s bee me of their one men r follow-
spent in the most npose to stagnate, ther, die heathen l inspul-riousness world, fame for (since I ere to be t regard ice; and Aristotle,
t scholar,
g school, hawkers ed a great y imposit, or that cal repa-
to pass
I be con-
? This
he mean ve I have my lists nough to s make-
of virtue, it makes to imitate, ing your tradition ion them e I shall ling, any ve some as fast as over the r manner ali rage,
a dire-s of the ng; by s he used ow to call
with the d's are e gender not how hat there nd make er desire, I have who, I little, and ing been putation y comes me into on, these more of such practices, and that they shall not from henceforward suffer the society of such as they know to be the common enemies of order, discipline, and virtue.

If it appear that they go on in encouraging them, they must be proceeded against according to the severest rules of history, where all is to be laid before the world with impartiality, and without respect to persons.

'So let the stricken deer go weep.'

Will's Coffee-house, September 14.

I find left here for me the following epistle:

SIR,

'Having lately read your discourse about the family of Tribles, wherein you observed that there are some who fall into laughter out of a certain benevolence in their temper, and not out of the ordinary motive, viz. contempt, and triumph over the imperfections of others; I have conceived a good idea of your knowledge of mankind. And, as you have fraternal genius, I beg the favour of you to give your thoughts of a quite different effect, which are caused by other motives than what are commonly taken notice of. What I would have you treat of is the case of shedding tears. I desire you would discuss it a little, with observations upon the various occasions which provoke us to that expression of regret, concern, &c.'

To obey this complaisant gentleman, I know no way so short as examining the various touches of my own bosom, on several occurrences in a long life, to the evening of which I am arrived, after as many various incidents as any body has met with. I have often reflected, that there is a great similitude in the motion of the heart in mirth and in sorrow; and I think the usual occasion of the latter, as well as the former, is something which is sudden and unexpected. The mind has not a sufficient time to recollect its force, and immediately gushes into tears before we can utter ourselves by speech or complaint. The most common causes of these drops from our eyes are pity, sorrow, joy, and reconciliation.

The fair sex, who are made of man, and not of earth, have a more delicate humanity than we have, and pity is the most common cause of their tears; for as we are inwardly composed of an aptitude to every circumstance of life, and every thing that befalls any one person might have happened to any other of human race; self-love, and a sense of the pain we ourselves should suffer in the circumstances of any who we pity, is the cause of that compassion. Such a reflection in the breast of a woman, immediately inclines her to tears; but in a man, it makes him think less such a one ought to act on that occasion suitably to the dignity of his nature. Thus a woman is easily moved for those whom she hears lament, and a man for those whom he observes to suffer in silence. If in a man's own behaviour in the circumstances he is under, which procures him the esteem of others, and not merely the affliction itself which demands our pity, for we never give a man that passion which he falls into for himself. He that commends himself never purchases our applause; nor he who brags himself, our pity.

Going through an alley the other day, I observed a bold, impudent beggar bawl out, 'that he was wounded in a merchant-man; that he had lost his leg and his eye; and shewed a leg clouted up. All the passers by made what haste they could out of his sight and hearing; but a poor fellow at the end of the passage, with a rusty coat, a melancholy air, and a oice, desired them 'to look upon a man not used to eg.' The latter received the charity of almost every ne that went by. The strings of the heart, which re to be touched to give us compassion, are not so layed on but by the finest hand. We see in tragical representations, it is not the pomp of language, nor the magnificence of dress, in which the passion is rought that touches sensible spirits; but something of a plain and simple nature, which breaks in upon our souls by that sympathy which is given us for our mutual good-will and service.

In the tragedy of 'Macbeth,' where Wilks acts the art of a man whose family has been murdered in his presence, the wildness of his passion, which is run ner in a torrent of calamitous circumstances, does at raise my spirits, and give me the alarm; but when he skilfully seems to be out of breath, and is brought so low to say more; and upon a second reflection ies only, wiping his eyes, 'What, both children! th, both my children gone!' there is no resisting a erow which seems to have cast about for all the asons possible for its consolation, but has no resource, 'There is not one left; but both, both are ordered!' such sudden starts from the thread of discourse and a plain sentiment expressed in an less way, are the irresistible strokes of eloquence and poetry. The same great master, Shakspeare, can ord us instances of all the places where our souls are accessible, and ever commands our tears. But it to be observed, that he draws them from some unexpected source, which seems not wholly of a piece th the discourse. Thus, when Brutus and Cassius d a debate in the tragedy of 'Cæsar,' and rose to rn language against each other, insomuch that it d almost come to something that might be fatal, til they recollected themselves; Brutus does more to make an apology for the heat he had been in by ring, 'Portia is dead.' Here Cassius is all tender-ss, and ready to dissolve, when he considers that s mind of his friend had been employed on the satest affliction imaginable, when he had been adding to it by a debate on trifles; which makes him, in anguish of his heart, cry out, 'How 'scaped I ing, when I thus provoked you?' This is an incident which moves the soul in all its sentiments; d Cassius's heart was at once touched with all the ft pangs of pity, remorse, and reconciliation. It is ld, indeed, by Horace, 'If you would have me weep, o must first weep yourself.' This is not literally se; for it would have been as rightly said, if we serve nature, That I shall certainly weep if you do t; but what is intended by that expression is, that is not possible to give passion, except you show that o suffer yourself. Therefore, the true art seems to t, that when you would have the person you reprent pitied, you must show him at once in the highest ief, and struggling to bear it with decency and paience. In this case we sigh for him, and give him ery groan he suppresses.

I remember, when I was young enough to follow e sports of the field, I have more than once rode off the death of a deer, when I have seen the animal, an affliction which appeared human, without the ast noise, let fall tears when he was reduced to exemity; and I have thought of the sorrow I saw him , when his haunch came to the table. But our ars are not given only to objects of pity, but the ind has recourse to that relief in all occasions which ve us great emotion. Thus, to be apt to shed tears a sign of a great as well as a little spirit. I have ard say, the present pope never passes through the ople, who always kneel in crowds, and ask his benediction, but This must pro father of all with so exte into a passion been long abs thousand litt meeting, as a during their s they conceive those occasio too full to wa His lachrymis

With tears th
And soft-ey'd

There is la a very tall da and it is fear the game. H called the Toy fingers: the wax, invente a little of wh that holds the sums have be hoped, that t open the eyes upon.

There is n
published, a Contempt of at large, that laziness of pe none of the p flock, but by a digression i tences made that the chur make the laic themselves ha cludes with a
of eloquence, to support the who lives and

No. 69.] SA

Nos facer

But how
From the

From m

It is, as fa great end of e vulgar; but w methinks, en word raises u ally does in o
my being old,
such satisfacti of men. How case, I will turn of thoug reap as much

It is to me much below a a gentleman, the condition

in that fiches and ights and not such ood to his bour, and ior to him nself, and actions to grace than similitude pirit. 'It
the actors, acts prince
should not aviour in solid disk no man it regards for, if we nce of our ors, it will both. He his virtue, ver he ob-but will
, and pity

a levelling e basis of as become he ordinary true know-

the little t, and dise minds of ther than a the highest efactor.
g my pipe
no small plia, that one of their mankind, I e who were y, justice, he schemes
and order, n who have n very well cal politics.
o deal with es as those mand have which they and soften unt artes."
plantation
is nativity, is person's
the shore
his govern-ith these took leave her Felicia ved himself

16.

despatch,

'Sir, Sep. 13, Equal day and night.
'There are two ladies, who, having a good opinion of your taste and judgment, desire you to make us of them in the following particular, which perhaps you may allow very extraordinary. The two ladies before-mentioned have, a considerable time since contracted a more sincere and constant friendship than their adversaries, the men, will allow consistent with the frailty of female nature; and being, from that acquaintance, convinced of the perfect agreement of their tempers, have thought upon an expedient to prevent their separation, and cannot think any effectual (since it is common for love to destroy friendship) as to give up both their liberties to the same person in marriage. The gentleman they have pitched upon is neither well bred nor agreeable, his understanding moderate, and his person not designed to charm women; but having so much self-interest in his nature, as to be satisfied with making double contracts, upon condition of receiving double fortunes; and most men being so far sensible of the uneasiness that one woman occasions; they think him, for these reasons, the most likely person of the acquaintance to receive these proposals. Upon other accounts, he is the last man either of them would choose, yet for this, preferable to all the rest. They desire to know your opinion the next post, resolving to defer farther proceeding, until they have received

'I am, Sir,
'Your unknown, unthought of, humble servant,
'BRIDGET EITHERSIDE.'

This is very extraordinary; and much might be objected by me, who am something of a civilian, in the case of two marrying the same man: but the ladies, are, I perceive, free-thinkers; and therefore shall speak only to the prudential part of this design merely as a philosopher, without entering into the merit of it in the ecclesiastical or civil law. The constant friends, Piladea and Oresteia, are at a loss to preserve their friendship from the encroachments of love: for which end they have resolved upon a fellow who cannot be the object of affection or esteem to either, and consequently cannot rob one of the pleasures each has in her friend's heart. But in all my reading (and I have read all that the sages of love have written) I have found the greatest danger in jealousy. The ladies, indeed, to avoid this passion, choose a safe fellow; but if they would be advised by me, they had better have each her worthless man; otherwise he that was despicable, while he was indifferent to them, will become valuable when he seems to prefer one to the other.

I remember in the history of Don Quixote of La Mancha, there is a memorable passage, which opens to us the weakness of our nature in such particular. The Don falls into discourse with a gentleman, whom he calls 'the Knight of the Green Cassock,' and is invited to his house. When he comes there, he runs into discourse and panegyric upon the economy, the government and order of his family, the education of his children and, lastly, on the singular wisdom of him who disposed things with that exactness. The gentleman makes a soliloquy to himself: 'O irresistible power of flattery! Though I know this is a mad man, I cannot help being taken with his applause.' The lady will find this much more true in the case of the lover; and the woman he most likes will certainly be more pleased, she whom he slights more offends than she can imagine before she has tried. Now, humbly propose, that they both marry coxcombs whom they are sure they cannot like, and then the ty secure against the change of affection, fear; and, by that means, preserving the under which they now write, enjoy, 'Equal day and night.'

James's Coffee-house, September 16.

no manner of news; but people now time in coffee-houses in reflections upon the late glorious day, and collecting parts of the action, as they are produced from private hands, or notices given to us in public papers. A pleasant gentleman, the great fences through which we pierced, evening, 'the French thought themselves side of the hedge, but it proved otherwise. Kidney, who has long conversed with tea for, the most consummate politicians, to give me an account of this piece of and desired me, on that occasion, to write per on the subject of valour, and explain quality, which must be possessed by whole so highly preferable in one man rather mer; and how the same actions are but of duty in some, and instances of the most in others. He advises me not to fail, course, to mention the gallantry of the assau in this last engagement; who, when made a halt in the face of the enemy, he colours out of the hands of the ensign, them just before the line of the enemy, hat battalion to take care of their colours, if no regard to him. Mr. Kidney has my obey him in this particular on the first at offers.

kerstaff is now compiling exact accounts of the militia, and the commission-officers respective lieutenancies of Great Britain; place those of London and Westminster; and that there are no common soldiers, but keepers, or representatives of house-keepers, dies, the sums raised by the officers shall into; and their fellow soldiers, or rather ellers, from one part of the town to the defrauded of the ten pounds allowed for ance of the troops.

not very long since, at a tavern between ge and Charing-cross, some certain polite thought fit to perform the bacchanalian f devotion, by dancing without clothes on, manner of the Pre-Adamites: this is to cer- persons, that there is no manner of wit or the said practice; and that the beadles of are to be at their next meeting, where it is ined, whether they are arrived at a want of well as want of shame?

a chapel clerk was lately taken in a garret bed, with two of the fair sex, who are ployed in sifting cinders: this is to let that if he persists in being a scandal both id clergy, as being, as it were, both and e names of the nymphs who were with be printed; therefore he is desired, as he reputation of his ladies, to repent.

Bickerstaff has received information, that and noble preacher in the chief congrega- tion Britain, for fear of being thought guilty erian fervency and extemporary prayer, his, before sermon; but the same advices ging that he made the congregation large of the shortness of his discourse, it is to make no further observation upon it.

No. 70.] TUESDAY,

Quicquid agunt ho
—nostris est sarraga

Whatever good is
By human kind, sh

From my own Ap

THE following letter, lately asserted, has urged than I had, that I inse testimonials are custom sometimes are suspected but I fear no one will so

'SIR,

'Having read your instant, I cannot but e notion of the scarcity of speak. For my part, I in the world, and yet who could do either in which few, you must n self. How far eloque ornaments of voice and passions, and how co- ration in the world w are two remarkable ins and that of Milo. C He came indeed to h thinking himself his o- biased by any thing C but in this he was n began to speak, the he and at length the cri observed, that this fam for his courage than h came, at another time, one of the best orations yet, being seized with armed men surrounding speech, and became un force and beauty of ad his client, and for want to banishment. As the orations met with app and graceful manner w some there are who t transport), so the latter for no other reason, but in a condition to set it must be confessed, the crowd, prevail even mo are masters of both, w all their hearers; and account to be given of of the head and hear parts by the outward of therefore, which is co and passions by only affect us so much as the both. I cannot but th a great part of the lea who deliver the most coldness and indifferen the unintelligent man asleep. Thus it happ with a quite contrary you mentioned; for a and force by being re Rhodes without the men never disadvan-

from the patient in ed into the hat it propp, advises carried to but that it
If some were (not should not pate.

et. v. 102.

strain.

Francis.

concern and expects his at he pro-
the dignity of; not-of the dis-

er. 104.

a say,
away.

there will aid to the now, that s fulsome, omplished
they can have some
r. Bicker-irregular banging a y humble whom I I do well would be s disturtion would t, I think,
o warlike, stable to a nt, &c.'

Rosehat is of Sature: permit an orator bitratur nian,) ut se optaret de Orat ) ast appear

and that is life. I ur public y or an it of the e of their

eloquence in it. Excuse another scrap of Latin; is from one of the fathers: I think it will appear just observation to all, and it may have authority with some: Qui autem docent tantum, nec facit ipsi præceptis suis detrahunt pondus: quis enim temperet, cum ipsi præceptores doceam non obtinemus rare? Those who teach, but do not act agree to the instructions they give to others, take away weight from their doctrine: for who will obey precepts they inculcate, if they themselves teach by their practice to disobey them?

'I am, Sir,

'Your most humble Servant,

'JONATHAN ROSEHAT.

'P. S. You were complaining in that paper, that the clergy of Great Britain had not yet learned to speak; a very great defect indeed: and therefore, I shall think myself a well-deserver of the church, by recommending all the dumb clergy to the famous speaking doctor at Kensington. This ingenious gentleman, out of compassion to those of a less utterance, has placed his whole study in the new modelling the organs of voice; which art he has far advanced, as to be able even to make a good oration of a pair of bellows. He lately exhibited a specimen of his skill in this way, of which I was informed by the worthy gentlemen then present; who were once delighted and amazed to hear an instrument so simple an organization use an exact articulation of words, a just cadency in its sentences, and a wonderful pathos in its pronunciation: not that he designs to expatiate in this practice; because he cannot, as he says, apprehend what use it may be to mankind, whose benefit he aims at in a more particular manner: and, for the same reason, he will never more instruct the feathered kind, the parrot having been his last scholar in that way. He has a wonderful faculty in making and mending echoes, and this he will perform at any time for the use of the solitary in the country; being a man born for universal good, and for that reason recommended to your patronage by, Sir,

'Yours, &c.'

Another learned gentleman gives me also this encomium;

'SIR,

September 16.

'You are now got into a useful and noble subject: take care to handle it with judgment and delicacy. I wish every young divine would give you on Saturday last a serious perusal; and now you are entered upon the action of an orator, if you would proceed to favour the world with some remarks on the mystical enchantments of pronunciation, what a secret force there is in the accents of a tunable voice, and wherefore the works of two very great men of the profession could never please so well when read as heard, I shall trouble you with no more scribble. You are now in the method of being truly profitable and delightful. If you can keep up such great and sublime subjects, and pursue them with a suitable genius, go on and prosper. Farewell.'

White's Chocolate-house, September 19.

This was left for me here, for the use of the company of the house:

'TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQ.

'SIR,

September, 15.

'The account you gave lately of a certain dog-kennel in or near Suffolk-street, was not so punctual, as to the list of the dogs, as might have been expected from a person of Mr. Bickerstaff's intelligence; for, if you will despatch Pacolet thither some evening, it is ten to one but he finds, besides those you mentioned,

'Towzer, a large French mongrel, that was not long ago in a tattered condition, but has now got new hair; is not fleet, but, when he grapples, bites even to the marrow.

'Spring, a little French greyhound, that lately made a false trip to Tunbridge.

'Sly, an old battered fox-hound, that began the game in France.

'Lightfoot, a fine skinned Flanders dog, that belonged to a pack at Ghent; but, having lost flesh, is gone to Paris, for the benefit of the air.

'With several others, that in time may be worth notice.

'Your familiar will see also, how anxious the keepers are about the prey, and, indeed, not without very good reason, for they have their share of every thing; nay, not so much as a poor rabbit can be run down, but these carnivorous curs swallow a quarter of it. Some mechanics in the neighbourhood, that have entered into this civil society, and who furnish part of the carrion and oatmeal for the dogs, have the kin; and the bones are picked clean by a little French hock that belongs to the family, &c.

'I am, Sir,

'Your humble servant, &c.

'I had almost forgot to tell you, that Ringwood bites at Hampstead with false teeth.

No. 71.] THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1709.

From my own Apartment, September 21.

I HAVE long been, against my inclination, employed in satire, and that in persecution of such persons, who are below the dignity of the true spirit of it; such who, I fear, are not to be reclaimed by making them only ridiculous. The sharpeners shall, therefore, have a month's time to themselves, free from the observation of this paper; but I must not make a truce without letting them know, that, at the same time, I am preparing for a more vigorous war: for a friend of mine has promised me he will employ his time in compiling such a tract, before the session of the ensuing parliament, as shall lay gaming home to the osoms of all who love their country or their families; and he doubts not but it will create an act, that shall make these rogues as scandalous as those less mischievous ones on the high road.

I have received private intimations to take care of my walks, and remember there are such things as tabs and blows: but as there never was any thing in this design which ought to displease a man of honour, or which was not designed to offend the rascals, I shall give myself very little concern for finding what I expected, that they would be highly provoked at these lucubrations. But, though I utterly despise the pack, I must confess I am at a stand at the receipt of the following letter, which seems to be written by a man of sense and worth, who has mistaken some passage that I am sure was not levelled at him. This gentleman's complaints give me communion, when I neglect the threats of the rascals. I cannot be content with the rogues any longer, since they pretend to threaten. I do not know whether I shall allow them the favour of transportation.

MR.

Observing many vices of particular and more contrivance, such, than a Tatler of this is so tender: got in their This you go to trifle. If the reputation perhaps entirely wound, which fatal and in through per this purpose afterwards be on; as by the have sent in would be glad ought to be. you stood for that a generous mind in all your part affect often keep any man who should. The application lately glanced were he considered the world able in it to admitting such perhaps you than you desire.

'A man of have more in satire; but and will only remember to

The proved but it would if a man covetion, and the All I can say method when me an instance or pointed at of raillery, in a manner as paper for every

There is something men in fortune; but themselves visible to prevent and ge happen in who have lately published a gentleman of go who is, in every pretenders the modesty others, what tion? How tended, to this satirizing yourself upon the sharper, solent; in to their own erie. This staffs, who unish. If, oned letter he shall, if the above-sing merit s distress, ut setting

ve a good vicar and s auditors, f instruct-ewise, in lell, that t posture;
put to in hem off of e has, in re, instead vers every spent in
at home, These,
ite for his e before I his curate ng in the s so ex-
the sick,

hen I was been this ekerstaff, ay-house,
on: your well, that,
and, by ture, and a young enterprise, sentence on, where the noble and his are each
upon the ly affect their own tue thus nments, n places
I carried nd shall all that entering manhood fects we gs which in my in-

' TO MY HONOURED KINSMAN, ISAAC BICKERSTAFF ESQUIRE.

' DEAR COUSIN, Oxford, Sept. 18.

' I am sorry, though not surprised, to find if you have rallied the men of dress in vain; that your amber-headed cane still maintains its unstable position; that pockets are but few inches shortened; and that a beau is still a beau, from the crown of his night-cap to the heels of his shoes. For your comfort, I assure you, that your endeavours succeed better than this famous seat of learning. By them the manners of our young gentlemen are in a fair way of amendment, and their very language is mightily refined. To them it is owing, that not a servitor will sing a catch, nor a senior-fellow make a pun, nor a determining bachelor drink a bumper; and I believe a gentleman-commoner would as soon have the heel of his shoes red, as his stockings. When a wit stands at a coffee-house door, and sneers at the who pass by, to the great improvement of his hope of audience, he is no longer surnamed 'a slicer,' but 'a man of fire' is the word. A beauty, who has health is drunk from Heddington to Hinksey; who has been the theme of the muses, her cheeks painted with roses, and her bosom planted with orange boughs: has no more the title of 'lady,' but reigns an undisputed 'toast.' When to the plain garb of gown and band a spark adds an inconsistent low wig, we do not say now 'he boshes,' but 'the fellow goes a smart fellow.' If a virgin blushes, we no longer cry, 'she blushes.' He that drinks until he stares is no more 'tow-row,' but 'honest.' A youngster in a scrape, is a word out of date; as what bright man says, 'I was joabed by the devil.' 'Bambouzing' is exploded; 'a shat' is 'a tatter' and if the muscular motion of a man's face be violent no mortal says, 'he raises a horse,' but 'he is a merry fellow.'

' I congratulate you, my dear kinsman, upon these conquests; such as Roman emperors lamented they could not gain; and in which you rival your correspondent Louis le Grand, and his dictating academy.

' Be yours the glory to perform, mine to record, as Mr. Dryden has said before me to his kinsman; and while you enter triumphant into the temple of the muses, I, as my office requires, will, with my staff on my shoulder, attend and conduct you.

' I am, dear cousin,

' Your most affectionate kinsman,

' BENJAMIN BEADLESTAFF.

* * * Upon the humble application of certain persons who have made heroic figures in Mr. Bickerstaff's narrations, notice is hereby given, that no such shall ever be mentioned for the future, except those who have sent menaces, and not submitted to admonition.

No. 72.] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1709.

Quicquid agunt homines——nostrum est farrago libelli. Jur. Sat. i. 85, 86

Whate'er men do, or say, or think, or dream, Our motley paper seizes for its theme. P.

White's Chocolate-house, September 23.

I HAVE taken upon me no very easy task in turning all my thoughts on panegyric, when most of the advices I receive tend to the quite contrary purpose; and I have few notices but such as regard follies and vices. But the properest way for me to treat is, to general upon the passions and affections of which as little regard to the particulars as the of the thing will admit. However, I think something so passionate in the circumstances overers mentioned in the following letter, that I ing to go out of my way to obey what is com- in it.

in,

'London, Sept. 17.

ur design of entertaining the town with the ers of the ancient heroes, as persons shall send out to Mr. Morphew's, encourages me and to beg of you, that, in the mean time, if it is trary to the method you have proposed, you give us one paper upon the subject of the f Pætus and his wife, when Nero sent him an o kill himself: his wife, setting him the ex- died with these words: "Pætus, it is not " You must know the story; and your ob- ons upon it will oblige, Sir,

'Your most humble servant.'

n the worst man that ever lived in the world e highest station in it, human life was the of his diversion; and he sent orders frequently, mere wantonness, to take off such and such, so much as being angry with them. Nay, tly, his tyranny was so humorous, that he a to death because he could not but approve i. It came one day to his ear, that a certain couple, Pætus and Arria, lived in a more tranquillity and mutual love than any other who were then in being. He listened with ttention to the account of their manner of e their time together, of the constant pleasure e to each other in all their words and actions; nd, by exact information, that they were so ble as to be much more happy than his im- agesty himself. Upon which he writ Pætus wing billet:

us, you are hereby desired to dispatch your- have heard a very good character of you: efore leave it to yourself, whether you will dagger, sword, or poison. If you outlive this ove an hour, I have given directions to put death by torture.

'NERO.'

familiar epistle was delivered to his wife who opened it.

must have a soul very well turned for love, nd indignation, to comprehend the tumult this y lady was thrown into upon this occasion. asion of love is no more to be understood by empers, than a problem in a science by an it man: but he that knows what affection is, ve, upon considering the condition of Arria, usand thoughts flowing upon him, which the was not formed to express; but the charming is now before my eyes, and Arria in her ble sorrow has more beauty than ever ap- in youth, in mirth, or in triumph. These are at and noble incidents which speak the dignity nature, in our sufferings and distresses. Ber- er tender affection for her husband sinks her s into a countenance which appears more s than that of an infant: but again, her indig- shows in her visage and her bosom a resent- is strong as that of the bravest man. Long ed in this agony of alternate rage and love; last composed herself for her dissolution than survive her beloved Pætus. When he came into her prese- letter in one hand, his approach to her the same time sta- 'it is not painful; followed her exam- rable lovers was su- their fortune, and neither felt, becaus the other. The wor- the more heroic, an- epigrams transmitt-

From my own

The boy says, on- letter:

'FRIEND,

'Being of that Quakers, and being persuaded yesterday teachers; the matt- well living ground attentive; but the He read his discours so heavily, and with himself, that I th- observed many of unedified, and tro- Lamentations, and fourth chapter of "Woe be to the s- themselves! should Ye eat the fat, and kill them that are diseased have ye n- healed that which up that which was again that which w- sought that which, cruelty have ye rul- friend, as thou art me who is meant broken, the driven the prophesy in thi- to come to pass? though unknown."

This matter is cannot see what in- to have it in his ey- from him by his wa- of him. I dare say losses. Favonius, tinent assailants o- turbed defender of care, by the clear- example of his life- of a man who hop- enforces in others- expectation of the- are the lively image- zeal. None can l- uttered by the or- but such who can- eloquence, and arg- a judge of manki- so superior a comm- gregation must be- as well as to those

But I must pro- the questions of et-apt. 19.

Nov. 69.

applied to a writer in a letter

to the editor

of the

London

Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the Standard

newspaper

and

the editor

of the

and have treated you accordingly; for which you have stamped your florid violence against your sudden friend and school-fellow. You know in your own conscience you gave me leave to touch upon your pet subject speaking, provided I hid your other talents; which I believed you sincere, because like the spider. So now you have become now surprised yourself to be defamed to carry on a plot. Besides, is it not an insult to a person of your present station? If so, I am truly ashamed for you, and shall no longer depend upon your intelligence. Keep your temper and your friends, and go to bed.

'ISAAC BICKERSTAFF'

For a while I know, this fellow may have confused the description of the pack, on purpose to ensnare me, while I have all along believed he was doing for them as well as myself; but because they prefer to look more than ordinary, I shall let them see that I will not throw away the whip, until they know how to behave themselves. But I must at the same time, omit the praises of their conduct exposed in the following advice.

'MR. BICKERSTAFF,

Sept. 17.

Though your thoughts are at present employed in the titles of time, and marshalling your dates, and it is hoped the living may not be neglected, nor defrauded of their just remuneration, since you have begun to publish to the world it is your duty and vigilance of the Knights of Industry, it will be expected you shall proceed to do justice to all the societies of them you can be informed of, especially since their own great industry over the nations as much as possible from that public notice which is then due.

Patrum sepulchra distat inertia;

Capta virtus.

Hor. 4. Od. ix 29.

'Hidden vice and concealed virtue are much alike.'

Be pleased, therefore, to let the following memoir have a place in their history.

In a certain part of the town, famous for the freshest oysters, and the plainest English, there is a house, rather a college, sacred to hospitality and to illustrious arts. At the entrance is hieroglyphically drawn a cavalier contending with a monster, with jaws expanded just ready to devour him.

Here the brethren of the Industry resort, but to avoid ostentation, they wear no hat or distinction, and perform their exercises with as little noise and show as possible. Here are no number of colleges, but each is a master of his art. They are distinguished according to their various talents, and divided abroad in parties, to divide the labours of the day. They have dogs as well-muzzed and as fleet as arrows; and no sportsmen show greater activity. Some hunt for the grime, some hunt for, others come in at the death, and my honest landlord smiles to see and views in silence, and eats his share of the booty.

I should fair pursue my metaphors; but a venerable person who stands by me, and wants to bring you this letter, and whom, by a certain benevolence in his look, I suspect to be Puerlet, reproves me, and wishes me to write in plainer terms, that the society had fixed their eye on a gay young gentleman, who has lately succeeded to a title and an estate; the latter of which they judged would be very convenient for them. Therefore, after several attempts to get into his acquaintance, my landlord finds an opportunity to make his court to a friend of the young spark, in the following manner:

THE TATLER.

'Sir, as I take you to be a lover of ingenuity and plain dealing, I shall speak very freely to you. In few words, then, you are acquainted with Sir Liberal Brisk. Providence has, for our emolument, sent him a fair estate; for men are not born for themselves. Therefore, if you will bring him to my house, we will take care of him, and you shall have half the profits. There is Ace and Cutter will do his business to a hair. You will tell me, perhaps, he is your friend: I grant it, and it is for that I propose it, to prevent his falling into ill hands.

"We'll carve him like a dish fit for the gods, Not hew him like a carcass fit for hounds."

'In short, there are to my certain knowledge, a hundred mouths open for him. Now, if we can secure him to ourselves, we shall disappoint all those rascals that do not deserve him. Nay, you need not start at it, Sir; it is for your own advantage. Besides, Partridge has cast me his nativity, and I find by certain destiny, his oaks must be felled.'

The gentleman, to whom this honest proposal was made, made little answer; but said he would consider of it, and immediately took coach to find out the young baronet, and told him all that had passed, together with the new salvo to satisfy a man's conscience in sacrificing his friend. Sir Brisk was fired, swore a dozen oaths, drew his sword, put it up again, killed for his man, beat him, and bid him fetch a coach. His friend asked him, what he designed, and whither he was going? He answered to find out the villains and fight them. To which his friend agreed, and promised to be his second, on condition he would first divide his estate to them, and reserve only a proportion to himself, so that he might have the justice of fighting his equals. His next resolution was to play with them, and let them see he was not the bubble they took him for. But he soon quitted that, and resolved at last to tell Bickerstaff of them, and get them enrolled in the order of the Industry; with his caution to all young landed knights and squires, that whenever they are drawn to play, they should consider it as calling them down to a sentence already pronounced upon them, and think of the sound of these words: His oaks must be felled. I am, Sir, your faithful humble servant,

'WILL. TRUSTY.'

From my own Apartment, September 26.

It is wonderful to consider what a pitch of confidence this world is arrived at. Do people believe I am made up of patience? I have long told them, that I will suffer no enormity to pass, without I have an understanding with the offenders by way of hush-money; and yet the candidates at Queen-Hithe send oaks to all the town but me. All the public papers have had this advertisement:—

'London, September 22, 1709.

TO THE ELECTORS OF AN ALDERMAN FOR THE WARD OF QUEEN-HITHE.

'Whereas an evil and pernicious custom has of late very much prevailed at the election of aldermen for this city, by treating at taverns and ale-houses, hereby engaging many unwarily to give their votes; which practice appearing to Sir Arthur de Bradly to be of dangerous consequence to the freedom of elections, he hath avoided the excess thereof. Nevertheless he make an acknowledgment to this ward for their intended favour, he hath deposited in the hands of

Mr. —, of hundred and provided the man, viz.

'All such shall have of

'And half poll against

'And the
or otherwise ward shall t

'And if a coals to him electors in th

'I do ackn hundred
mention

'Witness, J—J—
E—

'N. B. W engaged to hereby furth doth poll fo them receive above-mentio

This is cer was used, e elector may between an explanation.
man who is for his vote
If my kinsm mation of hi publishing England have leaf as a pos hat has been such open co the matter, a of election is drink, that I and admire fellows were our liberty?
made to a cit minster: 'W your wealth;
your wisdom

No. 74.] TH

White's

THE writ of me, which
But the gent most tender intention wit them contriv

'SIR,
'I earnestl
for I have no
myself.

'P. S. M
'You cannot superscription man that gae man is in make his let? He

ing (who x at Mr. fortnight, maintenance as a in to them yourself you live

er.

LORD?

al sales;
one elder s, that it is we are was his 24.

w sense rest regard it. How d man be uch weight s admoni-
I am not man may ber 25.

I was sure
d at large;
trouble ed ed out the you were sweat; but lly call for in the first ment made do assure mankind
o the force ve you put even the ive you an ed man, or e object of making a e gallow;

object of ignorant;
thing, and allian ran or more to cent you both to be late man, or the one continuance he manner enemy to nor the vices, ex-re without

descending to rake into characters below its dignity; for, as you well observe, there is something very terrible in unjustly attacking men in a way that may injure their honour or fortune: and, indeed, where crimes are enormous, the delinquent deserves punishment, yet the reporter may deserve less; and I feel myself fully led to that celebrated author of the "Fable of Man," who hath set this name to a weight in his treatise of "Of the Government of the Tongue," where, speaking of uncharitable men, he says, "that severity of the kind serves not to punish, but to cure the offender; and private injuries rather deserve of us. Modesty and benevolence are some of those natural restraints which the wisdom of Heaven has put upon mankind; and that is a stimulus, may yet, by a check of too public reproof, be removed; but when by a public declaration of his crime, that infamy he feared, he wishes to be protected, and all that can, and to think himself safe, is the most pitiful view, as the poet has expressed. Nay, perhaps he advances farther, and sets up for a revenger, not of families, but of the whole world; and he who before was but a delinquent, is thus become a director of imposture." This sort of reasoning, Sir, most certainly should not be introduced so very lately to report the law which put the stamp of infamy in the faces of those, therefore, you had better give an advertisement to your delinquents, at least for trespassing, than to endeavour to mark them in character. I cannot but applaud your designed attempt to rescue mankind from obscurity, celebrating vice by exposing, and attacking vice in another method, by setting its influence in a proper light." Your purpose in these humane themes will make a greater advance to the reformation you seem to aim at, than the method I have hitherto taken, by putting mankind before the power of retrieving themselves, or indeed, if I think possible. But, if, after all your endeavours in this new way, there should then remain any hardened delinquents, you must even give them up to the mercy of the law, as delinquents not within the benefit of the order. Pardon me, good Mr. B. for the tediousness of this epistle, and before it is not from any self-convinced I have taken up a number of your time, or my own; but I suppose you generally your friend at ones should tend to that. I am, indeed, I trust, the rather hope your pardon, &c. Sir, Yours, &c.

Green Coffee-house, September 23.

This evening I thought fit to notify to the House of Commons, and by that means to all the world, that on Saturday the 30th of October next, unless I am to be my first table of flowers and desires, I shall be appointed with the characters of the two most famous men that have ever appeared in the world, would stand in their lists, or name of arms, to fight a battle, according to some dispute, to wit, that man, upon pain of having such loss as he shall put to, shall be placed too high for our consideration, or any application whatever, after five years which on the day I shall give to any of the world. But, whereas, there are many who will give them to do so this here, or that author, especially, and last, I expect each subscriber should write his reason for that pleasure, that his candidate should be the last consequence; for we shall be settling the latest point that ever has been debated in any age; and I shall take precaution accordingly. Let every man who votes, consider the

THE TATLER.

is now going to give away that, for which the soldier gave up his rest, his pleasure, and his life; the scholar resigned his whole series of thought, his midnight repose, and his morning slumbers. In a word, it is, as I may say, to be judge of that after-life, which noble spirits prefer to their very real beings. I hope I shall be forgiven, therefore, if I make some objections against their jury, as they shall occur to me. The whole of the number by whom they are to be tried are to be scholars. I am persuaded also, that Aristotle will be put up by all of that class of men. However, in behalf of others, such as wear the livery of Aristotle, the two famous universities are called upon, on this occasion; but I expect the men of Queen's, Exeter, and Jesus Colleges, in Oxford, who are not to be electors, because he shall not be crowned from an implicit faith in his writings, but receive his honour from such judges as shall allow him to be censured. Upon this election, as I was just now going to say, I banish all who think and speak after others to concern themselves in it, for which reason, all illiterate distant admirers are forbidden to corrupt the voices, by sending, according to the new mode, any poor students coals and candles for their votes in behalf of such worthies as they pretend to esteem. All news-writers are also excluded, because they consider fame as it is a report which gives foundation to the filling up their rhapsodies, and not as it is the emanation or consequence of good and evil actions. These are excepted against as justly as butchers in case of life and death: their familiarity with the greatest names takes off the delicacy of their regard, as dealing in blood makes the Lanius less tender of spilling it.

St. James's Coffee-house, September 28.

Letters from Lisbon of the twenty-fifth instant, N. S. speak of a battle which has been fought near the river Cinca, in which General Staremberg had overthrown the army of the Duke of Anjou. The persons who send this, excuse their not giving particulars, because they believed an account must have arrived here before we could hear from them. They had advices from different parts, which concurred in the circumstances of the action; after which, the army of his catholic majesty advanced as far as Fraga, and the enemy retired to Saragossa. There are reports, that the Duke of Anjou was in the engagement; but letters of good authority say, that Prince was on the road towards the camp when he received the news of the defeat of his troops. We promise ourselves great consequences from such an advantage obtained by so accomplished a general as Staremberg; who, among the men of this present age, is esteemed the third in military fame and reputation.

No. 75.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1709.

From my own Apartment, September 30.

I AM called off from public dissertations by a domestic affair of great importance, which is no less than the disposal of my sister Jenny for life. The girl is a girl of great merit, and pleasing conversation, but I, being born of my father's first wife, and she of his third, she converses with me rather like a daughter than a sister. I have, indeed, told her that if she kept her honour, and behaved herself in such a manner as became the Bickerstaffs, I would get her an agreeable man for her husband; which was a promise I made her after reading a passage in Pliny's 'Epistles.' That polite author had been employed to find out a consort following the Aciliano ple maxima vere sanguine, m corporis pul

ego nequaqu castitati pue (for that was extraordinary)
the greatest tleman, with his aspect.
speaks him that, I think and should of her chastity.

A woman
put her pare not possess supply herse my sister Je unspotted a take this oc own family.

We have,
scriptions ar
of King Ar own name, by the name of stature, unlike a Po than men of communicat and whiteni for that was a lady who she was ver match, with figure in the family was that marriag William the famous for male line, th reign of Ric chief of the very high because non mish; nor of that mak round shoul nose the les ness of his

These se matches; th and the hun greatest diff
I do not fin of the reign that of Her

But while cultivating staffs fell taken notice upon the m too long to

But, leng have cured tolerable ov not be too observe, th

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

the of our o gave us
insomuch, s until Sir k-maid, of us person, boiled our ent choice features, I stances of en's minds y out of a t a colour night prorafting the ding from

ely. It is t children, we go into and hu-
to me it is it is, that ks a kind
, a fourth

on, with an the bride-
judgment, e begins to an admirattle, but a mark, that o observa-
selves, or ny sister, for an hour
with her
her head, hinks her e skill of
It would spectacles that she

a man of
to be well the com-
of female e gentle-ould have absolutely they had continual hog, and ood poets.
itation of are docile

king this an astrooon as he ep atten-
in every thoughts
t is very chooses ndigo, or rs or lies ate, who man, but the great grandson of a broker, in whom his ancestor is now revived. He is a very honest gentleman in his principles, but cannot for his blood talk fairly: he is heartily sorry for it; but he cheats by constitution and over-reaches by instinct.

The happiness of the man who marries my sister will be, that he has no faults to correct in her but his own, a little bias of fancy, or particularity of manner which grew in herself, and can be amended by his. From such an untainted couple, we can hope to have our family rise to its ancient splendour of face, a countenance, manner, and shape, without discovering the product of ten nations in one house. Obadiah Greenhat says, 'he never comes into any company in England, but he distinguishes the different nations which we are composed.' There is scarce such a lively creature as a true Briton. We sit down, indeed, with friends, acquaintance, and neighbours; but after ten bottles, you see a Dane start up and swear, 'This kingdom is his own.' A Saxon drinks up the whole quart, and swears, 'He will dispute that with his.' A Norman tells them both, 'He will assert his liberty and a Welchman cries, 'They are all foreigners and intruders of yesterday,' and beats them out of the room. Such accidents happen frequently among neighbours' children, and cousins-german. For this reason, I say, study your race; or the soil of your family will dwindle into cits or esquires, or run out into wits or madmen.

No. 76.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1709.

Quicquid agunt homines—

—nostri est farrago libelli. Jur. Sat. l. 85, 86

Whatever good is done, whatever ill—

By human kind, shall this collection fill.

From my own Apartment, October 3.

It is a thing very much to be lamented, that a man must use a certain cunning to caution people against what it is their interest to avoid. All men will allow that it is a great and heroic work to correct men's errors, and, at the price of being called a common enemy, to go on in being a common friend to my fellow subjects and citizens. But I am forced in this world to revolve the same thing in ten thousand lights, and cast them in as many forms, to come at men's mind and affections, in order to lead the innocent in safety as well as disappoint the artifices of betrayers. Since therefore, I can make no impression upon the offending side, I shall turn my observations upon the offended; that is to say, I must whip my children for going into bad company, instead of railing at bad company for ensnaring my children.

The greatest misfortunes men fall into, arise from themselves; and that temper, which is called very often, though with great injustice, good-nature, is the source of a numberless train of evils. For which reason, we are to take this as a rule, that no action is commendable which is not voluntary; and we have made this a maxim: 'That a man who is commonly called good-natured, is hardly to be thanked for any thing he does, because half that is acted about him is done rather by his sufferance than approbation.' It is generally laziness of disposition, which chooses rather to let things pass the worst way, than to go through the pain of examination. It must be confessed, such a one has so great a benevolence in him, that he bears a thousand uneasinesses rather than he will incommode others: nay, often, when he has just reason to be offended, chooses rather to sit down with a small injury, than bring it into reprehension, out of pure compassion to the offender. Such a person has usually said of him, 'He is no man's enemy but his own;' which is, in effect, saying, he is a friend to every man but himself and his friends: for, by a natural consequence of his neglecting himself, he either incapacitates himself to be another's friend, or makes others cease to be his. If I take no care of my own affairs, no man that is my friend can take it ill if I am negligent also of his. This soft disposition, if it continues uncorrected, throws men into a sea of difficulties.

There is Euphysius, with all the good qualities in the world, deserves well of nobody: that universal good-will which is so strong in him, exposes him to the assault of every invader upon his time, his conversation, and his property. His diet is butcher's-meat, his wench is in plain pinnars and Norwich grapes, his dress like other people, his income great: and yet has he seldom a guinea at command. From these easy gentlemen, are collected estates by servants or gamblers; which latter fraternity are excusable, when we think of this clan, who seem born to be their prey. All, therefore, of the family of Actæon, are to take notice, that they are hereby given up to the brethren of the Industry, with this reserve only, that they are to be marked as stricken deer, not for their own sakes, but to preserve the herd from following them, and coming within the scent.

I am obliged to leave this important subject, without telling whose quarters are severed, who has the humbles, who the haunch, and who the sides, of the last stag that was pulled down; but this is only deferred in hopes my deer will make their escape without more admonitions or examples, of which they have had, in mine and the town's opinion, too great a plenty. I must, I say, at present go to other matters of moment.

White's Chocolate-house, October 3.

The lady has answered the letter of Mr. Alexander Landlord, which was published on Thursday last, but in such a manner as I do not think fit to proceed in the affair; for she has plainly told him, that love is her design, but marriage her aversion. Bless me! what is this age come to, that people can think to make a pimp of an astronomer!

I shall not promote such designs, but shall leave her to find out her admirer, while I speak to another case sent to me by a letter of September thirtieth, subscribed Lovewell Barebones, where the author desires me to suspend my care of the dead, until I have done something for the dying. His case is, that the lady he loves is ever accompanied by a kinswoman, one of those gay, cunning women, who prevent all the love which is not addressed to themselves. This creature takes upon her in her mistress's presence to ask him, 'Whether Mrs. Florimel, (that is the cruel one's name) 'is not very handsome?' upon which he looks silly; then they both laugh out, and she will tell him, 'That Mrs. Florimel had an equal passion for him, but desired him not to expect the first time to be admitted in private; but that now he was at liberty before her only, who was her friend, to speak his mind, and that his mistress expected it.' Upon which Florimel acts a virgin-confusion, and with some disorder waits his speech. Here ever follows a deep silence; after which a loud laugh. Mr. Barebones applies himself to me on this occasion.

All the advice I can give him, is, to find a lover for the confidant, for there is no other bribe will prevail;

and I see but for she is want a gen

Some d against m not one wo but have b therefore, p ant, though middle wa from being ous to thei

'MR. A

'As I al to reformat gentlemen, convenience of errors he as desperation public dete feared, who have recove conviction, was before quotation) little succee from a hard yet, it is tr sort of rea extend not has this to stantial gu more than but there amount to a fame can s dart at. A ridiculous c find too mu selves to pl the crime c indictment of the whol be no injus themselves dal can ride

'Your me ject to the contrary, I from it, tha tain subject the error a p drawn to th plunge deep which advie get converts

'As for d of satire; v sion, I mus proof: for, deportment, so neither t emption. T to the state, betrayed ou perty, and As for the on, Le Roy his modus where virtue as for his re sort of too great success-man mis-

that will no other nce. And our lucuso I hope ption, by r you beceable to,
nt, &c' e 7th ine opened st month.

o attacks standing gers had ubts, and approches the horn-d a slight encles.
nents bechev dier oy with a Catal-na arenberg Balaguer, ange and nish Bat-Bern say, nt Thaur
ld shrtly

telligence, discourses
of a sense,
ment; the d to drop law, who 1709.

5.

strict ob-appeared have less ortake for ken up a aults and
The other
ing with a tained as though, his tenions open humour n who is st of this are never ch or rest all which ced, that of order, very day

in her closet at twelve, that she may become her table at two, and be unable to eat in public. About five years ago, I remember, it was the fashion to be short-sighted. A man would not own an acquaintance until he had first examined him with his glass. At a lady's entrance into the play-house, you might see tubes immediately levelled at her from every quarter of the pit and side-boxes. However, that mode of infinity is out, and the age has recovered its sight.
But the blind seem to be succeeded by the lame, and a jumpy limp is the present beauty. I think I have formerly observed, a cane is part of the dress of a peer, and always worn upon a button, for fear he should be thought to have occasion for it, or be extremely really, and not genteelly, a cripple. I have considered, but could never find out the bottom of this vanity. I indeed have heard of a Gascon general, who, by the lucky grazing of a bull-bit on the end of his stockings, took occasion to halt all his life after.
But as for our peaceable cripples, I know no foundation for their behaviour, without it may be supposed that, in this warlike age, some think a cane the next honour to a wooden leg. This sort of affectation I have known run from one limb or member to another. Before the limpers came in, I remember a race of hispers, fine persons, who took an aversion to particular letters in our language. Some never uttered the letter H: and others had as mortal an aversion to S. Others have had their fashionable defect in their ears, and would make you repeat all you said twice over. I know an ancient friend of mine, whose table is every day surrounded with flatterers, that make use of this, sometimes as a piece of grandeur, and at others as an art, to make them repeat their commendations. Such affectations have been indeed in the world in ancient times; but they fell into them out of politic ends. Alexander the Great had a wry neck, which made it the fashion in his court to carry their heads on one side when they came into the presence.
One who thought to outshine the whole court, carried his head so over-complaisantly, that this unfortunate prince gave him so great a box on the ear, as set all the heads of the court upright.

This humour takes place in our minds as well as bodies. I know at this time a young gentleman, who talks atheistically all day in coffee-houses, and in his degree of understanding sets up for a free-thinker: though it can be proved upon him, he says his prayers every morning and evening. But this class of modern wits I shall reserve for a chapter by itself.

Of the like turn are all your marriage-haters, who rail at the noose, at the words, 'for ever and ever' and at the same time are secretly pining for some long they or other that makes their hearts ach by their refusal. The next to these, are such as pretend to govern their wives, and boast how ill they use them.
When, at the same time, go to their houses, and you shall see them step as if they feared making a noise, and as fond as an abbeism. I do not know but sometimes these pretensions may arise from a desire to conceal a contrary defect than that they set up for.
I remember, when I was a young fellow, we had a companion of a very fearful complexion, who, when we sat in to drink, would desire us to take his sword from him when he grew fuddled, for it was his misfortune to be quarrelsome.

There are many, many of these evils, which demand my observation: but because I have of late been trought somewhat too satirical, I shall give them warning, and declare to the whole world, that they are not true, but false hypocrites; and make it out that they are good men in their hearts. The motive ostentatious affectation, in the above-mentioned like particulars, I take to proceed from that rest of fame and reputation which is planted in the hearts of all men. As this produces elegant and gallant actions in men of great abilities, it brings forth spurious productions in men who are unable of distinguishing themselves by things which are really praise-worthy. As the desire of men of true wit and gallantry shows itself in instances, the same desire in men who have talent without proper faculties, runs wild and is itself in a thousand extravagances, by which they would signalize themselves from others, and get a set of admirers. When I was a middle-aged man, there were many societies of ambitious men in England, who, in their pursuits after fame, every night employed in roasting porters, cobblers, knocking down watchmen, overhauling constables, breaking windows, blackening faces, and the like immortal enterprises, that disreputable reputation throughout the whole kingdom could hardly find a knocker at a door in a street after a midnight expedition of these beaux.

I was lately very much surprised by an old maid, who entered my bed-chamber one evening in a very great fright, and told me, she said my parlour was haunted; for that she had seen several panes of my windows broken, and the bed covered with half-pence. I have not yet a full opinion of this new way, but am apt to think, that it is a curious piece of wit that some of my contemporaries make use of, to break windows and leave the bill to pay for them.

St. James's Coffee-house, October 5.

There is no manner of news more than what the world had the other day; except that I have the letter of the Marshal Boufflers to the French king, of the late battle in the woods, which I transcribe for the benefit of the English reader:

TO THE KING,

It is to let your majesty understand, that to the mortal honour, and the destruction of the enemies, your troops have lost another battle. I did wonders, Rohan performed miracles: I did wonders, Gattion performed miracles; your army distinguished themselves, and every man did wonders. And to conclude, though you were in the field of battle, you have not lost the day. I can assure your majesty, that you have lost the field of battle, you have not lost an inch of ground. The enemy marched behind your rear, and we ran away from them as bold as lions.

I have been sent to Mr. Bickerstaff, relating the present state of the town of Bath, wherein the gentlemen of that place have desired him to call home the physicians. All gentlemen, therefore, of that town are hereby directed to return forthwith to their places of practice; and the stage-coaches are to take them in before other passengers, and shall be a certificate signed by the mayor, or the town clerk, that there are but two doctors to one patient in the town.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1709.

From my own Apartment, October 7.

There are many painters, who deal in history pieces, often themselves upon broken sketches, and smaller flourishes of fancy, without any design, having spent myself on dissertations. I am now sitting down to my disposition of my collection of every drawer the proper pocrisy, dice, patches, and the like, brought forth. My various heads, saying for Pacolet, and another, but observe, that my lettered men of honour, hard to decipher, though on a quite contrary side, works of the fairest hand, as unintelligible. They to politics, has in it many gyrics and satires that I have now before me, places at my Table of extraordinary nature, stood, and shall, tell them. They are from a citizen.

ISAAC,

'Thy lucubrations, have been perused by me, taken offence; forasmuch as brotherhood all persons of religion, we are afraid with none but hearty brother there; for that placed among murderers, since we do not assuage flesh, nor our gains wisdom. If, therefore, on this occasion with a regard to gifts that are in thee, James Nayler at the upper end of the table.

In answer to my good friend, to it, that I cannot but be sorry, James Nayler; not that Great, who is a champion, his sitting at the upper end of the table.

But to my courtier

SIR,

I am surprised, that you complimenting the dead, and the living. Let me only say, and Caesar, as general, not now a groat to be in good company: I know give you one hundred pounds secret, and be rich.

This gentleman sees out the formality, and shall be plain with me of his courtier and on hands: if I can take

My citizen writes to

MR. ISAAC,

SIR,

Your Tatler, of whom I am now reading, and

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ington, who worth three g, which he his mayors of ditto r, and per udes, your

LEGFR.

eman's re-ving how or the deficant parrst person he guilt of sider, that and am to ivate con-

ing sickness e through-aking any nces, and I did not him, but humanity
with the
from grief, d ease; in e of your

'T. B.'

he matter annot but man has common-sequence skil, with and com-h is the sch libeversation, ctor, who fee, has he kills a something education aking for operates to set off y to add

lemen in minster, he noble ey repair twixt the may be word of arts. The eedishes nches of a of parts at queshim, by ce of the

N. B. The seat of learning is now removed in the corner of the chimney on the left-hand towards the window, to the round table of the middle of the room over against the fire; a revolution much lamented by the porters and chairmen, who were much edified through a pane of glass that remained broken all last summer.

I cannot forbear advertising my correspondents that I think myself treated by some of them in a very familiar manner, and in phrases that neither beg of them to give, nor me to take. I shall therefore desire for the future, that if any one returns an answer to a letter, he will not tell me he has received the favour of my letter; but, if he does not think to say he has received the honour of it, that he tell me in plain English, he has received my letter such a date. I must likewise insist, that he conclude with I am with great respect, or plain, &c. without further addition; and not insult me, by assurance of his being, with great truth and esteem, your humble servant. There is likewise another mark of superiority which I cannot bear; and therefore must inform my correspondents, that I discard faithful humble servants, and am resolved to read letters that are not subscribed, your most obedient, most humble servant, or both. These may appear niceities to vulgar minds, but they are such as men of honour and distinction must have regard to. And very well remember a famous duel in France, where four were killed on one side, and three of the other, occasioned by a gentleman's subscribing himself most affectionate friend.

No. 79.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1769.

Folices ter, et angulus, Quos irrupta tenet capta; nec malis Divulsus quæ in omnia, Supremū citius solvet amor dæ.

Hor. i. Od. xiv. 17.

Thrice happy they, in pure delights Whom love in mutual bonds unites, Unbroken by complaints or strife Even to the latest hours of life.

FRANCIS.

From my own Apartment, October 10.

My sister Jenny's lover, the honest Tranquillus, for that shall be his name, has been impatient with me to dispatch the necessary directions for his marriage; that while I am taken up with inquiries, schemes, as he calls them, he might not burn with real desire, and the torture of expectation. When I had reprimanded him for the ardour wherein he expressed himself, which I thought had not enough of that veneration with which the marriage-bed is to be ascended, I told him, 'the day of his nuptials should be on the Saturday following, which was the eighth instant.' On the seventh in the evening, poor Jenny came into my chamber, and, having her heart full of the great change of life from a virgin condition to that of a wife, she long sat silent. I saw she expected me to entertain her on this important subject, which was too delicate a circumstance for herself to touch upon; whereupon I relieved her modesty in the following manner: 'Sister,' said I, 'you are now going from me; and be contented that you leave the company of a talkative old man, for that of a sober young one; but take this along with you, that there is no mean in the state you are entering into, but you are to be happy or miserable, and your fortune in life will be wholly of your own making. marriages I have ever seen, most of which unhappy ones, the great cause of evil has from slight occasions; and I take it to be axiomatic in a married condition, that you are trifles. When two persons have so good of each other as to come together for life, not differ in matters of importance, because of each other with respect; and in regards of consideration that may affect them prepared for mutual assistance and relief occurrences. For less occasions, they formions, but leave their minds unprepared.

THE TATLER.

I fear Jenny, is the reason that the quarrel between Harry Willit and his lady, which began with a squirrel, is irreconcilable. Sir Harry was a grave author; she runs into his study, and in a laughing humour, claps the squirrel upon the table, and he threw the animal in a rage on the floor; she picked it up again, calls Sir Harry a sour pedant, and a bad nature or good manners. This cast upon her such a rage, that he threw down the table, and kicked the book round the room; then he reproached himself: "Lord, madam," said he, "why run into such expressions? I was," said he, "in the highest delight with that author, when you threw your squirrel upon my book;" and, smiling, in recollection, "I have a great respect for your wife, and pray let us all be friends." My lady, so far from accepting this apology, that she immediately conceived a resolution to keep him under and with a serious air replied, "There is no need to be had to what a man says, who can fall into a decent rage, and such an abject submission at the same moment, for which I absolutely forgive you." Upon which she rushed out of the room. Harry staid some minutes behind, to command himself; after which he followed her to her bed-chamber, where she was prostrate on the bed, tearing her hair, and naming twenty who would have used her otherwise. This brought him to so high a degree, that he forbore to beat her; and all the servants in the house at their several stations listening, whilst each man and woman, the best master and mistress, each other in a way that is not to be seen at Billingsgate. You know this ended in a late separation: she longs to return home, but does not know how to do it: he invites her home, and lies with every woman he can get, and requires no submission of her; but she on her very return will argue she is to blame, and is resolved to be for ever, rather than to change it. Thus, dear Jenny, my great advice to you is to be guarded against giving or receiving occasions. Great matters of offence I have no fear either from you or your husband.

At last, we turned our discourse into a more gay part: but before we did so, I made her snuff-box for ever, and half drown herself in the stench of the musty.

On the wedding morning arrived, and our family numerous, there was no avoiding the inconvenience of making the ceremony and festival more in the modern way of celebrating them approve of. The bride next morning came to her chamber, dressed with all the art and care of a coquette, the fire-woman, could bestow on her. On her wedding-day three-and-twenty; her far from what we call a regular beauty; but sweetness in her countenance, an ease in her shape and motion, with looks, had attraction exactness can inspire, endowments. When her features flushed with a generous manner, so which Tranquillus and me good omens of his. The wedding was with ceremony at church, in company with a dinner pitched upon the Apollo bar, as a place sacred to religion, where Ben Jones their liberal meetings, grace appeared; and so come into that ample to make me complime fell into a discourse upon entertainment, drawn which are in gold. Lepidus has a way of subjects in which with great dexterity.

the public meetings of had passed through his pleasing narrative and a repetition of the 'Hail, wedded love!

Of human offspring
In paradise, of all the
By thee adulterous
Among the beastial
Founded in reason, Relations dear, and
Of father, son, and Perpetual fountain of Whose bed is under Present or past, as Here Love his golden
His constant lamp, Reigns here, and re
Of harlots, loveless, Casual fruition; no
Mixed dance, or war
Or serenade, which t
To his proud fair, be

In these verses, all the young woman's head but that in so chaste a bride thanked him for down to dinner.

Among the rest of the fellow you call a wag, usual life of all feasts absurdities, and putting modesty out of countenance. He drank to the bride's made twenty double. We are the best bred in this kingdom; and in been as much out of that we were relieved ours at the lower end of marines. The sold sense, and saw what he had a way of looking aloud in an inward mentioned the word the lieutenant in that. The merry man, wond offered to thoughts," and so on,

from the omb; and e returned life to her owing the

ber, 1709.
and find by hin person any years publish a y licubra-all sober lunatic, or than pity wherever and paper.
upon him into Lethe

1709.

i. 85, 86.

1.

me of the books, and ed the re-advice and standard in vers; have light and morial, I til I have n divinity, antiquity;
rmions by which is ording to nderstood, no value;
at too ac-est for preecording to and black-se binding e also with that even rinted by nce above

2.

ng showed e fair sex;
of the fol-tered.

October 9.

in at my hen I en-N, they all y were to stare at, rather than to receive me. After a long pause, a servant brought a round stool, on which I sat down at the lower end of the room, in the presence of no less than twelve persons, gentlemen and ladies, lolling in elbow chairs. And, to complete my disgrace, my mistress was of the society. I tried to compose myself in vain, not knowing how to dispose of either my legs or arms, or how to shape my countenance; the eyes of the whole room being still upon me in a profound silence. My confusion at last was so great, that, without speaking, or being spoken to, I fled for it, and left the assembly to treat me at their discretion. A lecture from you upon these inhuman distinctions in a free nation, will, I doubt not, prevent the like evils for the future, and make it, as I say, as cheap sitting as standing. I am, with the greatest respect, Sir, your most humble, 'and most obedient servant,

J. R.

'P. S. I had almost forgot to inform you, that a fair young lady sat in an armless chair upon my right hand, with manifest discontent in her looks.'

Soon after the receipt of this epistle, I heard a very gentle knock at my door: my maid went down, as brought up word, 'that a tall, lean, black man, red-dressed, who said he had not the honour to be acquainted with me, desired to be admitted. I bade her show him up, met him at my chamber door, and he fell back a few paces. He approached me with great respect, and told me with a low voice, 'he was a gentleman that had been seated upon the round stool I immediately recollected that there was a joint stool in my chamber, which I was afraid he might take for an instrument of distinction, and therefore winked at my boy to carry it into my closet. I then took him by the hand, and led him to the upper end of a room, where I placed him in my great elbow-chair at the same time drawing another without arms for myself to sit by him. I then asked him, 'at what time this misfortune befell him?' He answered, 'between the hours of seven and eight in the evening.' I further demanded of him, what he had ate or drunk that day? he replied, nothing but a dish of water gruel with a few plums in it.' In the next place, I felt his pulse, which was very low and languishing. These circumstances confirmed me in an opinion which I had entertained upon the first reading of his letter, that the gentleman was far gone in the spleen. I therefore advised him to rise the next morning, and plunge into the cold bath, there to remain under water until he was almost drowned. This I ordered him to repeat six days successively; and on the seventh to repair at the wonted hour to my lady Haughty's and to acquaint me afterwards with what he should meet with there; and particularly to tell me, whether he shall think they stared upon him so much as the time before. The gentleman smiled: and by the way of talking to me, showed himself a man of excellent sense in all particulars, unless when a chair, a round or a joint stool, were spoken of. He opened his heart to me at the same time concerning several other grievances; such as, being overlooked in public assemblies, having his boys unanswered, being helped last at table, and placed at the back part of a coach; with many other distresses, which have withered his countenance, and worn him to a skeleton. Finding him a man of reason, I entered into the bottom of his distemper. 'Sir,' said I, 'there are more of your constitution in this island of Great Britain than in any other part of the world; and I beg the of you to tell me, whether you do not observe, you meet with more affronts in rainy days?" He eyed candidly, "that he had long observed, that there were less saucy in sunshine than in cloudy weather." Upon which I told him plainly, 'his distemper was the spleen; and that though the weather ill-natured, it was not so bad as he believed.' I further assured him, that his use of the cold-bath with a course of Steel which I should prescribe would certainly cure most of his acquaintance for rudeness, ill-behaviour, and impertinence.' He smiled, and promised to observe my precepts, not forgetting to give me an account of his operation. This distemper being pretty epidemic, I shall, for the benefit of mankind, give the public an account of the progress I make in the cure author of the following letter behaves himself sensibly, that I cannot defer answering him ger.

' Your most dutiful and
' most obedient servant, &c.'

St. James's Coffee-house, October 12.

ceived this morning a mail from Holland, brings advice that the siege of Mons is carried so great vigour and bravery, that we hope to be masters of the place; all things being prepared for making the assault on the work and ravelin of the attack of Bertaux charge began with the fire of bombs and shells, which was so hot, that the enemy quitted it, and we lodged ourselves on those works in position. During this storm, one of our shells fell into a magazine of the enemy, and blew there are advices, which say the court of France had made new offers of peace to the congress; but this intelligence wants confirmation.

anus ob patriam pugnando vulnera passi,— e pii vates, et Phœbo digna locuti ; as aut qui vitam excoluere per artes, e sui memores alios fecere merendo.

patriots live, who, for their country's good, fighting fields were prodigal of blood ; poets worthy their inspiring god, of unblemish'd life, make their abode ;

And searching Who grac'd the
Those who to w
And those who

THERE are two the soul really enginary existence by reputation. The b ceeded from the p these; but my des have chiefly propos principal reward of reason that I exclud
the great founders for this reason also anxious to do just going to speak; for all their enterprise too scrupulous in al of it. It was this the whole body of many of whom I m catalogues of illust set me in upon this the whole afternoo other; which made imagination; that t part of the followin into a very agreeab to describe in all its

I dreamed that boundless plain, the multitudes of people In the midst of it head above the clouds steep, and of such creature which was could possibly ascend heard from the top of pet; but so exceedingly it filled the hearts of creatures, and gave such as seemed to animate itself. This made me very few in that vast fine enough to pleasure; but my wound me, I saw many syrens, clothed like the names of Sloth, were seated on thirtiety of groves, near the borders of the revolting multitude ages were listening of a more erect aspect themselves from the towards the mountain sound, which still listened to it.

On a sudden, met forward, with a res follow the call of th took something with assistance to him in swords drawn, some hands, some had com telescopes, and other their heads, and c mechanic use of on d at my le vision, t glorious generous ut, at the h a mask

! I took
ns. The l, and be-different h did not id led no artizans, r, fell into lventurers d by-ways e and per-

n a little,
turns and as any iness in the were men rho would mning and ed in their step, fell ment than d be ever
very high,
which ran to meet in hered the eat bodies, each road posed our ns had his adished in rowds ran ut, Death,
was Envy, estruction,
s, noises of r, she ap-
insomuch, raged from ishamed of st confess,
t of these ie voice of t we felt a portion as seemed to swords in and an air anded by id contemnore com-
ny. The id uniform, s went on at the top rather a de-elds about that made toils; and assembly, ature. In id a palace great fold-

ing doors, that faced the four several quarters of the world. On the top of it was enthroned the goddess of the mountain, who smiled upon her votaries, and sounded the silver trumpet which had called them up and cheered them in their passage to her palace. They had now formed themselves into several divisions; a band of historians taking their stations at each door, according to the persons whom they were to introduce.

On a sudden, the trumpet, which had hitherto sounded only a march, or a point of war, now sent all its notes into triumph and exultation. The whole fabric shook, and the doors flew open. The first who stepped forward was a beautiful and majestic hero, and as I heard by the murmurs around me Alexander the Great. He was conducted by a crowd of historians. The person who immediately walked before him, was remarkable for an embroidered garment, who, not being well acquainted with the place, was conducting him to an apartment appointed for the reception of fabulous heroes. The name of this false guide was Quintus Curtius. But Arrian and Plutarch, who knew better the avenues of this palace, conducted him into the great hall, and placed him at the upper end of the first table. My good friend thought that I might see the whole ceremony, conveyed me to a corner of this room, where I might perceive what passed, without being seen myself. The first who entered was a charming virgin, leading by the arm a venerable old man that was blind. Under her left arm she bore a harp, on her head a garland. Alexander who was well acquainted with Homer, stood up at his entrance, and placed him on his right hand. The virgin, who it seems was one of the nine Muses that attended on the goddess of fame, smiled with an ineffable grace at their meeting, and retired.

Julius Caesar was now coming forward; and though most of the historians offered their services to introduce him, he left them at the door, and would have no conductor but himself.

The next who advanced, was a man of a bold but cheerful aspect, and attended by persons of greater figure than any that appeared on this occasion. Plato was on his right hand, and Xenophon on his left. He bowed to Homer, and sat down by him. It was expected that Plato would himself have taken a place next to his master, Socrates; but on a sudden there was heard a great clamour of disputants at the door, who appeared with Aristotle at the head of them. That philosopher, with some rudeness but great strength of reason, convinced the whole that a title to the fifth place was his due, and took accordingly.

He had scarce sat down, when the same beautiful virgin that had introduced Homer, brought in another who hung back at the entrance, and would have excused himself, had not his modesty been overcome by the invitation of all who sat at the table. His guide and behaviour made me easily conclude, it was Virgil. Cicero next appeared and took his place. He had enquired at the door for one Lucilius to introduce him; but not finding him there he contented himself with the attendance of most other writers, who all, except Sallust, appeared highly pleased with the office.

We waited some time in expectation of the most worthy, who came in with a great retinue of historians whose names I could not learn, most of them being natives of Carthage. The person then introduced, who was Hannibal, seemed much distressed and could not forbear complaining to the least of his acquaintances he had met with among the Roman historians.

THE TATLER.

'who attempted,' says he, 'to carry me into the subterraneous apartment; and, perhaps, would have done it, had it not been for the impartiality of this gentleman,' pointing to Polybius, 'who was the only person, except my own countrymen, that was willing to conduct me hither.'

The Carthaginian took his seat, and Pompey entered with great dignity in his own person, and preceded by several historians. Lucan the poet was at the head of them, who, observing Homer and Virgil at the table, was going to sit down himself, had not the latter whispered him, that whatever pretence he might otherwise have had, he forfeited his claim to it, by coming in as one of the historians. Lucan was so exasperated with the repulse, that he muttered something to himself; and was heard to say, 'that since he could not have a seat among them himself, he would bring in one who alone had more merit than their whole assembly:' upon which he went to the door, and brought in Cato of Utica. That great man approached the company with such an air, that showed he contemned the honour which he laid a claim to. Observing the seat opposite to Cæsar was vacant, he took possession of it, and spoke two or three smart sentences upon the nature of precedency, which, according to him, consisted not in place, but in intrinsic merit: to which he added, that the most virtuous man, wherever he was seated, was always at the upper end of the table.' Socrates, who had a great spirit of raillery with his wisdom, could not forbear smiling at a virtue which took so little pains to make itself agreeable. Cicero took the occasion to make a long discourse in praise of Cato, which he uttered with much vehemence. Cæsar answered him with a great deal of seeming temper; but as I stood at a great distance from them, I was not able to hear one word of what they said. But I could not forbear taking notice, that, in all the discourse which passed at the table, a word or a nod from Homer decided the controversy.

After a short pause, Augustus appeared, looking round him with a serene and affable countenance upon all the writers of his age, who strove among themselves which of them should show him the greatest marks of gratitude and respect. Virgil rose from the table to meet him, and though he was an acceptable guest to all, he appeared more such to the learned than the military worthies.

The next man astonished the whole table with his appearance. He was slow, solemn, and silent in his behaviour, and wore a raiment curiously wrought with hieroglyphics. As he came into the middle of the room, he threw back the skirt of it, and discovered a golden thigh. Socrates, at the sight of it, declared against keeping company with any who were not made of flesh and blood; and, therefore, desired Diogenes the Laertian to lead him to the apartment allotted for fabulous heroes, and worthies of dubious existence. At his going out, he told them, 'that they did not know whom they dismissed; that he was now Pythagoras, the first of philosophers, and that formerly he had been a very brave man at the siege of Troy.'—'That may be very true,' said Socrates; 'but you forget that you have likewise been a very great harlot in your time.' This exclusion made way for Archimedes, who came forward with a scheme of mathematical figures in his hand; among which I observed a cone and a cylinder.

Seeing this table full, I desired my guide, for civility, to lead me to the fabulous apartment the roof of which was painted with Gorgons, Chimeras, and Centaurs, &c. I wanted to see the table was a leaning and were Achilles on his left lower end of the table. The ushers methought, some at the Bickerstaff with disdain worthy, the transported burning was awakened then fired been very pleasing a it an agree from the heroes, to living.

No. 62.] T

Ubi idem aliquando

Where the love, it is than separ

From

After the tions suitable into sudden soul subsided consideration certain grave the little gr and fancy, this state of and in a p misfortune life; among sensibly as love, and n piness whe children to their child affection be reason and the sorrows those of the of this sort heart better ill-will towards perity, and lence which daring and

For this trical perfor the greatest and insensit sensations. arisen a chi of the perso poetical ju

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

intelligent ght not to i a tendere passions ling. It is a way of row which our imagiill give me t and ho-childhood, and noble eir friends, unes; but e to those uch upon rs were at r nuptials, a foreign me, which oportunely

s. They ountry on a common ow faithful some every irs abroad;

h the next is would
' because unexpected

y, walked
she lived,
nswoman;
met there,
of life, in They stood rfect tran-
the calm
the waves, ke at their aw someied was a w it first,
a right to nd enter-wreck, the sing, 'if it the child hen they it was a
I a heart ade many so knows,'
hope and lgent pad-d pleasing n a bride ot be the upon his
If a dozen xposed to t he have he was to y: it is a is to take y be de-ave threw the carcass on the shore. The kinswoman immediately, shrieked out, 'Oh my cousin!' and fell upon the ground. The unhappy wife went to help her friend, when she saw her own husband at her feet and dropped in a swoon upon the body. An old man, who had been the gentleman's nurse, came about this time to call the ladies in to supper, as found her child, as she always called him, dead the shore, her mistress and kinswoman both lying dead by him. Her loud lamentations, and calling her young master to life, soon awaked the friend from her trance: but the wife was gone for ever.

When the family and neighbourhood got together round the bodies, no one asked any question, but the objects before them told the story.

Incidents of this nature are the more moving when they are drawn by persons concerned in the catastrophe, notwithstanding they are often oppressive beyond the power of giving them in a distinct light except we gather their sorrow from their inability to speak it.

I have two original letters, written both on the same day, which are to me exquisite in their different kinds. The occasion was this:—A gentleman who had courted a most agreeable young woman, and with her heart, obtained also the consent of her father, whom she was an only child. The old man had fancy that they should be married in the same church where he himself was, in a village in Westmorland, and made them set out while he was laid up with gout at London. The bridegroom took only his the bride her maid; they had the most agreeable journey imaginable to the place of marriage: from whence the bridegroom writ the following letter to his wife's father.

'SIR,

'March 18, 1672.

'After a very pleasant journey hither, we are preparing for the happy hour in which I am to be your son. I assure you the bride carries it, in the eye the vicar who married you, much beyond her mother, though she says your open sleeves, pantaloons, and shoulder-knot, made a much better show than the finical dress I am in. However, I am contented to be the second fine man this village ever saw, and shall make it very merry before night, because I shall not myself from thence, Your most dutiful son,

'T. B.'

'The bride gives her duty, and is as handsome an angel.—I am the happiest man breathing.'

The villagers were assembling about the church, and the happy couple took a walk in a private garden. The bridegroom's man knew his master would leave that place on a sudden after the wedding, and, seeing his draw his pistols the night before, took this opportunity to go into his chamber and charge them. Upon their return from the garden, they went into the room; and, after a little fond raillery on the subject of their courtship, the lover took up a pistol, which he knew he had unloaded the night before, and, pre-sentsing it to her, said, with the most graceful smile whilst she looked pleased at his agreeable flattery 'Now, madam, repent of all those cruelties you have been guilty of to me; consider, before you die, how often you have made a poor wretch freeze under your casement: you shall die, you tyrant, you shall die with all those instruments of death and destruction about you, with that enchanting smile, those killing ringlets of your hair!'—'Give fire!' said she, laughing. He did so; and shot her dead. Who can speak his condition? but he bore it so patiently as to call up his man. The poor wretch entered, and his master locked the door upon him. 'Will,' said he, 'did you charge these pistols?' He answered, 'Yes.' Upon which he shot him dead with that remaining. After this, amidst a thousand broken sobs, piercing groans, and distracted motions, he writ the following letter to the father of his dead mistress.

'SIR,

'I, who two hours ago told you truly I was the happiest man alive, am now the most miserable. Your daughter lies dead at my feet, killed by my hand, through a mistake of my man's charging my pistols unknown to me. Him have I murdered for it. Such is my wedding day—I will immediately follow my wife to her grave; but, before I throw myself upon my sword, I command my distraction so far as to explain my story to you. I fear my heart will not keep together until I have stabbed it. Poor, good old man!—Remember, he that killed your daughter died for it. In the article of death, I give you my thanks, and pray for you, though I dare not for myself. If it be possible do not curse me.'

No. 83.] THURSDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1709.

Senilis stultitia, quæ deliratio appellari solet, senum levium est, non omnium. M. T. Cic.

That which is usually called dotage is not the foible of all old men but only of such as are remarkable for their levity and inconstancy.

From my own Apartment, October 19.

It is my frequent practice to visit places of resort in this town where I am least known, to observe what reception my works meet with in the world, and what good effects I may promise myself from my labours; and it being a privilege asserted by monsieur Montaigne, and others of vain-glorious memory, that we writers of essays may talk of ourselves; I take the liberty to give an account of the remarks which I find are made by some of my gentle readers upon these my dissertations.

I happened this evening to fall into a coffee-house near the Exchange, where two persons were reading my account of the 'Table of Fame.'

The one of these was commenting as he read, and explaining who was meant by this and the other worthy as he passed on. I observed the person over-against him wonderfully intent and satisfied with his explanation. When he came to Julius Cæsar, who is said to have refused any conductor to the table; 'No, no,' said he, 'he is in the right of it, he has money enough to be welcome wherever he comes;' and then whispered, 'he means a certain colonel of the train-bands.' Upon reading that Aristotle made his claims with some rudeness, but great strength of reason; 'who can that be, so rough and so reasonable? It must be some whig, I warrant you. There is nothing but party in these public papers.' Where Pythagoras is said to have a golden thigh, 'Ay, ay,' said he, 'he has money enough in his breeches; that is the alderman of our ward,' you must know. Whatever he read, I found he interpreted from his own way of life and acquaintance. I am glad my readers can construe for themselves these difficult points; but, for the benefit of posterity, I design, when I come to write my last paper of this kind, to make it an explanation of all my former. In that piece, you shall have all I have commended, with their be left as t

vice is ve
for which r

But I m of yet gre writings; t heart. Litt of this kind one who kn at this tim and good h

'MR
'I had but it is nov
Mr. Bicker
I have a ve for your fa height I an standing c dissemble hopes; bec that are fit childish-ye a good agre

'Speak p you; and i of me.

'Do not withstandi help your e therefore d

'I can subject; a you do of a

'Pray, s rosity, and thank you,

There is
favour of w good a hun
I received instead of is, for I ha Jack! thou such merry
when he is these poor stands love without the
of mine is pleased to malè habita nature. I please the Add to this and have l beau, as I said, 'Ev instructed according t
no more to verse with wishing my when I an interrupt t complacenc civil thing could have abled as thor,' or saw her, ind good and good ind good ten I was ble, even

I tell her, r inviting t; that a pressions ented her an infinite what was beholders ever were
At this ty-three ble Maria
than the

and I so ay never will find er: and if you premplexion, his grand and con-you love greatest

'i. B.'

weakness
I believe seen more

ber 12.
much the e, when I re to this ung men
but there ave omit-
gentleman
) not long man must before he ce of this re drawn them. A oing to a there, to upper, or any other proposed.

no money,
is parents cise of his e reason,
. If you
ave abun-

WIT. reathse on this subject, wherein I shall lay down rules when a young stripling is to say, No: and a young virgin, Yes.

N B. For the publication of this discourse, I was only for subscriptions from the under graduates of each university, and the young ladies in the boarding-schools of Hackney and Chelsea.

St. James's Coffee-house, October 19.

Letters from the Hague, of the twenty-fifth of October, N. S. advise, that the garrison of Maastricht marched out on the twenty-third instant, and a garrison of the allies marched into the town. All the forces in the field, both of the enemy and the confederates, are preparing to withdraw into winter quarters.

No. 84.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER, 22, 1709.

From my own Apartment, October 21.

I HAVE received a letter subscribed A. B. wherein it has been represented to me as an enormity, that there are more than ordinary crowds of women at the Old Bailey when a rape is to be tried. But by Mr. A. B.'s favour, I cannot tell who are so much concerned in that part of the law as the sex he mentions, they being the only persons liable to such insults. Nor, indeed, do I think it more unreasonable that they should be inquisitive on such occasions than men of honour, when one is tried for killing another in a duel. It is very natural to enquire how the fatal pass was made, that we may the better defend ourselves when we come to be attacked. Several eminent ladies appeared lately at the court of justice on such an occasion; and, with great patience and attention, staid the whole trials of two persons for the above-said crime. The law to me, indeed, seems a little defective in this point; and it is a very great hardship, that this crime, which is committed by men only, should have men only on their jury. I humbly, therefore, propose, that on future trials of this sort, half of the twelve may be women; and those such whose faces are well known to have taken notes, or may be supposed to remember what happened in former trials in the same place. There is the learned Andragyne, that would make a good fore-woman of the pannel, who, by long attendance, understands as much law and anatomy as is necessary in this case. Until this is taken care of, I am humbly of opinion it would be much more expedient that the fair were wholly absent; for to what end can it be that they should be present at such examinations, when they can only be perplexed with a fellow-feeling for the injured, without any power to avenge their sufferings? It is an unnecessary pain which the fair ones give themselves on these occasions. I have known a young woman shriek out at some parts of the evidence; and have frequently observed, that when the proof grew particular and strong, there has been such a universal flutter of fans, that one would think the whole female audience were falling into fits. Nor, indeed, can I see how men themselves can be wholly unmoved at such tragical relations.

In short, I must tell my female readers, and the may take an old man's word for it, that there is no thing in woman so graceful and becoming as modesty. It adds charms to their beauty, and gives a new softness to their sex. Without it, simplicity and innocence appear rude; reading and good sense, macer line; wit and humour, lascivious. This is so neces

THE TATLER.

nary a qualification for pleasing, that the loose part of womankind, whose study it is to ensnare men's hearts, never fail to support the appearance of what they know is so essential to that end; and I have heard it reported by the young fellows in my time, as a maxim of the celebrated Madam Bennet, that a young wench, though never so beautiful, was not worth her board when she was past her blushing. This discourse naturally brings into my thoughts a letter I have received from the virtuous lady Whittlestick, on the subject of Lucretia.

* COUSIN ISAAC, ' From my tea-table, Oct. 17.

'I read your Tatler of Saturday last, and was surprised to see you so partial to your own sex, as to think none of ours worthy to sit at your first table; for sure you cannot but own Lucretia as famous as any you have placed there, who first parted with her virtue, and afterwards with her life, to preserve her fame.'

Mrs. Biddy Twig has written me a letter to the same purpose; but, in answer to both my pretty correspondents and kinswomen, I must tell them, that although I know Lucretia would have made a very graceful figure at the upper end of the table, I did not think it proper to place her there, because I knew she would not care for being in the company of so many men without her husband. At the same time, I must own, that Tarquin himself was not a greater lover and admirer of Lucretia than I myself am in an honest way. When my sister Jenny was in her sampler, I made her get the whole story without book, and tell it me in needle-work. This illustrious lady stands up in history as the glory of her own sex, and the reproach of ours; and the circumstances under which she fell were so very particular, that they seem to make adultery and murder meritorious. She was a woman of such transcendent virtue, that her beauty, which was the greatest of the age and country in which she lived, and is generally celebrated as the highest of praise in other women, is never mentioned as a part of her character. But it would be declaiming to dwell upon so celebrated a story, which I mentioned only in respect to my kinswomen; and to make reparation for the omission they complain of, do further promise them, that if they can furnish me with instances to fill it, there shall be a small tea-table set apart in my Palace of Fame for the reception of all of her character.

Grecian Coffee-house, October 21.

I was this evening communicating my design of producing obscure merit into public view; and proposed to the learned, that they would please to assist me in the work. For the same end I publish my intention to the world that all men of liberal thoughts may know they have an opportunity of doing justice to such worthy persons as have come within their respective observation, and who, by misfortune, modesty, or want of proper writers to recommend them, have escaped the notice of the rest of mankind. If, therefore, any one can bring any tale or tidings of illustrious persons, or glorious actions, that are not commonly known, he is desired to send an account thereof to me, at J. Morphew's, and they shall have justice done them. At the same time that I have this concern for men and things that deserve reputation, and have it not, I am resolved to examine into the claims of such ancients and moderns as are in possession of it, with a design to displace them, in case I find their titles defective. The first whose merits I shall inquire into, are some merry gentlemen of the French nation, who have written very advantageous histories of under the t several of them in no rative of on there was n he did not history or g so much as summer to great men, in a time their time several who present age den stop be are others will live ha history of t for politician of men so t for writing houses, the nature also that I can I do hereby lators what a novel; a translate it

Coming of mine, w gram with ever since frequenter took me as me he was Bickerstaff enemies b some,' say they can e years, and oblige is to your child going on; advice with what he w to give me

'A gent in an arb gentle bit for its love with some when he s him on the fleeting a that saved he had sh

No. 85.]

Fr

My bro came to m very many offices I h his wife, house.' without a his good ness upon after, my e air, and spoke her untenance in a pas- a certain She no was one within the her speak, a to do, I ells me he and I have you must ar pardon, stand, that husband's ttle indis- ards him, she, 'been if he was ad by any at a word 'adam, you all judge;' y, and tell of it: for has better I told you above little an be sour go on. re dispute out an end ge you to nder your will reflect ver passed to happen, o the cir- to what is s to come: on in your e him the hout being id of being ful in this gling; and equence, to e is a play, a student; of brandy, fire. My with the isins; and each other elves, and mirth was y a family, ort: every e between id emotion sake, and the whole this case, e ambition contradict n kindness remember you do not know how he loves me; I find I can do any thing with him.'—'If you can so, why should you desire to do any thing but please him? but I have a woman or two more before you go out of the room; for I see you do not like the subject I am upon; let nothing provoke you to fall upon an imperfection he cannot help; for, if he has a resenting spirit, he will think your aversion as immovable as the imperfection which you upbraid him. But above all, dear Jenny be careful of one thing, and you will be something more than woman; that is, a levity you are almost all guilty of, which is, to take a pleasure in your power to give pain. It is even in a mistress an argument of meanness of spirit, but in a wife it is injustice and ingratitude. When a sensible man once observes this in a woman, he must have a very great, or very little spirit, to overlook it. A woman ought, therefore, to consider very often, how few men there are who will regard a meditated offence as a weakness of temper.'

I was going on in my confabulation, when Tranquillus entered. She cast all her eyes upon him with much shame and confusion, mixed with great complacency and love, and went up to him. He took her in his arms, and looked so many soft things in one glance, that I could see he was glad I had been talking to her, sorry she had been troubled, and angry at himself that he could not disguise the concern he was in an hour before. After which, he says to me, with an air awkward enough, but methought not unbecoming 'I have altered my mind, brother; we will live upon you a day or two longer.' I replied, 'That is what I have been persuading Jenny to ask of you, but she is resolved never to contradict your inclination, and refused me.'

We were going on in that way which one hardly knows how to express; as when two people mean the same thing in a nice case, but come at it by talking as distinctly from it as they can; when very opportunely came in upon us an honest inconsiderable fellow. Tim Dapper, a gentleman well known to us both. Tim is one of those who are very necessary, by being very inconsiderable. Tim dropped in at an incident, when he knew not how to fall into either a grave or a merry way. My sister took this occasion to make off, and Dapper gave us an account of all the company he had been in to-day, who was, and who was not at home, where he visited. This Tim is the head of a species: he is a little out of his element in this town; but he is a relation of Tranquillus, and his neighbour in the country, which is the true place of residence for this species. The habit of a Dapper, when he is at home, is a light broad cloth, with calamanco or red waistcoat and breeches; and it is remarkable that their wigs seldom hide the collar of their coats. They have always a peculiar spring in their arms, and wriggle in their bodies, and a trip in their gait. All which motions they express at once in their drinking, bowing, or saluting ladies; for a distant imitation of a forward fop, and a resolution to overtop him in his way, are the distinguishing marks of a Dapper. These under-characters of men, are parts of the sociable world by no means to be neglected: they are like pegs in a building; they make no figure in it, but hold the structure together, and are as absolutely necessary as the pillars and columns. I am sure we found it so this morning; for Tranquillus and I should, perhaps, have looked cold at each other the whole day but Dapper fell in with his brisk way, shook us both by the hand, rallied the bride, mistook the acceptance he met with amongst us for extraordinary perfection in himself, and heartily pleased, and was pleased at he staid. His company left us all in good and we were not such fools as to let it sink, confirmed it by great cheerfulness and in our carriage the whole evening.

THE TATLER.

White's Chocolate-house, October 24.

been this evening to visit a lady who is a of the enamoured Cynthio, and there heard choly news of his death. I was in hopes, hunting and October would have recovered his unhappy passion. He went into the with a design to leave behind him all of Clarissa; but he found that place only venient to think of her without interruption. ntry gentlemen were very much puzzled case, and never finding him merry or loud company, took him for a Roman Catholic, ediate upon his death seized his French chambre for a priest; and it is generally in the country, it will go hard with him next

Poor Cynthio never held up his head after ceived a letter of Clarissa's marriage. The gave me this account, being far gone in ed romance, told me, 'if I would give her oh, she would take care to have it placed on; which she herself had devised in the fol-anner. It is to be made of black marble, y corner to be crowded with weeping cupids. ivers are to be hung up upon two tall cypress-ich are to grow on each side on the monu-nd their arrows to be laid in a great heap, manner of a funeral pile, on which is to lie of the deceased. On the top of each cypress is the figure of a moaning turtle-dove. On the st part of the monument, the goddess to ese birds are sacred is to sit in a dejected as weeping for the death of her votary.' I tell you this lady's head is a little turned : to be rid of importunities, I promised her h, and told her I would take for my pattern Don Alonzo, who was no less famous in his Cynthio is in ours.

The Epitaph.

Here lies Don Alonzo, Slain by a wound received under his left pap;
the orifice of which was so small, no surgeon could discover it;
Reader,
if thou would'st avoid so strange a death, look not upon Lucinda's eyes.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1709.

From my own Apartment, October 25.

I came home last night, my servant delivered following letter:

October 24.

e orders from Sir Harry Quickset, of Stafy baronet, to acquaint you, that his honour y himself, Sir Giles Wheel-barrow, knight, Rentfree, esquire, justice of the quorum, Windmill, esquire, and Mr. Nicholas Doubt, inner Temple, Sir Harry's Grandson, will on you at the hour of nine to-morrow morng Tuesday the twenty-fifth of October, upon which Sir Harry will impart to you by word house, No. 19.

of mouth. I thought hand, so many per- might not be surpris- though by many year Stafford, unknown,

I received this m believe Mr. Thrifty company too well to- proach; but I was in adjust the ceremoni- great men, who perh- themselves for the- sure that is the case- was sensible that the- my behaviour to the- satisfaction, and no- quorum.

The hour of nine w no sooner set chairs- fixed my tea-equipag- door, which was ope- which followed a lon- by, 'Sir, I beg your- and another voice, out from my window- with their hats off, a- to each other. After much solemnity, in t- as to name them to- chamber-door, and I- I met him with all- a vegetable: for, yo- of a person who re- half a century. I go- chair by the fire, wit- cups. The knight-l- respect for my who- leave, place himself- hand he had sat at e- years, unless he was- whispered the youn- knowledge.' I had- cheek-by-jowl, to de- the justice of the qu- of the former, and- saw my error too lat- into their seats. 'V- have told you how- am to desire you t- swered one and all, morning.'—'Not in- me. Upon which t- tipped me the wink- grandfather. Here- the steward in his b- should adjourn to- body might call for- the business.' We- Harry filed off from- termarching behind- him, Sir Giles in the- made a sudden start- quorum whipped b- stairs. A maid, g- and put us into such- heap, without any vi- order; for the youn- jest of this matter, s- amongst us, under-

he knew
for Harry for some
the street;
take them an down ony, until very good pertinent and point-

ording to ore whip-uire. He eard him rd, that a though an vn Sheer-
When we got over;
s on this ded, and e's shop, ity; from to Dick's
n. Here
the street
rough the ler by the flee-house ed our cil up to the ed in the s alarmed uch state of ale and a instant;

'No!'
g; we are e!" Here l if I had was dis-ort, I ob-n did not r morning
p of mum;
ordered a y reached
'that the
would call own lodgn.'

are mixed you meet hout being eman this
I thought,
e midst of ed to have the certain
'Modesty,' prefer the
of every n of innoends, and res, and on mands ap-

ty, of the ads; Cice-

reus, and Cneius Scipio, the son of the great Africanus, were competitors for the office of prætor. The crowd followed Cicereius, and left Scipio untended. Cicereius saw this with much concern; and desiring an audience of the people, he descended from the place where the candidates were to sit, in the eye of the multitude; pleaded for his adversary, and, with an ingenuous modesty, which it is impossible to feign, represented to them, 'how much it was to their dishonour, that a virtuous son of Africanus should not be preferred to him, or any other man whatsoever.' This immediately gained the election for Scipio; but all the compliments and congratulations upon it were made to Cicereius. It is easier in this case to say who had the office, than the honour. There is no occurrence in life where this quality is not more ornamental than any other. After the battle of Pharsalia, Pompey marching towards Larissus, the whole people of that place came out in procession to do him honour. He thanked the magistrates for their respect to him; but desired them 'to perform these ceremonies to the conqueror.' This gallant submission to his fortune, and disdain of making any appearance but like Pompey, was owing to his modesty, which would not permit him to be so disingenuous, as to give himself the air of prosperity, when he was in the contrary condition.

This I say of modesty, as it is the virtue which preserves a decorum in the general course of our life; but, considering it also as it regards our mere bodies, it is the certain character of a great mind. It is memorable of the mighty Caesar, that when he was murdered in the capitol, at the very moment in which he expired he gathered his robe about him, that he might fall in a decent posture. In this manner, says my author, he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but a deity that returned to his abode.

No. 87.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1709.

Will's Coffee-house, October 28.

THERE is nothing which I contemplate with greater pleasure than the dignity of human nature, which often shews itself in all conditions of life. For, notwithstanding the degeneracy and meanness that is crept into it, there are a thousand occasions in which it breaks through its original corruption, and shows what it once was, and what it will be hereafter. I consider the soul of man as the ruin of a glorious pile of building; where, amidst great heaps of rubbish, you meet with noble fragments of sculpture, broken pillars and obelisks, and a magnificence in confusion. Virtue and wisdom are continually employed in clearing the ruins, removing these disorderly heaps, recovering the noble pieces that lie buried under them, and adjusting them as well as possible according to their ancient symmetry and beauty. A happy education, conversation with the finest spirits, looking abroad into the works of nature, and observations upon mankind, are the great assistances to this necessary and glorious work. But even among those who have never had the happiness of any of these advantages, there are sometimes such exertions of the greatness that is natural to the mind of man, as show capacities and abilities which only want these accidental helps to fetch them out, and show them in a proper light. A plebeian soul is still the ruin of this glorious edifice, though encumbered with all its rubbish. This reflection rose in me from a letter which my servant dropped as he was dressing me, and which he told me was communicated to him, as he is an acquaintance of some of the persons mentioned in it. The epistle is from one Serjeant Hall of the foot-guards. It is directed: 'To Serjeant Cabe, in the Coldstream regiment of foot-guards, at the Red-lettice, in the Butcher-row, near Temple-bar.'

THE TATLER.

I was so pleased with several touches in it, that I could not forbear showing it to a cluster of critics, who, instead of considering it in the light I have done, examined it by the rules of epistolary writing. For as these gentlemen are seldom men of any great genius, they work altogether by mechanical rules, and are able to discover no beauties that are not pointed out by Bouhours and Rapin. The letter is as follows:

' From the camp before Mons, ' COMRADE, September 26.

' I received yours, and am glad yourself and your wife are in good health, with all the rest of my friends. Our battalion suffered more than I could wish in the action. But who can withstand fate? Poor Richard Stevenson had his fate with a great many more. He was killed dead before we entered the trenches. We had above two hundred of our battalion killed and wounded. We lost ten serjeants, six are as followeth: Jennings, Castles, Roach, Sherring, Meyrick, and my son Smith. The rest are not your acquaintance. I have received a very bad shot in my head myself, but am in hopes, and please God, I shall recover. I continue in the field, and lie at my Colonel's quarters. Arthur is very well; but I can give you no account of Elms; he was in the hospital before I came into the field. I will not pretend to give you an account of the battle, knowing you have a better in the prints. Pray, give my service to Mrs. Cook and her daughter, to Mr. Stoffet and his wife, and to Mr. Lyver, and Thomas Hogsdon, and to Mr. Ragdeil, and to all my friends and acquaintance in general who do ask after me. My love to Mrs. Stevenson. I am sorry for the sending such ill news. Her husband was gathering a little money together to send to his wife, and put it into my hands. I have seven shillings and threepence, which I shall take care to send her. Wishing your wife a safe delivery, and both of you all happiness, rest

' Your assured friend, and comrade,
' JOHN HALL.

' We had but an indifferent breakfast; but the mounseers never had such a dinner in all their lives.

' My kind love to my comrade Hinton, and Mrs. Morgan, and to John Brown and his wife. I sent two shillings, and Stevenson sixpence, to drink with you at Mr. Cook's; but I have heard nothing from him. It was by Mr. Edgar.

' Corporal Hartwell desires to be remembered to you, and desires you to enquire of Edgar, what is become of his wife Pegg; and when you write to send word in your letter what trade she drives.

' We have here very bad weather, which I doubt will be a hindrance to the siege; but I am in hopes we shall be masters of the town in a little time, and then, I believe, we shall go to garrison.'

I saw the critics prepared to nibble at my letter; therefore examined it myself, partly in their way, and partly my own. This is, said I, truly a letter, and an honest representation of that cheerful heart which accompanies the poor soldier in his warfare. Is not there in this all the topic of submitting to our destiny as been placed reflecting o saying fine Hall knows not been so bad shot in God. But man of ho Stevenson k for her, and into garriso company at much real e that I am c may be offe conduct in into. But cause you which I dou whether the not? As f faction in se read who a a subject.

If we con all prospect tainly are,
it is hard t
But to me, stream in S of the regio victory of t were yester
I believe is very well th of private s from a nob officers. Th able to thei of that pro fellowship, rows, which abates the a
have the sa expect so g but I will d sand deaths the Red-let prejudice to my opinion, the style to timent relat
the postscri whole, the p to say, a ma

Fro

When I
many attem still ran up at Will's.
proportion
army, and d method of t by an exac arithmetic, shares; five of the gene general offi
all the cov the remai

d private d serjeant two-fifths.
mong the
on which the battle people of
of glory, perish in the British what man for his ten in such a

1709.

I.

end in the o or three re brought rich were s in par-which my when any uprising ;
ose terms ;
i of such art, which is letter is b, a word that city stamped.
en current nem down the words

iscuously ;
Gunster ;
They both,
nd so far for its de-
it makes,
e who rees, which when they under the endeavour inguished efore, are n the di-ated ; the rst is pre-

next place, hes ; all,
s ; tosses his h a design mbustion.

bomb in a a nation-ns, which ses all his ess them.
never so great, is sure to undergo a bombardment. It is further observed, that the only way to be out of danger from the bursting of a bomb, is to be prostrate on the ground ; a posture too abject for generous spirit.

Secondly, The Miner.

As the bombardier levels his mischief at nations and cities, the Miner busies himself in ruining and overturning private houses and particular persons. He often acts as a spy, in discovering the secret avenues and unguarded accesses of families, where, after he has made his proper discoveries and dispositions, he sets sudden fire to his train, that blows up families, scatters friends, separates lovers, disperses kindred, and shakes a whole neighbourhood.

It is to be noted, that several females are gun-proficients in this way of engineering. The manner by which they are to be known are, a wonderful solicitude for the reputation of their friends, and more than ordinary concern for the good of the neighbours. There is also in them something very like religion, as may deceive the vulgar ; but you look upon it more nearly, you see in it such a cast of censoriousness, as discovers it to be nothing but hypocrisy. Cleomilla is a great instance of female Miner : but as my design is to expose and the incorrigible, let her be silent for the future, and shall be so too.

Thirdly, the Squib.

The Squibs are those who, in the common phrase of the word, are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Their fire-works are made up of paper : and it is observed, that they mix abundance of charcoal in their powder, that they may be sure to blacken where they cannot singe. These are observed to give a consternation and disturbance only to weak minds ; which, according to the proverb are always 'more afraid than hurt.'

Fourthly, Serpents.

The Serpents are a pretty kind of Gunners, more pernicious than any of the rest. They make use of a sort of white powder, that goes off without any violent crack, but gives a gentle sound, much like that of a whisper ; and is more destructive in all parts of life, than any of the materials made use of by any of the fraternity.

Come we now to the Gunsters.

This race of engineers deals altogether in wind-guns, which, by recoiling, often knock down those who discharge them, without hurting any body else ; and, according to the various compressions of the air, make such strange squeaks, cracks, pops, and booms, as it is impossible to hear without laughing. It is observable, however, that there is a disposition in a Gunster to become a Gunner ; and though their proper instruments are only laden with wind, they often, out of wantonness, fire a bomb, or spring a mine, out of their natural inclination to engineering, by which means, they do mischief when they do not design it, and have their bones broken when they do not deserve it.

This sort of engineers are the most unaccountable race of men in the world. Some of them have received above a hundred wounds, and yet have not a scar in their bodies ; some have debauched multitudes of women, who have died maids. You may be with them from morning until night, and the next day they shall tell you a thousand adventures that happened when you were with them, which you knew nothing of. They have a quality of having been present at every thing they hear related, and never heard a man commended, who was not their intimate acquaintance, if not their kinsman.

THE TATLER.

I hope these notes may serve as a rough draught for a new establishment of engineers which I shall hereafter fill up with proper persons, according to my own observations on their conduct, having already had one recommended to me for the general of my artillery. But that, and all the other posts, I intend to keep open, until I can inform myself of the candidates having resolved in this case to depend no more upon their friends' word, than I would upon their own.

From my own Apartment, October 31.

I was this morning awakened by a sudden shake of the house; and as soon as I had got a little out of my consternation, I felt another, which was followed by two or three repetitions of the same convulsion. I got up as fast as possible, girt on my rapier, and snatched up my hat, when my landlady came up to me, and told me, 'that the gentlewoman of the next house begged me to step thither, for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad; and she desired my advice,' as indeed every body in the whole lane does upon important occasions. I am not, like some artists, saucy because I can be beneficial, but went immediately. Our neighbour told us, 'she had the day before let her second floor to a very genteel youngish man, who told her, he kept extraordinary good hours, and was generally at home most part of the morning and evening at study; but that this morning he had for an hour together made this extravagant noise which we then heard.' I went up stairs with my hand upon the hilt of my rapier, and approached this new lodger's door. I looked in at the key-hole, and there I saw a well-made man look with great attention on a book, and, on a sudden, jump into the air so high, that his head almost touched the ceiling. He came down safe on his right foot, and again flew up, alighting on his left; then looked again at his book, and holding out his right leg, put it into such a quivering motion, that I thought he would have shaken it off. He used the left after the same manner, when, on a sudden, to my great surprise, he stooped himself incredibly low, and turned gently on his toes. After this circular motion, he continued bent in that humble posture for some time, looking on his book. After this, he recovered himself with a sudden spring, and flew round the room in all the violence and disorder imaginable, until he made a full pause for want of breath. In this interim my woman asked, 'what I thought.' I whispered, 'that I thought this learned person an enthusiast, who possibly had his first education in the Peripatetic way, which was a sect of philosophers who always studied when walking.' But, observing him much out of breath, I thought it the best time to master him if he were disordered, and knocked at his door. I was surprised to find him open it, and say with great civility and good mien, 'that he hoped he had not disturbed us.' I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired, 'he would please to let me see his book.' He did so, smiling. I could not make any thing of it, and, therefore, asked, 'in what language it was writ.' He said, 'it was one he studied with great application; but it was his profession to teach it, and could not communicate his knowledge without a consideration.' I answered, 'that I hoped he would hereafter keep his thoughts to himself, for his meditation this morning had cost me three coffee-dishes, and a clean pipe. He seemed concerned at that, and told me 'he was a dancing-master, and had been reading a dance or two before he went out, which had been written by one who taught at an academy in France. He then informed me, that there was a dance by meditation it would be in to live near thoughts tacles off m I then to to my chan of rational

No. 89.] T Rura mih Flumina an

My next do To lead a A country A winding

I HAVE hand.

'SIT

'I have desire you answer to mean time your fame v bills of mo

'SIT

'That th excuse, tim ence with impossible, letter. I covering of Doubtless, the knowle from a gard or the ban than one fr I promise, my rural c from what the comme is a fresh ingenious more fash we owe to sured by Some critic others adm the inform the author guesses. admirer of complete squire and

There is from the p happiness, by a perso letter, who simplicity letter, if he goes,

men who say he is ollic, and at strong ill-taught country pass his a fox in tisfaction true and
e. What forgetting ment, in wing, and ordinary it of this Such a n, which
work of ture and from this
from the

o enquire e out of morning's rt, if the r in any smallest not think
spent in

pected I at of my n of the resent the l, and ate onth old ;

ge, I was toes ; and of food to inguished
my great asly used,
o gaming,
for two or ent to the ut a drum listed mygan to ex-
he times, the study
apped up, taken up ad. This which has
, and kept eater part en Dick's d my own

2.

omplained is of both y importr to reguus no less ure, it is by robbing him of so many moments of his time, or so many drops of his blood. The author of the following letter has a just delicacy in this point, and hath put it into a very good light :

'MR. BICKERSTAFF,

October 28.

'I am very much afflicted with the gravel, which makes me sick and peevish. I desire to know of you, if it be reasonable that any of my acquaintances should take advantage over me at this time, and afflict me with long visits, because they are idle, and I am confined. Pray, sir, reform the town in this matter. Men never consider whether the sick person be disposed for company, but make their visits to humour themselves. You may talk upon this topic, so as to oblige all persons afflicted with chronical distempers, among which I reckon visits. Do not think me a sour man, for I love conversation and my friends, but I think one's most intimate friend may be too familiar, and that there are such things as unseasonable wit, and painful mirth.'

It is with some, so hard a thing to employ their time, that it is a great good fortune when they have a friend indisposed, that they may be punctual in perplexing him, when he is recovered enough to be in that state which cannot be called sickness or health ; when he is too well to deny company, and too ill to receive them. It is no uncommon case, if a man is of any figure or power in the world, to be congratulated into a relapse.

Will's Coffee-house, November 2.

I was very well pleased this evening, to hear a gentleman express a very becoming indignation against a practice, which I myself have been very much offended at. 'There is nothing,' said he 'more ridiculous, than for an actor to insert words of his own in the part he is to act, so that it is impossible to see the poet for the player. You will have Penkethman and Bullock helping out Beaumont and Fletcher. It puts me in mind,' continued he, 'of a collection of antique statues which I once saw in a gentleman's possession, who employed a neighbouring stone-cutter to add noses, ears, arms, or legs, to the maimed work of Phidias or Praxiteles. You may be sure, this addition disfigured the statues much more than time had. I remember Venus, that, by the nose he had given her, looked like mother Shipton ; and a Mercury, with a pair of legs that seemed very much swelled with the dropsy.'

I thought the gentleman's observations very proper, and he told me I had improved his thoughts, in mentioning on this occasion those wise commentators who had filled up the hemistichs of Virgil ; particularly that notable poet, who, to make the Æneid more perfect, carried on the story to Lavinia's wedding. I the proper officer will not condescend to take notice of these absurdities, I shall myself, as a censor of the people, animadvert upon such proceedings.

No. 90.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1769.

— Amotus queramus seria ludo. Hor. i. Sat. l. 2.

Let us now—

With graver air our serious theme pursue,
And yet preserve our moral full in view. French

Will's Coffee-house, November 4.

THE passion of love happened to be the subject of discourse between two or three of us at the table the poets this evening ; and, among other observa-ns, it was remarked, 'that the same sentiment on is passion had run through all languages and tions.' Memmius, who has a very good taste, fell to a little sort of dissertation on this occasion. 'It' said he, 'remarkable, that no passion has been ated, by all who have touched upon it, with the me bent of design but this. The poets, the moral- s, the painters, in all their descriptions, allegories, d pictures, have represented it as a soft torment, bitter sweet, a pleasing pain, or an agreeable dis- ess; and have only expressed the same thought in a fferent manner.'

The joining of pleasure and pain together in such ices, seems to me the only pointed thought I ever ad which is natural, and it must have proceeded m its being the universal sense and experience of unkind, that they have all spoken of it in the same inner. I have, in my own reading, remarked a ndred and three epigrams, fifty odes, and ninety- e sentences, tending to this sole purpose.

It is certain, there is no other passion which does dduce such contrary effects in so great a degree. t this may be said for love, that if you strike it out the soul, life would be insipid, and our being but lf-animated. Human nature would sink into dead- ss and lethargy, if not quickened with some active mple; and, as for all others, whether ambition, vy, or avarice, which are apt to possess the mind the absence of this passion, it must be allowed that ey have greater pains, without the compensation of ch exquisite pleasures as those we find in love. e great skill is to heighten the satisfactions, and aden the sorrows of it; which has been the end of any of my labours, and shall continue to be so, for e service of the world in general, and in particular the fair sex, who are always the best or the worst rt of it. It is pity that a passion, which has in it capacity of making life happy, should not be culti- ted to the utmost advantage. Reason, prudence, d good-nature, rightly applied, can thoroughly mply this great end, provided they have always a al and constant love to work upon. But this sub- ct I shall treat more at large in the history of my arried sister, and, in the mean time, shall conclude y reflection on the pains and pleasures which attend is passion, with one of the finest allegories which I ink I have ever read. It is invented by the divine lato, and, to show the opinion he himself had of it, cribed by him to his admired Socrates, whom he represents as discoursing with his friends, and giving e history of Love in the following manner:

'At the birth of Beauty,' says he, 'there was a great ast made, and many guests invited. Among the ast, was the god Plenty, who was the son of the oddest Prudence, and inherited many of his mother's rtues. After a full entertainment, he retired into e garden of Jupiter, which was hung with a great ariety of ambrosial fruits, and seems to have been y proper retreat for such a guest. In the mean ime, an unhappy female called Poverty, having heard f this great feast, repaired to it, in hopes of finding elief. The first place she lights upon was Jupiter's arden, which generally stands open to people of all onditions. Poverty enters, and by chance finds the od Plenty asleep in it. She was immediately fired ith his charms, laid herself down by his side, and anaged matters so well, that she conceived a child y him. The world was very much in suspense upon he occasion, and could not imagine to themselves hat would be the nature of an infant that was to ave its original from two such parents. At the last, e child appears; and who should it be but Love,

This infant grew what he really As he is the Prudence, he and devices; begging, severe or beneath a cious, full of fore quick of doubtful, tim ing, and abje you may see of immortal god; and im prevails in his languishing, e

I have be fables, allegor politest and always made of instruction they conceal ceived immed parentage of passion with great master- into good har canto than an

From

I came hou and, to divert where I chan tragedy of R with a very which that be sleeping in hi which he fell before him, i ritions, the g he is said to VI, the Duke Lord Hastin ward IV., his ham, rise up speeches wit heavy on thy dismal sente the tyrant w approaching day of Bosw tering in his spair, before the following

'Give me a Have merc Oh! cowar The lights Cold fearf Who do I

A scene w nation indis me into a d upon the dif as this was narch, I coul of that excel glory, and hi so far into t might have l He might had been blessing forms of

nts. The ality had ad it not glorious is on the beauty of

of a long igus, but have the that true reat and good and

09.

7.

with a visit who came om, while he occult ie air and
, I threw
I had no fire, but
it. 'Mr.
been your r saw you
You have ik of love.
n I spoke not stay ver fail to you about you see;
at present conjunc-Crassus
nguishing t remarkavelled, is n his con-l this, he perfluity.
th an idea
versation.
numerous s, are op-ord, when spise for-f pleasing xpense in ie paused have not re is some n me; for ur mind;

, that you passion of e arms of cies of it so he is, a different ie idea his e features, blush not,

madam; there is no dishonour in loving a man of merit; I assure you I am grieved at this dallying with yourself, when you put another in competition with him, for no other reason but superior weakness.—'To tell you, then,' said she, 'the bottom of my heart, there is Clotilda lies by, and plants herself in the way of Crassus, and I am confident will sway him if I refuse him. I cannot bear to think that she will shine above me. When our coaches meet to see her chariot hung behind with four footmen and mine with but two; her's powdered, gay, and saucy, kept only for show; mine, a couple of careful rogues that are good for something: I own, I cannot bear that Clotilda should be in all the pride and wantonness of wealth, and I only in the case and affluence of it.

Here I interrupted: 'Well, madam, now I see your whole affection; you could be happy, but that you fear another would be happier. Or rather you could be solidly happy, but that another is to be happy in appearance. This is an evil which you must get over, or never know happiness. We will put the case, madam, that you married Crassus, and she Lorio.' She answered, 'Speak not of it. I could tear her eyes out at the mention of it.'—Well then I pronounce Lorio to be the man; but I will tell you, that what we call settling in the world is in a kind, leaving it; and you must at once resolve to keep your thoughts of happiness within the reach of your fortune, and not measure it by comparison with others.—But, indeed, madam, when I behold that beauteous form of yours, and consider the generality of your sex, as to their disposal of themselves in marriage, or their parents doing it for them without their own approbation, I cannot but look upon all such matches as the most impudent prostitutions. Do but observe, when you are at the play, the familiar wenches that sit laughing among the men. These appear detestable to you in the boxes. Each of them would give up her person for a guinea, and some of you would take the worst there for life for twenty thousand. If so, how do you differ but in price? As to the circumstance of marriage, I take that to be hardly an alteration of the case; for wedlock is but a more solemn prostitution, where there is not a union of minds. You would hardly believe it, but there have been designs even upon me.

A neighbour in this very lane, who knows I have by leading a very wary life, laid up a little money, had a great mind to marry me to his daughter. I was frequently invited to their table: the girl was always very pleasant and agreeable. After dinner, Mr. Molly would be sure to fill my pipe for me, and put more sugar than ordinary into my coffee; for she was sure I was good-natured. If I chanced to hum, the mother would applaud my vigour; and has often said on that occasion, "I wonder, Mr. Bickerstaff, you do not marry, I am sure you would have children." Things went so far, that my mistress presented me with a wrought night-cap and a faced head of her own working. I began to think of it in earnest; but one day, having an occasion to ride to Islington, as two or three people were lifting me upon my pad, I spied her at a convenient distance laughing at her horse with a parcel of romps of her acquaintance. One of them, who I suppose had the same design upon me, told me she said, "Do you see how briskly my gentleman mounts?" This made me cut off my amour, and to reflect with myself, that no married life could be so unhappy, as where the wife possesses no other advantage from her husband, than that of making herself fine, and keeping her out of the dirt.

My fair client burst out a-laughing at the account I gave her of my escape, and went away seemingly convinced of the reasonableness of my discourse to her.

As soon as he was gone, my maid brought up the following epistle, which, by the style, and the description she gave of the person, I suppose was left by Nick Doubt. 'Hark you,' says he, 'tell old Basket-hilt I would have him answer it by the first opportunity.' What he says is this.

'ISAAC,

'You seem a very honest fellow; therefore, pray tell me, did not you write that letter in praise of the squire and his lucubrations yourself,' &c.

The greatest plague of coxcombs is, that they often break upon you with an impertinent piece of good sense, as this jackanapes has hit me in the right place enough. I must confess, I am as likely to play such a trick as another; but that letter he speaks of is really genuine. When I first set up, I thought it his enough to let myself know from all parts, that my works were wonderfully enquired for, and were become the diversion as well as instruction, of all the choice spirits in every county of Great Britain. I do not doubt but the more intelligent of my readers found it, before this jackanapes, I can call him no better, took upon him to observe upon my style, and my basket-hilt. A very pleasant gentleman of my acquaintance told me one day a story of this kind of blindness and vanity in an author.

Mævius showed him a paper of verses, which he said he had received that morning by the penny-post from an unknown hand. My friend admired them extremely. 'Sir,' said he, 'this must come from a man that is eminent: you see fire, life, and spirit, run through the whole, and at the same time a correctness, which shows he is used to writing. Pray, sir, read them over again.' He begins again, title and all; 'To Mævius, on his incomparable poems.' The second reading was performed with much more vehemence and action than the former; after which my friend fell into downright raptures—'Why, they are truly sublime! there is energy in this line! description in that! Why! it is the thing itself! this a perfect picture!' Mævius could bear no more; but, 'Faith,' says he, 'Ned, to tell you the plain truth, I writ them myself.'

There goes such another story of the same paternal tenderness in Bavius, an ingenious contemporary of mine, who had writ several comedies, which were rejected by the players. This, my friend Bavius took for envy, and therefore prevailed upon a gentleman to go with him to the play-house, and gave him a new play, of his, desiring he would personate the author, and read it, to baffle the spite of the actors. The friend consented, and to reading they went. They had not gone over three similes, before Roscius the player made the acting author stop, and desired to know, 'What he meant by such a rapture? and how it came to pass, that in this condition of the over, instead of acting according to his circumstances, he spent his time in considering what his present state was like?'—'That is very true,' says the mock author; 'I believe we had as good strike these lines out.'—'By your leave,' says Bavius, 'you shall not spoil your play, you are too modest: these very lines are as good as any in your play, and they shall stand.' Well, they go on, and the particle and stood unfortunately at the end of a verse, and was made to rhyme with the word 'stand.' This, Roscius excepted against. The new poet gave up!

THE TATLER, No. 20.

that too, a monosyllable author, 'I as great for sir, "and" place; with follows into if you leave it in only for sisted, assured to speak it, be as well out of their and went of not make his days compete contending was easily done to see his of

No. 92.] T

Falsus
Quem

False p
None b

Whi

I KNOW that of giving tion; which introduce m from the c perfect creat we shall fin Providence, defective, in other, and n this talent, a conversation another, is climate does ordered, the product of a corresponded therefore, w to say Simp much wit a other's capac than if you or Latius no little notion amongst me endowment had strength he wanted w never asked exceptions wisdom of V to immortal all imperfec with us it eminent viti apparent we made me acc in reading b age abounde plaints. Up principally

I am perfumer, at the corner of Beaufort-streets, in the Strand.' This same Charles leaves it to me to say what I think of him; and I am not a little pleased with the serious manner of his address. Taking snuff is a custom I have declared against; but, as his holiness the pope allows whoring for the taxes raised by the sale of pleasure; so I to repair the loss of an unhappy scholar, indulge all persons in that custom who buy Charles. There is something so particular in the taste of the man, that I shall send for him before I believe I shall find he has a genius for snuff. If so, I shall, for aught I know, at his request, give licensed canes to those who are really scholars, and tubes to those who are unfeignedly snuff-tasted; and forbid all others to vend the same.

93.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1709:

Will's Coffee-house, November 11.

THE French humour of writing epistles, and publishing their fulsome compliments to each other, is a custom I frequently complain of in this place. It is, I think, from the prevalence of this silly custom, that there is so little instruction in the conversation of distant friends. For which reason, during the whole course of my life, I have desired my acquaintances, when they write to me, rather to say something which should make me wish myself with them, than to send me compliments that they wish themselves with me. By this means, I have by me a collection of letters from most parts of the world, which are as really of the growth of the place, as any herb, tree, or fruit of the soil. This I take to be the proper use of an epistolary commerce. To desire to know of a man goes on with his courtship to Sylvia, or the wine tastes at the Old Devil, are threadbare subjects, and cold treats, which our absent friends might have given us without going out of town to hear of them. A friend of mine, who went to travel, used to write otherwise; for he gave me a prospect of the country, or an account of the people, from every country through which he passed. Among others, which I have looked over this evening, I am not a little delighted with this which follows:

'DEAR SIR,

I believe this is the first letter that was ever sent from the middle region, where I am at this present writing. Not to keep you in suspense, it is as to you from the top of the highest mountain in Switzerland, where I am now shivering among the eternal frosts and snows. I can scarce forbear dating the 1st of December, though they call it the first of August at the bottom of the mountain. I assure you I can hardly keep my ink from freezing in the middle of the dog-days. I am here entertained with the finest variety of snow prospects that you can imagine; and have several pits of it before me, that are very near as old as the mountain itself; for in this country, it is as lasting as marble. I am now in a spot of it, which they tell me fell about the time of Charlemagne, or king Pepin. The inhabitants of the country are as great curiosities as the country itself. They generally hire themselves out in their shirts, and if they are musket-proof until about noon, they bring home the money they have got, and then, as they have left, to pass the rest of their time in their native mountains. One of the gentlemen of the place, who, by the way, told me that he was now seven weeks in the mountains, and that these four generations of his family had been in the line that carried him to the mountains, I believe you will think me extraordinary; and I hope we shall have the same privilege.

'Your most obedient servant,

I think they are so durable, when at the wars, to erect monuments, there to remain.

A gentleman who took this occasion to discourse of an extraordinary method of travelling for their pleasure, if gentlemen were to follow this method during the course of their lives, and their friends, and their conversation, what we can make of those advantages, I observed, that even for this way of travelling, the climate, but the climate goes out a fool, and common sense. The bridge with a yet, whether going or coming, him wiser.

It is not to be my time from the mountains, I know they were done with much. Harry has a son, who was born into the world, books all packed up in parts, for no other use than to be talked; and his father, I could not say, was dull; but his youth was very dull, and I have some doubts whether it was not proper to go to the mountains, is accordingly, upon some point, think of. By the honour of having parts of Europe, own estate, and which I shall should be such faults, and good is, that race is of our country only, and they are dull them. Men of the mountains, and down the mountains, naturally at the part to disturb only a history of they are capable brother, who would he could talk of like to have been out of a chair:

traced his orth. It at sense
out; and,
to stay of course is should be not us out of d but a and may ider that ful, while ing, we
as when upon it, can put us in a capacity of deriving the benefit, though we were afterwards banished for it.

But no more of this at present. As things stand, I shall put up no more affronts; and I shall be constant in taking ill words, that I will not take ill looks.
I, the other, warn all hot young fellows not to be hereafter more terrible than their neighbours; for if they stare at me with their hats cocked higher than other people, I will not bear it. Nay, I have said to all people in general to look kindly at me, for I will bear no frowns, even from ladies; and if a woman pretends to look scornfully at me, I shall demand satisfaction of the next of kin of the masculine gender.

No. 94.] TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1796

11. Simon eräfsset, fecerat ille minus. Mit. 2. 2.
Had he not erä'd, his glory had been less.

Will's Coffee-house, November 14.

from my es to my e way of low have ed, I do propose
and the ground mild in not flow of an in-
My late lies I do that I can one pass,
and have epistomes and she of
of my ch I can posture of

THAT which we call gallantry to women seems to be the heroic virtue of private persons; and the never-breathed one man, who did not, in that perfect days wherein he was recommending himself to his mistress, do something beyond his ordinary course of life. As this has a very great effect upon the most slow and common men; so, as such as it finds qualified with virtue and merit, shines out in proportionable degrees of excellence.
It gives new grace to the most excellent accomplishments; and he, who of himself has either wit, wisdom, or valour, exerts each of these noble endowments when he becomes a lover, with a certain tenor action above what was ever observed in him before.
And all who are without any one of these qualities to be looked upon as the rabble of mankind.

ful length to three ent, that comprefor my alked out scorn to
of his one down on account if a man right or eyond the wealth, I s below
I can do n to that am reads re to my nt success the room
ent that,
up, and me but I can to be my last time the death ow I have man, and ful, since se nothing

I was talking after this manner in a corner of the place with an old acquaintance, who, taking no the hand, said, 'Mr. Bickerstaff, your discourse recalls to my mind a story, which I have longed tell you ever since I read that article wherein desire your friends to give you accounts of excellence.' The story I told of him is literally true, and well known to be so in the country wherein the circumstance was transacted. He acquainted me with the names of the persons concerned, which I shall change into feigned ones; there being a respect to their families that are still in being, as well as to the names themselves would not be so familiar to English ears. The adventure really happened in Dor-setshire; and if I can remember all the particulars, doubt not but it will be as moving to my readers as it was to me.

Clara and Chloe, two very fine women, were bred up as sisters in the family of Rome, who was the father of Chloe, and the guardian of Clara.
Philander, a young gentleman of a good person, at chance conversation, being a friend of old Rome, frequented his house, and by that means was made acquainted with the young ladies, though still in the presence of the father and the guardian. Philander both entertained a secret passion for him, and could see well enough, notwithstanding the disguise, which he really took in Rome's conversation. But there was something more in his heart, which was than so insensible a visitant. Each of them loved herself the happy woman; but the person beloved was Chloe. It happened that both of them were to play in a carnival evening, when it is the fashion there, as well as in most countries of Europe, for men and women to appear in masks and disguises.

It was on that memorable night, in the year 1674

THE TATLER.

When the play-house by some unhappy accident was set on fire. Philander, in the first hurry of the disaster, immediately ran where his treasure was; burst open the floor of the box, snatched the lady up in his arms; and, with unspeakable resolution and good fortune, carried her off safe. He was no sooner out of the crowd, but he set her down; and, grasping her in his arms, with all the raptures of a deserving lover, 'How happy am I,' says he, 'in an opportunity to tell you I love you more than all things, and of shewing you the sincerity of my passion at the very first declaration of it!' 'My dear, dear Philander,' says the lady, pulling off her mask, 'this is not a time for art; you are much dearer to me than the life you have preserved; and the joy of my present deliverance does not transport me so much as the passion which occasioned it. Who can tell the grief, the astonishment, the terror, that appeared in the face of Philander, when he saw the person he spoke to was Clarinda! After a short pause, 'Madam,' says he, with the looks of a dead man, 'we are both mistaken;' and immediately flew away, without hearing the distressed Clarinda, who had just strength enough to cry out, 'Cruel Philander! why did you not leave me in the theatre?' Crowds of people immediately gathered about her, and, after having brought her to herself, conveyed her to the house of the good old unhappy Romeo. Philander was now pressing against a whole tide of people at the doors of the theatre, and striving to enter with more earnestness than any there endeavoured to get out. He did it at last, and with much difficulty forced his way to the box where his beloved Chloe stood, expecting her fate amidst this scene of error and distraction. She revived at the sight of Philander, who fell about her neck with a tenderness not to be expressed; and, amidst a thousand sobs and sighs, told her his love, and his dreadful mistake. The stage was now in flames, and the whole house full of smoke: the entrance was quite barred up with heaps of people, who had fallen upon one another as they endeavoured to get out. Swords were drawn, shrieks heard on all sides; and, in short, no possibility of an escape for Philander himself, had he been capable of making it without his Chloe. But his mind was above such a thought, and wholly employed in weeping, condoling, and comforting. He catches her in his arms. The fire surrounds them while—I cannot go on—

Were I an infidel, misfortunes like this would convince me there must be a hereafter: for who can believe that so much virtue could meet with so great distress without a following reward? As for my part, I am so old-fashioned, as firmly to believe, that all who perish in such generous enterprises are relieved from the further exercise of life; and Providence, which sees their virtue consummate and manifest, takes them to an immediate reward, in a being more suitable to the grandeur of their spirits. What else can wipe away our tears, when we contemplate such undeserved, such irreparable distresses? It was a sublime thought in some of the heathens of old;

Quæ gratia currum Armorumque fuit vivis, quæ cu a nitentes Pascere equos, eadem sequitur tellure repostos.
Virg.

That is, in other words, 'The same employments and inclinations which were the entertainment of virtuous men upon earth make up their happiness in Elysium.'

From

When I came from Mr. Ch. of Beaufort-ment I met a gentle reader upon my road man's capacity. He has several is the best water, which spirit of brass according to I recommend pleaders. hesitations in the spirit. volubility to necessary a man pleased him, that he commodities them; but if you give at brought fun boxes made contrary, the tion: At the orangery for My twenty-second raptures or of their mistresses that simile ever pass, a ever employ take notice, payment for future.

On Saturday strayed from the lady who him, she should use but to the

No. 25.] T

Interea
Casta p

His car
His litt
Welcom
His fait

From

THERE are sures and en they do not office to acqu turn their a fortune as th married stat away their d in anguish a opinion of o of life, and I am led i friend, who to town las expected at that be their pleasure it joy as I his strive that am loses the

it is Mr.
pretty girl,
for the
two years, with us,
entrance, thousand about my
s. Upon
y, if Mr.
old com-
ce; there ke him as know him y memory e will not nities. I rent home ress when came up
e of your little pas-
our time,
er dinner, then. As he hand;
rfully glad have seen
Do you
e altered, e, to find a tear fall me not a
She is not returned me, "she employed nded me,
and as to ver could ht her in our usin
with her,
er fifteen."
you little now great,
my recall be cautious ing idlers, ink. That ed by her,
I did not we carried
I have so any sort of health, gives me ew in the the vicious rines in my health y torture, n when I y, which

I cannot trace, from the very instant it was creasioned by some anxious concern for my welfare and interests. Thus, at the same time, methinks, the love I conceived towards her for what she was, is heightened by my gratitude for what she is. The love of a wife is as much above the idle passion commonly called by that name, as the loud laughter of buffoons is inferior to the elegant mirth of gentlemen. Oh! she is an inestimable jewel. In her examination of her household affairs, she shows a certain fearfulness to find a fault, which makes her servants obey her like children; and the meanest we have has an ingenuous shame for an offence, and always to be seen in children in other families.
I speak freely to you, my old friend; ever since her sickness, things that gave me the quickest joy before, turn now to a certain anxiety. As the children play in the next room, I know the poor things by their steps, and am considering what they must do should they lose their mother in their tender years.
The pleasure I used to take in telling my boy stories of battles, and asking my girls questions about the disposal of her baby, and the gossiping of it, is turned into inward reflection and melancholy.'

He would have gone on in this tender way, when the good lady entered, and with an inexpressible sweetness in her countenance told us, 'she had been searching her closet for something very good, to treat such an old friend as I was.' Her husband's eyes sparkled with pleasure at the cheerfulness of her countenance; and I saw all his fears vanish in an instant. The lady observing something in our looks which showed we had been more serious than ordinary, and seeing her husband receive her with great concern under a forced cheerfulness, immediately guessed at what we had been talking of; and applying herself to me, said, with a smile, 'Mr.
Bickerstaff, do not believe a word of what he tells you, I shall still live to have you for my second, as I have often promised you, unless he takes more care of himself than he has done since his coming to town. You must know, he tells me that he finds London is a much more healthy place than the country; for he sees several of his old acquaintances and school-fellows are here young fellows, with full bottomed periwigs. I could scarce keep him this morning from going out open-breasted.' My friend, who is always extremely delighted with her agreeable humour, made her sit down with us. She did it with that easiness which is peculiar to women of sense; and to keep up the good humour she had brought in with her, turned her railery upon me.
'Mr. Bickerstaff, you remember you followed me one night from the play-house; suppose you should carry me thither to-morrow night, and lead me into the front box.' This put us into a long field of discourse about the beauties, who were mothers of the present, and shined in the boxes twenty years ago.
I told her, 'I was glad she had transferred so many of her charms, and I did not question but her eldest daughter was within half-a-year of being a toast.'

We were pleasing ourselves with this fantastic preference of the young lady, when on a sudden we were alarmed with the noise of a drum, and immediately entered my little godson to give me a piece of war. His mother, between laughing and chiding, would have put him out of the room; but I would not part with him so. I found upon conversation with him, though he was a little noisy in his mirth, that the child had excellent parts, and was a great master of all the learning on the other side eight years old. I perceived him a very great historian in Æsop's Fables: but he frankly declared to me his mind, 'that he did not delight in that learning, because he did not believe they were true;' for which reason, I found, he had very much turned his studies, for about a twelvemonth past, into the lives and adventures of Don Bellianis of Greece, Guy of Warwick, the Seven Champions, and other historians of that age. I could not but observe the satisfaction the father took in the forwardness of his son; and that these diversions might turn to some profit, I found the boy had made remarks, which might have been of service to him during the course of his whole life. He would tell you the mismanagements of John Hickerthrift, find fault with the passionate temper in Bevis of Southampton, and loved Saint George for being the champion of England; and by this means had his thoughts insensibly moulded into the notions of discretion, virtue, and honour. I was extolling his accomplishments, when the mother told me, 'that the little girl who led me in this morning was in her way a better scholar than he.' 'Betty,' said she, 'deals chiefly in fables and sprights; and sometimes in a winter-night will terrify the maids with her accounts, until they are afraid to go up to bed.'

I sat with them until it was very late, sometimes in merriment, sometimes in serious discourse, with this particular pleasure, which gives the only true relish to all conversation, a sense that every one of us liked each other. I went home, considering the different conditions of a married life and that of a bachelor; and I must confess it struck me with a secret concern, to reflect, that whenever I go off I shall leave no traces behind me. In this pensive mood I returned to my family; that is to say, to my maid, my dog, and my cat, who only can be the better or worse for what happens to me.

No. 96.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1709.

Is mihi demum vivere et frui animâ videtur, qui aliquo negotio intentus, præclari facinoris aut artis bonæ famam querit. Sall. Bel. Cat.

In my opinion, he only may be truly said to live, and enjoy his being, who is engaged in some laudable pursuit, and acquires a name by some illustrious action, or useful art.

From my own Apartment, November 17.

It has cost me very much care and thought to marshal and fix the people under their proper denominations, and to range them according to their respective characters. These my endeavours have been received with unexpected success in one kind, but neglected in another: for, though I have many readers, I have but a few converts. This must certainly proceed from a false opinion, that what I write is designed rather to amuse and entertain, than convince and instruct. I entered upon my Essays with a declaration that I should consider mankind in quite another manner than they had hitherto been represented to the ordinary world; and asserted, that none but a useful life should be, with me, any life at all. But, lest this doctrine should have made this small progress towards the conviction of mankind, because it may have appeared to the unlearned light and whimsical, I must take leave to unfold the wisdom and antiquity of my first proposition in these my Essays, to wit, that 'every worthless man is a dead man.' This notion is as old as Pythagoras, in whose school it was a point of discipline, that if among the Ἀσκήταις, or probationers, there were any who grew w to an idle and, upon t and raise others of t resolutions state. It ladies, at t are received and with th that hencef consequent first autho Hebrews, I might be c sacred auth own reflect which I do manner of men as the

I have, t of existence dead; thou desire to re
number of what title their time imaginary in dressing tions, whic men and w world with away an ag which he w all intents be so reput some way
ment of th others; an into their l
spent in means, I an to consist the earth system, we twenty yea score, and nay, we ne ever being fill up the in the eyes and in the ever, since pay their t tions, who several yea to join the of the living forth into I allow the chiefly me lately publi
rious term dead man.
Partridge,
next year's
'Where
Isaac Bick
sale of this dead: this that he is that report

18.

not be series, I
and in-regularity vious, I are in it:
ur of viet mathe-
in their would be in the nding, I kind of the net a day ne side ing not a Method ff, de requisi
is on the uld an behavi-

I can't on, this ave lat ible; but l features f my own n, who o omin; t f my by ca ave the
are assess
the nk in bress, n militar diety
the long choat
the P final
and
He
ly, h waste dash at m
I will it a
for
In spect ed u
on. I y non st sig loun

15.

WE are . . .
of . . .
ately . . .

"* Whereas: several have industriously spread abroad, that I am in partnership with Charles L. Lumsden, the performer, at the corner of Beaufort Buildings I must say, with my friend Partridge, that they acknowledge who reported it. However, since the said Charles has promised that all his customers shall be mine, I must desire all mine to be his: and to answer for him, that if you ask in my name for small, Hungarian, or orange water, you shall have the best the town affords, at the cheapest rate.

N. 97. TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1709.

I sed maximè rarum genus est eorum, qui it excolunt ingenii magnitudine, aut præciâ et diligentia per doctrinâ, aut utriusque ornatu, sytiam de illis, et præbent ut, quoniam potissimum vitæ, et sensu veniunt. Tull. Or. Cic.

There are very few persons of extraordinary genius or endowment for learning and other noble endowments, who have had sufficient time to consider what part the course of life they ought to pursue.

Psychological Department, Number 21.

Having swept away prodigious multitudes in my last poem, and brought a great destruction upon my own species, I must now leave in this to raise fresh recruits, and it possible to supply the places of the unknowns I have deceased. It is said of Xerxes, that, when he stood upon a hill, and saw the whole country which he covered with his army, he burst out into tears, to think, that not one of that multitude would be here a hundred years after. For my part, when I look on every of these populous city, I can scarcely refrain weeping, to see how few of its inhabitants are remaining. It was with this thought that I drew up my last bill of mortality, and endeavoured to set out in it the great number of persons who have perished by a distemper, commonly known by the name of the flux, which has long raged in this world, and destroys more in every great town than the plague has done at Danzig. To repair the mischief it has done, and stock the world with a better race of mortals, I have made hopes of bringing to you those that are young, than of reviving those that are old. For which reason, I shall here send you that bill of mortality which was written by a philosopher, he calls Protagas, but recommended and approved by Socrates. It is the description of a young man, making their court to Helenus, and the manner of making of the beautiful women.

[illegible]

thought were most proper to show her complexion to an advantage. She cast her eyes upon herself, then turned them on those that were present, to see how they liked her, and often looked on the figure she made in her own shadow. Upon her near approach to Hercules, she stepped before the other lady, who came forward with a regular composed carriage, and running up to him, accosted him after the following manner.

'My dear Hercules,' says she, 'I find you are very much divided in your thoughts, upon the way of life that you ought to choose. Be my friend, and follow me; I will lead you into the possession of pleasure, and out of the reach of pain, and remove you from all the noise and disquietude of business. The affairs of either war or peace shall have no power to disturb you. Your whole employment shall be, to make your life easy, and to entertain every sense with its proper gratification. Sumptuous tables, beds of roses, clouds of perfumes, concerts of music, crowds of beauties, are all in readiness to receive you. Come along with me into this region of delights, this world of pleasure, and bid farewell for ever to care, to pain, to business.'

Hercules, hearing the lady talk after this manner, desired to know her name; to which she answered, 'My friends, and those who are well acquainted with me, call me Happiness: but my enemies, and those who would injure my reputation, have given me the name of Pleasure.'

By this time the other lady was come up, who addressed herself to the young hero in a very different manner.

'Hercules,' says she, 'I offer myself to you because I know you are descended from the gods, and give proofs of that descent by your love to virtue, and application to the studies proper for your age. This makes me hope you will gain both for yourself and me an immortal reputation. But, before I invite you into my society and friendship, I will be open and sincere with you, and must lay down this as an established truth, That there is nothing truly valuable, which can be purchased without pains and labour. The gods have set a price upon every real and noble pleasure. If you would gain the favour of the deity, you must be at the pains of worshipping him; if the friendship of good men, you must study to oblige them; if you would be honoured by your country, you must take care to serve it. In short, if you would be eminent in war or peace, you must become master of all the qualifications that can make you so. These are the only terms and conditions upon which I can propose happiness.' The goddess of pleasure here broke in upon her discourse. 'You see,' said she, 'Hercules, by her own confession, the way to her pleasure is long and difficult, whereas that which I propose is short and easy.'—'Alas!' said the other lady, whose visage glowed with a passion made up of scorn and pity, 'what are the pleasures you propose? To eat before you are hungry, drink before you are a-thirst, sleep before you are a-tired, to gratify appetites before they are raised, and raise such appetites as nature never planted. You never heard the most delicious music, which is the praise of one's self; nor saw the most beautiful object, which is the work of one's own hands. Your votaries pass away their youth in a dream of mistaken pleasures, while they are hoarding up anguish, torment, and remorse for old age.'

'As for me, I am a friend of the gods and of good men, an agreeable companion to the artizan, a household guardian to the fathers of families, a patron and protector of the generous fri- are never co or drink of thirst. The cheerful. M ing themse and those w those who a favoured by esteemed by their labour

We know which of the I believe, ev justice to ap I very mu as containi of virtue, or the thought pleased with goddesses. pleasure or y snakes and charms of be and, by that and pleasing

I have to the youth of who are still and whom I world. Let to any sing struggling to that, like the go about as their hands, root out mo finest autho occasion, the tinguish his character h faithful, mo

No. 98.] THE

From

I READ t this evening condition w mind with g talk to their

'MR. B

'Though great experi there are ne act in with I am a wom the most un Nature has owni such a nial in us to will call Fat I am so it makes no se affection he also makes am in comp always ente Cleora is o out any est offer prospect of Fabio, snared,

the art
she has
than life, or coms letting an as-

TFUL.

condition
t misera-ked with
with in-
of Fabio: host, that the power Diana to n eye of measures of cross-
with her Fabio, I
her way, e each a h already ing of her apprehend our counrinks only estic, the the lover siderable.

leora are,

Orson is ome diffi-
the woods ime one of tness they show their
d gesture,
was at his t piece of s, to wit, he was as of all these discourse arms of a
He was in December.
From that t his dogs ith civility

er brother, eeded just tinent, and ession of o warm fu-g to fence stress; and e chariot, to appear at oose-char erlooked for the mod-tenance of

Diana: it being my design to supply with the art of love, all those who preserve the sincere passion of it.

Witt's Coffee-house, November 23.

An ingenious and worthy gentleman, my ancient friend, fell into discourse this evening, upon the force and efficacy which the writings of good poets have on the minds of their intelligent readers; and recommended to me his sense of the matter, thrown together in the following manner, which he desired me to communicate to the youth of Great Britain in my essays. I choose to do it in his own words.

'I have always been of opinion,' says he, 'that virtue sinks deepest into the heart of man, when it comes recommended by the powerful charms of poetry. The most active principle in our mind is the imagination: to it a good poet makes his court perpetually, and by this faculty takes care to gain it first. Our passions and inclinations come over next; and our reason surrenders itself, with pleasure, instead. Thus, the whole soul is insensibly betrayed into morality, by bribing the fancy with beautiful and agreeable images of those very things that in the books of the philosophers appear austere, and harsh at the best but a kind of forbidding aspect. If a word, the poets do, as it were, strew the rough paths of virtue so full of flowers, that we are not sensible of the uneasiness of them; and imagine ourselves in the midst of pleasures, and the most bewitching allurements, at the time we are making progress in the severest duties of life.

'All men agree, that licentious poems do, of all writings, so most corrupt the heart. And why should we not be as universally persuaded, that the grave and serious performances of such as write in the most engaging manner, by a kind of divine impulse, must be the most effectual persuaders to goodness? If, therefore, I were blessed with a son, in order to the forming of his manners, which is making him truly my son, I should be continually putting into his hand some fine poet. The graceful sentences, and the manly sentiments, so frequently to be met with in every great and sublime writer, are, in my judgment, the most ornamental and valuable furniture that can be for a young gentleman's head; methinks they show like so much rich embroidery upon the brain. Let me add to this, that humanity and tenderness, without which there can be no true greatness in the mind, are inspired by the moves in such pathetic language, that all we find in prose-authors to excite the raising and improving of these passions is, a comparison, but cold, or lukewarm at the best. There is, besides, a certain elevation of soul, a solid magnanimity, and a noble turn of virtue, that distinguishes the hero from the plain honest man; which verse can only raise us. The bold metaphors and sounding numbers, peculiar to the poets, rouse up all our sleeping faculties, and attend the whole powers of his soul much like that excellent trumpet mentioned by Virgil:

—Q to non præstantior alter

Ere cire viros, Martemque accendere cauti

Virg. Æn. vi. 165

—None so renown'd

With breathing brass to kindle fierce alarms.

Drain

I fell into this train of thinking this evening, upon reading a passage in a masque, writ by Milton, where two brothers are introduced seeking their sister whom they had lost in a dark night and thick wood

One of the brothers is apprehensive lest the wandering virgin should be over-powered with fears, through the darkness and loneliness of the time and place. This gives the other occasion to make the following reflections, which, as I read them, made me forget my age, and renewed in me the warm desires after virtue, so natural to uncorrupt youth.

I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that goodness bosoms ever,
As that the single want of light and noise (Not being in danger, as I trust she is not) Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts, And put them into misbecoming plight.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would By her own radiant light, though sun and moon Were in the flat sea sunk. And Wisdom's self Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude:
Where, with her best nurse, Contemplation, She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings, That in the various bustle of resort Were all too ruffled, and sometimes impair'd:
He that has light within his own clear breast, May sit i' th' centre, and enjoy bright day:
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts, Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;
Himself is his own dungeon.

No. 99.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1709.

—Spirat tragicum satis et feliciter audet.

Hor. 2. Ep. i. 166.

He, fortunately bold, breathes true sublime.

Will's Coffee-house, November 25.

I HAVE been this evening recollecting what passages, since I could first think, have left the strongest impressions upon my mind; and, after strict inquiry, I am convinced that the impulses I have received from theatrical representations have had a greater effect than otherwise would have been wrought in me by the little occurrences of my private life! My old friends, Hart and Mohun, the one by his natural and proper force, the other by his great skill and art, never failed to send me home full of such ideas as affected my behaviour, and made me insensibly more courteous and humane to my friends and acquaintance. It is not the business of a good play to make every man a hero, but it certainly gives him a livelier sense of virtue and merit, than he had when he entered the theatre.

This rational pleasure, as I always call it, has for many years been very little tasted: but I am glad to find that the true spirit of it is reviving again amongst us, by a due regard to what is presented, and by supporting only one playhouse. It has been within the observation of the youngest amongst us, that while there were two houses, they did not outvie each other by such representations as tended to the instruction and ornament of life, but by introducing mimical dances, and fulsome buffooneries. For when an excellent tragedy was to be acted in one house, the ladder-dancer carried the whole town to the other. Indeed such an evil as this must be the natural consequence of two theatres, as certainly as that there are more who can see than can think. Every one is sensible of the danger of the fellow on the ladder, and can see his activity in coming down safe; but very few are judges of the distress of a hero in a play, or of his manner of behaviour in those circumstances. Thus, to please the people, two houses must entertain them not with this understanding audiences are relished by action, empty two houses which are c theatre in a

I have even that reason of Drury-lane moveables, trembled for been taken ages, been this nation, them to sol are called lazy, or we ruler of this of it to the friend, Div when to res tence of the length of the great Archi engines, the the wall, the adversaries to be in the lawful ruler and chose a seemed able

On the rejoining, the people matter, which palace. Pl tributed and the art for enterpr neighbour him. War empire of w sacking R devastation had forced detached al The neighb of Divito's disguised clad like ca gods. Divi black cloud empty stage and his adhe

From

I have al of honour a and used those who into life, by and industr I must pro good friend bury all su within my In the me corporatio ay-market, 23.

Sheep-lane, November 28.

I was last week taking a solitary walk in the garden of Lincoln's-Inn (a favour that is indulged me by several of the benchers, who are my intimate friends, and grown out with me in this neighbourhood). When, according to the nature of men in years, who are made but in the progress in the advancement of their fortune or their fine, I was rejoicing at the collection of many persons, who are my friends and school, at the unequal distribution of wealth, and the different blessings of life. I was led in this thought, when the night came upon me, and I was surrounded by a far more agreeable contemplation. The heaven above me appeared in all its majesty, and presented me with such a hemisphere of stars as made the most agreeable prospect imaginable to the eye, both in the study of nature. It lighted the sky of evening night, which had painted the sky a body of light into such a bright transparent effluence, and every constellation visible; and to the mind of the eye, such a particular glowing to the stars that I thought it the richest sky I had ever seen. I could not behold a scene so wonderful as I could not behold it up, if I may be allowed that expression, without suitable meditation on the other worldliness and amazing objects; for, on these occasions, philosophy suggests motives to religion, and religion leads to philosophy.

As soon as I had recovered my usual temper and serenity of soul, I retired to my lodgings, with the satisfaction of having passed away a few hours in the imperceptibility of a reasonable creature.

I perceived myself that my slumbers would be sweet. I was once more into them, but I dreamed a dream, or saw a vision, for I know not which to call it, that seemed to rise out of my evening meditation, and had something in it so solemn and serious, that I cannot but be communicating it; though, I must confess, the wildness of imagination, which in a dream is always loose and unrein, discovers most of the most severe parts of it.

At midnight I saw the same azure sky diversified with the same various firmaments which had entered my mind at the beginning of the day. I was struck by the view of the stars in the heavens, which seemed by the name of the Balance, when, all of a sudden there appeared in it an extraordinary light, as if the sun should rise at midnight. But its rays were not so bright as those of the sun, and it seemed to be directed towards the earth; and at length appeared something like a shadowy figure in the midst of a host of stars, which, in a little time after I awoke, appeared to be the figure of a woman. I thought that first it might have been the angel, or the spirit, or that great light, the constellation from which it descended. But, upon a nearer view, I saw about her many satellites, with which the grandness of her form was greatly diminished. Her countenance was unspeakably serene and majestic. Her eyes were not so bright as those of the sun, but they were strong enough to pierce the soul, and seemed to be looking on me with a fixed and solemn gaze. She held in her hand, a sceptre, and with the same quietness as if it were a feather, she put it into the hand of truth.

I have dreamed of many other things, and suggested many other things, but the splendour that surrounded her was then a flash of lightning, shining in the sky, and then it was as if she had been in the hand of truth. As she moved it in her hand, it seemed to be the sun, the moon, or the earth. What seemed to be descended so low as to be seen and heard by mortals, to make the pomp of her appearance more supportable, she threw darkness and clouds about her, that tempered the light into a thousand beautiful shades and colours, and multiplied that lustre, which was before too strong and dazzling, into a variety of milder glories.

THE TATTLE.

In the mean time, the world was in an alarm, and all the inhabitants of it gathered together upon a spacious plain; so that I seemed to have the whole species before my eyes. A voice was heard from the clouds declaring the intention of this visit, which was to restore and appropriate to every one living what was his due. The fear and hope, joy and sorrow, which appeared in that great assembly, after this solemn declaration, are not to be expressed. The first edict was then pronounced, 'That all titles and claims to riches and estates, or to any part of them, should be immediately vested in the rightful owner.' Upon this, the inhabitants of the earth held up the instruments of their tenure, whether in parchment, paper, wax, or any other form of conveyance; and as the goddess moved the mirror of truth which she held in her hand, so that the light which flowed from it fell upon the multitude, they examined the several instruments by the beams of it. The rays of this mirror had a particular quality of setting fire to all forgery and falsehood. The blaze of papers, the melting of seals, and crackling of parchments, made a very odd scene. The fire very often ran through two or three lines only, and then stopped. Though I could not but observe that the flames chiefly broke out among the interlineations and codicils; the light of the mirror, as it was turned up and down, pierced into all the dark corners and recesses of the universe, and by that means detected many writings and records which had been hidden or buried by time, chance, or design. This occasioned a wonderful revolution among the people. At the same time, the spoils of extortion, fraud, and robbery, with all the fruits of bribery and corruption, were thrown together in a prodigious pile, that almost reached to the clouds, and was called, 'The Mount of Restitution;' to which all injured persons were invited, to receive what belonged to them.

One might see crowds of people in tattered garments come up, and change cloaths with others that were dressed with lace and embroidery. Several who were Plums, or very near it, became men of moderate fortunes; and many others, who were overgrown in wealth and possessions, had no more left than what they usually spent. What moved my concern most was, to see a certain street of the greatest credit in Europe, from one end to the other, become bankrupt.

The next command was, for the whole body of mankind to separate themselves into their proper families; which was no sooner done, but an edict was issued out, requiring all children 'to repair to their true and natural fathers.' This put a great part of the assembly in motion; for, as the mirror was moved over them, it inspired every one with such a natural instinct, as directed them to their real parents. It was a very melancholy spectacle to see the fathers of very large families become childless, and bachelors undone by a charge of sons and daughters. You might see a presumptive-heir of a great estate ask blessing of his coachman, and a celebrated toast paying her duty to a valet de chambre. Many, under vows of celibacy, appeared surrounded with a numerous issue. This change of parentage would have caused great lamentation, but that the calamity was pretty common; and that generally those who lost their children, had the satisfaction of seeing them put into the hands of their dearest friends. Men were no sooner settled in progeny, but all the possibilities should be capabilities, and the women not being which played back among the multitude ones by the every one to distinguish capacity in select assiduous music and stood about a regular were drawn men of virtue and, in the sible to loo nation, th humanity, rai resolution, which are virtue. I many faces only to th own body.

In the knowledge, fell into th without th presided ov that men o were place were such the thought the column or more le authors of classes; bu prised to mentators, reception, and, with first station goddess, id clapped the themselves

The thir sisting of The former selves in heads at th post with t servations have certai communica all the pos a draught were maste gree, and The second possessed disposed o who were them, had there rem filled, for of the sv

THE TATLER.

These toys will once to serious mischiefs fall, When he is laugh'd at, when he's jeer'd by all.
Creech.

From my own Apartment, December 5.

THERE is nothing gives a man a greater satisfaction, than the sense of having despatched a great deal of business, especially when it turns to the public emolument. I have much pleasure of this kind upon my spirits at present, occasioned at the fatigue of affairs which I went through last Saturday. It is some time since I set apart that day for examining the pretensions of several who had applied to me for canes, perspective-glasses, snuff-boxes, orange-flower waters, and the like ornaments of life. In order to adjust this matter, I had before directed Charles Lillie, of Beaufort-buildings, to prepare a great bundle of blank licenses in the following words;

'You are hereby required to permit the bearer of this cane to pass and repass through the streets and suburbs of London, or any place within ten miles of it, without let or molestation, provided that he does not walk with it under his arm, brandish it in the air, or hang it on a button: in which case it shall be forfeited; and I hereby declare it forfeited to any one who shall think it safe to take it from him.

'ISAAC BICKERSTAFF.'

The same form, differing only in the provisos, will serve for a perspective, snuff-box, or perfumed handkerchief. I had placed myself in my elbow-chair at the upper-end of my great parlour, having ordered Charles Lillie to take his place upon a joint-stool, with a writing-desk before him. John Morphew also took his station at the door; I having, for his good and faithful services, appointed him my chamber-keeper upon court-days. He let me know, that there was a great number attending without. Upon which I ordered him to give notice, that I did not intend to sit upon snuff-boxes that day; but that those who appeared for canes might enter. The first presented me with the following petition, which I ordered Mr. Lillie to read.

'TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQUIRE, CENSOR OF GREAT BRITAIN.

'The humble petition of Simon Trippit,

'Sheweth,—That your petitioner having been bred up to a cane from his youth, it is now becoming as necessary to him as any other of his limbs.

'That, a great part of his behaviour depending upon it, he should be reduced to the utmost necessities if he should lose the use of it,

'That the knocking of it upon his shoe, leaning one leg upon it, or whistling with it on his mouth, are such great reliefs to him in conversation, that he does not know how to be good company without it.

'That he is at present engaged in an amour, and must despair of success if it be taken from him.

'Your petitioner, therefore, hopes, that the premises tenderly considered, your worship will not deprive him of so useful and so necessary a support.

'And your petitioner shall ever, &c.'

Upon the hearing of his case, I was touched with some compassion, and the more so, when, upon observing him nearer, I found he was a Prig. I bid him produce his cane in court, which he had left at the door. He did so, and I finding it to be very curiously clouded, with a transparent amber-head, and a blue ribband to hang upon his wrist, I immediately ordered my clerk, Lillie, to lay it up, and deliver out and then, permitted to abate p to go alone

The second
court: and tences for examined stories, and who had Lillie to take frivolous.

A third ing upon a step he too hearing the fortnight be him a new in great vig succeeded while his p sented. The gout, and s tion and di suspected b him to be s of Doctor corn-cutter wrought so fit to send

While I noise in my the occasio had taken by my door fresh-colour with hand his cane, w examination who was ju disputed t driven out very pertly, creatures s
without a

says he, 'v tion of our and that the man to be s at noon, an that the c of us in so him, 'whe readiness young lawy in it, and a make use o
did not bre
'that he ne to lift it up a drawer, f for other s
within the discouragin to good: a purchase, f neck, inste dismissed

There wa
sions I fou them their ired more ad before

ers, there ble in one
Upon his side of his g the glass
In the
I put on eyed each al of our ich he did
same time netly, and rly blind;
mitted to
In answer extend it to
' you are fine eyes

you can-nch; you my inter-
spoke you, petitioner
seriously, man; it is my life, to the fact, occasion I was not so ke him be propoved him a se them in a fit. Hor of men, s almost with perinat. I was own sake kerchiefs, ed them at ous would out. John of my dead were all of to prove it, h this way anded the his whole er himself ld use the his present of mind,

, however and little to greater ch singu-
fortitude, for things his means render a rtues and any good uncommon ble de-it is worst et flaw in the mind of the person that commits them. When I was a young man, I remember a gentleman of great integrity and worth was very remarkable for wearing a broad belt and a hanger, instead of a fashionable sword, though in all other points a very well-dressed man. I suspected him at first sight to have something wrong in him, but was not able for a long while to discover any collateral proofs of it. I watched him narrowly for six-and-thirty years, when at last, to the surprise of every body but myself, who had long expected to see the folly break out, he married his own cook-maid.

No. 104. THURSDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1769.

—Garrit aniles

Ex re fabellas—

Hic. ii. Sat. vi. 74.

He tells an old wife's tale very pertinently.

From my own Apartment, December 7.

My brother Tranquillus being gone out of town for some days, my sister Jenny sent me word she would come and dine with me, and therefore desired me to have no other company. I took care accordingly, and was not a little pleased to see her enter the room with a decent and matron-like behaviour, which I thought very much became her. I saw she had a great deal to say to me, and easily discerned in her eyes, and the air of her countenance, that she had abundance of satisfaction in her heart, which she seemed to communicate. However, I was resolved to let her break into her discourse her own way, and reduced her to a thousand little devices and intimations to bring me to the mention of her husband. But, finding I was resolved not to name him, she began of her own accord. 'My husband,' said she, 'gives his humble service to you,' to which I only answered, 'I hope he is well;' and, without waiting for a reply, fell into other subjects. She at last was out of all patience, and said, with a smile and manner that I thought had more beauty and spirit than I had ever observed before in her, 'I did not think, brother, you had been so ill-natured. You have seen, ever since I came in, that I had a mind to talk of my husband, and you will not be so kind as to give me an occasion.'—'I did not know,' said I, 'but it might be a disagreeable subject to you. You do not take me for so old-fashioned a fellow as to think of entertaining a young lady with the discourse of her husband. I know, nothing is more acceptable than to speak of one who is to be so, but to speak of one who is so! indeed, Jenny, I am a better bred man than you think me.' She showed a little dislike at my railery; and, by her bidding up, I perceived she expected to be treated hereafter not as Jenny Dittaf, but Mrs. Tranquillus. I was very well pleased with this change in her humour; and, upon talking with her on several subjects, I could not but fancy that I saw a great deal of her husband's way and manner in her remarks, her phrases, the tone of her voice, and the very air of her countenance. This gave me an unspeakable satisfaction, not only because I had found her a husband, from whom she could learn many things that were laudable, but also because I looked upon her imitation of him as an infallible sign that she entirely loved him. This is an observation that I never knew fail, though I do not remember that any other has made it. The natural shyness of her sex, hindered her from telling me the greatness of her own passion; but I easily collected it from the representation she gave me of

dis. 'I have every thing,' says she, 'in Tranquillus, that I can wish for; and enjoy in him, what, indeed, you have told me were to be met with in a good husband, the foulness of a lover, the tenderness of a parent, and the intimacy of a friend.' It transported her to see her eyes swimming in tears of affection when she spoke. 'And is there not, dear sister,' said I, 'more pleasure in the possession of such a man, than in all the little impertinencies of balls, assemblies, and equipage, which it cost me so much pains to make you condemn?' she answered, smiling. 'Tranquillus has made me a sincere convert in a few weeks, though I am afraid you could not have done it in your whole life. To tell you truly, I have only one fear hanging upon me, which is apt to give me trouble in the midst of all my satisfactions; I am afraid, you must know, that I shall not always make the same amiable appearance in his eye that I do at present. You know, brother Bickerstaff, that you have the reputation of a conjurer; and, if you have any one secret in your art to make your sister always beautiful, I should be happier than if I were the mistress of all the worlds you have shewn me in a tarry night.'—'Jenny,' said I, 'without having recourse to magic, I shall give you one plain rule, that will not fail of making you always amiable to a man who has so great a passion for you, and is of so equal and reasonable a temper as Tranquillus. Endeavour to please, and you must please; be always in the same disposition as you are when you ask for his secret, and you may take my word, you will never want it. An inviolable fidelity, good humour, and complacency of temper, out-live all the charms of a fine face, and make the decays of it invisible.'

We discoursed very long upon this head, which was equally agreeable to us both; for, I must confess, as I tenderly love her, I take as much pleasure in giving her instructions for her welfare, as she herself does in receiving them. I proceeded, therefore, to culminate these sentiments, by relating a very particular passage that happened within my own knowledge.

There were several of us making merry at a friend's house in a country village, when the sexton of the parish church entered the room in a sort of surprise, and told us, 'that as he was digging a grave in the chancel, a little blow of his pick-axe opened a decayed coffin, in which there were several written papers.' Our curiosity was immediately raised, so that we went to the place where the sexton had been at work, and found a great concourse of people about the grave. Among the rest, there was an old woman, who told us, the person buried there was a lady, whose name I do not think fit to mention, though there is nothing in the story but what tends very much to her honour. This lady lived several years in exemplary pattern of conjugal love, and, dying soon after her husband, who every way answered her character in virtue and affection, made it her death-bed request, 'that all the letters which she had received from him, both before and after her marriage, should be buried in the coffin with her.' These, I found upon examination, were the papers before us. Several of them had suffered so much by time, that I could only pick out a few words; as my soul! lilies! roses! dearest angel! and the like. One of them, which was legible throughout, ran thus.

'MADAM,

'If you would know the greatness of my love, consider that of your own beauty. That blooming countenance, that snowy bosom, that graceful person, return the brightness of my eyes, and the softness of my voice, to your beauty, the most worthy of lovers.'

It filled the person that I compared to a few crumbs of earth. V. letter, which This gave me written in my courtship. rather augmented turned upon were as follow

'Before this I know that I have at the same time possible. I should have of my share pleasures that my dear, be reason, but by you. It is not of an inviolable merit, it is so a bare return such continuance.

It happened to several persons. At the sight of her mother, a flood of tears of her virtue, piety, I could give advice myself to her short is the nature has been melancholy since the first letter that you may observe your mother's place, an argument caution you, you your father's stancy is rewarded mingling of danger or po

No. 105.] SA

As soon as I take but a very exercise of a Thus my life fame, and as such as attachment, is the person them liable men of gross nothing is mankind live stances as w miserable.

ry of poor a man as e, as any led in so as would too nice
I came to accident. ving made ond Saint
y-meeting,
gentleman,
value my ly has the stately, or design was I readily to, being life in all er to this lli of the nconini of our utter rest, and esters and hole com-unity, and piece in a on out of ciation for quainting at Kathaarried to a dant over-ed in all ony, the musician ged to lay when she u are to enjoy her makes use
a woman
he world, antry, by len, sick, and more
heapside, to discon-
lose by Boniface, der to be Dimple,
Mrs. Rosin governed m I know it was his laugholy, much im-
that she ed of all to tell her
tunities;
oor heart, k that he pose the d, for the se to be he imme-
When
elf, and

revealed to him, 'that, miserable woman as she was, she had been false to his bed.' Will was glad to hear it was no worse; but, before he could reply, 'nay,' said she, 'I will make you all the atonement I can, and take shame upon me, by proclaiming it to all the world, which is the only thing that can remove my present terrors of mind.' This was indeed too true, for her design was to prevent Mr. Boniface's marriage, which was all she apprehended. Will was thoroughly angry, and began to curse and swear, the ordinary expressions of passion in persons of his condition. Upon which his wife—'Ah, William! how well you mind the oath you have taken, and the distress of your poor wife, who can keep nothing from you! I hope you will not be such a perjured wretch as to forswear yourself.' The fiddler answered, 'that his oath obliged him only not to be angry at what was passed; but I find you intend to make me laughed at all over Wapping.'—'No, no,' replied Mrs. Rosin, 'I see well enough what you would be at, you poor-spirited cuckold! You are afraid to expose Boniface, who has abused your poor wife, and would fain persuade me still to suffer the stings of conscience; but I assure you, sirrah, I will not go to the devil for you.' Poor Will was not made for contention, and, beseeching her to be pacified, desired 'she would consult the good of her soul her own way, for he would not say her nay in any thing.'

Mrs. Rosin was so very loud and public in her invectives against Boniface, that the parents of his mistress forbade the banns, and his match was prevented; which was the whole design of this deep stratagem. The father of Boniface brought his action of defamation, arrested the fiddler, and recovered damages. This was the distress from which he was relieved by the company; and the good husband's air, history, and jollity upon his enlargement, gave occasion to very much mirth; especially when Will finding he had friends to stand by him, proclaimed himself a cuckold, by way of insult over the family of the Bonifaces. Here is a man of tranquillity without reading Seneca! What work had such an incident made among persons of distinction! The brothers and kindred of each side must have been drawn out, and hereditary hatred entailed on the families as long as their very names remained in the world. Who would believe that Herod, Othello, and Will Rosin, were of the same species?

There are quite different sentiments which reign in the parlour and the kitchen; and it is by the point of honour, when justly regulated, and inviolably observed, that some men are superior to others, as much as mankind in general are to brutes. This put me in mind of a passage in the admirable poem called 'The Dispensary,' where the nature of true honour is artfully described in an ironical dispraise of it:

'But ere we once engage in honour's cause, First know what honour is and whence it was,
Scorn'd by the base, 'tis courted by the brave, The hero's tyrant, and the coward's slave.
Born in the noisy camp, it lives on air;
And both exists by hope, and by despair.
Angry whene'er a moment's ease we gain,
And reconcil'd at our returns of pain.
It lives when in death's arms the hero lies,
But when his safety he consults, it dies, Bigoted to this idol, we disclaim Rest, health, and ease, for nothing but a name.'

A very odd fellow visited me to-day at my lodgings, and desired encouragement and recommendation me for a new invention of knockers to doors which he told me he had made, and professed to teach his servants the use of them. I desired him to make an experiment of this invention; upon which he took one of his knockers to my parlour-door. He gave me a complete set of knocks, from the dry rap of the dun and beggar, to the thunderings of a saucy footman of quality, with several flourishes and rattlings never yet performed. He likewise showed over some private notes, distinguishing the far friend or relation from the most modish stranger; and directing when the reserve candles are to be lighted. He has several other curiosities in his art. He waits only to receive my approbation of his main design. He is now ready to practise to us as shall apply themselves to him; but I have given him his public licence until next court-day.

N. B. He teaches under-ground.

[106.] TUESDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1709.

Invenies disjecti membra poetæ. Hor. Sat. iv. 62.
You will find the limbs of a dismember'd poet.

Will's Coffee-house, December 12.

WAS this evening sitting at the side-table and turning over one of my own papers with great satisfaction, knowing that I was observed by any in the room. I had not long enjoyed this secret pleasure of an hour, when a gentleman, some of whose works I had been highly entertained with, accosted me after the following manner. 'Mr. Bickerstaff, you know I have for some years devoted myself wholly to the study of poetry, and, perhaps, you will be surprised when I tell you I am now resolved to take up, and apply myself to business. I shall therefore beg you will stand my friend, and recommend a customer to me for several years, that I have now upon my hands.'—'I desired to let me have a particular, and I would do my best to serve him.'—'I have first of all,' says he, 'a progress of an amour digested into sonnets, ending with a poem to the unknown fair, and beginning with an epithalamium. I have celebrated in it her cruelty, her pity, her face, her shape, her wit, her good humour, her dancing, her singing—I could forbear interrupting him; 'This is a most accomplished lady,' said I; 'but has she really, with these perfections, a fine voice?'—'Pugh,' says he, 'you do not believe there is such a person in nature, was only my employment in solitude last winter, when I had neither friends nor books to divert me.'—'I was going,' said I, 'to ask her name, I find it is only an imaginary mistress.'—'That's true,' replied my friend, 'but her name is Flavia.' I continued he, 'in the second place, a collection of epigrams, calculated either for the Bath, Tunbridge, or any other place where they drink waters, with blank verses for the names of such person or persons as may be inserted in them on occasion. Thus much I have told only of what I have by me, proceeding in love and malice. I have also at this time the sketch of a heroic poem upon the next piece: really, indeed of the verses are either too long or too short, it being a rough draught of my thoughts on that subject.' I thereupon told him, 'That, as it is, it might probably pass for a very good Pindaric, I believe I know one who would be willing to write him for it upon that foot. I must tell you,' said he, 'I have made a dedication to it, which runs round four sides close written, that may serve any purpose that is tall, and understands Latin. I have farther about fifty besides three-and-thirty, rising, that might be said. These are my notes, which, I have seen with at easy rate, moral sentences, proper to close up, introduced by the tragedy or comedy, curious in Latin, two dozen of epigrams, false quantities,

I heard the gentleman asked him, 'Will you let his goods by retail for a lump?' He told him to part them, unless or any person for a lump. My reason for knowing a young gentleman spring in a new way, the nine muses of the world would be glad to could not go on with three critics that seems, of the two and mentioned I came with a request any others of the gentlemen was pleased instance of a wish I had seen passage in Hamlet acquainted with his thoughts on father, and the in —That it should But two months. So excellent a kind Hyperion to a sat That he might not Visit her face too Must I remember As if increase of By what it fed of Let me not think A little month! With which she Like Niobe, all O heaven! a boy Would have me uncle!

My father's brother Than I to Hercules Ere yet the salt Had left the flus She married—O With such dexte It is not, nor it But, break, my

The several end in this speech, a circumstance that capable of hurry traction. His expressed in so fondness for his the great and an by a true filial p successor to his

is mother's much dis-y in that of time, I hood had tion; but scarce two at last, into
that the
his passion,
ording to
I have not which is so ear taking t, he cries, at the sex
f leave to siderantur surrender d er 7th, and lead, pray-for inter-t improvbeen dead ing to his in the preible of the petitioner,

live man,
insell out
among the dead men, o to their n that his

out, day, to be ng danced of several

f, that she instant.

1709.

xvii. 50.

2.

der eye.
Cecilia

his him I comp ev, d at first as he antenance a ous coun-
I toward-bsence of his busif, he said ld be an-fences, to tell you what is my distress; I dare say you read in my countenance: I therefore beg your advice the most unhappy of all men.' Much experience has made me particularly sagacious in the discovery of distempers, and I soon saw that his was love. then turned to my common-place-book, and found his case under the word Coquette; and reading over the catalogue which I have collected out of this great city, of all under that character, I saw at the name of Cynthia, his fit came upon him. I repeated the name three after a musing manner, and immediately perceived his pulse quicken two-thirds; when his eyes, instead of the wildness with which they appeared at his entrance, looked with all the gentleness imaginable upon me, not without tears. 'Oh! sir, said he, 'you know not the unworthy usage I have met with from the woman my soul doats on. I could gaze at her to the end of my being: yet, when I have done so, for some time past, I have found my eyes fixed on another. She is now two-and-twenty in the full tyranny of her charms, which she once acknowledged she rejoiced in, only as they made her choice of me, out of a crowd of admirers, the most obnoxious. But, in the midst of this happiness, so is, Mr. Backstaff, that young Quicksilver, who is just come to town, without any other recommendation than that of being tolerably handsome and exceedingly rich, has won her heart in so shameless a manner, that she dies for him. In a word, I would consult you, how to cure myself of this passion for an ungrateful woman, who triumphs in her falsehood, and can make no man happy, because her own satisfaction consists chiefly in being capable of giving distress. I know Quicksilver is at present considerable with her, for no other reason but that he can be without her, and feel no pain in the loss. Let me therefore desire you, sir, to fortify my reason against the levity of an inconstant, who ought only to be treated with neglect.

All this time I was looking over my receipts, and asked him, 'if he had any good winter boots?— 'Boots, sir!' said my patient—I went on: 'You may easily reach Harwich in a day, so as to be there when the packet goes off.'—'Sir,' said the lover, 'I find you design me for travelling: but, alas! I have a longuee, it will be the same thing to me as solitude to be in a strange country. I have, continued he sighing, 'been many years in love with this creature and have almost lost even my English, at least to speak such as any body else does.' I asked a tenant of ours, who came up to town the other day with rent, whether the flowery mead near my father's house in the country had any shepherd in it? I have called a cave a goot these three years, and must keep ordinary company, and frequent busy people for some time, before I can recover my common words.' I smiled at his railery upon himself, though I well saw it came from a heavy heart. 'You are,' said I, 'acquainted, to be sure, with some of the general effects: suppose you made a campaign?'—'If I did,' said he, 'I should venture more than any man there, for I should be in danger of starving; my father is such an untoward old gentleman, that he would tell me he found it hard enough to pay his taxes towards the war, without making it more expensive by an obedience to me. With all this, he is as fond as he is ragged, and I am his only son.'

I looked upon the young gentleman with much tenderness, and not like a physician, but a friend; for, I talked to him so largely, that if I had parcelled my discourse into distinct prescriptions, I am confident, I gave him two hundred pounds worth of advice. He with great attention, bowing, smiling, and other instances of that natural good-natured ingenuous temper pay to those who did wiser than themselves. I entertained following purpose: 'I am sorry, sir, that I am of so long a date, for evils are much more in their beginnings; but, at the same time, I allow, that you are not to be blamed, since your merit has been abused by one of the worst sort of men, but the most unworthy sort of women. A Coquette is a chaste jilt, and from a common one, as a soldier, who is a coward, does from one that is actually in his grief, like all others, is to be cured by time; and, although you are convinced this is true, much as you will be ten years hence, you will be scorned and neglected, you see do not expect your remedy from the force of the cure, then, is only in time, and the success, only in the manner of employing

You have answered me as to travel and a o that we have only Great Britain to avoid then yourself, and listen to the following only can be of use to you in this unaclistemper, wherein the patient is often to his recovery. It has been of benefit to ply themselves to business; but as that in your way, go down to your estate, fox-hounds, and venture the life you are ter every hedge and ditch in the country. wholesome remedies; but if you can have enough, rather stay in town, and recover in the town where she inhabits. Take are to avoid all places where you may possibly see her, and shun the sight of every thing bringing her to your remembrance; there is in all that relates to her: you will find her chariot, her domestics, and her very so many instruments of torment. Tell ly, do you think you could bear the sight

He shook his head at the question, and Mr. Bickerstaff, you must have been a you could not have been so good a physician to tell you truly,' said I, 'about the third of my age, I received a wound that has scar in my mind, never to be worn out by philosophy.

ans which I found the most effectual for ere, reflections upon the ill usage I had in the woman I love, and the pleasure I e in my sufferings.

ferred the distress she brought upon me that could befall a human creature, at me that she did not inflict this upon one enemy, one that had done her an injury, but one that had wished her ill; but on the man her more than any else loved her, and it was possible for him to love any other next place, I took pains to consider her imperfections; and, that I might be sure to be constantly, kept company with those friends, who were her dearest and most acquaintance.

her highest imperfections, I still dwelt ness of mind, and ingratitude, that triumph in the pain and anguish of the ved her, and of one who, in those days, ity be it spoken, was thought to deserve ten my story, she was married to another, Id have distracted me, had he proved a out of humour with myself, and at every thing absence. Their business is, to depreciate human nature and conspire it under its worst appearances. It gives in in interpretations and base motives to worthiest actions; they resolve virtue and valour in dissimulation. In short, they endeavour to make distinction between man and man, or between species of men and that of brutes. As an instance of this kind of authors, among many others, let me even be the celebrated Rousseau, who the most palpable offender for administering consent to the envious, and worthless part of mankind.

I remember a young gentleman of moderate undstanding, but great vivacity, who, by dipping in many authors of this nature, had got a little smattering of knowledge, just enough to make an atheist a free-thinker, but not a philosopher or a man of sense. With these accomplishments, he went visit his father in the country, who was a pious, honest man, and wise, though not learned.
The son, who took all opportunities to show learning, began to establish a new religion in the family, and to enlarge the narrowness of their conviction; in which he succeeded so well, that he induced the butler by his table-talk, and staggered his eldest sister. The old gentleman began to dread the schisms that arose among his children, but did not yet believe his son's doctrine to be so improbable as it really was, until one day talking of setting a dog, the son said, 'he did not question Trav was as irrational as any one of the family.' At the heat of the argument told his father, 'but for his own part, he expected to die like a dog.' Upon which the old man, starting up in a very excitement, cried out, 'Then, sirrah, you shall live like one; and taking his cane in his hand, cudgelled out of his system. This had so good an effect, that he took up from that day, felt no more of his dog, and is now a teacher in the Middle Temple.

I do not mention this cudgelling part of the story with a design to encourage the secular arm in matters of this nature; but certainly, if it ever events itself in a series of opinion and speculation, it ought to be checked by such and despicable potentates to take care, who are fit to give man dark and gloomy prospect of his being, and destroy the principles which are the support, happiness, and glory of all public societies, as well as private persons.

I think it is one of Pythagoras's golden sayings, 'That men should take care, above all things, to have a due respect for himself.' And it is certain that the history of some of authors, who are first poetizing mankind, endeavour to disarray and undermine the most refined spirits have been learning advance since the beginning of the world. These demonstrations, and breeding, outward ornaments and ornaments, were to lift up human nature, and set it off to an advantage. Architecture, painting, and poetry, were invented with the same design, and every art and science contributes to the ornament of life, and to the wearing off of the even into shades the mean and low parts of humanity. Poetry carries on this great end more to advance, as may be seen in the following passage from one of Sir Francis Bacon's 'Advancement of Learning' which gives a truer and better account than all the volumes that were ever written upon it.

'Poetry, especially heroical, seems to be rais-

THE TATLER.

from a noble foundation, which makes the dignity of man's nature. For seeing the world is in dignity inferior to the soul, poesy seems to endow human nature with a history denies; and to give satisfaction to the mind, with at least the shadow of things, the substance cannot be had. For, if the matter is thoroughly considered, a strong argument is drawn from poesy, that a more stately greatness, a more perfect order, and a more variety, delights the soul of man, than any can be found in nature since the fall. Wherein the acts and events which are the substance of history, are not of that amplitude as to the mind of man, poesy is ready at hand to be more heroic. Because true history represents successes of business not proportionable to the number of virtues and vices, poesy corrects it, and represents events and fortunes according to desert, and according to the law of providence: because true history, through the frequent satiety and similitude of events, works a distaste and misprision in the mind; poesy cheereth and refresheth the soul, with things rare and various, and full of vicissitudes, as poesy serveth and conferreth to delectation, magnanimity, and morality; and, therefore, men deservedly have some participation of poesy, because it doth raise the mind, and exalts the soul with high raptures, by proportioning the things to the desires of the mind, and not by the mind to things, as reason and history do. By these allurements and congruities, poesy cheriseth the soul of man, joined also with sort of music, whereby it may more sweetly be affected, it hath won such access, that it hath obtained estimation even in rude times and barbarous ages, when other learning stood excluded. There is nothing which favours and falls in with the natural greatness and dignity of human nature, so much as religion, which does not only procure refinement of the mind, but the glorification of the body, and the immortality of both.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1709.

reditur hæc inter miseris lux ——— Hor. 2. Sat. vi. 59.
—— in this giddy, busy maze,
To lose the sun-shine of my days. Francis.

Sheer-lane, December 19.

It has not some years been such a tumult in the neighbourhood as this evening about six. At the end of the lane the word was given, that there was a great funeral coming by. The next came forward, and in a very hasty, instead of a solemn manner, a long train of lights, when at the head of the train, a man, in very high youth and health, with a sword, ran through the whole art of beating of the house next to me, and ended his rat-tat-tat the true finishing rap. This did not only bring me to the door at which he knocked, but to the very one in the lane in an instant. Among the rest of my country maid took the alarm, and immediately running to me, told me, 'there was a fine funeral, who had three men with burial torches going before her, carried by two men upon poles, with looking-glasses on each side of her, and also before, she herself appearing the prettiest ever was.' The girl was going on in her story when the lady was come to my door in her chair, having mistaken the door. As she entered I saw she was speaking air, and that she began her apology, she said she, 'that I take you for a stranger to you; besides, it is indecorum that I visit you in this pretty hesitation, and as if recovering her reason, she said, 'I think you have said, that I am a stranger to you; therefore, I may say my own.' The lady did not say on some particular matter to report. But, before she produced a long list of names, she knew whither she was going, could hardly forbear to say that I secretly laughed at her, she observed in three or four words seemed to indulge her own sense of her vanity, she said she, 'you cannot be obliged to me, in staying so many visits to make me hope that a third party abroad, I should be able to see you this evening.'—'Madam,' she said, 'and perplexity, and I am not a mind to see?'—'I am very sorry now with whom I am, and return visit to you, and yet we have not seen each other for a month, and remember was twelve months ago.'

She went on with her eyes on her list, told me that she had been about three miles and a half from her own house. I asked her, whether she was taken, whether she was, and desired that she was not cheated in her visit, she said, 'we take,' says she, 'I am who comes to the door, who come to see us, and turn of their visit.'—'I presume those who are known one another by name, and candidates only for a visit, after so many how-does, or not, as you like them, or fortune.'—'You are right, and we become friends, that our dislike to each other, for, to tell you the truth, I am vain to hide any thing from you, in relation, general visits are for fear of ill-will. I am a suspicious circumstance, common as to have heard nothing of what so great with me.' I said, 'and negligent, that I am the people I owe visits to, I think it would be very proper for an usher or groom of the chamber to give an account by way of introduction to a city lady who uses to be so laudable; for though I am at the end of the town, I am better than within the town, I am justice to my friends, and my own, that they are my friends, and my dependence. The lady

out of the
sitting-day, the visits all, that on up her ac-

ved. 1704.

1109.
595.

1704.

t economy,
er affairs;
o give her visits upon cent. He lf from the before she articles of but five buy in a other loss church-yard as clear in and keeps
their own,

isitant was her of, but t, it being reeding, to house, as

I do not
ach to the
to the fair ady cannot n must be he town to

If a man
y a woman ious things t known to lish to the ad to have r they are make their their rela-al, and the ended with and chair-
wholly un-
rich reason, re equally ght wonder-expressions m any ind the solid

, and im-

misfortunes the women fying only n and una visiting her to be rtuous and fears she is born with are abated, and desires indulged, in proportion to her love of that light and trifling conversation. I know I talk like an old man; but I must go on to say, that I think the general reception of mixed company, and the pretty fellows that are admitted at those assemblies, give a young woman a false an idea of life, that she is generally bred up with a scorn of that sort of merit in a man, which only can make her happy in marriage; and the wretch, to whose lot she falls, very often receives in his arms a coquette, with the refuse of a heart long before given away to a coxcomb.

Having received from the society of upholders sundry complaints of the obstinate and refractory behaviour of several dead persons, who have been guilty of very great outrages and disorders, and by that means elapsed the proper time of their interment; and having, on the other hand, received many appeals from the aforesaid dead persons wherein they desire to be heard before such their interment; I have set apart Wednesday, the twenty first instant, as an extraordinary court-day for the hearing of both parties. If, therefore, any one can allege why they, or any of their acquaintance, should or should not be buried, I desire they may be read with their witnesses at that time, or that they will do ever after hold their tongues.

N.B. This is the last hearing on this subject.

No. 110.] THURSDAY, DECEMBER 22. 1704

—Quæ lucis miseris tam dira cupido?

Virg. Æn. vi. 721

Gods! can the wretches long for life again? Pis.

Sheer-lane, December 21.

As soon as I had placed myself in my chair of judicature, I ordered my clerk, Mr. Lillie, to read to the assembly, who were gathered together according to notice, a certain declaration, by way of charge, to open the purpose of my session, which I intended only to this explanation, that as other courts were often called to demand the execution of persons dead in law; so this was held to give the last orders relating to those who are dead in reason. The solicitor of the new company of upholders near the Haymarket appeared in behalf of that useful society and brought in an accusation of a young woman who herself stood at the bar before me. Mr. Lillie read her indictment, which was in substance, 'That whereas, Mrs. Rebecca Pindust, of the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, had, by the use of one instrument called a looking-glass, and by the farther use of certain attire, made either of cambric, muslin, or other linen wares, upon her head, attained to such an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes and turn of her countenance, that she, the said Rebecca, had put to death several young men of the said parish; and that the said young men had a knowledge in certain papers, commonly called love letters, which were produced in court, gilded on the edges, and sealed with a particular wax, with certain amorous and enchanting words wrought upon the said seals, that they died for the said Rebecca; and whereas the said Rebecca persisted in the said evil practice; this way of life the said society construe to be, according to former edicts, a state of death and demanded an order for the interment of the said Rebecca.'

I looked upon the maid with great humanity, and desired her to make answer to what was said against her. She said, 'It was indeed true, that she had practised all the arts and means she could, to dispose of herself happily in marriage, but thought she did not come under the censure expressed in my writings for the same; and humbly hoped I would not condemn her for the ignorance of her accusers, who, according to their own words, had rather represented her killing, than dead.' She further alleged, 'That the expressions mentioned in the papers written to her were become mere words, and that she had been always ready to marry any of those who said they died for her; but that they made their escape as soon as they found themselves pitied or believed.' She ended her discourse, by desiring I would for the future settle the meaning of the words 'I die,' in letters of love.

Mrs. Pindust behaved herself with such an air of innocence, that she easily gained credit, and was acquitted. Upon which occasion, I gave it as a standing rule, 'that any person, who, in any letter, billet, or discourse, should tell a woman he died for her, should, if she pleased, be obliged to live with her, or be immediately interred upon such their own confession, without bail or mainprize.'

It happened, that the very next who was brought before me was one of her admirers, who was indicted upon that very head. A letter, which he acknowledged to be his own hand, was read, in which were the following words: 'Cruel creature, I die for you.' It was observable that he took snuff all the time his accusation was reading. I asked him 'how he came to use these words, if he were not a dead man?' He told me, 'he was in love with the lady, and did not know any other way of telling her so; and that all his acquaintance took the same method.' Though I was moved with compassion towards him, by reason of the weakness of his parts, yet for example-sake I was forced to answer, 'Your sentence shall be a warning to all the rest of your companions, not to tell lies for want of wit. Upon this, he began to beat his snuff-box with a very saucy air; and opening it again, 'Faith, Isaac,' said he, thou art a very unaccountable old fellow.—Pr'ythee, who gave thee power of life and death? What a-pox hast thou to do with ladies and lovers? I suppose thou wouldst have a man be in company with his mistress, and say nothing to her. Dost thou call breaking a jest, telling a lie?' He was going on with this insipid common-place mirth, sometimes opening his box, sometimes shutting it, then viewing the picture on the lid, and then the workmanship of the hinge, when, in the midst of his eloquence, I ordered his box to be taken from him; upon which he was immediately struck speechless, and carried off stone dead.

The next who appeared was a hale old fellow of sixty. He was brought in by his relations, who desired leave to bury him. Upon requiring a distinct account of the prisoner, a credible witness deposed, 'that he always arose at ten of the clock, played with his cat until twelve, smoked tobacco until one, was at dinner until two, then took another pipe, played at back-gammon until six, talked of one Madam Frances, an old mistress of his, until eight, repeated the same account at the tavern until ten, then returned home, took the other pipe, and then to bed.' I asked him, 'what he had to say for himself?'—'As to what,' said he, 'they mention concerning Madam Frances—'

I did not care for hearing the Canterbury tale, and, therefore, thought myself seasonably interrupted by a young gentleman, who appeared in the

behalf of the ment; 'for lands by his solicitor of him also, as that witness appeared, the matters of selves and hour: while the young while the of man was run the other v gammon, t fellow was t was either a conversed v young man, old man, a Frances. be interred characters, year 1689, over the yo world in the

The next and verse. still-born w burial, and standing so given proof children the brethren. mixed prop the last to be not without satisfied w mortified.

These w annuated be of colleges, ordered to rest a reprimand pardon in d

There w but, finding without the and furnish

Going ou ing me, 'th one of my b to appear p was manifest of several must confe part of the I am very new and u pronounce that can b mean time, ladies who they may a they shall f them; for should put and I could hereafter fo when they having give N.B. A the desire of that meet together, with the zeal and seriousness of apostles, to extirpate common sense, and propagate infidelity. These are the wretches, who, without any show of wit, learning, or reason, publish the crude conceptions with an ambition of appearing more wise than the rest of mankind, upon no other pretence than that of dissenting from them. One gets by heart a catalogue of title-pages and editions, and, immediately, to become conspicuous, declares that he is an unbeliever. Another knows how to write a receipt, or cut up a dog, and forthwith argues against the immortality of the soul. I have known many a little wit, in the ostentation of his parts, raise the truth of the scripture, who was not able to read a chapter in it. These poor wretches talk blasphemy for want of discourse, and are rather the objects of scorn or pity, than of our indignation; but the great disputant, that reads and writes, and spends all his time in convincing himself and the world that he is no better than a brute, ought to be whipped out of government, as a blot to civil society, and a disgrace to mankind. I love to consider an infidel, whether distinguished by the title of deist, atheist, or freethinker, in three different lights, in his solitudes, in his afflictions, and his last moments.

A wise man that lives up to the principles of reason and virtue, if one considers him in his solitude, as in taking in the system of the universe, observing the mutual dependence and harmony, by which the whole frame of it hangs together, beating down his passions, or swelling his thoughts with magnificent ideas of Providence, makes a noble figure in the eye of an intelligent being, than the greatest conqueror amidst all the pomp and solemnities of a triumph. On the contrary, there is not more ridiculous animal than an atheist in his retirement. His mind is incapable of rapture or elevation. He can only consider himself as an insignificant figure in a landscape, and wandering up and down a field or a meadow, under the same terms as the meanest animals about him, and as subject to as total a mortality as they; with this aggravation, that he is the only one amongst them, who lies under the apprehension of it.

In distresses, he must be of all creatures the most helpless and forlorn; he feels the whole pressure of a present calamity, without being relieved by the memory of any thing that is past or the prospect of any thing that is to come. Annihilation is the greatest blessing that he proposes to himself, and he halts for a pistol the only refuge he can fly to. But if you would behold one of these gloomy miscreants in his poorest figure, you must consider him under the terrors, or at the approach, of death.

About thirty years ago I was a shipboard with one of these vermin, when there arose a brisk gale, which could frighten nobody but himself. Upon the roll of the ship, he fell upon his knees, and confessed to the chaplain, 'that he had been a vile atheist, and had denied a Supreme Being ever since he came to his estate.' The good man was astonished, and the report immediately ran through the ship, 'that there was an atheist upon the upper deck.' Several of the common seamen, who had never heard of his existence before, thought it had been some strange fish; but they were more surprised when they saw it was a man, and heard out of his own mouth, that he never believed until that day that there was a God. As he lay in the agonies of confession, one of the honest tars whispered to the boatswain, 'that it would be a good deed to heave him overboard.' But we were now within sight of port, when of a sudden the wind fell, and the penitent relapsed, begging all of us that were present, 'as we were gentlemen, not to say any thing of what had passed.'

He had not been ashore above two days, when one of the company began to rally him upon his devotion on shipboard, which the other denied in so high terms, that it produced the lie on both sides, and ended in a duel. The atheist was run through the body, and after some loss of blood, became as good a Christian as he was at sea, until he found that his wound was not mortal. He is at present one of the free-thinkers of the age, and now writing a pamphlet against several received opinions concerning the existence of fairies.

As I have taken upon me to censure the faults of the age and country in which I live, I should have thought myself inexcusable to have passed over this crying one, which is the subject of my present discourse. I shall, therefore, from time to time, give my countrymen particular cautions against this distemper of the mind, that is almost become fashionable, and by that means more likely to spread. I have somewhere either read or heard a very memorable sentence, 'that a man would be a most insupportable monster, should he have the faults that are incident to his years, constitution, profession, family, religion, age, and country;' and yet every man is in danger of them all. For this reason, as I am an old man, I take particular care to avoid being covetous, and telling long stories. As I am choleric, I forbear not only swearing, but all interjections of fretting, as pugh! or pish! and the like. As I am a layman, I resolve not to conceive an aversion for a wise and a good man, because his coat is of a different colour from mine. As I am descended of the ancient family of the Bickerstaffs, I never call a man of merit an upstart. As a protestant, I do not suffer my zeal so far to transport me, as to name the pope and the devil together. As I am fallen into this degenerate age, I guard myself particularly against the folly I have been now speaking of. And, as I am an Englishman, I am very cautious not to hate a stranger, or despise a poor Palatine.

No. 112.] TUESDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1709.

Accedat suavis quædam oportet sermonum, atque morum haudquaquam, mediocre condimentum amicitie tristitia autem, et in omni re severitas absit. Habet illa quidem gravitatem, sed amicitia remissior esse debet, et liberior, et dulcior, et ad omnem comitatem facilitatemque proclivior. Cic. De Amicitia.

There should be added a certain sweetness of discourse and manners, which is no inconsiderable sauce to friendship. But by all means throw out sadness and severity in every thing. There is something of gravity indeed in it; but friendship requires a greater remissness, freedom, and pleasantness, and an inclination to good temper and affability.

Sheer-lane, December 26.

As I was looking over my letters this morning, I chanced to cast my eye upon the following one, which came to my hands about two months ago from an old friend of mine, who, as I have since learned, was the person that writ the agreeable epistle inserted in my paper of the third of the last month. It is of the same turn with the other, and may be looked upon as a specimen of right country letters.

"SIR,

"This sets out to you from my summer-house upon the terrace, shine, the s The year is pearance, th spring will b little fond pr break in up you will easi should prove hand that I through the

the frost was of the black whose music refuge under every mornin for the rece
at the same
alms, by stre shelves. Bu of hospitality traps, and us Never did t
Some of the the room; o thirsty cat!
either clippe innocent cap
I sympathize but I believ bemoaning the hand, I am brother carry thing that ha five years old butterfly, wh with it; and has given his whole estate are at present my observati communicate and from one
'Your mo

The best c passages in volous, says, dreams of Ju in the same but at the sa
A great mind bidding, that relaxations, s ways of trifl friendship o greatest as v presents it as that they use and amuse th colour which works of nat companion to the ambassa them upon a play-fellows o passed many a game of
There is, me thus fall into themselves w agreeable to must frankly

a cheerful own, that I most celeie ducks in nature, the become, as re amiable,
it. A man lom, or the personated trical, for a rich distin-he slacken-e occasions ater vigour proper and sure hour is er, but very if people to it it. The

of thought;
turbulence nt, and the see several parents, run the town to ort, without any, and in r what. It

I could per-to compose emselves to might give of harm's a relief it late enough of push-pin.
eir own tor-
are for em-dness subvert-lessness of pleasures of possible for y scene of enough to chasms and will employ rs, unless it tions as are ve I wished,
amous poli-g ducks! I iness, like a rn the ship, and corres-
laughed at,
out into the e more than on purpose my answer

r, and your less express
next spring. u will put a e time, take y his mercy

to the tom-tit. For my own part, I am excluded ; conversation with animals that delight only in country life, and am therefore forced to entertain myself as well as I can with my little dog and cat. They both of them sit by my fire every night, expecting my coming home with impatience; and, on my entrance, never fail of running up to me, and bidding me welcome, each of them in his proper language. As they have been bred up together from their infancy, and seen no other company, they have learned each other's manners, so that the dog often gives himself the airs of a cat, and the cat, in some of her motions and gestures, affects the behaviour of the little dog. When they are at play, I often mis- take one of them: and sometimes please myself with considering how much reason and instinct they are capable of delighting each other. Thus, you see, I have communicated to you, the material of my currences in my family, with the same freedom that you use to me, as I am, with the same sincerity and affection.

"Your most faithful humble servant,

ISAAC BICKERSTAFF

No 113.] THURSDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1790

—Ecce iterum Crispinus!

Once more Crispinus comes upon the stage.

Hay-market, December 23.

Whereas the gentleman that behaved himself in a very disobedient and obstinate manner at his late trial in Sheer-lane, on the twentieth instant, and was carried off dead upon taking away his snuff-box, remains still unburied; the company of upholders, not knowing otherwise how they should be paid, have taken his goods in execution, to defray the charge of his funeral. His said effects are to be exposed to sale by auction, at the office in the Hay-market, on the fourth of January next, and are as follows:

A very rich tweezer case, containing twelve instruments for the use of each hour in the day.

Four pounds of scented snuff, with three golden snuff-boxes; one of them with an invisible hinge and a looking-glass in the lid.

Two more of ivory, with the portraits of their lids of two ladies of the town; the originals to be seen every night in the side-boxes of the playhouse.

A sword, with a steel diamond hilt, never drawn but once at May-fair.

Six clean packs of cards, a quart of orange flower water, a pair of French scissors, a tooth-pick case, and an eye-brow brush.

A large glass-case, containing the lives and cloaths of the deceased; among which are, ten embroidered suits, a pocket perspective, a diamond pair of red heeled shoes, three pair of red and white stockings, and an amber-headed cane.

The strong box of the deceased,* wherein were found, five billet-doux, a Bath shilling, a crooked sixpence, a silk garter, a lock of hair, and three broken fans.

A press for books; containing, on the upper shelf,

Three bottles of diet-drink.

Two boxes of pills.

A syringe, and other mathematical instruments.

On the second shelf are several miscellaneous works; as,

Lampoons.

Plays.

Tailors' bills.

And an almanack for the year seventeen hundred.

On the third shelf,

A bundle of letters unopened, indorsed in the hand of the deceased, "Letters from the old Gentleman."

Lessons for the flute.

• Toland's "Christianity not mysterious:" and a paper filled with patterns of several fashionable stuffs.

On the lower shelf.

One shoe.

A pair of snuffers.

A French grammar.

A mourning hatband; and half a bottle of usquebaugh.

There will be added to these goods, to make a complete auction, a collection of gold snuff-boxes and clouded canes, which are to continue in fashion for three months after the sale.

The whole are to be set up and prized by Charles Bubbleboy, who is to open the auction with a speech.

I find I am so very unhappy, that while I am busy in correcting the folly and vice of one sex, several exorbitances break out in the other. I have not thoroughly examined their new fashioned petticoats, but shall set aside one day in the next week for that purpose. The following petition on this subject was presented to me this morning:

"The humble petition of William Jingle, Coach-maker and Chair-maker, of the liberty of Westminster;

" TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQUIRE, CENSOR OF GREAT BRITAIN;

" Showeth,

"That upon the late invention of Mrs. Catharine Crocstitch, mantua-maker, the petticoats of ladies were too wide for entering into any coach or chair which was in use before the said invention.

‘ That, for the service of the said ladies, your petitioner has built a round chair, in the form of a lantern, six yards and a half in circumference, with a stool in the centre of it; the said vehicle being so contrived, as to receive the passenger by opening in two in the middle, and closing mathematically when she is seated.

‘ That your petitioner has also invented a coach for the reception of one lady only, who is to be let in at the top.

'That the said coach has been tried by a lady's woman in one of these full petticoats, who was let down from a balcony, and drawn up again by pulleys, to the great satisfaction of her lady, and all who beheld her.

' Your petitioner, therefore, most humbly prays, that, for the encouragement of ingenuity and useful inventions, he may be heard before you pass sentence upon the petticoats aforesaid.

'And your petitioner, &c.'

I have likewise received a female petition, signed by several thousands, praying that I would not any longer defer giving judgment in the case of the petition, many of them having put off the making of new cloaths, until such time as they know what verdict will pass upon it. I do therefore, hereby certify to all whom it may concern, that I do design to set apart Tuesday next for the final determination of that matter, having already ordered a jury of matrons to be important cult points th

Being informed about this city for fear of respite their families, and allow them may appear let or molest in their own holders. But in the morning St. James's do not keep men in their allow them to respond in the which are no time. Between and keep on at which time five; and then at the Hay-begins. It persons, that where there is a number: provide to talk, judgment, speech, action, which case, at any place their bodies this advertisement

No. 114.] SA

Ut in vita, issimum exist
ne illa in tris

As in a ma most beautifu mingle gravit sink into me wantonness.

I was walking in a very gay way, my door, and I met my, whom I considered my bosom friend, with a paper of the sensible pleasure of acquaintance. When he came and burst out immediately. He began to go on for weeping coach, and I was then dying doing the last to come and certainly brought him. The crowd head, a parents, would le perform-

my friend.
t upon the e greatness er been the ms. How
f her death, n, speak of ut sorrow!
inster, and r of it I met n to find he ed with him that sort of m beautiful, he violence to him with to be upon rith such a soul, that to a mind sterned, or the door, I grief and de and resoad such an ains of the rest friends to the room ance, by my ts had been f me turned r of children s according lerstanding.
in attend-eling about t was, to see the reason, he only one mforted was he bed side, is is kindly et go from er husband o solemn a to a woman n pieces, to and keep-fear of dise wife, even ndured, for pt her eyes rew speech-
er. In the o had thus an, and fell straction of both their dead before
t; but they m I helped esolution to is affliction now be imelf to sit by
For I shall ior, who, in nd death of s: 'I shall
, until he is three great remedies, the necessity of submission, length of time and satiety of grief.'

In the mean time, I cannot but consider, with much commiseration, the melancholy state of a man who has had such a part of himself torn from him, and which he misses in every circumstance of life. His condition is like that of one who has lately lost his right arm, and is every moment offering to himself with it. He does not appear to himself the same person in his house, at his table, in company or in retirement; and loses the relish of all pleasures and diversions that were before entering into him by her participation of them. The most agreeable objects recall the sorrow for her to whom he used to enjoy them. This additional satisfaction, from the taste of pleasures in the society of one we love, is admirably described by Milton, who represents Eve, though in Paradise itself, no further pleased with the beautiful objects around her, than as she sees them in company with Adam, in the passage so inexpressibly charming:

'With thee conversing, I forgot all time;
All seasons and their change; all please alike.
Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet, With charm of earliest birds; pleasant the sun, When first on this delightful land he spreads His orient beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flower, Glistening with dew; fragrant the fertile earth After soft showers; and sweet the coming on Of grateful evening mild; the silent night, With this her solemn bird, and this fair moon,
And these the gems of heaven, her starry train.
But neither breath of morn when she ascends With charm of earliest birds; nor rising sun On this delightful land; nor herb, fruit, flower, Glistening with dew; nor fragrance after shower, Nor grateful evening mild; nor silent night,
With this her solemn bird, nor walk by moon,
Or glittering star-light, without thee is sweet.'

The variety of images in this passage is infinite and pleasing, and the recapitulation of each particular image, with a little varying of expression, makes one of the finest turns of words that I have ever seen, which I rather mention, because Mr. Dryden has said, in his preface to Juvenal, that he could not do with no turn of words in Milton.

It may be further observed, that though the sweetness of these verses has something in it of a pastoral, yet it excels the ordinary kind, as much as the scene of it is above an ordinary field or meadow. I might here, since I am accidentally led into this subject, show several passages in Milton that he has as excellent turns of this nature as any of our English poets whatsoever; but shall only mention the one which follows, in which he describes the fallen angel engaged in the intricate disputes of predestination, free-will, and fore-knowledge; and, to humour the perplexity, makes a kind of labyrinth in the very words that describe it.

'Others apart sat on a hill retir'd.
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high Of providence, fore-knowledge will, and fate, Fix'd fate, free-will, fore-knowledge absolute,
And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.'

115.] TUESDAY, JANUARY 3. 1709-10.

—Novum intervenit vitium et calamitas.
Ut neque spectari, neque cognosci poterit.
Ita populus studio stupidus in theatralibus Animum occupat. Tyr. Prol. de Hecyra.

A tumult so uncommon interven'd, As neither could be seen, nor understood: So taken were the people, so engag'd With a rope-dancer! Columan.

Sheer-lane, January 2.

I WENT on Friday last to the opera, and was surprised to find a thin house at so noble an entertainment, until I heard that the tumidor was not to make his appearance that night. For my own part, I was fully satisfied with the sight of an actor, who, by the grace and propriety of his action and stature, does honour to a human figure, as much as the other villifies and degrades it. Every one will easily imagine I mean Signior Nicolini, who sets off the character he bears in an opera by his action, as much as he does the words of it by his voice, very limber, and every thing contributes to the part he acts, inasmuch that a deaf man might go along with him in the sense of it. There is scarce a beautiful posture in an old statue which he does not plant himself in, at the different circumstances of the story give occasion for it. He performs the most ordinary action in a manner suitable to the greatness of his character, and shows the prince's reason in the giving of a letter, or despatching of a message. Our last actors are somewhat at a loss to support themselves with proper gesture, as they move from any considerable distance to the front of the stage; but I have seen the person of whom I am now speaking enter alone at the remotest part of it, and advance from it, with such greatness of air and action, as seemed to fill the stage, and, at the same time, commanded the attention of the audience with the majesty of his appearance. But, notwithstanding the dignity and elegance of this entertainment, I find, for some nights past, that Punchinello has robbed this gentleman of the greater part of his male spectators. The truth of it is, I find it so very hard a task to keep that sex under any manner of government, that I have often resolved to give them over entirely, and leave them to their own inclinations. I was in hopes that I had brought them some order, and was employing my thoughts on a reformation of their petticoats, when, on a sudden, I received information from all parts, that they run gadding after a puppet-show. I know very well, that what I here say will be thought by some malicious persons to flow from envy to Mr. Powell; for which reason I shall set the late dispute between us in a true light. Mr. Powell and I had some difference about four months ago, which we managed in way of letter, as learned men ought to do; and I as very well contented to bear such sarcasms as he was pleased to throw upon me, and answered them with the same freedom. In the midst of this, our misunderstanding and correspondence, I happened to give the world an account of the order of Esquires; upon which Mr. Powell was so disingenuous, as to make one of his puppets, I wish I knew which of them was, declare, by way of prologue, that one Isaac Ickerstaff, a pretended esquire, had written a scurrilous piece, to the dishonour of that rank of men; and then, with more art than honesty, concluded, that all the esquires in the pit were abused by his antagonist as a fiction made all the rest of other parts, the least question of tilities; and I in coming to the quarters. I do standing that I nity, that if I mouths against upon his whole that I have not that I cannot be timber. As for of bespattering and have been together, 'that whether he should utensils, or make person confessed laid aside his scolding wife, I sent, it is very crab-tree. The ear, 'that all out of a quick that doctor Fa conjurer, is enough from an old woman long served in

But, perhaps upon men's passions thoughts rather consider, whether to that character upon, of an able for this purpose above twenty years the rules which the stage, who action, be right celebrated author in the parts of in particular, the of sentiments, and

White's

I came in he dead appear in saw hung up a gentleman who taken up and it as having been The coat of the in a green field of clubs and the body was and ceremony ancestors at the that we are to nothing but go observed the fit myself as to the He was knight form, but by the He was in the motion of fected and free superiors. He intrepid; and, well as a failing men, eloquence is easier to This some-en who had indeed, his of speaking,

d on those that figure shed by the her, he pro-re he died, ould under-ave had his death: and y one forth-
me. versaries, I
I have re-
ws:

y scribblers, ings. It is
, and crush
ect, disciple.'
predecessor reply.
and honest
e he lived avely walk-le, all the t him, and offended at d him why ar them to with great re, I should

5, 1709-10.
Ovid. verself.

ling on the bring in a
out of the d was now acourse of e, that she ne in, but which was ough I had n open for e jury of to inform ether there t not make out. This ad such an et from the forthwith, er encume enter my an engine open itself place the ght take a

leisurely survey of it, as it should appear in proper dimensions. This was all done accordingly and, forthwith, upon the closing of the engine, the petticoat was brought into court. I then directed the machine to be set upon the table, and dilated such a manner as to show the garment in its utmost circumference; but my great hall was too narrow for the experiment; for, before it was half unfolded, described so immoderate a circle, that the lower part of it brushed upon my face as I sat in my chair-judicature. I then inquired for the person it belonged to the petticoat; and, to my great surprise, was directed to a very beautiful young damsel, who so pretty a face and shape, that I bid her come out of the crowd, and seated her upon a little stool in my left hand. 'My pretty maid,' said I, 'do you own yourself to have been the inhabitant of this garment before us?' The girl, I found, had good sense, and told me, with a smile, that, 'notwithstanding it was her own petticoat, she should be very glad to see an example made of it; and that she wore it for no other reason, but that she had mind to look as big and burly as other persons of her quality; that she had kept out of it as long as she could, and until she began to appear little in the eyes of her acquaintance; that, if she laid it aside, people would think she was not made like other women.' I always give great allowances to the fair sex upon account of the fashion, and, therefore, was not displeased with the defence of my pretty criminal. I then ordered the vest which stood before us to be drawn up by a pulley to the top of my great hall, and afterwards to be spread open by the engine it was placed upon, in such a manner that it formed a very splendid and ample canopy over our heads, and covered the whole court-judicature with a kind of silken rotunda, in its form not unlike the cupola of Saint Paul's. I entered upon the whole cause with great satisfaction as I sat under the shadow of it.

The counsel for the petticoat were now called in, and ordered to produce what they had to say against the popular cry which was raised against it. They answered the objections with great strength and solidity of argument, and expatiated in very florid harangues, which they did not fail to set off and furbelow, if I may be allowed the metaphor, with many periodical sentences and turns of oratory. The chief arguments for their client were taken, first, from the great benefit that might arise to our woollen manufactory from this invention, which was calculated as follows. The common petticoat has not above four yards in the circumference; whereas this over our heads had more in the semi-diameter, so that, by allowing it twenty four yards in the circumference, the five millions of woollen petticoats which, according to Sir William Petty, supposing what ought to be supposed in a well-governed state, that all petticoats are made of that stuff, would amount to thirty millions of those of the ancient mode. A prodigious improvement of the woollen-trade! and what could not fail to sink the power of France in a few years.

To introduce the second argument, they begged leave to read a petition of the rope-makers, wherein it was represented, 'that the demand for cords, and the price of them, were much risen since this fashion came up.' At this, all the company who were present lifted up their eyes into the vault; and I must confess, we did discover many traces of cordage, which were interwoven in the stiffening of the drapery.

A third argument was founded upon a petition of the Greenland trade, which likewise represented the great consumption of whalebone which would be occasioned by the present fashion, and the benefit which would thereby accrue to that branch of the British trade.

To conclude, they gently touched upon the weight and unwieldiness of the garment, which, they insinuated, might be of great use to preserve the honour of families.

These arguments would have wrought very much upon me, as I then told the company in a long and elaborate discourse, had I not considered the great and additional expense which such fashions would bring upon fathers and husbands; and, therefore, by no means to be thought of until some years after a peace. I further urged, that it would be a prejudice to the ladies themselves, who could never expect to have any money in the pocket, if they laid out so much on the petticoat. To this I added, the great temptation it might give to virgins, of acting in security like married women, and by that means give a check to matrimony, an institution always encouraged by wise societies.

At the same time, in answer to the several petitions produced on that side, I showed one subscribed by the women of several persons of quality, humbly setting forth, 'that, since the introduction of this mode, their respective ladies had, instead of bestowing on them their cast gowns, cut them into shreds, and mixed them with the cordage and buckram, to complete the stiffening of their under petticoats.' For which, and sundry other reasons, I pronounced the petticoat a forfeiture: but, to show that I did not make that judgment for the sake of filthy lucre, I ordered it to be folded up, and sent it as a present to a widow-gentlewoman, who has five daughters; desiring she would make each of them a petticoat out of it, and send me back the remainder, which I design to cut into stomachers, caps, facings of my waistcoat-sleeves, and other garnitures suitable to my age and quality.

I would not be understood, that, while I discard this monstrous invention, I am an enemy to the proper ornaments of the fair sex. On the contrary, as the hand of nature has poured on them such a profusion of charms and graces, and sent them into the world more amiable and finished than the rest of her works; so I would have them bestow upon themselves all the additional beauties that art can supply them with, provided it does not interfere with, disguise, or pervert those of nature.

I consider woman as a beautiful romantic animal, that may be adorned with furs and feathers, pearls and diamonds, ores and silks. The lynx shall cast its skin at her feet to make her a tippet; the peacock, parrot, and swan shall pay contributions to her ruff; the sea shall be searched for shells, and the rocks for gems; and every part of nature furnish out its share towards the embellishment of a creature that is the most consummate work of it. All this I shall indulge them in; but as for the petticoat I have been speaking of, I neither can nor will allow my own mind with greater concern which narrow and little pleasures and enjoyments of this great time my thoughts single person beauty, and mortal, if he blessings as private property does himself I come in for to a man of gifts of fortune There is nothing to rejoice as spirits out of And because this kind to such a human ever delighted which draws great occurrences sown in their own knowledge life of a great country, after positions of lustre, and success, I close whole evening

But since, nature, and of the deserving virtuous man and calamities prosperity and the accounts fictions; for the pleasure rewarded. In the whole circle satisfaction of misery, according to our view of finishing of may be sure altogether contrary, the whole or a knight limits of a presents to our kind are like disposition, at the same time that greater the affixes in these pleasures we take

Among the met with in my hero's perplex it more difficult name I have mistress was the who for certain while he was of adventures death, innam

Co. 117.] SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1709-10.

Durate, et vosmet rebus servate secundis.

Virg. Æn. i. 211.

Endure the hardships of your present state, Live, and reserve yourselves for better fate. Dryden.

Sheer-lane, January 6.

WHEN I look into the frame and constitution of arrival in in clasped endearing

I not con-either to as pleased spoiled a is on him-
upon his exploits, saw in his ing leave embrace mate fare-ce the two he heart of e thought e had be-fatal that them. Of yet we see case. He alking on Neptune,

I importuwhatever the wit of rapture to e changed she would ed to have er immor-
disgrace.
a shape as in the like hat I have turned into the danger

hat are un-mind that ility of re-
follows :—
ray which ve with an ily in those y addresses perplexity I

g ourselves of the sea, fondnesses riosity, and

dearments,
hand, and r, when on derable dis-sunk under odigious a
would have her body ier for my on such an aid to my-relieve me astonished,
which the
together in-re so lively

on this occasion, that while they lasted they made me more miserable than I was at the real death of this beloved person, which happened a few months after, at a time when the match between us was concluded; inasmuch as the imaginary death was untimely, and I myself, in a sort, an accessory; whereas her real decease had at least those alleviations, of being natural and inevitable.

The memory of the dream I have related still dwells so strongly upon me that I can never read the description of Dover cliff in Shakspeare's tragedy of King Lear, without a fresh sense of my escape. The prospect from that place is dreamt with such proper incidents, that whoever can read it without growing giddy must have a good head, or a very bad one.

Come on, sir, here's the place: stand still! how fearful And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low?
The crows and choughs that wing the midway air, Show scarce as gross as beetles. Half way down Hangs one that gathers samphire—Dreadful trade!
Methinks he seems no bigger than his head.
The fishermen that walk upon the beach Appear like mice, and you tall anchoring bark Diminish'd to her boat; her boat! a buoy Almost too small for sight. The murmuring surge, 'That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles beats, Cannot be heard so high. I'll look no more, Lest my brain turn.

No. 118.] TUESDAY, JANUARY 10, 1769.]

Lusisti satia, edisti satia, atque bibisti, Tempus abire tibi — Hor. 2 Ep. p. 211.

Already glutt'd with a farce of ago,
'Tis time for thee to quit the wanton stage.
FRANCIS.

From my own Apartment, January 8.

I THOUGHT to have given over my prosecution of the dead for this season, having by me many other projects for the reformation of mankind; but I have received so many complaints from such different hands, that I shall disoblige multitudes of my correspondents, if I do not take notice of them. Some of the deceased, who, I thought, had been laid quietly in their graves, are such hobgoblins in public assemblies, that I must be forced to deal with them as Evander did with his triple-lived adversary, who, according to Virgil, was forced to kill him thrice over, before he could despatch him.

Ter Ictho sternandus erat. — —Thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore.

I am likewise informed, that several wives of the dead men have, since the decease of their husbands, been seen in many public places, without mourning or regard to common decency.

I am farther advised, that several of the defunct contrary to the woollen act, presume to dress themselves in lace; embroidery, silks, muslins, and other ornaments forbidden to persons in their condition. These and other the like informations moving me thereto, I must desire, for distinction sake, as to conclude this subject for ever, that when any of these posthumous persons appear, or are spoken of, that their wives may be called widows; their houses sepulchres; their chariots, hearses; and their gait

THE TATLER.

nents, flannel: on which condition, they shall be allowed all the conveniences that dead men can in reason desire.

As I was writing this morning on this subject, I received the following letter:—

‘ From the banks of Styx.

‘ MR. BICKERSTAFF,

‘ I must confess, I treated you very scurrilously when you first sent me hither; but you have despatched such multitudes after me to keep me in countenance, that I am very well reconciled both to you and my condition. We live very lovingly together; for, as death makes us all equal, it makes us very much delight in one another’s company. Our time passes away much after the same manner as it did when we were among you: eating, drinking, and sleeping, are our chief diversions. Our Quidnuncs between whiles go to a coffee-house, where they have several warm liquors made of the waters of Lethe, with very good poppy-tea. We that are the sprightly geniuses of the place refresh ourselves frequently with a bottle of mum, and tell stories until we fall asleep. You would do well to send among us Mr. Dodwell’s book against the immortality of the soul, which would be of great consolation to our whole fraternity, who would be very glad to find that they are dead for good and all, and would, in particular, make me rest for ever

‘ Yours,

‘ JOHN PARTRIDGE.

‘ P.S. Sir James has just arrived here in good health.’

The foregoing letter was the more pleasing to me, because I perceived some little symptoms in it of a resurrection; and having lately seen the predictions of this author, which are written in a true protestant spirit of prophecy, and a particular zeal against the French king, I have some thoughts of sending for him from the banks of Styx, and reinstating him in his own house, at the sign of the Globe in Salisbury-street. For the encouragement of him and others, I shall offer to their consideration a letter, which gives me an account of the revival of one of their brethren.

‘ Sir,

‘ December 31.

‘ I have perused your Tatler of this day, and have wept over it with great pleasure; I wish you would be more frequent in your family-pieces. For, as I consider you under the notion of a great designer, I think these are not your least valuable performances. I am glad to find you have given over your face-painting for some time, because I think you have employed yourself more in grotesque figures than in beauties; for which reason I would rather see you work upon history-pieces, than on single portraits. Your several draughts of dead men appear to me as pictures of still-life, and have done great good in the place where I live. The esquire of a neighbouring village, who had been a long time in the number of non-entities, is entirely recovered by them. For these several years past, there was not a hare in the county that could be at rest for him; and I think, the greatest exploit he ever boasted of was, that when he was high-sheriff of the county, he hunted a fox so far, that he could not follow him any farther by the laws of the land. All the hours he spent at home, were in swelling himself with October, and rehearsing the wonders he did in the field. Upon reading your papers, he has sold his dogs, shook off his dead companions, looked into his estate, got the multiplication-table by heart, paid his tithes, and intends to take upon him the office of church-warden next year. I wish the same success with your other patients, and am, &c.

When I of middle-aged petition:

‘ TO THE WOR

‘ The hun

‘ Show

‘ That you and sempster

Exchange, and clerks, and m

‘ That tho bread corn, o immoderate

save charges

the beaux pu

So that your trade: for w cecity, that must inevita

worship.

‘ That you

tempt of you

third instant

old-fashioned that dress.

worship will

tioner humb

may be adde heard by her

he has such that ruffs a questions no

about town v before the cu

that the des petticoat, wa

for which re wings, and t upper and lo

tionable; w

sent dress b which, as ho tinguisher, v widening do

enormous ci

‘ Your pe that you w which in the

the two Hut

I have ex

tion, and fin predecessors

Bickerstaff,

fardinal are preserve the mid Bickers family-book,

vantage, as covered, to an inch belo convinces m demand; an ing of any o

whole is co

heroby emp shall see in quire payme

eration the er of four quarterly.
e obliged to 2, 17.09.10.

lib. iv. 6.

iv. 24.

ch satisfac-
been made related by

There is a dis world of sight, and

Philosophy
and I can the present

a new and we demand omitted our oyself with conventions

out of the

of a human with that clock upon

very small rather than parts of a

me, I must might be a call it such a my sleeps, I fancied head, and course; for me, that I

ery words.

ortied with covered to

orks or hus-le, when your own

s of objects.
ite Gees who are un-

hat degree here men

h ideas as oneptions, which may meat for a d still open vidence, as parts; and and metallic hat lie hid ss fund of discourse;

finite parts

ll likewise fifty of soa particle

the globe of ing to sight

shools of living creatures in a speckful of vinegar; but, we who can distinguish them, in their different magnitudes, see among them several huge leviathans that terrify the little fry of animals about them, and take their pastime as in an ocean, or the great deep. I could not but smile at this part of his relation, and told him, 'I doubted not but he could give me the history of several invisible giants, accompanied with their respective dwarfs, in case that any of these little beings are of a human shape.'—'You may imagine you add,' said he, 'that we see in these little animals different natures, instincts, and modes of life, which correspond to what you observe in creatures of bigger dimensions. We destroy millions of species subsisting on a green leaf, which your glasses represent only in crowds and swarms. What appears to your eye but a hair or down rising on the surface of it, we find to be woods and forests, inhabited by hosts of prey, that are as dreadful, in those their little haunts, as lions and tigers in the deserts of Lybia.' I was much delighted with his discourse and could not forbear telling him, 'that I should be wonderfully pleased to see a natural history of these possibilities, containing a true account of such reptiles and animals as grow and live out of sight.'—'Such disquisitions,' answered he, 'are very suitable to reasonable creatures; and you may be sure there are many curious spirits among us who employ themselves in such amusements. For, as our habit and all our senses may be formed to what degree of strength and delicacy we please, in the same manner as our sight, we can make what experiments we are inclined to, how small soever the matter be in which we make them. I have been present at the dissection of a mite, and have seen the skeleton of a flea. I have been shown a forest of numberless trees, which have been picked out of an acorn. Your microscope can show you in it a complete oak in miniature; and, could you suit all your organs as we do, you might pluck an acorn from this little oak, which contains another tree; and, so proceed from tree to tree, as long as you would think fit to enlarge your disquisitions. It is almost impossible,' added he, 'to talk of things so remote from common life, and the ordinary notions which mankind receive from blunt and gross organs of sense, without appearing extravagant and ridiculous. You have often seen a dog opened, to observe the circulation of the blood, or make any other useful inquiry; and, yet would be tempted to laugh if I should tell you, that a circle of much greater philosophers than any of the Royal Society, were present at the cutting up of one of those little animals which we find in the blue of a plumbe; that it was tied down alive before them; and that they observed the palpitations of the heart, the course of the blood, the working of the muscles, and the convulsions in the several limbs, with great accuracy and improvement.'—'I must confess,' said I, 'for my own part, I go along with you in all your discoveries with great pleasure; but it is certain, they are too fine for the gross of mankind, who are more struck with the description of every thing that is great and bulky. Accordingly we find the best judge of human nature setting forth his wisdom, not in the formation of these minute animals, though indeed no less wonderful than the other, but in that of the leviathan and behemoth, the horse, and the crocodile.'—'Your observation,' said he, 'is very just; and I must acknowledge, for my own part, that although it is with much delight that I see the traces of providence in these instances, I still take greater pleasure in considering the works of the creation in their immensity, than in their minuteness. For this reason, I rejoice when I strengthen my sight so as to make it pierce into the most remote spaces, and take a view of those heavenly bodies which lie out of the reach of human eyes, though assisted by telescopes. What you look upon as one confused white in the milky way, appears to me a long track of heavens, distinguished by stars that are ranged in proper figures and constellations. While you are admiring the sky in the starry night, I am entertained with a variety of worlds and suns placed one above another, and rising up to such an immense distance, that no created eye can see an end of them.

The latter part of his discourse flung me into such an astonishment, that he had been silent for some time before I took notice of it; when on a sudden I started up and drew my curtains, to look if any one was near me, but saw nobody, and cannot tell to this moment whether it was my good genius or a dream that left me.

No. 120. SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1709-10.

—Velut silvis ubi passim Palantes error certo de tramite pellit;

Ille sinistrorsum, hic dextrorsum abit.

Hor. ii. Sat. iii. 48

When, in a wood, we leave the certain way, One error fools us, though we various stray, Some to the left, and some to t'other side.

Francis.

Sheer-lane, January 13.

INSTEAD of considering any particular passion of character in any one set of men, my thoughts were last night employed on the contemplation of human life in general; and truly it appears to me, that the whole species are hurried on by the same desires, and engaged in the same pursuits, according to the different stages and divisions of life. Youth is devoted to lust, middle age to ambition, old age to avarice. These are the three general motives and principles of action both in good and bad men; though it must be acknowledged, that they change their names, and refine their natures, according to the temper of the person whom they direct and animate. For, with the good, lust becomes virtuous love; ambition, true honour; and avarice, the care of posterity. This scheme of thought amused me very agreeably until I retired to rest, and afterwards formed itself into a pleasing and regular vision, which I shall describe in all its circumstances, as the objects presented themselves, whether in a serious or ridiculous manner.

I dreamed that I was in a wood, of so prodigious an extent, and cut into such a variety of walks and alleys, that all mankind were lost and bewildered in it. After having wandered up and down some time, I came into the centre of it, which opened into a wide plain filled with multitudes of both sexes. I here discovered three great roads, very wide and long, that led into three different parts of the forest. On a sudden, the whole multitude broke into three parts, according to their different ages, and marched in their respective bodies into the three great roads that lay before them. As I had a mind to know how each of these roads terminated, and whither they would lead those who passed through them, I joined myself to a flower and v the band of that several this agreeabl there were s selves to 'th the path of a culous figure

they joined,
which we ma brodery of f distant purli wonderfully and intoxic not been lot some woman professed his perceived thi as we advan
tricate thick mixed with r beds of flow that it was li light or perp

It was here their pursuits seemed to re led them int regular walk in some tur selves to be o who pursued lowers into li many paths i confusion and quitted the chase. It w pursuing a f whose eye w game in vie ness. I coul place which veral person avenues, and during their those who pr all their turn ful; and that looked upon well acquaint their women it, caught th those whom t was a partic byrinth of co
the chase, bu pleasant eno smiling upon beckoning to graces to the her, drawing lovers, that I could find th some satisfact who had thus among the i when they ca partner that over all the seemed to be of them I say

beautiful
I saw most ed amongst marching before us.
I after-and could a ring, or placed as garland of shoulders unspotted
as clasped little doves wrought
of Hymen, temple in a that were amurants, marriage and
hem. As I permitted son am a performed in serve how posed of;
There were edifice, at one of these ful, though very careful ile and in-the name of er Complace, and put two sisters,
to gardens,
n delights,
that could
s. The se-ouples that linked to-a strove to were such a other been too well nce to this who joined sioned most sisters was h the innoaviour of a Contention, of the skin a little lap-y one that I to have a ecompanied ched before the end of stag. Her exion pale,
sts in them,
ges persons
ble. Upon s Jealousy, this temple stood on the lust? The rs, with all panied that order; whereas that of the other was composed the chaste and matron-like Ionic. The sides were adorned with several grotesque figures of sparrows, heathen gods, satyrs, and monsters made up of half men half beast. The gates were ungarrisoned and open to all who had a mind to enter. Upon going in, I found the windows were blinded, and in only a kind of twilight, that served to discover prodigious number of dark corners and apartness into which the whole temple was divided. I was stunned with a mixed noise of clamour and joll (On one side of me I heard singing and dancing; the other, brawls and clashing of swords. In short I was so little pleased with the place, that I was going out of it; but found I could not return by gate where I entered, which was barred against that were come in, with bolts of iron, and lock adamant. There was no going back from the temple through the paths of pleasure which led to All who passed through the ceremonies of the place went out at an iron wicket, which was kept by a dreadful giant, called Remorse, that held a scow of scorpions in his hand, and drove them into the only outlet from that temple. This was a passage rugged, so uneven, and choked with so many thorns and briars, that it was a melancholy spectacle to behold the pains and difficulties which both sexes suffered who walked through it. The men, though the prime of their youth, appeared weak and feeble with old age. The women wrung their hands and tore their hair; and several lost their limbs before they could extricate themselves out of the perplexities of the path in which they were engaged. The remaining part of this vision, and the adventures I met with in the two great roads of Ambition and Avarice, must be the subject of another paper.

ADVERTISEMENT.

I have this morning received the following letter from the famous Mr. Thomas Dogget.

'SIR,

'On Monday next will be acted, for my benefit the comedy of Love for Love. If you will do me the honour to appear there, I will publish on bills, that it is to be performed at the request of Isaac Bickerstaff, esquire, and question not but will bring me as great an audience, as ever was the house, since the Morocco Ambassador was there. I am, with the greatest respect, your most obedient and most humble servant,

'THOMAS DOGGET.

Being naturally an encourager of wit, as well as bound to it in the quality of Censor, I returned the following answer:

'MR. DOGGET,

'I am very pleased with the choice you have made of so excellent a play, and have always looked upon you as the best of comedians; I shall therefore come in between the first and second act, and remain in the right hand box over the pit until the end of the fourth; provided you take care that every thing be rightly prepared for my reception.'

No. 121.] TUESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1709.

Similis tibi, Cynthia, vel tibi, cujus Turbavit nitidos extinctus passer ocellos.

Juv. Sat. vi. 7

Like Cynthia, or the Lesbians of our years, Who for a sparrow's death dissolve in tears.

From my own Apartment, January 15.

I WAS recollecting the remainder of my vision when my maid came to me, and told me, 'there' gentlewoman below who seemed to be in great trouble, and pressed very much to see me.' When I lay in my power to remove the distress of an unhappy person, I thought I should very ill employ my time in attending to matters of speculation, and therefore desired the lady would walk in. When she entered, I saw her full of tears. However, her grief was not so great as to make her omit rules; or she was very long and exact in her civilities, which gave me time to view and consider her. Her clothes were very rich, but tarnished; and her words very fine, but ill applied. These distinctions made me, without hesitation, though I had never seen her before, ask her, 'if her lady had any commands for me?' She then began to weep afresh, and with many broken sighs told me, 'that their family was in a very great affliction.' I beseeched her 'to compose herself, for that I might possibly be capable of assisting them.' She then cast her eye upon my little dog, and was again transported with too much passion to proceed; but, with much ado, she at last gave me to understand, 'that Cupid, her lady's lap-dog, was dangerously ill, and in so bad a condition, that her lady neither saw company, nor went abroad, or which reason she did not come herself to consult me; that, as I had mentioned with great affection my own dog,' (here she courtesied, and looking first at the cur, and then on me, said, 'indeed I had reason, for he was very pretty') her lady sent to me rather than to any other doctor, and hoped I would not laugh at her sorrow, but send her my advice.' I must confess, I had some indignation to find myself treated like something below a farrier; yet, well knowing that the best, as well as most tender way, of dealing with a woman, is to fall in with her humours, and by that means to let her see the absurdity of them; I proceeded accordingly. 'Pray, madam,' said I, 'can you give me any methodical account of this illness, and how Cupid was first taken?' 'Sir,' said she, 'we have a little ignorant country girl, who is kept to tend him; she was recommended to our family by one that my lady never saw but once, at a visit; and you know persons of quality are always inclined to strangers; for I could have helped her to a cousin of my own, but—' 'Good madam,' said I, 'you neglect the account of the sick body, while you are complaining of this girl.' 'No, no, sir,' said she, 'begging your pardon; but it is the general fault of physicians, they are so in haste that they never hear out the case. I say, this silly girl, after washing Cupid, let him stand half an hour in the window without his collar, where he caught cold, and in an hour after, began to bark very hoarse.' He had, however, a pretty good night, and we hoped the danger was over; but for these two nights last past, neither he nor my lady have slept a wink.' 'Has he,' said I, 'taken any thing?' 'No,' said she; 'but my lady says he will take any thing that you may prescribe, provided you do not make use of Jesuit's powder, or the cold bath. Poor Cupid,' continued she, 'has always been phthisical; and, as he lies under something like a chin-cough, we are afraid it will end in a consumption.' I then asked her, 'if she had brought any of his water to show me.' Upon this, she stared me in the face, and said, 'I am afraid, Mr. Bickerstaff, you are not serious; but, if you have any receipt that is proper on this occasion, pray let us have it; for my mistress is not to be comforted.' Upon this I paused a little without returning any answer, and after some short silence, I proceeded in the following manner: 'I have considered the nature of the distemper, and the constitution of the patient, and I think I can put him into a better condition than he is in at present. I mean time, to put him into the most natural way for which reason I have brought him this morning on a groat, of which I have carried call Alas vice, the young man is ridiculous and indeed I found she was an ass frequent enough are so used to the humours they sacrifice their condition, and passions and passions without giving any extraneous it very natural her give a sympathying a-railing at her 'Mr. Bickerstaff for the sake of are the most to lose a part brought me in a woman upon because she every one of the bird's death told me this she would so telling you a woman tried ting water into any distracted 'Since it is no means long message long forced her out While I am tresses that at I find my tail accidental call so call them which their d this is an evil the fair sex; formed for a that when b means, they proper object such virgins of lap-dogs, p this time a co of the most sence of her cat, any of. I do not great enorm as theirs. A esteem for a making him rank of men not scruple to and declare I had rather a finest woman seem to have always on the estate with which appears an excess of with in the and brought the pursuit such a good a stable of n an ivory r. He an- meadows, ne time he most beau- toman em- rain of do- bbers, &c. pensions. contribute o had pre- and the n prevailed agall, until 19,1709-10 sti. Mart ne, R. Wynne 18. who have rities of the ions, when instruction st is looked ight to ex- y example. t at the in- placed my- with great rgil, when were many whole as- pect which nperor. I other testi- ived at my tain, gave tioned re- I should ot take this t civilities gget, who e acts after and at the e company eir door at e home to I forbade, le play to no offence will not be per duties upon every of this ne ture. Every one should, on these occasions, show his attention, understanding, and virtue. I would undertake to find out all the persons of sense and breeding by the effect of a single sentence, and to distinguish a gentleman as much by his laugh, as his bow. When we see the footman and his lord diverted by the same jest, it very much turns to the diminution of the one, or the honour of the other. But though a man's quality may appear in his understanding and taste, the regard to virtue ought to be the same in all ranks and conditions of men, however they make a profession of it under the name of honour, religion, or morality. When, therefore, we see anything divert an audience, either in tragedy or comedy, that strikes at the duties of civil life, or exposes what the best men in all ages have looked upon as sacred and inviolable; it is the certain sign of a profligate race of men, who are fallen from the virtue of their forefathers, and will be contemptible in the eyes of their posterity. For this reason, I took great delight in seeing the generous and disinterested passion of the lovers in the comedy, which stood so many trials, and was proved by such a variety of diverting incidents, received with a universal approbation. This brings to my mind a passage in Cicero, which I could never read without being in love with the virtue of a Roman audience. He there describes the shouts and applauses which the people gave to the persons who acted the parts of Pylades and Orestes, in the noblest occasion that a poet could invent to show friendship in perfection. One of them had forfeited his life by an action which he had committed; and as they stood in judgment before the tyrant, each of them strove who should be the criminal, that he might save the life of his friend. Amidst the vehemence of each asserting himself to be the offender, the Roman audience gave a thunder of applause, and by that means, as the author hints, approved in others what they would have done themselves on the like occasion. Methinks, a people of so much virtue were deservedly placed at the head of mankind; but, alas! pleasures of this nature are not frequently to be met with on the English stage. The Athenians, at the time when they were the most polite, as well as the most powerful government in the world, made the care of the stage one of the chief parts of the administration; and I must confess, I am astonished at the spirit of virtue which appeared in the people, upon some expressions in a scene of a famous tragedy; an account of which we have in one of Seneca's Epistles. A covetous person is represented speaking the common sentiments of all who are possessed with that vice in the following soliloquy, which I have translated literally: 'Let me be called a base man, so I am called a rich one. If a man is rich, who asks if he is good? The question is, how much we have, not from whence, or by what means, we have it. Every one has so much merit as he has wealth. For my own part let me be rich, O! ye gods, or let me die. The man dies happily who dies increasing his treasure: There is more pleasure in the possession of wealth, than in that of parents, children, wife, or friends.' The audience were very much provoked by the first words of this speech; but when the actor came to the close of it, they could bear no longer. In short, the whole assembly rose up at once in the greatest fury, with a design to pluck him off the stage, and brand the work itself with infamy. In the midst of the tumult, the author came out from behind the scenes, begging the audience to be composed for a little while, and they should see the tragical end this wretch should come to immediately. The effect of punishment appeased the people, who sat with great attention and pleasure to see an example of so odious a criminal. It is with shame and regret that I speak it; but I very much question, if it is possible to make a speech so impious as to excite such a laudable horror and indignation in a great audience. It is very natural for an author to boast of the ostentation of his reading, as it is for an actor to tell stories; for which reason I must beg pardon for will excuse me, if I for once indulge myself in both these inclinations. We see the effect of judgment, and virtue of a whole audience, in foregoing instances. If we would imitate the example of a single spectator, let us reflect upon Socrates, in a particular which gives me as great an idea of that extraordinary man, as any circumstance of his life, or, what is more, of his death. A miserable person often frequented the theatre, and brought a great many thither, out of a desire to see him. On which occasion, it is recorded of him that he sometimes stood, to make himself the more conspicuous, and to satisfy the curiosity of the spectators. He was one day present at the first representation of a tragedy of Euripides, who was his friend, and whom he is said to have assisted in the composition of his plays. In the midst of the tragedy, he met with very great success, there chanced to be a line that seemed to encourage vice and impiety.

There was no sooner spoken, but Socrates rose from his seat, and, without any regard to his affection for his friend, or to the success of the play, he himself displeased at what was said, and went out of the assembly. I question not but the line will be curious to know, what the line was, and how this divine heathen so much offended. If memory fails me not, it was in the part of Hippolytus, when he is pressed by an oath, which he had taken to keep silence, returned for answer, had taken the oath with his tongue, but not with his heart. Had a person of a vicious character been allowed to make such a speech, it might have been allowed as a representation of the baseness of his thoughts: but an expression, out of the mouth of the virtuous Hippolytus, was giving a sanction to falsehood, and establishing perjury by maxim.

Notwithstanding all these interruptions, I have set apart some time for the closing of my vision.

1 SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1709.

re, atque togam jubeo componere, quisquis tione macâ, aut argenti pallet amore.

Hor. 2. Sat. iii. 77.

all, whose breasts with bad ambition rise, e pale passion, that for money dies,— lose your robes—

Francis.

From my own Apartment, January 30.

A CONTINUATION OF THE VISION.

With much labour and difficulty I passed through the last part of my vision, and recovered the centre of the road, from whence I had the prospect of the great roads. I here joined myself to the great party of mankind, who marched behind the standard of Ambition. The great road lay in a straight line, and was terminated by the Temple of Honour.

It was planted on each side with laurels, and flowers, intermixed with marble trophies, carved statues, and statues of law-givers, heroes, statesmen, philosophers, and poets. I went up this great path, which was bent upon doing good, and promoting the good of this great road, which was laid out in straight lines. These were most of them received into them, and proposed to themselves, though they chose to do otherwise. The edifices at the end of the road, contrived, that we might see 'Honour' by reason, stood before it. A temple was met by the goddess of Honour, which was a beautiful triumphal chariot, into it. When she received us, she presented that was placed above the emblem of Eternity, of a golden zodiac, in her hand, and a moon veiled, and her feet within us, as we stood, which this image carried.

Having seen all these adventures, I repeated that stood within vision, and was raised in imagination; but, at my stones were laid together, the whole fabric stood, that it shook with the called the 'Temple of Honour' sat in the midst of a day and night, and than she would have the whole art was, to be majestic than she had painted her face with jewels upon her breast. What was observed was, the beauty made altogether insignificant. This place of pedants, free-thinkers, a rabble of those who great men. Female choked up the avenue, rather than the sand of my business, in my wood from whence I which led to this temple had begun their journey, persons, and travellers, but, upon examination, several paths which led to the sides of the wood, turns and windings, then, often turned. 'Virtue;' then crosses times marched in it, path which they went into the wood. The deriders had their part I could not but take mischievous pretence to turn the figure of a I found to be Machiavelli, an extended finger, I was now returned with a design to observe

BRITISH ESSAYIST.

currences persons of not gone em insen-journed
ness, and food and was in a alley on a k of this lity in it, it rather each side f precious
the earth,
ong veins lver. We forbidden s of these stained to end of the made after nded with ere placed each, they much ter-led herself ed herself garment, a up in her flew open a hundred
e. At the with a long intenance, of money.
On his nd on his given the lector, and d on each attending into. At corruption, whispering
upon him ng up to a a multipli-which, as e was ma-himself to money into him out a sealed in successful e was the person in a oney. He ter a short of the same a person with false-res; by the s, she had
It would
or describ-ble. There s, reposing y of them onvulsionthem, only made them grasp them the faster. There were some tearing with one hand all things, even to the garments and flesh of many miserable persons who stood before them; and, with the other hand throwing away what they had seized, to harlots, flatterers, and panders, that stood behind them.

On a sudden, the whole assembly fell a trembling, and, upon enquiry, I found that the great room we were in was haunted by a spectre, that many times a day appeared to them, and terrified them to distraction.
In the midst of their terror and amazement, the apparition entered, which I immediately knew to be Poverty. Whether it were by my acquaintance with this phantom, which had rendered the sight of her more familiar to me, or however it was, she did not make so indigent or frightful a figure in my eye as the god of this loathsome temple. The miserable votaries of this place were, I found, of another mind.
Every one fancied himself threatened by the apparition, as she stalked about the room, and began to lock their coffers, and tie their lags with the utmost fear and trembling.
I must confess, I look upon the passion which I saw in this unhappy people, to be of the same nature with those unaccountable antipathies which some persons are born with, or rather as a kind of frenzy not unlike that which throws a man into terrors and agones, at the sight of so useful and innocent a thing as water. The whole assembly was surprised when, instead of paying my devotions to the deity whom they all adored, they saw me address myself to the phantom.
‘Oh Poverty!’ said I, ‘my first petition to thee is, that thou wouldest never appear to me hereafter; but, if thou wilt not grant me this, that then thou wouldest not bear a form more terrible than that in which thou appearest to me at present. Let not thy threats and menaces betray me to any thing that is ungrateful or unjust. Let me not shut my ears to the cries of the needy. Let me not forget the person that has deserved well of me. Let me not, for any fear of thee, desert my friend, my principles, or my honour. If Wealth is to visit me, and to come with her usual attendants, Vanity and Avarice, do thou, O Poverty! hasten to my rescue; but bring along with thee the two sisters, in whose company thou art always cheerful, Liberty and Innocence.’ The conclusion of this vision must be deferred to another opportunity.

No. 124.] TUESDAY, JANUARY 21. 1709.

— Ex humili summa ad fastigia rerum Extollit, quoties voluit Fortuna jocari.

Jur. Sat. iii. 39.

Fortune can, for her pleasure, fools advance,
And toss them on the wheels of Chance.

Dryden.

From my own Apartment, January 23.

I WENT on Saturday last to make a visit in the city; and, as I passed through Cheapside, I saw crowds of people turning down towards the Bank and struggling who should first get their money into the new-erected lottery. It gave me a great notion of the credit of our present government and administration, to find people press as eagerly to pay money as they would to receive it; and, at the same time, a due respect for that body of men who have found out so pleasing an expedient for carrying on the common cause, that they have turned a tax into a diversion. The cheerfulness of spirit, and the hopes of success, which this project has occasioned in this great city, lightens the burden of the war, and puts me in mind of some games which, they say, were invented by wise men, who were lovers of their country, to make their fellow-citizens undergo the tediousness and fatigues of a long siege. I think there is a kind of homage due to fortune, if I may call it so, and that I should be wanting to myself, if I did not lay in my pretences to her favour, and pay my compliments to her by recommending a ticket to her disposal. For this reason, upon my return to my lodgings, I sold off a couple of globes and a telescope, which, with the cash I had by me, raised the sum that was requisite for that purpose. I find, by my calculations, that it is but a hundred and fifty thousand to one, against my being worth a thousand pounds per annum for thirty-two years; and if my plumb in the city will lay me a hundred and fifty thousand pounds to twenty shillings, which is an even bet, that I am not this fortunate man, I will take the wager, and shall look upon him as a man of singular courage and fair dealing; having given orders to Mr. Morpew to subscribe such a policy in my behalf, if any person accepts of the offer. I must confess, I have had such private intimations from the twinkling of a certain star in some of my astronomical observations, that I should be unwilling to take fifty pounds a-year for my chance, unless it were to oblige a particular friend. My chief business at present is to prepare my mind for this change of fortune: for, as Seneca, who was a greater moralist, and a much richer man than I shall be with this addition to my present income, says, Munera ista Fortunæ putatis? Insidie sunt. 'What we look upon as gifts and presents of fortune, are traps and snares which she lays for the unwary.' I am arming myself against her favours with all my philosophy; and, that I may not lose myself in such a redundancy of unnecessary and superfluous wealth, I have determined to settle an annual pension out of it upon a family of Palatines, and by that means give these unhappy strangers a taste of British property. At the same time, as I have an excellent servant-maid, whose diligence in attending me has increased in proportion to my infirmities, I shall settle upon her the revenue arising out of the ten pounds, and amounting to fourteen shillings per annum; with which she may retire into Wales, where she was born a gentlewoman, and pass the remaining part of her days in a condition suitable to her birth and quality. It was impossible for me to make an inspection into my own fortune on this occasion, without seeing, at the same time, the fate of others who are embarked in the same adventure. And indeed it was a great pleasure to me to observe, that the war, which generally impoverishes those who furnish out the expense of it will, by this means, give estates to some, without making others the poorer for it. I have lately seen several in liveries, who will give as good of their own very suddenly; and took a particular satisfaction in the sight of a young country-wench, whom I this morning passed by as she was whirling her mop, with her petticoats tucked up very agreeably, who, if there is any truth in my art, is within ten months of being the handsomest great fortune in town. I must confess, I was so struck with the foresight of what she is to be, that I treated her accordingly, and said to her, 'Pray, young lady, permit me to pass by.' I would for this reason advise all masters and mistresses, to carry it with great moderation as until next Monday time should be all my brethren's minds with consolation, in this particular reason to rejoin complain. I pound prize to visit a splendor under much suffered some I found he has son into the drawn the lucky person fortunes of b 'that he nev takings.' I common refl of the great greatest succ must not ex proceed in the petitors for are now in p content to th low all that d miss them to

I must not received seven one common is, that the v cases depend the stars; as I fear, flatter are altogether me so great.

'Sir

'Coming Partridge, de juror in repu myself to yo confess it wo one who is, but poverty, gives me the the confiden

'I am, si otherwise: I venture in th of you is, th ticket for m maintain me am good for a larger lot t by their own you should s absolute ind said, I can d confession o to be rich; I can ill afford am well qua to luck in a your mercy, sider, the les in you. If acquaintance

avour, and er which I own credit,

:—

1709-10.

that I put ut a watch n the very who told d not read
; but since
l for doing

rvant, AMMOND.'

5, 1709-10.

a veri et grex ula reges,
Sat. iii. 43.
od, blind,

l,
own'd.
Francis.

25.

ers who, I them, and he fraterni-s sect, that ples of rea-
who gothe title of and every em, is proro, having occasion to us, his im-his banishibly distin-possession of cast under ts obedient represents ished, at a s had lost atics. For n Rome as n, if the in-their walls

We are,
rain to be eneral consingularity four; or if ommon his excuse him present decks of mad to go about use they do
imaginary
a to a right sense of themselves. And is it not altogether reasonable that an insignificant man, who has an immoderate opinion of his merits, and a quite different notion of his own abilities from what the rest of the world entertain, should have the same care taken of him as a beggar who fancies himself a duke or a prince? Or why should a man, who starves in the midst of plenty, be trusted with himself more than he who fancies he is an emperor in the midst of poverty? I have several women of quality in my thoughts, who set so exorbitant a value upon themselves, that I have often most heartily pitied them and wished them for their recovery under the same discipline with the pewterer's wife. I find, by several hints in ancient authors, that when the Romans were in the height of power and luxury, they assigned, out of their vast dominions, an island called Anticyra, as a habitation for madmen. This was the Bedlam of the Roman empire, whither all persons who had lost their wits used to resort from all parts of the world in quest of them. Several of the Roman emperors were advised to repair to this island; but most of them, instead of listening to such sober counsels, gave way to their distraction until the people knocked them on the head as dis-pairing of their cure. In short, it was as usual for men of distempered brains to take a voyage to Anticyra in those days, as it is in ours for persons who have a disorder in their lungs to go to Montpelier.

The prodigious crops of hellebore with which this whole island abounded, did not only furnish them with incomparable tea, snuff, and Hungary-water: but impregnated the air of the country with such sober and salutiferous steams, as very much comforted the heads, and refreshed the senses of all that breathed in it. A discarded statesman, that, at his first landing, appeared stark-staring mad, would become calm in a week's time; and, upon his return home, live easy and satisfied in his retirement. A moping lover would grow a pleasant fellow by that time he had rid thrice about the island; and a har-brained rake, after a short stay in the country, re-home again a composed, grave, worthy gentleman.

I have premised these particulars before I enter on the main design of this paper, because I would not be thought altogether notional in what I have to say, and pass only for a projector in morality. I could quote Horace, and Seneca, and some other ancient writers of good repute, upon the same occasion, and make out by their testimony, that our streets are filled with distracted persons; that our shops and taverns, private and public houses, swarm with them; and that it is very hard to make up a tolerable assembly without a majority of them. But what I have already said is, I hope, sufficient to justify the ensuing project, which I shall therefore give some account of without any further preface.

1. It is humbly proposed, that a proper receptacle or habitation, be forthwith erected for all such persons as, upon due trial and examination, shall appear to be out of their wits.

2. That, to serve the present exigency, the college in Moor-fields be very much extended at both ends; and that it be converted into a square, by adding three other sides to it.

3. That nobody be admitted into these three additional sides but such whose frenzy can lay no claim to an apartment in that row of building which is already erected.

4. That the architect, physician, apothecary, surgeon, keepers, nurses, and porters, be all and each of them cracked, provided that their frenzy does no lie in the profession or employment to which they shall severally and respectively be assigned.

N. B. It is thought fit to give the foregoing notice, that none may present himself here for any post of honour or profit, who is not duly qualified.

5. That over all the gates of the additional buildings there be figures placed in the same manner as over the entrance of the edifice already erected; provided they represent such distractions only as are proper for those additional buildings; as of an envious man gnawing his own flesh, a gamester pulling himself by the ears and knocking his head against a marble pillar, a covetous man warming himself over a heap of gold, a coward flying from his own shadow, and the like.

Having laid down this general scheme of my design, I do hereby invite all persons who are willing to encourage so public-spirited a project, to bring in their contributions as soon as possible; and to apprehend forthwith any politician whom they shall catch raving in a coffee-house, or any free-thinker whom they shall find publishing his deliriums, or any other person who shall give the like manifest signs of a crazed imagination; and I do, at the same time, give this public notice to all the madmen about this great city, that they may return to their senses with all imaginable speed, lest, if they should come into my hands, I should put them into a regimen which they would not like: for if I find any one of them persist in his frantic behaviour, I will make him, in a month's time, as famous as ever Oliver's porter was.

No. 126.] SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1709-10.

Anguillam caudâ tenes. T. D'Urfey.

You have got an eel by the tail.

From my own Apartment, January 27.

THERE is no sort of company so agreeable as that of women who have good sense without affectation, and can converse with men without any private design of imposing chains and fetters. Belvidera, whom I visited this evening, is one of these. There is an invincible prejudice in favour of all she says, from her being a beautiful woman; because she does not consider herself as such when she talks to you. This amiable temper gives a certain tincture to all her discourse, and made it very agreeable to me until we were interrupted by Lydia, a creature who has all the charms that can adorn a woman. Her attractions would indeed be irresistible, but that she thinks them so, and is always employing them in stratagems and conquests. When I turned my eye upon her as she sat down, I saw she was a person of that character, which, for the further information of my country correspondents, I had long wanted an opportunity of explaining. Lydia is a finished coquette, which is a sect among women of all others the most mischievous, and makes the greatest havoc and disorder in society. I went on in the discourse I was in with Belvidera, without showing that I had observed any thing extraordinary in Lydia: upon which, I immediately saw her look me over as some very ill-bred fellow; and, casting a scornful glance on my dress, give a shrug at Belvidera. But, as much as she despised me, she wanted my admiration, and made twenty offers to bring my eyes her way; but I reduced her to a restlessness in her seat, and impertinent playing of her fan, and many other at least notice of kind of surprised by reason not to be expected her countenance very old fellow umph without Castabella, and is to say, as Belvidera gaudimated that and worth seated, I stoping their began to lead their faces, w one woman is another, that when her own tice, Mr. Bie in some part our sex, in w been clear of a prude u this, Lydia w Castabella's of that of L 'when we co contrary effe prude and co their behavi women. Th ation of plea blood and co and the othe more virtuo really is. T to the same p and you hav from the sev from the fam into a clear observe each all her thou never mentio one asks you air, "Pray, v it must be co who, like hyp become since a belief that For the be propose one find in a ve great foundr who was no than for the s to boast that in herself, bu municating i fers of those d and took oed than admire prude, who h own heart, to examine hers in such a gift male beholde power of insp she may have heart, and is

Madame Bour-
de.

quette pushed ance (it it in n at length, ough I can-

having been had boasted rs which he im, sent for in his power
The Gascon, to obey her inner she ded the widow,
ave heard of
er husband, arrying on, a l be together of you is, to lie by him a not mass her though of a n, began to
the widow, rough what I se that will him for you
—How is it
?—If you
w, 'you will riosity. He and goes out s in pain for Madame, 'reme for par-
The widow admitting you
e agreeable,
hs; and had he heard a g of one who and who he
of the house, he better by of it, that the ur young co-terrible fright ned towards her, until he e of the bede was in the when he ob-the husband his hair, s-keep his face asleep, when,
I put out her
d. In came to whom the
The widow
ned with the

No. 127.] TUESDAY, JANUARY 31, 1709-10

Nimirum insanus paucis videatur, cō quod Maxima pars hominum morbo jectatur eodem.

Hor. 2. Sat. in 19

By few, forsooth, a madman he is thought,
For half mankind the same disease have caught.

Franc.

From my own Apartment, January 30.

There is no affection of the mind so much blest in human nature, and wrought into our very constitution, as pride. It appears under a multitu-dine of disguises, and breaks out in ten thousand different symptoms. Every one feels it in himself, and wonders to see it in his neighbour. I must confess I met with an instance of it the other day, where I should very little have expected it. Who would believe the proud person I am going to speak of is a cobbler upon Ludgate-hill? This artist being usually a lover of respect, and considering that the circumstances are such that no man living will give him, has contrived the figure of a bean, in which who stands before him in a bending posture, as if he had put under his left arm, and his right hand tended in such a manner as to hold a thread, a piece of wax, or anawl, according to the particular service in which his master thinks fit to employ him. When I saw him, he held a candle in this obsequious position. I was very well pleased with the cobbler's intention, that had so ingeniously contrived attention, and stood a little while contemplating the mortified idolatry, wherein the image did bow at the man. When we meet with such a fantastical vanity in one of this order, it is no wonder if we can trace it through all degrees above it, and particularly through out all the steps of greatness. We can see the absurdity of pride when it enters into the heart of a cobbler; though in reality it is altogether as ridiculous and unreasonable, wherever it is a possession of a human creature. There is no tri-bution to it from the reflection upon our being general, or upon any comparative period, whereby one man may excel another. The greater a man's knowledge is, the greater motive he seem to have for pride; but in the same proportion as the one rises, the other sinks, it being the elementary office of wisdom to discover to us our weaknesses and imperfections.

As folly is the foundation of pride, the nauseous superstructure of it is madness. If there was occasion for the experiment, I would not question to make a proud man a lunatic in three weeks' time, provided I had it in my power to ripen his fire with proper applications. It is an admirable reflection in Terence, where it is said of a parasite, hominem ex stultis facit insanum. 'This fellow,' he, 'has an art of converting fools into madmen.' When I was in France, the region of complaisance and vanity, I have often observed, that a great man who has entered a levee of flatterers humble temperate, has grown so intensely heated by court which was paid him on all sides, that he has been quite distracted before he could get into his coach.

If we consult the collegiates of Moor-fields, shall find most of them are beholden to their pride for their introduction into that magnificent jail.
I had, some years ago, the curiosity to enquire into the particular circumstances of these whimsical freeholders; and learned from their own mouths condition and character of each of them. Indeed, I found, that all I spoke to were persons of quality. There were at that time five duchesses, three earls, two heathen gods, an emperor, and a prophet. There were also a great number of such as were locked up from their estates, and others who concealed their titles. A leatherseller of Taunton whispered me in the ear, that he was 'the Duke of Monmouth;' but begged me not to betray him. At a little distance from him sat a tailor's wife, who asked me, as I went, if I had seen the sword-bearer? upon which I presumed to ask her, who she was? and was answered, 'my lady mayoress.'

I was very sensibly touched with compassion towards these miserable people; and, indeed, extremely mortified to see human nature capable of being thus disfigured. However, I reaped this benefit from it, that I was resolved to guard myself against a passion which makes such havock in the brain, and produces so much disorder in the imagination. For this reason I have endeavoured to keep down the secret swellings of resentment, and stifle the very first suggestions of self-esteem: to establish my mind in tranquillity, and over-value nothing in my own or in another's possession.

For the benefit of such whose heads are a little turned, though not to so great a degree as to qualify them for the place of which I have been now speaking, I shall assign one of the sides of the college which I am erecting, for the cure of this dangerous distemper.

The most remarkable of the persons, whose disturbance arises from pride, and whom I shall use all possible diligence to cure, are such as are hidden in the appearance of quite contrary habits and dispositions. Among such, I shall, in the first place, take care of one who is under the most subtle species of pride that I have observed in my whole experience.

This patient is a person for whom I have a great respect, as being an old courtier, and a friend of mine in my youth. The man has but a bare subsistence, just enough to pay his reckoning with us at the Trumpet: but, by having spent the beginning of his life in the hearing of great men and persons of power, he is always promising to do good offices to introduce every man he converses with into the world; will desire one of ten times his substance to let him see him sometimes, and hints to him, that he does not forget him. He answers to matters of no consequence with great circumspection; but, however, maintains a general civility in his words and actions, and an insolent benevolence to all whom he has to do with. This he practises with a grave tone and air; and though I am his senior by twelve years, and richer by forty pounds per annua, he had yesterday the impudence to commend me to my face, and tell me, 'he should be always ready to encourage me.' In a word, he is a very insignificant fellow, but exceeding gracious. The best return I can make him for his favours is, to carry him myself to Bedlam, and see him well taken care of.

The next person I shall provide for is of a quite contrary character, that has in him all the stiffness and insolence of quality, without a grain of sense or good-nature, to make it either respected or beloved. His pride has infected every muscle of his face; and yet, after all his endeavours to show mankind that he contemns them, he is only neglected by all that see him, as not of consequence enough to be hated.

For the cure of this particular sort of madness, it will be necessary to break through all forms with him; and good cudgels make him every more.

A third, low, whose but what being rotted, mitted crime the laws of

There with pride recover; old woman talks of no a tooth in blood in he than that sets half the

No. 128.]

No Up For No

Fr

This m hunter, wh that chara communic

'T

'SIR

'I take the inclose

it, but by maid you

course cou

'I shou

without o therefore o

of the best

as a testim

'FAR

'It bein months he secuted by unless tim your secur

you. Thi conceived

that for se

with the v

To satisfy

not mistak

you, that my imagin

petticoat,

spreading

He studied captivated tic virtues iness and sons; and of myself, ourable, I n to about ch I have
d with the in honest education ool: and,
as much ant, which ld English se on you which, to audsomest, at I want in amends an like me whether I

Lovers.'

g, and for what re-
; but the heart, that fortune that is treachese to many brough all his rival;
e falsehood that is ill-silence and male heart ht for ever e is looked almost a ns we see were, male wledged, in ve Statira's has some-nat I verily ly pity the

NE.

to be a man
acquainted pages me to ss, which I st, and treat olly arises makes this third year of rtained the d me more ust own to ave thought ars, but the he means I o him. My nd as I was us, he was declare himself to me by stories of other persons, kind look, and many ways, which he knew too well that I underderstood. Oh! Mr. Bickerstaff, it is impossible to to tell you, how industrious I have been to make him appear lovely in my thoughts. I made it a point of conscience to think well of him, and of no man else; but he has since had an estate fallen to him, and makes love to another of a greater fortune than mine. I could not believe the report of this at first; but, about a fortnight ago, I was convinced of the truth of it by his own behaviour. He came to make our family a formal visit, when, as there were several in company, and many things talked of, the discourse fell upon some unhappy woman, who was in my own circumstances. It was said by one in the room, that they could not believe the story could be true, because they did not believe any man could be so false. Upon which, I stole a look upon him with an anguish not to be expressed. He saw my eyes full of tears, yet had the cruelty to say, that he could see no falsehood in alterations of this nature, when there had been no contracts or vows interchanged.

Pray, do not make a jest of misery, but tell me seriously your opinion of his behaviour; and if you can have any pity for my condition, publish this in your next paper; that being the only way I have of complaining of his unkindness, and showing him the injustice he has done me. I am,

Your humble servant, the unfortunate STATIRA.

The name my correspondent gives herself, puts rein mind of my old reading in romances, and bring into my thoughts a speech of the renowned Don Bellianis, who, upon a complaint made to him of a discourteous knight, that had left his injured paramour in the same manner, dries up her tears with a promise of relief. 'Disconsolate damsel,' quoth he, 'a foul disgrace it were to all right-worthy professors of chivalry, if such a blot to knighthood should pass unchastised. Give me to know the abode of this recreant lover, and I will give him as a feast to the fowls of the air, or drag him bound before you at my horse's tail.'

I am not ashamed to own myself a champion of distressed damsels, and would venture as far to relieve them as Don Bellianis; for which reason, I do invite this lady to let me know the name of the traitor who has deceived her; and do promise, not only to redress, but all the fair ones of Great Britain, who lie under the same calamity, to employ my right hand for their redress, and serve them to my last drop of ink.

No. 129.] SATURDAY, FEBRUARY, 4, 1709-10

Iugenio manus est et cervix caesa.——

Jur. Sat. x. 12

His wit's rewarded with the fatal loss Of hand and head.——

R. Wynn

From my own Apartment, February 3.

WHEN my paper for to-morrow was prepared for the press, there came in this morning a mail from Holland, which brought me several advices from foreign parts, and took my thoughts off domestic affairs. Among others, I have a letter from a burgher of Amsterdam, who makes me his compliments, and tells me he has sent me several draughts of humorous and satirical pictures by the best hands of the Dutch nation. They are a trading people, and in their re-sands mechanics. They express their wit in manufacture, as we do in manuscript. He informs me, that a very witty hand has lately represented the present posture of public affairs in a 'landscape, or rather a sea-piece, wherein the potentates of the alliance are figured as their interests correspond with, or affect each other, under the appearance of commanders of ships. These vessels carry the colours of the respective nations concerned in the present war. The whole design seems to tend to one point, which is, that several squadrons of British and Dutch ships are battering a French man-of-war, in order to make her deliver up a long-boat with Spanish colours. My correspondent informs me, that a man must understand the compass perfectly well, to be able to comprehend the beauty and invention of this piece; which is so skilfully drawn, that the particular views of every prince of Europe are seen according as the ships lie to the main figure in the picture, and as that figure may help or retard their sailing. It seems this curiosity is now on board a ship bound for England, and with other rarities, made a present to me. As soon as it arrives, I design to expose it to public view at my secretary, Mr. Lillie's, who shall have an explication of all the terms of art; and I doubt not but it will give as good content as the moving picture in Fleet-street.

But, above all the honours I have received from the learned world abroad, I am most delighted with the following epistle from Rome.

'Pasquin of Rome to Isaac Bickerstaff of Great Britain, Greeting.

'STR,

'Your reputation has passed the Alps, and would have come to my ears by this time, if I had any. In short, sir, you are looked upon here as a northern droll, and the greatest virtuoso among the Tramon-tanes. Some, indeed, say, that Mr. Bickerstaff and Pasquin are only names invented to father compositions which the natural parent does not care for owning. But, however that is, all agree, that there are several persons, who, if they durst attack you, would endeavour to leave you no more limbs than I have. I need not tell you that my adversaries have joined in a confederacy with time to demolish me, and that, if I were not a very great wit, I should make the worst figure in Europe, being abridged of my legs, arms, nose, and ears. If you think fit to accept of the correspondence of so facetious a cripple, I shall from time to time send you an account of what happens at Rome. You have only heard of it from Latin and Greek authors; nay, perhaps, have read no accounts from hence, but of a triumph, ovation, or apotheosis, and will, doubtless, be surprised to see the description of a procession, jubilee, or canonization. I shall, however, send you what the place affords, in return to what I shall receive from you. If you will acquaint me with your next promotion of general officers, I will send you an account of our next advancement of saints. If you will let me know who is reckoned the bravest warrior in Great Britain, I will tell you who is the best fiddler in Rome: If you will favour me with an inventory of the riches that were brought into your nation by admiral Wager, I will not fail giving you an account of a pot of medals that has been lately dug up here, and are now under the examination of our ministers of state.

'There is one thing, in which I desire you would be very particular. What I mean is an exact list of all the religions in Great Britain, as likewise the habits, which are said here to be the great points of conscience in a serge or bro glad to see a among you, a religion; as a cravat. It receive an a which are late and the Toric in discipline works, by w would be no word, which English mon the ladies so c I will send yo

which I have tries, amours made their wa

'But, whe not tell you v and neglect t pope has bee tooth-ach, wh faction, and Every one of twenty years candidate tri these are at
to the apost for, who is l known the ti such occasio are very few insomuch, th infallibility theless hoped these his ima

'There has catacomb, wh in a law-suit longed to the order. The find there is of the posse reason of a cardinals, wh the company might be one Ælia, an ol Martial.

'I have ne you of state lately receive as an acknow which is a fic this horse fro Anjou has b lately took ca thousand mo
ness's modes
the present.

'P. S. Ma

7, 1709-10.

me
usque
, Sat. i. 75.nness, ssess.

Francis.

authors, who dory, speak htness and
ed. Pliny upon this o any thing at was im-
and unbel-
eriod of time
When we
nkind, and ms to their king out in g up to the when, per-le distance, ce, and al-
Sometimes
ree genera-
; flourishes do honour f glory be-
which they
of time,
et satisfac-
age, which history of ts, and has ous, which as any that s, or in the kingdoms
d deposed,
o another;
has given a ch a fall as n English-f influence e strongest that sur-

observe, to o make the are univer-
and, what test learnuality.

ms of such ake them
the public.
nfinite ad-y rising up
y interfer-
rupt, than
Of this we
of Rome, Brutus, en-
the same mperaries.
my extra ordinary persons at once, or find out posts suitable to their ambition and abilities. For this reason, they were all as miserable in their deaths, as they were famous in their lives, and occasioned not only the ruin of each other, but also that of the commonwealth.

It is, therefore, a particular happiness to a people when the men of superior genius and character are so justly disposed in the high places of honour, if each of them moves in a sphere which is proper to him, and requires those particular qualities in which he excels.

If I see a general commanding the forces of a country, whose victories are not to be paralleled in story, and who is as famous for his negotiations as his victories; and, at the same time, see the management of a nation's treasury in the hands of one, who has always distinguished himself by a generous contempt of his own private wealth, and an exact equality of that which belongs to the public; I cannot but think a people under such an administration may promise themselves conquests abroad, and peace at home. If I were to wish for a proper person to preside over the public councils, it should certainly be one as much admired for his universal knowledge of men and things, as for his eloquence, courage and integrity, in the exerting of such extraordinary talents.

Who is not pleased to see a person in the high station in the law, who was the most eminent in his profession, and the most accomplished orator at the bar? Or at the head of the fleet a commander, and whose conduct the common enemy received such a blow, as he has never been able to recover?

Were we to form to ourselves the idea of a kingdom, consisting chiefly of those who differ from us in religion, and are influenced by foreign politics, would it not be such a one as had signalized himself by a uniform and unshaken zeal for the Protestant interest, and by his dexterity in defeating the schemes and artifice of its enemies? In short, if we find a great man popular for his honesty and humanity, as well as famed for his learning and great skill in the languages of Europe; or a person eminent in those qualifications which make men shine in public assemblies, or for that steadiness, constancy, and good sense, which carry a man to the desired point through all the opposition of tumult and prejudice, we have the happiness to behold them in all positions suitable to their characters.

Such a constellation of great persons, if I may speak, while they shine out in their own distinct capacities, reflect a lustre upon each other, but in a more particular manner on their sovereign, who has placed them in those proper situations, by which their virtues become so beneficial to all her subjects. It is the anniversary of the birth-day of this glorious Queen, which naturally led me into this field of contemplation, and, instead of joining in the public exultations that are made on such occasions, to entertain my thoughts with the more serious pleasure of ruminating upon the glories of her reign.

While I behold her surrounded with triumphs and adorned with all the prosperity and success which heaven ever shed on a mortal, and still consider herself as such: though the person appears to me exceeding great, that has these just honours paid her, yet I must confess, she appears much greater in that she receives them with such a glorious humility, and shows she has no further regard for them than as they arise from these great events, which have made her subjects happy. For my own part, I must confess, when I see private virtues in so high a degree of perfection, I am not astonished at any extraordinary success that attends them, but look upon public triumphs as the natural consequences of religious retirements.

ADVERTISEMENT.

Finding some persons have mistaken Pasquin, who was mentioned in my last, for one who has been pilloried at Rome, I must here advertise them, that it is only a maimed statue so called, on which the private scandal of that city is generally pasted. Marforio is a person of the same quality, who is usually made to answer whatever is published by the other; the wits of that place, like too many of our own country, taking pleasure in setting innocent people together by the ears. The mentioning of this person, who is a great wit, and a great cripple, put me in mind of Mr. Estcourt, who is under the same circumstances. He was formerly my apothecary, and being at present disabled by the gout and stone, I must recommend him to the public on Thursday next: that admirable play of Ben Jonson's, called The Silent Woman, being appointed to be acted for his benefit. It would be indecent for me to appear twice in a season at these ludicrous diversions; but as I always give my man and my maid one day in the year, I shall allow them this, and am promised by Mr. Estcourt, my ingenious apothecary, that they shall have a place kept for them in the first row of the middle gallery.

No. 131.] THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1709-10.

Scelus est jugulare Falernum, Et dare Campano toxica seva mero. Mart. i. 19.

How great the crime, how flagrant the abuse!

T<sup>o</sup> adulterate generous wine, with noxious juice.
R. Wynn.

Sheer-lane, February 8.

THERE is in this city a certain fraternity of chemical operators, who work under ground in holes, caverns, and dark retirements, to conceal their mysteries from the eyes and observation of mankind. These subterraneous philosophers are daily employed in the transmutation of liquors, and, by the power of magical drugs and incantations, raising under the streets of London the choicest products of the hills and valleys of France. They can squeeze Bourdeaux out of the sloe, and draw Champagne from an apple. Virgil, in that remarkable prophecy, Incultisque rubens pendebit sentibus uva.

Virg. Ecl. iv. 29.

The ripening grape shall hang on every thorn, seems to have hinted at this art, which can turn a plantation of northern hedges into a vineyard. These adepts are known among one another by the name of wine-brewers; and, I am afraid, do great injury, not only to her Majesty's customs, but to the bodies of many of her good subjects.

Having received sundry complaints against these invisible workmen, I ordered the proper officer of my court to ferret them out of their respective caves, and bring them before me, which was yesterday executed accordingly.

The person who appeared against them was a merchant, who had by him a great magazine of wines, that he had laid in before the war; but these gentlemen, palate, that because it

As a man personal in court, with tion of drugs and puzzle for which accused some megrims; I had a tun should give men in the were prepared enlarged, w judice which done to the visible, said and sermon tions of the ingenious p a man's wr on that occ had discove manifest ta by much re

In the la mulls and f in our bloo that reign most of the nothing else

The cou tremely infl that I did these soph such as I s draught, wh excess. In parts, that usual liquo found a pin a sensible d not proceed tively dissip

This nota fence of his sity of maki doors; it be thing that reason, that to make Fro with the g already bro which he in fordshire w beginning o

When I h I gave, at t bring the se tinct phials, ranged them The workm The mercha phials were the other, th right hand, toret, who, e in his colo give me a p water; and beautiful me kind om thence er having by the ad-

pp Pontac.
much suran opportunity in de-colouring liquors of a much subtle nate end of another,
would rise ent texture also, that ees of red,
the clove Moselle,

whole practice, I dismissed them for that time; with a particular request that they would not poison any of my friends and acquaintance, and take to some honest livelihood without loss of time.

For my own part, I have resolved hereafter to be very careful in my liquors; and have agreed with a friend of mine in the army, upon their next march, to secure me two hogshheads of the best stomach-wine in the cellars of Versailles, for the good of my lubrications, and the comfort of my old age.

No. 132. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1769-10.

Habeo senectuti magnam gratiam, quæ mihi ser-monis aviditatem auxit, potationis et cibi sustulit.

Tall. de Sen.

I am much beholden to old age, which has increased my eagerness for conversation, in proportion as it has lessened my appetite of hunger and thirst.

Sheer-lane, February 10

AFTER having applied my mind with more than ordinary attention to my studies, it is my usual custom to relax and unbend it in the conversation of such as are rather easy than shining companions.

This I find particularly necessary for me before I retire to rest, in order to draw my slumbers upon me by degrees, and fall asleep insensibly. This is the particular use I make of a set of heavy honest men, with whom I have passed many hours with much indolence, though not with great pleasure. Their conversation is a kind of preparative for sleep: it takes the mind down from its abstractions, leads it into the familiar traces of thought, and lulls it into that state of tranquillity, which is the condition of a thinking man, when he is but half awake. After this, my reader will not be surprised to hear the account which I am about to give of a club of my own contemporaries, among whom I pass two or three hours every evening. This I look upon as taking my first nap before I go to bed. The truth of it is, I should think myself unjust to posterity, as well as to the society at the Trumpet, of which I am a member, did not I in some part of my writings give an account of the persons among whom I have passed almost a sixth part of my time for these last forty years. Our club consisted originally of fifteen; but, partly by the severity of the law in arbitrary times, and partly by the natural effects of old age, we are at present reduced to a third part of that number; in which, however, we have this consolation, that the best company is said to consist of five persons. I must confess, besides the afore-mentioned society, which I meet with in the conversation of this select society, I am not the less pleased with the company, in that I find myself the greatest wit among them, and am heard as their oracle in all points of learning and difficulty.

Sir Jeoffery Notch, who is the oldest of the club, has been in possession of the right-hand chair, that out of mind, and is the only man among us that has the ability of stirring the fire. This, our foreman, a gentleman of an ancient family, that came to a great estate some years before he had discretion, and run it out in hounds, horses, and cock-fighting; for which reason he looks upon himself as an honest worthy gentleman, who has had misfortunes in the world, and calls every thriving man a pitiful upstart.

Major Matchlock is the next senior, who served in the last civil wars, and has all the battles by heart.

He does not think any action in Europe worth talking of.

Major Matchlock is the next senior, who served in the last civil wars, and has all the battles by heart.

THE TATLER.

the fight of Marston-Moor; and every one of us having been knocked off his feet at the rising of the London apprentices; for we are in great esteem among us.

Old Dick Reptile is the third of our society. A good-natured indolent man, who speaks of himself, but laughs at our jokes; and brings his nephew along with him, a youth of twenty years old, to show him good company, and a taste of the world. This young fellow sits silent; but whenever he opens his mouth, at any thing that passes, he is constantly called uncle, after a jocular manner, 'Ay, ay, young men think us fools; but we old men know you are.'

The greatest wit of our company, next to myself, is a Frenchman, who in his private conversations has counted the ordinaries about Charing-cross, and told us to have been intimate with Jack Ogle. He has about ten distichs of Hudibras without book, and leaves the club until he has applied them to any modern wit be mentioned, or any town or person of note; he shakes his head at the dulness of the age, and tells us a story of Jack Ogle.

On my own part, I am esteemed among them, and they see I am something respected by the world, though at the same time I understand by my behaviour, that I am considered by them as a great deal of learning, but no knowledge; and, in short, that the major sometimes, in compliment of his military pride calls me the Philosopher, and Sir Jeoffery, no longer ago than last night, on a dispute what day of the month it was, pulled his pipe out of his mouth, and said, 'What does the scholar say to it?'

The club meets precisely at six o'clock in the evening; but I did not come last night until half an hour or seven, by which means I escaped the battle of Naseby, which the major usually begins three quarters after six: I found also that my friend the benchman had already spent three hours in it; and only waited an opportunity to deliver a sermon spoken of, that he might introduce at where 'a stick' rhymes to 'ecclesiastic.' As soon as we were all in the room, they were naming a coat and a cloak, by which I found that they had been diverting them with a story of old Reptile.

As soon as I had taken my seat, but Sir Jeoffery, in compliment of his good-will towards me, gave me a pipe of tobacco, and stirred up the fire. I took a point of morality, to be obliged by those who are in my kindness, and to set the conversation on. I took the best occasion I could to put him in mind of the story of old Gantlett, which he tells with very particular concern. He describes his descent on both sides for several generations, describing his diet and manner of life, with his battles, and particularly that in which he was killed. Gantlett was a game cock, upon whose back, in his youth, had won five hundred pounds and lost two thousand. This naturally set me upon the account of Edge-hill fight, and the duel of Jack Ogle's.

Reptile was extremely attentive to all that I said, though it was the same he had heard for these twenty years, and, upon all that I said, winked upon his nephew to mind what may suffice to give the world a taste of our conversation which we spun out until about ten of the clock, and then I took a lantern to light me home, and went off with myself, as I was going, in great humour of old men, that that part of life makes his natural propensity make him venerable.

very melancholy in a young man begin a story, that one of a quarter of five-and-twenty, gathered he tells it, until it grows a tale of two hours by the time.

The only way of a frivolous old age is, to have stores of knowledge and be useful and agreeable. The mind of man in a magazine of wisdom or to discharge itself in improving. For which more ridiculous than at there is nothing more turned his experience vantage of mankind.

In short, we, who are apt to indulge our sides, if what we speak endeavour to make out which Homer compares its sweetness.

I am afraid I shall excess I am speaking without observing, that this passage in Homer an eloquent spirit he

His tongue

No. 133.] TUESDAY

Dum tacet
Their silence

Sheer-lane

SILENCE is sometimes more precious than the most noisy time, than the most noisy time, and is on many occasions in the mind. Several authors have considered it in a part of duty and have considered it in the noise and clamour towards the enemy, to they invade an army, he makes his country move forward in a and in the depth of silence which are given us nations, where the institutions and thought, and more feel in the northern re is a religious exercise public devotions are their hearts lifted up there are certain seasons for a time, in which supposed to swell with myself been

of music,
of their har-
have stopped pause, re-
and renewed interval of an any the

There are reatest poets in them as whole works.
book of the rival of this asion of his gion of de-him with a other passes ch a sullen s, had more ave spoken.
s in Virgil, nce of Ajax that any of
t. Æneas, g loves the in, with the himself to rs, and the nocence, as ceives with ver, and an asafing him single look.
ay her face fter having as one that flying from the arms of love,

tragedy have nd that they works, by ntations of anguage to in the last e is brought his friend, only favour e ignominy
s going to ble to com-
his friend's oly silence til he has mind to his nat is inexted distress ould look les and ding a whisty of most astonish-ore grace-
moments,
suspense,

eat an ado calumny just occa-
mple of it red in all its majesty, and one, whose silence, as well as person, was altogether divine. When one consid- this subject only in its sublimity, this great instar could not but occur to me; and since I only ma- use of it to shew the highest example of it, I ha- I do not offend in it. To forbear replying to unjust reproach, and overlook it with a generous, if possible, with an entire neglect of it, is one the most heroic acts of a great mind: and, I mu- confess, when I reflect upon the behaviour of so of the greatest men in antiquity, I do not so mu- admire them, that they deserved the praise of the whole age they lived in, as because they content the envy and detraction of it.

All that is incumbent on a man of worth, who suffers under so ill a treatment, is to lie by for so time in silence and obscurity, until the prejudices the times be over, and his reputation cleared. I have often read, with a great deal of pleasure, the legacy of the famous lord Bacon, one of the great geniuses that our own or any country has produced. After having bequeathed his soul, body, and estate in the usual form, he adds, 'My name and memory I leave to foreign nations, and to my countrymen after some time be passed over.'

At the same time, that I recommend this philosophy to others, I must confess, I am so poor a practitioner in it myself, that if in the course of my lucubrations it happens, as it has done more than once, that my paper is duller than in conscience ought to be, I think the time an age until I have opportunity of putting out another, and grow famous again for two days.

I must not close my discourse upon elenchus without informing my reader, that I have by me an elaborate treatise on the aporiopesis called an apocrypha; it being a figure much used by some learned authors, and particularly by the great Littleton, who, as my lord chief justice Coke observes, had a most admirable talent at an &c.

ADVERTISEMENT.

To oblige the pretty fellows, and my fair readers, I have thought fit to insert the whole passage above mentioned relating to Dido, as it is translated by Mr. Dryden.

Not far from thence, the mournful fields appear;
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there.
The souls whom that unhappy flame invades, In secret solitude, and myrtle shades, Make endless moans; and, pining with desire, Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire.
Here Procris, Eriphyle here, he found Baring her breast, yet bleeding with the wound Made by her son. He saw Pasiphae there, With Phædra's ghost, a foul incestuous pair:
There Laodamia with Evadne moves: Unhappy both; but loyal in their loves!
Coeneus, a woman once, and once a man;
But ending in the sex she first began.
Not far from these Phœnician Dido stood;
Fresh from her wound, her bosom bath'd in blood:
Whom, when the Trojan hero hardly knew, Obscure in shades, and with a doubtful view, (Doubtful as he who runs thro' dusky night, Or thinks he sees the moon's uncertain light.)
With tears he first approach'd the sullen shade, And, as his love inspir'd him, thus he said:

'Unhappy queen! then is the common breath Of rumour true, in your reported death?
And I, alas, the cause! by heav'n I vow,
And all the powers that rule the realms below.

THE TATLER.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state!
 Commanded by the gods, and fore'd by fate; Those gods, that fate, whose unresisted might Have sent me to these regions void of light, Through the vast empire of eternal night.
 Nor dar'd I to presume, that, pressed with grief, My flight should urge you to this dire relief.
 Stay, stay your steps, and listen to my vows;
 'Tis the last interview that fate allows!
 In vain he thus attempts her mind to move, With tears and prayers, and late repenting love.
 Disdainfully she look'd; then turning round, But fix'd her eyes unmov'd upon the ground;
 And what he says, and swears, regards no more Than the deaf rocks, when the loud billows roar; But whirl'd away, to shun his hateful sight, Hid in the forest, and the shades of night:
 Then sought Sicheus through the shady grove, Who answer'd all her cares, and equall'd all her love.

134.] THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1709.

—Quis talia fundo Myrmidonum, Dolopumve, aut duri miles Ulyssei.
 Temperet a lacrymis? Virg. Æn. ii. 8.
 —Such woes
 No even the hardest of our foes could bear, Nor stern Ulysses tell without a tear. Dryden.
Sheer-lane, February 15.

I was awakened very early this morning by the distant crowing of a cock, which I thought had the finest pipe I ever heard. He seemed to me to strain his voice more than ordinary, as if he designed to make himself heard to the remotest corner of the lane. Having entertained myself a little before I went to bed with a discourse on the transmigration of men into other animals, I could not but fancy that this was the soul of some drowsy bellman who used to sleep upon his post, for which he was compelled to do penance in feathers, and distinguish the several watches of the night under the outside of a cock. While I was thinking of the condition of this poor bellman in masquerade, I heard a great knocking at my door, and was soon after told by my maid, that my worthy friend, the tall black gentleman, who frequents the coffee-houses hereabouts, desired to speak with me. This ancient Pythagorean, who has as much honesty as any man living, but good nature to an excess, brought me the following petition; which I am apt to believe he penned himself, the petitioner not being able to express his mind on paper under his present form, however famous he might have been for writing verses when he was in his original shape.

TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQUIRE, CENSOR OF GREAT BRITAIN.

'The humble petition of Job Chanticleer, in behalf of himself, and many other poor sufferers in the same condition;

From my Coop in Clare-market, SHEWETH, Feb. 13, 1709.

"That whereas your petitioner is truly descended of the ancient family of the Chanticleers, at Cock-hall near Rufford in Essex, it has been his misfortune to come into the mercenary hands of a certain ill-disposed person, commonly called a higgler, who, under the close confinement of a pannier, has conveyed him and many others up to London; but hearing by chance of your worship's great humanity towards robin-red-breasts and tom-tits, he is emboldened to beseech you to take his deplorable condition into your consideration, and must suffer as himself, Tuesday pe courage and cation.

"Your p your immed rabble, the lingering de Upon del man, who p wise nation travelled; d see a dervie red-mption fallen into th also usual to them from h a kimb in pa then insisted of treating U animal, that hours, and together. ' should be in a nation, civilized in stake, and has perhaps poor family mistress?"

I thought sonable; an lay aside a barous to n than ourselv sented this our disadva and cruelty tainments p gant divers with the li garden. I which is ca many innoc been set tog only to mak

It will be of common tertainment I am afraid, spirit in the more refined theatre very likewise rep

I must own public execr and poison in other na gratify the

When po seen him g gers, impale dying voice to please hi fully delight acted. Th English sta traordinary pidity; and plays, with done in the ught up to are almost behind the

here is just our enemies at methinks reason for tues of tene those by s, as much greatest re-if from all lar virtues.
at country-
an effusion s, cocks, or e are not enience, or ds are not creature, I f cruelty, if 8, 1709-10.

minum im-
: mihi hunc pueri volo:
hi consent,
rem meum

De Senect.

suls of men ive would I l from me:
g, as some d lest deal
or."

r received, posed per-word Free-
therefore,
re, that no myself for d the same ie reform-y exerting rstitution of this noble well as all nd Cicero;
se, eudea-midst the l was then

nkens en-
: minds of the super-
n of the l, and the

They all ptry; as d not con-damental the per-re such as endeavour, by a little trash of words and sophistry to weaken and destroy those very principles, for the vindication of which, freedom of thought at first became laudable and heroic. These apostates by reason and good sense, can look at the glorious frame of nature, without paying an adoration to Him that raised it; can consider the great revolutions of the universe, without lifting up their minds to the superior power which hath the direction of it; can presume to censure the Deity in his ways toward men; can level mankind with the beasts that perish, can extinguish in their own minds all the pious hopes of a future state, and lull themselves into stupid security against the terrors of it. If we were to take the word priestcraft out of the mouths

these shallow monsters, they would be immediately struck dumb. It is by the help of this single tenet that they endeavour to disappoint the good monks, the most learned and venerable order of men, and harden the hearts of the ignorant against the revelation of light of nature, and the common-received notions of mankind. We ought not to treat such miscreants thus upon the foot of fair disputants; but to pour out contempt upon them, and speak of them with scorn and infamy, as the pests of society, the relics of human nature, and the blasphemers of a Being whom a good man would rather die than hear dishonoured. Cicero, after having mentioned the great heroes of knowledge and recommended the divine doctrine of the immortality of the soul, calls those small pretenders to wisdom, who declare against it, certain minute philosophers, using a diminutive even of the word little, to express the despicable opinion he had of them. The contempt he throws upon them in another passage is yet more remarkable; where, to show the mean thoughts he entertains of them, he declares "he would rather be in the wrong with Plato, than in the right with such company." There is, indeed, nothing in the world so ridiculous as one of these grave philosophers free-thinkers, that hath neither passions nor appetites to gratify, no heats of blood, nor vigour of constitution, that can turn his systems of infidelity to his advantage, or raise pleasures out of them which are inconsistent with the belief of a hereafter. One that has neither wit, gallantry, mirth, or youth, to indulge by these notions, by only a poor, joyless, and comfortable vanity of distinguishing himself from the rest of mankind is rather to be regarded as a mischievous lunatic, than a mistaken philosopher. A chaste infidel, a speculative libertine, is an animal that I should not believe to be in nature, did I not sometimes meet with this species of men, that plead for the indulgence of their passions in the midst of a severe studious life, and talk against the immortality of the soul over a dish of coffee.

I would fain ask a minute philosopher, what good he proposes to mankind by the publishing of his doctrines? Will they make a man a better citizen, or father of a family; a more educating husband, friend, or son? will they enlarge his public or private virtues, or correct any of his frailties or vices? What is there either joyful or glorious in such opinions? do they either refresh or enlarge our thoughts? do they contribute to the happiness, or raise the dignity, of human nature? The only good that I have ever heard pretended to, is, that they banish terrors, and set the mind at ease. But whose terrors do they banish? It is certain, if there were any strength in their arguments, they would give great disturbance to minds that are influenced by virtue, honour, and morality, and take from us the only comforts and supports of affliction, sickness, and old age. The minds, therefore, which they set at ease, are only those of impenitent criminals and malefactors, and which, to the good of mankind, should be in perpetual terror and alarm.

I must confess, nothing is more usual than for a free-thinker, in proportion as the insolence of scepticism is abated in him by years and knowledge, or humbled and beaten down by sorrow or sickness, to reconcile himself to the genteel conceptions of reasonable creatures; so that we frequently see the apostates turning from their revolt towards the end of their lives, and employing the refuse of their parts in promoting those truths which they had before endeavoured to invalidate.

The history of a gentleman in France is very well known, who was so zealous a promoter of infidelity, that he had got together a select company of disciples, and travelled into all parts of the kingdom to make converts. In the midst of his fantastical success he fell sick, and was reclaimed to such a sense of his condition, that after he had passed some time in great agonies and horrors of mind, he begged those who had the care of burying him, to dress his body in the habit of a capuchin, that the devil might not run away with it; and, to do further justice upon himself, desired them to tie a halter about his neck, as a mark of that ignominious punishment, which, in his own thoughts, he had so justly deserved.

I would not have persecution so far disgraced, as to wish these vermin might be animadverted on by any legal penalties; though I think it would be highly reasonable, that those few of them who die in the professions of their infidelity, should have such tokens of infamy fixed upon them, as might distinguish those bodies which are given up by the owners to oblivion and putrefaction, from those which rest in hope, and shall rise in glory. But at the same time that I am against doing them the honour of the notice of our laws, which ought not to suppose there are such criminals in being, I have often wondered, how they can be tolerated in any mixed conversations, while they are venting these absurd opinions; and should think, that if, on any such occasions, half a dozen of the most robust Christians in the company would lead one of those gentlemen to a pump, or convey him into a blanket, they would do very good service both to church and state. I do not know how the law stands in this particular; but I hope, whatever knocks, bangs, or thumps, might be given with such an honest intention, would not be construed as a breach of the peace. I dare say, they would not be returned by the person who receives them; for, whatever these fools may say in the vanity of their hearts, they are too wise to risk their lives upon the uncertainty of their opinions.

When I was a young man about this town, I frequented the ordinary of the Black Horse in Holborn, where the person that usually presided at the table was a rough old-fashioned gentleman, who, according to the customs of those times, had been the major and preacher of a regiment. It happened one day that a noisy young officer, bred in France, was venting some new-fangled notions, and speaking, in the gaiety of his humour, against the dispensations of Providence. The major, at first, only desired him to talk more respectfully of one for whom all the company had an honour; but, finding him run on in his extravagance, began to reprimand him after a more serious manner. 'Young man,' said he, 'do not abuse your Benefactor whilst you are eating his bread. Consider whose air you breathe, whose presence you are under, and the power of that power, and his dishonour, turn matters to preach?' 'I take care when I am in honour.' 'Thou art an ass, use thee as thou art, high, that thou shalt see their coming, his antagonist, pass might, him to a degenerate, proceeded from derbolt does thee, I shall not be lessness to thy. Upon this he said in a loud voice, which so terrified him, that he immediately disarmed himself in this posture, to grant it, a fence in a gentleman's dress, his proselyte, the whole of him in the g

No. 136.] T
Deprendi

To be sur
And for th
White
rid

BECAUSE
ginnings of telling you, change as ha lock. These other, which even greater wife and hus life. Mr. B tion, and un tion, but pra honest house from a natur cence, a free certain sign couragement

Tom Varn Temple, by obliging as fourth year, lay in the h an intimacy hard student the law, too mature deli that he, as a should have
He no soon gan it by a faithful prom the next eve be absent.

The letter

BRITISH LITERARYISTS.

the other, or the enemy. During the whole winter, the monarchs of France have used their utmost skill in the management of such matters as might unite the allies, in hope of a general attack, and the event, either in the north or south, may be the ruin of Europe, which might affect some part of our empire, and it is too nearly to leave it in a company with our allies, to be so ready to the interest of the whole. In a treaty of peace, the French king's own name is to be made use of as possible; but the case is too far advanced too fast to admit of more delay, the emperor says in the present condition of France, he will not. The Turkish, in the name of the king, sent a letter to the king of France, saying, 'That if you will, we will sell all the preliminary articles shall be made use of, and during the treaty on the 30th.'

St. James, February 20.

I have been earnestly solicited for a further representation of the Factoid by several of the fair sex, and especially by the following petitioners.

The humble petition of Deborah Hark, Sarah Tinsdale, and Rachel Thimble, spinners and washers, commonly called waiting-maids, to your worship's honour and their sisterhood;

Sheweth,

That your worship has been pleased to order and command, that no person or persons shall presume to wear quilted petticoats, on forfeiture of the said petticoats, or penalty of wearing ruffs, after the said petitioners' petition now expired.

That your petitioners have, time out of mind, been used to wear their ladies' clothes, or to sell the same.

That the sale of the said clothes is spoiled by your worship's said prohibition.

Your petitioners, therefore, most humbly pray that your worship will please to allow, that all gentlewomen may be allowed to wear such clothes, or to repair the loss of such property, as your worship shall think fit.

And your petitioners, &c.

That your petitioners, in compliance of this petition, be allowed to sell all persons, but the petitioners, the said clothes, to wear the said garment, for the date hereof.

St. James, Thursday, February 23, 1761.

The petitioners are Deos, Erebusque, Chaosque, Tox, and the Creation—Aug. En. iv. 51.

He three invokes the infernal powers profound—O Erebus and Chaos, twice he calls.

O, Heaven's temple come—R. Wynn.

St. James, February 22.

Dick Rogers and I sat this evening later than I have done before, and as some men are better company when only with one friend, others when they are in a number, I found Dick to be of the former kind. He was talking to me, in very just terms, of all those which he frequently met with in the world, and he frequently met with in the world.

He was speaking some use ten times more words than I could say some put in words quite foreign to the subject, and others adorn their discourse with mottoes and allusions, by way of tropes and metaphors. What my good friend started next up to me, that I could come this evening, and let me as I could, and I was myself, whence should arise such a number of occurrences in discourse? where is it not to be found in all reasonable beings, that the soon as a man speaks his mind, the more complainant he is to the man with whom he talks: but, upon mat-deliberation, I am come to this resolution, that for one man who speaks to be understood, there are ten who talk only to be admired.

The ancient Greeks had little independent syllables called expletives, which they brought into their discourses both in verse and prose, for no other purpose but for the better grace and sound of their sentences and periods. I know no example but this, which can authorise the use of more words than are necessary. But whether it be from this freedom taken by that wise nation, or however it arises, Dick Reptile hit upon a very just and common cause of offence in the generality of people of all orders.—We have one here in our laze, who speaks nothing without quoting an authority; for it is always with him, 'so and so, 'as the man said.' He asked me this morning, how I did, 'as the man said?' and hoped I would come now and then to see him, 'as the man said.' I am acquainted with another, who never delivers himself upon any subject, but he cries, 'he only speaks his poor judgment; this is his humble opinion; as for his part, if he might presume to offer any thing on that subject.' But of all the persons who add elegancies and superfluities to their discourses, those who deserve the foremost rank are the swearers; and the lump of these may, I think, be very aptly divided into the common distinction of high and low. Dulness and barrenness of thought is the original of it in both these sects, and they differ only in constitution. The low is generally a phlegmatic, and the high a choleric coxcomb. The man of phlegm is sensible of the emptiness of his discourse, and will tell you, that, 'i'fack-ins, such a thing is true;' or, if you warm him a little, he may run into passion and cry, 'odsbodikins, you do not say right.' But the high affects a sublimity in dulness, and invokes 'hell and damnation' at the breaking of a glass, or the slowness of a drawer.

I was the other day trudging along Fleet-street on foot, and an old army-friend came up with me. We were both going towards Westminster; and, finding the streets were so crowded that we could not keep together, we resolved to club for a coach. This gentleman I knew to be the first of the order of the choleric. I must confess, were there no crime in it, nothing could be more diverting than the impertinence of the high juror: for, whether there is remedy or not against what offends him, still he is to show he is offended; and he must, sure, not omit to be magnificently passionate, by falling on all things in his way. We were stopped by a train of coaches at Temple-bar. 'What the devil!' says my companion, 'cannot you drive on, coachman? D—n you all, for a set of sons of whores; you will stop here to be paid by the hour! There is not such a set of confounded dogs as the coachmen unchanged! But these rascally cits—'Ounds, why should not there be a tax to make these dogs widen their gates? Oh! but the hell-hounds move at last.' 'Ay,' said I, 'I knew you would make them whip on, if once they heard you.'—'No,' says he, 'but would it not fret a man to the devil, to pay for being carried slower than he can walk? Look ye! there is for ever a stop at this hole by St. Clement's church, Blood, you dog! Hark ye, sirrah!—Why, and be d—d to you, do not you drive over that fellow? Thunder, furies, and damnation! I will cut your ears off, you fellow before there—Come hither, you dog you, and let me wring your neck round your shoulders.' We had a repetition of the same eloquence at the Cockpit, and the turning into

This gave
of the crea made me c makes a ma well said, 't cuse it, no tion.' In a sonants clai make an ac dwell long is already b men, and ca writers, who courage and

St. J.

There arr wich, who l borough was important g queen, and mind of the Harry the F
The poet w hero:

'Oh for a
Then shov
Assume th Leash'd in and fire
Crouch fo

A conqu such a dread makes a pic is to be met

Shakspear allegory so another pas sublime as t gedy of Jul foretold the be brought great man, adds the foll

"And Ca
With Ate
Shall in th
Cry havoc

I do not c mind, in my ginary perso spirit. He which was which we m that great m flections. Th shut, and in upon a pile chains, bello teeth in bloo Claudentu
Sava sede ahenis
Post terg

Janus him
And keep
With bolt Imprison'
High on a
He sits at

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

for the bene twenty-
the second
l that day.
re it thun-tune, the the finest
the same

ing is only at the corkerstaff for esent him n hands, a

5, 1709-10. nem.
viii. 670.
aws,
—Dryden.

y spirit in m the opi-erence due et against generality
any such e to do as rd my old ion among vith grace, re an audimotion, his nothing in restraint, considers uprove his leasure run
non in life, e most inloing what an immopect it for us, that it make them

There is being adnces, every s are fixed makes. He t observa-
a the com-n from it.
ible tokens ervation is t is there-ge even of lf an idea er to exion of the al fable in re are very know our
; but, had thes nobselves how sic virtue, of Gyges,

who is said to have had an enchanted ring, which had in it a miraculous quality, making him who wore it visible or invisible, as he turned it to and from his body. The use Gyges made of his occasional invisibility was, by the advantage of it, to mislead a queen, and murder a king. Tully takes notice of this allegory, and says very handsomely, 'that a man of honour who had such a ring would act just in the same manner as he would without it.' It is indeed no small pitch of virtue, under the temptation of impunity, and the hopes of accomplishing all a man desires, not to transgress the rules of justice and virtue; but this is rather not being an ill man than being positively a good one; and it seems wonderful, that so great a soul as Tully should not turn to himself a thousand worthy actions, which a virtuous mind would be prompted to by the possession of such a secret. There are certainly some parts of mankind that are guardian-beings to the other. Sallust could say of Cato, 'That he had rather be than appear, good,' but, indeed, this eulogium is no higher than, as I just now hinted, to an inaction, siveness, rather than an active virtue. Had it occurred to the noble orator to represent, in his language, the glorious pleasures of a man secretly employed in beneficence and generosity, it would certainly have made a more charming page than any he has left behind him. How might a man furnished with Gyges's secret, employ it in bringing together distant friends; laying quarrels for creating good-will in the room of groundless hatred; in removing the pangs of an unjust jealousy, the shyness of an imperfect reconciliation, and the tremor of an awful love! Such a one could give confidence to bashful merit, and confusion to overbearing impudence.

Certain it is, that secret kindnesses done to mankind are as beautiful as secret injuries are detestable. To be invisibly good is as godlike, as to be invisibly ill diabolical. As degenerate as we are apt to say the age we live in is, there are still amongst us men of illustrious minds, who enjoy all the pleasures of good actions, except that of being commended for them. There happens, among other very worthy instances of a public spirit, one which I am obliged to discover, because I know not otherwise how to obey the commands of the benefactor. A citizen of London has given directions to Mr. Rayner, the writing-master of St. Paul's school, to educate at his charge ten boys, who shall be nominated by me, in writing and accounts, until they shall be fit for any trade; I desire, therefore, such as know any proper objects for receiving this bounty, to give notice thereof to Mr. Morphew, or Mr. Lillie; and they shall, if properly qualified, have instructions accordingly.

Actions of this kind have in them something so transcendent, that it is an injury to applaud them, and a diminution of that merit which consists in shunning our approbation. We shall therefore leave them to enjoy that glorious obscurity; and silently admire their virtue who can condemn the most delicious of human pleasures, that of receiving the praise. Such celestial dispositions very justly suspend the discovery of their benefactions, until they come where their actions cannot be misinterpreted, and receive their first congratulations in the company of angels.

ADVERTISEMENT.

Whereas Mr. Bickerstaff, by a letter bearing date this twenty-fourth of February, has received information, that there are, in and about the Royal Exchange, a sort of people commonly known by the name of Whettors, who drink themselves into an intermediate state of being neither drunk nor sober before the hours of Exchange or business; and in that condition buy and sell stocks, discount notes, and do many other acts of well-disposed citizens; this is to give notice, that from this day forward, no Whetter shall be able to give or endorse any note, or execute any other point of commerce, after the third half-pint, before the hour of one; and whoever shall transact any matter or matters with a Whetter, not being himself of that order, shall be conducted to Moorfields upon the first application of his next of kin.

N.B.—No tavern near the Exchange shall deliver wine to such as drink at the bar standing, except the same shall be three parts of the best cider, and the master of the house shall produce a certificate of the same from Mr. Tintoret, or some other credible wine-painter.

Whereas the model of the intended Bedlam is now finished, and the edifice itself will be very suddenly begun; it is desired, that all such as have relations, whom they would recommend to our care, would bring in their proofs with all speed; none being to be admitted, of course, but lovers, who are put into an immediate regimen. Young politicians also are received without fees or examination.

No. 139.] TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1710.

Nihil est quod credere de se

Non possit, cum laudatur Diis æqua potestas.

Juv. Sat. iv. 70.

Nothing so monstrous can be said or feign'd, But with belief and joy is entertain'd, When to her face a giddy girl is prais'd, By ill-judg'd flattery to an angel rais'd.

Dryden.

Sheer Lane, February 27. 1

WHEN I reflect upon the many nights I have sat up for some months last past, in the greatest anxiety for the good of my neighbours and contemporaries, it is no small discouragement to me, to see how slow a progress I make in the reformation of the world. But indeed I must do my female readers the justice to own, that their tender hearts are much more susceptible of good impressions than the minds of the other sex. Business and ambition take up men's thoughts too much to leave room for philosophy; but if you speak to women in a style and manner proper to approach them, they never fail to improve by your counsels. I shall therefore, for the future, turn my thoughts more particularly to their service; and study the best methods to adorn their persons, and inform their minds in the justest methods to make them what nature designed them, the most beautiful objects of our eyes, and the most agreeable companions of our lives. But, when I say this, I must not omit, at the same time, to look into their errors and mistakes, that being the readiest way to the intended end of adorning and instructing them. It must be acknowledged, that the very inadvertencies of this sex are owing to the other; for if men were not flatterers, women could not fall into that general cause of all their follies and our misfortunes, the love of flattery. Were the commendation of these agreeable creatures built upon its proper foundation, the higher we raised their opinion of themselves, the greater would be the advantage to our sex; but all the topic of praise is drawn from very senseless and extravagant and perfect love with a no more Mr. and educate minute that conceives a gave so une before untou tiny, which he de live or die; only thing t By this mea have romped declaration, he has given calls himself by having t to suit every After he has never hope she has had less sincere.

If the ap the address time an adm succeed. S his mistress gentleness of respect to he had improv sired him v that of all w though his c she had as pected from l of a matron carried on w

Instead of taking all the letters of lo nymphs, and

By this re relations and female part e they were d Arcadia, rat England. I ness to conv fore have be recluse men representatio retired, by in reflections. tance into t thought it tid use all my o the same fo lately spok observed to a chambermaid the bedcham daughter, ju

I drew the safety of my outpassion, b and a letter woman think upon her fac and her lips that admired the boy, s Troy?

Waller. thing sweet-thought had ok out her
I suppose,
the follow-

; but knew and noise on the moglance that t and hear-

It is said,
arises from the blessed,
e. Such, I
ing; and if ericy, as to tasting the which con-

she rushed sulted her raised her ng the last ted only in s called her ous face of on for the t was so far r woman's
of the in-declaring a e him wait, ey that was er had put he were in-celestial nk himself
y and foru

staying for in the opi-
pen inspitical in the e-minence nly formed n, but it is o regularly
make love.
e New Ex-
s that sell

1709-10.

. iv 23.

— France.

eat grandong some ain, where day of St.
at state of t I am the less concerned at this, because I have for this day two last past observed, that we novelists have been condemned wholly to the pastry-cooks. the eyes the nation being turned upon greater matters. Th therefore, being a time when none but my immedia correspondents will read me, I shall speak to the chiefly at this present writing. It is the fate of who pretend to joke, to be frequently understood be only upon the droll when we are speaking most seriously, as appears by the following letter Charles Lillie.

'MR. LILLIE, London, Feb. 28, 1709-1
'It being professed by Esquire Bickerstaff, th his intention is to expose the vices and follies of t age, and to promote virtue and good-will among mankind; it must be a comfort for a person labor ing under great straits and difficulties, to read a thing that has the appearance of succour. I shou be glad to know, therefore, whether the intelligen given in his Tatler of Saturday last, of the intend charity of a certain citizen of London, to mainta the education of ten boys in writing and account until they be fit for trade, be given only to encoura and recommend persons to the practice of such uo and charitable designs; or, whether there be a p son who really intends to do so. If the latter, humbly beg Esquire Bickerstaff's pardon for makin a doubt, and impute it to my ignorance; and mo humbly crave, that he would be pleased to gi notice in his Tatler, when he thinks fit, whether h nomination of ten boys be disposed, or whether the be room for two boys to be recommended to him and that he will permit the writer of this to prese him with two boys, who, it is humbly presumed, wil be judged to be very remarkable objects of suc charity.

'Sir,
'Your most humble servant'

I am to tell this gentleman in sober sadness, an without jest, that there really is so good and cha ritable a man as the benefactor enquired for in hi letter, and that there are but two boys yet named The father of one of them was killed at Blenheim the father of the other at Almanza. I do not her give the names of the children, because I should take it to be an insolence in me to publish them, i a charity which I have only the direction of as servant to that worthy and generous spirit, wh bestows upon them this bounty without laying th bondage of an obligation. What I have to do is t tell them, they are beholden only to their Maker to kill in them, as they grow up, the false shame o poverty; and let them know, that their present for tune, which is come upon them by the loss of thei poor fathers on so glorious occasions, is much mor honourable than the inheritance of the most am ill-gotten wealth.

The next letter which lies before me is from a ma of sense, who strengthens his own authority wit that of Tully, in persuading me to what he ver justly believes one cannot be averse.

'MR. BICKERSTAFF, London, Feb. 27, 1709

'I am so confident of your inclination to promot any thing that is for the advancement of libera arts, that I lay before you the following translation of a paragraph in Cicero's oration in defence o Archias the poet, as an incentive to the agreeabl and instructive reading of the writings of the Augu tan age. Most vices and follies proceed from man's incapacity of entertaining himself, and we ar generally fools in company, because we dare not b wise alone. I hope, on some future occasions, you this no barren hint. Tully, after having handsome things of his client, commends of which he was master, as follows :

'much profit be not reaped in the study of and if pleasure only be found; yet, in my this relaxation of the mind should be most humane and ingenuous. Other things for all ages, places, and seasons. These form youth, delight old age, adorn pros- and soften, and even remove adversity, en- home, are no hindrance abroad; do not at night, and keep us company on the road, the country.

'I am,

'Your humble servant,

'STREPHON.'

Following epistle seems to want the quickest because a lady is every moment offended is answered, which is best done by letting her see in her own letter how tender she is to him so.

'comes from a relation of yours, though to you, who, besides the tie of consan- has some value for you on the account of vibrations, those being designed to refine ervation, as well as cultivate our minds. I beg the favour of you, in one of your Tater what manner you please, to correct a friend of mine, for an indecorum he is in discourse, of calling his acquaintance, speaks to them, Madam: as for example, in Jenny Distaff, Madam Distaff; which, I you are sensible, is very unpolite, and it is like me often uneasy for him, though I can- him of it myself, which makes me guilty of umption, that I depend upon your goodness e; and I do assure you, the gentleman will ur reprehension, for he is, as I am, Sir,

'Your most humble servant and cousin,

'DOROTHY DRUMSTICK.'

ite this in a thin under-petticoat, and never ill wear a fardingal.'

'no sooner read the just complaint of Mrs. ck, but I received an urgent one from of the fair sex, upon faults of a more pernicious consequence.

'BICKERSTAFF,

erving that you are entered into a corres- ewith Pasquin, who is, I suppose, a Roman I beg of you to forbear giving him any of our religion or manners, until you have out certain misdemeanours even in our s. Among others, that of bowing, saluting, snuff, and other gestures. Lady Autumn e a very low courtesy the other day from the v, and, with the most courtly air imaginable, herself miserable sinner. Her niece, soon ying, Forgive us our trespasses, courtesied loating look at my brother. He returned it, his snuff-box, and repeating yet a more expression. I beg of you, good Mr. Censor, all Pasquin any thing of this kind, and to this does not come from one of a morose mean birth, rigid education, narrow fortune, try in opinion, or from one in whom time n out all taste of pleasure. I assure you, it herwise, for I am possessed of all the con- dvantages; and, I hope, wealth, good hu- and good breeding, may be best employed in ice of religion and virtue; and desire you as soon as possible, remark upon the above- ed indecorums, that we may not long transgress against the tion in the former.

The last letter I sha is written by a very i such interrogative ge no other way than b this:

'DEAR MR. BIC

'Are you quite as

To which I can on

'DEAR CHLOE,

'Are you quite as

No. 141.] SATUR

Sheer

WHILE the attention from reading us wr selves against it is at part, I shall still let by my correspondent sentiments rather th readers more diseng When I came home letters and petitions other order, than as follows:

'Sir,

'Having a daught would endeavour she such as may be usefu deportment. In orde her at some boardin My wife opposes it, a that she is too much formalities of visiting that none, though mu with all these perfect a needle: but, how we have agreed to and, knowing your daughter exactly as y serious in my requ your answer, which Sir, your humble see

'Sir, pray answer be serviceable to the

I am as serious on ent can be; and am piness or misfortune manner of educating lately said, I design ticularly to them, therefore a little tim portant a subject, fill tea one week le whether she shall be

'O

'MR. BICKERST

'Your notice in th of Saturday last abo Royal Exchange, is gentlemen who use Chancery-office in Cl a particular certain gentlemen that belo Chancery-office, bot yard, that are not long, but very music

[illegible]

The portion of the inhabitants of the parish of Godebun in the county of Middlesex.

ry Bureau • HARVARD S. O. WORTH,

1. T. W. — That, where as, it is the unforgotten light of a 2. remembered soul, that shines to inspiration, every hour, a very
 3. different expression, in the spirit, that the light of
 4. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. 101. 102. 103. 104. 105. 106. 107. 108. 109. 110. 111. 112. 113. 114. 115. 116. 117. 118. 119. 120. 121. 122. 123. 124. 125. 126. 127. 128. 129. 130. 131. 132. 133. 134. 135. 136. 137. 138. 139. 140. 141. 142. 143. 144. 145. 146. 147. 148. 149. 150. 151. 152. 153. 154. 155. 156. 157. 158. 159. 160. 161. 162. 163. 164. 165. 166. 167. 168. 169. 170. 171. 172. 173. 174. 175. 176. 177. 178. 179. 180. 181. 182. 183. 184. 185. 186. 187. 188. 189. 190. 191. 192. 193. 194. 195. 196. 197. 198. 199. 200. 201. 202. 203. 204. 205. 206. 207. 208. 209. 210. 211. 212. 213. 214. 215. 216. 217. 218. 219. 220. 221. 222. 223. 224. 225. 226. 227. 228. 229. 230. 231. 232. 233. 234. 235. 236. 237. 238. 239. 240. 241. 242. 243. 244. 245. 246. 247. 248. 249. 250. 251. 252. 253. 254. 255. 256. 257. 258. 259. 260. 261. 262. 263. 264. 265. 266. 267. 268. 269. 270. 271. 272. 273. 274. 275. 276. 277. 278. 279. 280. 281. 282. 283. 284. 285. 286. 287. 288. 289. 290. 291. 292. 293. 294. 295. 296. 297. 298. 299. 300. 301. 302. 303. 304. 305. 306. 307. 308. 309. 310. 311. 312. 313. 314. 315. 316. 317. 318. 319. 320. 321. 322. 323. 324. 325. 326. 327. 328. 329. 330. 331. 332. 333. 334. 335. 336. 337. 338. 339. 340. 341. 342. 343. 344. 345. 346. 347. 348. 349. 350. 351. 352. 353. 354. 355. 356. 357. 358. 359. 360. 361. 362. 363. 364. 365. 366. 367. 368. 369. 370. 371. 372. 373. 374. 375. 376. 377. 378. 379. 380. 381. 382. 383. 384. 385. 386. 387. 388. 389. 390. 391. 392. 393. 394. 395. 396. 397. 398. 399. 400. 401. 402. 403. 404. 405. 406. 407. 408. 409. 410. 411. 412. 413. 414. 415. 416. 417. 418. 419. 420. 421. 422. 423. 424. 425. 426. 427. 428. 429. 430. 431. 432. 433. 434. 435. 436. 437. 438. 439. 440. 441. 442. 443. 444. 445. 446. 447. 448. 449. 450. 451. 452. 453. 454. 455. 456. 457. 458. 459. 460. 461. 462. 463. 464. 465. 466. 467. 468. 469. 470. 471. 472. 473. 474. 475. 476. 477. 478. 479. 480. 481. 482. 483. 484. 485. 486. 487. 488. 489. 490. 491. 492. 493. 494. 495. 496. 497. 498. 499. 500. 501. 502. 503. 504. 505. 506. 507. 508. 509. 510. 511. 512. 513. 514. 515. 516. 517. 518. 519. 520. 521. 522. 523. 524. 525. 526. 527. 528. 529. 530. 531. 532. 533. 534. 535. 536. 537. 538. 539. 540. 541. 542. 543. 544. 545. 546. 547. 548. 549. 550. 551. 552. 553. 554. 555. 556. 557. 558. 559. 560. 561. 562. 563. 564. 565. 566. 567. 568. 569. 570. 571. 572. 573. 574. 575. 576. 577. 578. 579. 580. 581. 582. 583. 584. 585. 586. 587. 588. 589. 590. 591. 592. 593. 594. 595. 596. 597. 598. 599. 600. 601. 602. 603. 604. 605. 606. 607. 608. 609. 610. 611. 612. 613. 614. 615. 616. 617. 618. 619. 620. 621. 622. 623. 624. 625. 626. 627. 628. 629. 630. 631. 632. 633. 634. 635. 636. 637. 638. 639. 640. 641. 642. 643. 644. 645. 646. 647. 648. 649. 650. 651. 652. 653. 654. 655. 656. 657. 658. 659. 660. 661. 662. 663. 664. 665. 666. 667. 668. 669. 670. 671. 672. 673. 674. 675. 676. 677. 678. 679. 680. 681. 682. 683. 684. 685. 686. 687. 688. 689. 690. 691. 692. 693. 694. 695. 696. 697. 698. 699. 700. 701. 702. 703. 704. 705. 706. 707. 708. 709. 710. 711. 712. 713. 714. 715. 716. 717. 718. 719. 720. 721. 722. 723. 724. 725. 726. 727. 728. 729. 730. 731. 732. 733. 734. 735. 736. 737. 738. 739. 740. 741. 742. 743. 744. 745. 746. 747. 748. 749. 750. 751. 752. 753. 754. 755. 756. 757. 758. 759. 760. 761. 762. 763. 764. 765. 766. 767. 768. 769. 770. 771. 772. 773. 774. 775. 776. 777. 778. 779. 780. 781. 782. 783. 784. 785. 786. 787. 788. 789. 790. 791. 792. 793. 794. 795. 796. 797. 798. 799. 800. 801. 802. 803. 804. 805. 806. 807. 808. 809. 810. 811. 812. 813. 814. 815. 816. 817. 818. 819. 820. 821. 822. 823. 824. 825. 826. 827. 828. 829.

[illegible]

11.  $\frac{1}{2} \cdot \frac{1}{3} \cdot \frac{1}{4} \cdot \frac{1}{5}$

NO. 112. TUESDAY, MARCH 7, 1791.

 $\Delta_{\text{theoretical}}^{\text{theoretical}}, \Delta_{\text{theoretical}}^{\text{theoretical}}$ [illegible]

There is a great deal of thinking, something very different from the sort of thinking I must have had in my childhood, and he did not get any more of the impression that they had in the past, when they were in the best company in the world. During the circumstances of that old autumn, and out of him, was being told that he had been a member of the church in grand old England, and that he had been a member of the church in grand old England, and that he had been a member of the church in grand old England. There is a great deal of thinking in such a world, and it is very different from the sort of thinking I must have had in my childhood, and he did not get any more of the impression that they had in the past, when they were in the best company in the world. During the circumstances of that old autumn, and out of him, was being told that he had been a member of the church in grand old England, and that he had been a member of the church in grand old England, and that he had been a member of the church in grand old England.

But, since the end and infirmities for which we pray are not such proper places, the next happiness is to be the object of prayer, and as such has to be the demands of my correspondents. The following letter is what has given me no small inquietude, it being an accusation of partiality, and disregard to merit, in the person of a virtuoso, who is the most eloquent of all men upon small occasions, and is the more to be admired for his prodigious fertility of invention, which never appears but upon subjects which others would have thought barren. But, in consideration of his uncommon talents, I am contented to let him be the hero of my next two days, by inserting his friend's recommendation of him at large.

'DEAR COUSIN, Nando's, Feb. 28, 1709.

'I am just come out of the country, and upon perusing your late lucubrations, I find Charles Lillie to be the darling of your affections; that you have given him a place, and taken no small pains to establish him in the world; and, at the same time have passed by his namesake at this end of the town, as if he was a citizen defunct, and one of no use in a commonwealth. I must own, his circumstances are so good, and so well known, that he does not stand in need of having his fame published to the world; but, being of an ambitious spirit, and an aspiring soul, he would be rather proud of the honour, than desirous of the profit, which might result from your recommendation. He is a person of a particular genius, 'the first that brought toys in fashion, and baubles to perfection. He is admirably well versed in screws, springs, and hinges, and deeply read in knives, combs or scissars, buttons, or buckles. He is a perfect master of words, which uttered with a smooth voluble tongue, flow into a most persuasive eloquence; insomuch, that I have known a gentleman of distinction find several ingenious faults with a toy of his, and show his utmost dislike to it, as being either useless or ill-conceived; but when the orator behind the counter, had harangued upon it for an hour and a half, displayed its hidden beauties, and revealed its secret perfections, he has wondered how he had been able to spend so great a part of his life without so important a utensil. I will not pretend to furnish out an inventory of all the valuable commodities that are to be found at his shop.

'I shall content myself with giving an account of what I think most curious. Imprimis, his pocket-books are very neat and well contrived, not for keeping bank-bills, or goldsmith's notes, I confess; but they are admirable for registering the lodgings of Madonnas, and for preserving letters from ladies of quality. His whips and spurs are so nice, that they will make one that buys them ride a fox-hunting, though before he hated noise and early rising, and was afraid of breaking his neck. His seals are curiously fancied, and exquisitely well cut, and of great use to encourage young gentlemen to write a good hand. Ned Puzzlepost has been ill used by his writing-master, and writ a sort of a Chinese, or downright scrabblana: however, upon his buying a seal of my friend, he is much improved by continual writing, that it is believed in a short time one may be able to read his letters, and find out his meaning, without guessing. His pistols and fuses are so very good, that they are fit to be laid up among the finest china. Then his tweezer cases are incomparable: you shall have one not much bigger than your finger, with seventeen several instruments in it, all necessary every hour of the day, during the whole course of a man's life. But if this virtuoso excels in one thing more than another, it is in canes. He has spent his most select hours in the knowledge of that he is a upon any canes are either with opinion it talk, sit, or them. He the value of has two the Empty, one cane of Ch and Tom I they were p there should much in the Charles," as for ten piec for five."

"I am con stand canes be so overs true jambee dragon."

'This virt ing in the purpose to le that ever lan cut about to subscribe for will be take joint. They dragon gra concerning C sufficient to consideration oblige

N. B. W gold snuff-bo that Charles next, which after Easter for the box Sunday night after that tim Monday, wh

No. 143.]

I was this a sister Jenny had, methou that was a breeding an the simplici ment. As so to me of the to remove ou acquainted; horses, that much seldom journey with home the san but would t her coach, t She very pe chariot.' 'V and has he s she, 'but I his order; a time, bade n-

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

is, affairs those that please to be wretched, with all other necessities for pensive passion.

And, for the convenience of such whose affairs will not permit them to leave this town, at the same place they may be furnished, during the season, with opening birds, flowering thyme, warbling birds sporting lambkins, and fountain water, right or wrong, as good, are bottled on the spot by one sent down to the river, penny a tin.

N. B. The nymphs and swains are further guaranteed to understand, that, in those happy climes, they are so far from being troubled with wolves, that, a wolf or even foxes, a considerable pack of hounds have been lately forced to eat sheep.

Whereas, on the sixth instant, at midnight several persons of high honour and loose manners having taken upon them in the shape of men, with the voice of the players belonging to Mr. Powell's company, to call up surgeons of high rank and physicians to persons in sound and perfect health: This is to certify, that Mr. Powell locked up the legs of his company for their mischief that night; and that Mr. Powell will pay for any damages done by the said persons.

It is also further advised, that there were no mischief wrought when those persons called them up to several parts of Westminster; but that those gentlemen who were in the company of the said posters, may take care to call such useful persons the sixth of December next.

The Common having observed, that there are wrought ladies' shoes and slippers put out to view at a great shoemaker's shop towards St. James's of Pall mall, which create irregular thoughts and desires in the youth of this nation; the said sealer is required to take in those eyesores, or else cause the next court-day why he continues to vex the same; and he is required to be prepared to put back to answer to the slippers with green and a blue heels.

It is impossible for me to return the obliging tag Mr. Joshua Barnes has said to me, upon the account of our mutual friend Homer. He and I have known him now forty years, with some understanding of a great acquaintance. A work to be perfected by one who has enjoyed so great an intimacy with a nation, is certainly to be valued more than a comment made by persons of yesterday. Therefore, according to my friend Joshua's request, I recommend his work; and, having used a little of it in the case, I give this recommendation by way of Anthem or charm, against the malignity of the backbiters, who speak evil of performances which themselves were never capable of. If I may use my friend Joshua's own words, I shall express myself thus, but that we, Homer's oldest acquaintance, having known best his ways; and can, without work, that they are often mistaken when they think them in foreign fits, which we know to be never subject to; and shall make it appear to our rank and envy, that of the Latin poet.

—Atquando bonus dormitat Homerus.
Hor. Mrs. P. rec'd do Good old Homer sometimes nods.

No. 111.] SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1791.

Shew-Lane, March 10.

Is a nation of liberty, there is hardly a person in the whole mass of the people more absolute than the clerk of any town or Censor. It is allowed, that I have no authority for assuming this important appellate and that I am Censor of these nations [just as one is chosen king at the game of "Questions and Commands": but if in the execution of this fantastical dignity, I observe upon things which do not fall within the cognizance of real authority, I hope it will be granted, that an idle man could not be more usefully employed. Among all the irregularities of which I have taken notice, I know none so proper to be presented to the world by a Censor, as that of a general expense and affectation in equipage. I have lately hinted, that this extravagance must necessarily get footing where we have no sumptuary laws, and where every man may be dressed, attended, and carried, in what manner he pleases. But my tenderness to my fellow subjects will not permit me to let this enormity go unobserved.

THE TATLER.

As the matter now stands, every man takes it in his head, that he has a liberty to spend his money as he pleases. Thus, in spite of all order, justice and decorum, we, the greater number of the queen's loyal subjects, for no reason in the world but because we want money, do not share alike in the division of her majesty's high road. The horses and slaves of the rich take up the whole the street; while the peripatetics are very glad to watch an opportunity to whisk across a passage, very thankful that we are not run over for interrupting the machine that carries in it a person neither more handsome, wise, or valiant, than the meanest of us. For this reason, were I to propose a tax, it should certainly be upon coaches and chairs; for no man living can assign a reason, why one man should have half a street to carry him at his ease, and perhaps only in pursuit of pleasures, when as good a man as himself wants room for his own person to pass upon the most necessary and urgent occasion. Until such an acknowledgment is made to the public, I shall take upon me to vest certain rights in the scavengers of the cities of London and Westminster, to take the horses and servants of all such as do not become or deserve such distinctions, into their peculiar custody. The offenders themselves I shall allow safe conduct to their places of abode in the carts of the said scavengers, but their horses shall be mounted by their footmen, and sent into the service abroad; and I take this opportunity, in the first place, to recruit the regiment of my good old friend the brave and honest Sylvius, that they may be as well taught as they are fed. It is to me most miraculous, so unreasonable a usurpation as this I am speaking of, should so long have been tolerated. We hang a poor fellow for taking any trifle from us on the road, and bear with the rich for robbing us of the road itself. Such a tax as this would be of great satisfaction to us who walk on foot; and, since the distinction of riding in a coach is not to be appointed according to a man's merit or service to his country, nor that liberty given as a reward for some eminent virtue, we should be highly contented to see them pay something for the insult they do us, in the state they take upon them while they are drawn by us.

Until they have made us some reparation of this kind, we, the peripatetics of Great Britain, cannot think ourselves well treated, while every one that is able is allowed to set up an equipage.

As for my part, I cannot but admire how persons, conscious to themselves of no manner of superiority above others, can, out of mere pride or laziness, expose themselves at this rate to public view, and put us all upon pronouncing those three terrible syllables, 'Who is that?' When it comes to that question, our mettle is raised, the passengers are hurried to the ancients, and the audience who overheard the discourse for the solid and useful mirth, than the characters in the over-seers of a little skill or may often see town knows shall interrupt judges in the

For the be- sons in this tions to all t town, to bring and doubt n each man, in chariot, as w to be fixed u shall let us mankind, mo medalist in l

But this c others, proc which has c plexions. T when they e mances, are palfreys and and affection amongst us a life. The y and winged h his heart to significant o men, for no ascend trium people, has insolent tran of fortune.

It is there as are, in t character of obeyed herei equipages a prevent the quiring into hereafter att ments and If a man, w in this king deserving a be punished der: and, I page and re as the imper certainly be

The cens that the an of that part decay; and town of Edi late correspo up their na that they ma proper office commonly 1709-10.

at agnos.

cl. iii. 103.

lambs?

13.

into con-

it parents,

whom they or keep at

but I am

which I have

g of a cer-

ase of the mus, gentle-

ne object at round them

spondents,

their eyes power they otions are

s that they

looks at the

. By this

selves grow amoured of

of me on to preserve es, I would ous way of efence, that akes them

bly, go on e of affairs

ch alarm;

what I had

rs last past,

of this re-

to this evil

legant em-

noble pas-

Who would le bon mien, tained by t the meet-

g again to

ay? I rein opera, I

dience cast

other, withough king

de that ob-

o look into he balls of

are specta-

The most

ny violent nsport, or it; but one nce, a con-

in the very sitions of the rattle-

he sees a got the ex-

ption. will give it such a sudden stroke on its imagination, though it may play from bough to bough, and strive to avert its eyes from it for some time, yet it comes nearer and nearer by little intervals of looking another way, until it drops into the jaws of the animal which it knew gazed at it for no other reason but to ruin it. I did not believe this piece of philosophy until that night I was just now speaking of; but then saw the same thing pass between an ogler and a coquette. Mirtillo, the most learned of the former, had for some time discontinued to visit Flavia; no less eminent among the latter. They industriously avoided all places where they might probably meet; but chance brought them together to the playhouse, and seated them in a direct line over-against each other, she in a front box, he in the pit next the stage. As soon as Flavia had received the looks of the whole crowd below her with that air of insensibility which is necessary at the first entrance, she began to look round her, and saw the vagabond Mirtillo, who had so long absented himself from her circle; and when she first discovered him, she looked upon him with that glance, which, in the language of ogles, is called the scornful, but immediately turned his observation another way, and returned upon him with the indifferent. This gave Mirtillo no small resentment; but he used her accordingly. He took care to be ready for her next glance. She found his eyes full in the indolent, with his lips crumpled up, in the posture of one whistling. Her anger at this usage immediately appeared in every muscle of her face; and after many emotions, which glistened in her eyes, she cast them round the whole house, and gave them softnesses in the face of every man she had ever seen before. After she thought she had reduced all she saw to her obedience, the play began, and ended their dialogue. As soon as the first act was over, she stood up with a visage full of dissembled alacrity and pleasure, with which she overlooked the audience, and at last came to him: he was then placed in a side way, with his back slouched over his eyes, and gazing at a wench in the side-box, as talking of that gipsy to the gentleman who sat by him. But, as she fixed upon him, he turned suddenly with a full face upon her, and, with all the respect imaginable, made her the most obsequious bow in the presence of the whole theatre. This gave her a pleasure not to be concealed; and she made him the recovering, or second courtesy, with a smile that spoke a perfect reconciliation. Between the ensuing acts, they talked to each other with gestures and glances so significant, that they ruled the whole house in this silent speech, and made an appointment that Mirtillo should lead her to his coach.

The peculiar language of one eye, as it differs from another as much as the tone of one voice from another, and the fascination or enchantment which is lodged in the optic nerves of the persons concerned in these dialogues is, I must confess, too nice a subject for one who is not an adept in these speculations; but I shall, for the good and safety of the future sex, call my learned friend Sir William Read to my assistance, and, by the help of his observations on this organ, acquaint them when the eye is to be believed, and when distrusted. On the contrary, I shall conceal the true meaning of the looks of ladies, and indulge in them all the art they can acquire in the management of their glances: all which is but too little against creatures who triumph in falsehood, and begin to forswear with their eyes, when their tongues can be no longer believed.

THE TATLER.

ADVERTISEMENT.

A very clean well-behaved young gentleman, who in a very good way in Cornhill, has writ to me the following lines; and seems, in some passages of his letter, which I omit, to lay it very much to heart, that I have not spoken of a supernatural beauty whom he sighs for, and complains to, in most elaborate language. Alas! What can a monitor do? All mankind live in romance.

'Royal Exchange, March 11.

'MR. BICKERSTAFF,

'Some time since, you were pleased to mention the beauties in the New Exchange and Westminster-hall, and, in my judgment, were not very impartial; for if you were pleased to allow there was one goddess in the New-Exchange, and two shepherdesses in Westminster-hall, you very well might say, there was and is at present one angel in the Royal Exchange; and I humbly beg the favour of you to let justice be done her, by inserting this in your next Tatler; which will make her my good angel, and me your most humble servant,

'A. B.'

146.] THURSDAY, MARCH 16, 1709-10.

Permittes ipsis expendere numinibus, quid Conveniat nobis, rebusque sit utile nostris.
Nam pro jucundis aptissima quæque dabunt Dii.
Carior est illis homo, quam sibi. Nos animorum Impulsu cæco magnâque cupidine ducti, Conjugium petimus, partumque uxoris; at illis Notum, qui pueri, qualisque futura sit uxor.

Jur. Sat. x. 347, et seq.

Intrust thy fortune to the powers above;
Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant What their unerring wisdom sees thee want:
In goodness as in greatness they excel:
Ah! that we lov'd ourselves but half so well!
We, blindly by our headstrong passions led,
Are hot for action, and desire to wed;
Then wish for heirs, but to the gods alone Our future offspring and our wives are known.

Dryden.

From my own Apartment, March 15.

AMONG the various sets of correspondents who apply to me for advice, and send up their cases from all parts of Great Britain, there are none who are more importunate with me, and whom I am more inclined to answer, than the Complainers. One of them dates his letter to me from the banks of a purling stream, where he used to ruminate in solitude upon the divine Clarissa, and where he is now looking about for a convenient leap, which he tells me he is resolved to take, unless I support him under the loss of that charming perjured woman. Poor Lavinia presses so much for consolation on the other side, and is reduced to such an extremity of despair by the inconstancy of Philander, that she tells me she writes her letter with her pen in one hand, and her garter in the other. A gentleman of an ancient family in Norfolk is almost out of his wits upon the account of a greyhound, that, after having been his inseparable companion for ten years, is at last run mad. Another, who I believe is serious, complains to me, in a very moving manner, of the loss of a wife; and another, in terms still more moving, of a purse of money that was taken from him on Bagshot-heath, and which, he tells me, would not have troubled him, if he had given it to the poor. In short, there is scarce a calamity in human life that has not produced me a letter.

It is indeed able to raise something. Lancelot convey happy reasonable cross scarf, or a tip tune. A lady Flavia, who bands, was parrot. He thrown into assembly? M the last maso life upon bei violent cold dear creature calamities. the censure idiot: and because the passed through happiness in chariot, Full tulip-root. many fantas but as a misa ture of the e I shall prese in reality of which I am of poets.

As I was took up Hon of Achilles Jupiter has b with blessing of which he that comes ceedingly ple my afternoon into the follo

When Jup of the world presiding dei him with a n zine of hail, The stars off his trident, e Among the court on this two great tu they fixed a upon his th first was fill with all the beginning of innocent tha plentifully of but, as man of his blessi that filled th and distempe pleasures, an

He was at great deprav provocations earth, that, species, exce the destinie had thrown up until the virtuous and — Ut amens, amidalis esto.

— Be lovely, that you may be lov'd.

From my own Apartment, March 17.

READING is to the mind, what exercise is to the body. As by the one, health is preserved, strengthened, and invigorated; by the other, virtue, which the health of the mind, is kept alive, cheris'd, and confirmed. But an exercise becomes tedious and painful, when we make use of it only as the means of health, so reading is apt to grow uneasy and tedious, when we apply ourselves to it only for improvement in virtue. For this reason, the health we gather from a tale, or an allegory, is more agreeable than that which we get by hunting; as we are in an agreeable pursuit that draws us on with ease, and makes us insensible of the fatigue, it costs.

After this preface, I shall set down a very beautiful allegorical fable of the great poet whom I mention'd in my last paper, and whom it is very difficult to lay aside when one is engag'd in the reading of him. And this I particularly design for the several of my fair correspondents, who, in letters, have complain'd to me, that they have the afflictions of their husbands, and desire to know how to recover them.

Juno, says Homer, seeing her Jupiter scab the top of mount Ida, and knowing that he had conceived an aversion to her, began to study how she should regain his affections, and make him amiable to him. With this thought she immediately retired into her chamber, where she bathed in ambrosia; which gave her person all its beauty, and diffus'd so divine an odour, as refresh'd nature, and sweeten'd both heaven and earth. Let her immortal tresses flow in the most graceful manner, and took a particular care to dress her in several ornaments, which the poet describes at length, and which the goddess chose out as the proper to set off her person to the best advantage. In the next place, she made a visit to Venus, who presides over love, and begged of her particular favour, that she would lend her while those charms with which she subdues hearts both of gods and men. "For," says the goddess, "I would make use of them to reward two deities, who took care of me in my infancy, who at present are at so great a variance, that they are estranged from each other's bed." Venus was so pleas'd with this offer, that she made her a present of the girdle, which she used to wear about her waist, with which to girdle it in her bosom until she had accomplish'd her intention. This girdle was a fine pattyser, which, as Homer tells us, had a tin of the sex wrought in it. The four pictures in the embroidery were love, desire, love of speech, and conversation, fill'd with that sweetness and complacency, which says the poet, easily still'd the hearts of the wisest men.

Juno, after having made these necessary preparations, came, as by accident, into the presence of Jupiter, who is said to have been as much pleas'd with her beauty, as when he first stole her from her parents without the consent of their parents. To recover her lost thoughts, told him, as she told Venus, that she was going to make a visit to Oceanus and Tethys. He prevail'd upon her to stay with him, protesting to her that he approv'd the earth, been scab, enjoined, imagined, most likely; but, in here, they ss, and the nd vessel, discovered and other cottages.

less unex- them very rust which observed, to calamity, into possession and power, leaving to person on distempers ties of old a sordid table and rary, they le, poverty virtue. In good fruits, ll off from, insipid or arsh fruits by proper with gene-that occu- sisters as red several er been in of Jupiter, s of happi- that spuri- which were at grow of ositions of les, place, ar, with the in trifling.

so great a possible for been given e for which gs and can- and in that r.

eldest sist- introduc- ed together distresses of thee in one t thou thy- thy wisdom e, that there ill occasion- nature, and e the person amiable in his eye, than ever any mortal, goddess, or even herself, had appeared to him until that day. The poet then represents him in so great an ardour, that, without going up to the house which had been built by the hands of Vulcan according to Juno's direction, he threw a golden cloud over their heads as they sat upon the top of mount Ida, while the earth beneath them sprung up in lotuses, saffrons, hyacinths, and bed of the softest flowers for their repose.

This close translation of one of the finest passages in Homer, may suggest abundance of instruction to a woman who has a mind to preserve, or recall the affection of her husband. The care of the person, and the dress, with the particular blandishments woven in the cestus, are so plainly recommended by this fable, and so indispensably necessary in every female who desires to please, that they need no further explanation. The discretion likewise in covering all matrimonial quarrels from the knowledge of others, is taught in the pretended visit to Tethys, in the speech where Juno addresses herself to Venus; as the chaste and prudent management of a wife's charms is intimated by the same pretence for her appearance before Jupiter, and by the concealment of the cestus in her bosom.

I shall leave this tale to the consideration of such good housewives who are never well dressed but when they are abroad, and think it necessary to appear more agreeable to all men living than their husbands: as also to those prudent ladies who, to avoid the appearance of being overfond, entertain their husbands with indifference, aversion, sullen silence, or exasperating language.

Sheer Lane, March 17.

Upon my coming home last night, I found a very handsome present of wine left for me, as a taste of two hundred and sixteen hogsheads, which are to be put to sale at twenty pounds a hogshead, at Garraway's coffee-house in Exchange-alley, on the twenty-second instant, at three in the afternoon, and to be tasted in major Long's vaults from the twentieth instant until the time of sale. This having been sent to me with a desire that I would give my judgment upon it, I immediately empanelled a jury of men of nice palates, and strong heads, who, being all of them very scrupulous, and unwilling to proceed rashly in a matter of so great importance, refused to bring in their verdict until three in the morning; at which time the foreman pronounced, as well as he was able, 'Extra-a-ordinary French claret.' For my own part, as I love to consult my pillow in all points of moment, I slept upon it before I would give my sentence, and this morning confirmed the verdict.

Having mentioned this tribute of wine, I must give notice to my correspondents for the future, who shall apply to me on this occasion, that, as I shall decide nothing unadvisedly in matters of this nature, I cannot pretend to give judgment of a right good liquor, without examining at least three dozen bottles of it. I must, at the same time, do myself the justice to let the world know that I have resisted great temptations in this kind; as it is well known to a butcher in Clare-market, who endeavoured to corrupt me with a dozen and a half of marrow-bones. I had likewise a bribe sent me by a fishmonger, consisting of a collar of brawn, and a jole of salmon; but not finding them excellent in their kinds, I had the integrity to eat them both up, without speaking one word of them. However, for the future, I shall have an eye to the diet of this great city, and will recommend them, if I receive from the seller that my reader

No. 148.]

—G

Nunqu

They r

Of ex'r

Pro

HAVING sign to take great city, serious exho that theywo and reconcil was the diet who won the not go up Warwick, v dun cow of Arthur is g ever sat dov tainly the he further adde his round ta bones before moment. T of the brisl surloin, or t which are al of the great have paid to ancient gent day with not by an antiq which the br instead of te vailed of lat Elizabeth's for their br great reput was formerly of nice and and robust to this day, reproach, a honourable chicken, and invention of to that whole who takes ne during the r nothing men cattle as we mature for s kingdom do and it is to t unparallel reign: for l what work Blenheim at fricassees an For this r plexion, the are to be fo people, or i

W. creeps on off the s, and are middle, good in my no-impute the
at families, so much in are without out nourishpoorest and feeters. I
cious to the
I have seen ous of high nts, I have ning of her s are to be er, they eat o allay, but n its natural
It comes in o good to be at is agrees to gratify re of their o a friend's ch cookery, our sitting eat variety t a less de-
not know before me er did not ce lost to
y. I inter-wh, h I do ed, being t to make ing like a d to a wine nd I have never en-n a pile of gentleman
it. Upon with great for it was heard him nd I had gr, and med, h I did not tell of a man on turning side table
I had not t so with gle and make way che, and had seen its possi-

er, looked like a very beautiful woman.
There were several pyramids of candied sweets that hung like nozzles, with fruits scattered up-down, and hid in an artificial kind of frost. At same time there were great quantities of re-beaten up into a snow, and near them little plasugar-plums, disposed like so many heaps of stones, with a multitude of congealations in various colours. I was indeed so pleased and several objects which lay before me, that I did care for displacing any of them; and was halt-with the rest of the company, that for the sake piece of lemon-peel, or a sugar-plum, would so pleasing a picture. Indeed, I could not but see several of them cooling their mouths with sals and peppers.

As soon as this show was over, I took my that I might finish my dinner at my own house, as I in every thing love what is simple and try so particularly in my food; two plain dishes, two or three good-natured, cheerful, inge-friends, would make me more pleased and vain all that pomp and luxury can bestow. For it is maxim, that 'he keeps the greatest table who the most valuable company at it.'

No. 119.] THURSDAY, MARCH 23, 170

From my own Apartment, March 22.

It has often been a solid grief to me, when I reflected on this glorious nation, which is the of public happiness and liberty, that there are crowds of private tyrants, against whom there is any law now in being, nor can that prevent any by the wit of man. These cruel are ill-treated husbands. The conjuncture in conjugal state is so delicate, that it is impossible to make rules for the conduct of it, so as to that send harmless pleasures and dispassionate just to people in that connection. But it is inas in some other nice cases, where a wrong the indolent nearly is half way to the cure; there are some faults which need only to be served to be amended. I have put into this w thinking by a late conversation which I engaged in on a court of.

I read a visit the other day to a family for a I have a great honour, and found the father mother, and two or three of the younger children, all designedly to leave me alone with the daughter, who was but a visitant there, as was physician, and the wife of a gentleman, a favourable acquaintance. As soon as we were I said to my sister-in-law, and she brought she said to say to me, for which she was very conscious. My sister said, by a kind of wish you as well as any body in her acquaintance, truly we sorry you are oppressed with what you may be superior to relieve your distress, you may at least be so much present advantage, as safely to give on turning, and the case of meeting it. She immediately seated me in a reclining posture of countenance, and she said, 'It is an aggravation of fault, and a great deal more, that there is a sort of gagle and a sort of reason, for which reason it is, I make way for you and my acquaintance, instead of being a hindrance to me, the next time I you, I shall have a perfect right to our sex, to have you, I shall have a perfect right to our sex, to be a hindrance to me, the next time I

THE TATLER.

'My friend was neither in birth, fortune, nor education, below the gentleman whom she married. Her person, her age, and her character, are also such as he can make no exception to. But so it is; that from the moment the marriage ceremony was over, the obsequiousness of a lover was turned into the haughtiness of a master. All the kind endeavours which she uses to please him are at best but so many instances of her duty. This insolence takes away that secret satisfaction which does not only excite to virtue, but also rewards it. It abates the fire of a free and generous love, and embitters all the pleasures of a social life.' The young lady spoke all this with such an air of resentment, as discovered how nearly she was concerned in the distress.

When I observed she had done speaking, 'Madam,' said I, 'the affliction you mention is the greatest that can happen in human life; and I know but one consolation in it, if that be a consolation, that the calamity is a pretty general one. There is nothing so common as for men to enter into marriage, without so much as expecting to be happy in it. They seem to propose to themselves a few holidays in the beginning of it; after which they are to return at best to the usual course of their life; and, for aught they know, to constant misery and uneasiness. From this false sense of the state they are going into, proceed the immediate coldness and indifference, or hatred or aversion, which attend ordinary marriages, or rather bargains to cohabit.' Our conversation was here interrupted by company which came in upon us.

The humour of affecting a superior carriage generally rises from a false notion of the weakness of a female understanding in general, or an over-weening opinion that we have of our own; for when it proceeds from a natural ruggedness and brutality of temper, it is altogether incorrigible, and not to be amended by admonition. Sir Francis Bacon, as I remember, lays it down as a maxim, that no marriage can be happy in which the wife has no opinion of her husband's wisdom; but, without offence to so great an authority, I may say, that a sullen wise man is as bad as a good-natured fool. Knowledge, softened with complacency and good-breeding, will make a man equally beloved and respected; but when joined with a severe, distant, and unsociable temper, it creates rather fear than love. I, who am a bachelor, have no other notions of conjugal tenderness but what I learn from books; and shall therefore produce three letters of Pliny, who was not only one of the greatest, but the most learned man in the whole Roman empire. At the same time I am very much ashamed, that on such occasions I am obliged to have recourse to heathen authors; and shall appeal to my readers, if they would not think it a mark of a narrow education in a man of quality, to write such passionate letters to any woman but a mistress. They were all three written a time when she was at a distance from him. The first of them puts me in mind of a married friend of mine, who said, 'Sickness itself is pleasant to a man that is attended in it by one whom he dearly loves.'

'Pliny to Calphurnia.'

'I never was so much offended at business, as when it hindered me from going with you into the country, or following you thither; for I more particularly wish to be with you at present, that I might be sensible of the progress you make in the recovery of your strength and health; as also of the entertainment at retirement. I am afraid of it is the nature most, which I earnestly do apprehend, with t I am reading soon as I ha

'You tell my absence thing, but upon my piling to see n absence. I less pleased and read the pleasure. I so much ple Let me beg the same tin anguish wh

'It is im for you in y is the chief still the m wholly a ne the night i the day go were there come away that had su of the day anxiety, an affairs.

'You ma who has n in trouble.'

I shall co sage out of of my own versation ag partners wh observed th disquisition him, is desc a design of husband.

'So spake e Entering or Perceiving With lowin Rose, and v Yet went sh Delighted, Of what wa Adam relat Her husband Before the Chose rather Grateful dig With conju Not words

Such pain

1710.

Ovid.

1.

2. Wynne.

1.

the sub-ells me, I it only by his sense and think eal of jus-ay, whose

ted. But le for you on of this ur readers heart sugrm to him-cho am an you an ac-edge, and a the con-r wretched

the most the begin-nourance of e to make ful respect
e it arises, e greatest wholly unallest in-ry; and it enough in the woman of a wife.
y have all i masks to ike disapill-natured tly and ina the very y, I could children, if a leg of not spoke ey differed d stand by may seem an, when a woman ever enter ex as often 2, as by an life with-ew months

which the semblance.
minute and est resent-
ons of the es not ob-nd in one or a rule,

that in marriage, the chief business is to acquire prepossession in favour of each other. They consider one another's words and actions with secret indulgence. There should be always an fondness pleading for each other, such as new beauties to every thing that is excellent charms to what is indifferent, and cover every that is defective. For want of this kind of prepossession and bias of mind, the married pair often take ill of each other, which no one else would take notice of in either of them.

But the most unhappy circumstance of marriage is where each party is always laying up fuel for contention, and gathering together a magazine of provocations, to exasperate each other with when they are out of humour. These people, in common discourse, make no scruple to let those who are by know they are quarrelling with one another; and think it discreet enough, if they conceal from the combatants the matters which they are hinting at. A week ago, I was entertained for a whole dinner by a mysterious conversation of this nature; which I could learn no more, than that the husband and wife were angry at one another. We soon sat down, but says the gentleman of the house in order to raise discourse, "I thought Mr. M. sung extremely well last night." Upon this the lady, looking as pale as ashes, "I suppose you had cherry-coloured ribbands on." "No," said the husband with a flush in his face, "but I had laced shoes." I look upon it, that a standstill on such occasions has as much reason to be out of countenance as either of the combatants. To my confusion, and seem regardless of what passed, I desired the servant who attended me the vinegar, which unluckily created a new dialogue of hints; for, as far as I could gather from the subsequent discourse, they had dissented the fore about the preference of chile to wine. In the midst of their discourse, there appeared a dish of chicken and asparagus, when the husband disposed to lay aside all disputes; and, turning to the lady, upon her with a great deal of good nature, said, "Pray, my dear, will you help my friend to eat of the fowl that lies next you, for I think it is extremely well." The lady, instead of answering him, addressing herself to me, "Pray, sir, do you in Surrey reckon the white black-legged fowls the best?" I found the husband changed colour at the question; and, before he could answer, asked me, "Whether we did not have a broom in our county?" I quickly found it was not ask questions so much out of curiosity as for which reason I thought fit to keep my up myself, and, as an honest man ought, when two friends in warmth with each other, I took the first opportunity I could to leave them by themselves.

You see, sir, I have laid before you only a few incidents, which are seemingly frivolous; but from a man very well experienced in this state of life, they are principally evils of this nature which render marriages unhappy. At the same time, that I do justice to this excellent institution, I must tell you, there are unspeakable pleasures which are little regarded in the computation of the advantages of marriage, as the others are in the usual survey is made of its misfortunes.

Love more and his wife live together in the possession of each other's hearts, and, by that means, have no indifferent moments, but their whole life is one continued scene of delight. Their pas-

each other communicates a certain satisfaction, like that which they themselves are in, to all that approach them. When she enters the place where he is, you see a pleasure which he cannot conceal, nor he, or any one else, describe. In so consummate an affection, the very presence of the person beloved has the effect of the most agreeable conversation. Whether they have matter to talk of or not, they enjoy the pleasures of society, and, at the same time, the freedom of solitude. Their ordinary life is to be preferred to the happiest moments of other lovers. In a word, they have each of them great merit, live in the esteem of all who know them, and seem but to comply with the opinions of their friends, in the just value they have for each other.

No. 151.] TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1710.

—Ni vis boni

In ipsa inesset forma, hæc formam extinguerunt.

Ter.

These things would extinguish beauty, if there were not an innate pleasure-giving energy in beauty itself.

From my own Apartment, March 27.

WHEN artists would expose their diamonds to an advantage, they usually set them to show in little cases of black velvet. By this means the jewels appear in their true and genuine lustre, where there is no colour that can infect their brightness, or give a false cast to the water. When I was at the opera the other night, the assembly of ladies in mourning made me consider them in the same kind of view. A dress wherein there is so little variety, shows the face in all its natural charms, and makes one differ from another only as it is more or less beautiful. Painters are ever careful of offending against a rule which is so essential in all just representations. The chief figure must have the strongest point of light, and not be injured by any gay colourings that may draw away the attention to any less considerable part of the picture. The present fashion obliges every body to be dressed with propriety, and makes the ladies' faces the principal objects of sight. Every beautiful person shines out in all the excellence with which nature has adorned her; gaudy ribbands and glaring colours being now out of use, the sex has no opportunity given them to disfigure themselves, which they seldom fail to do whenever it lies in their power. When a woman comes to her glass, she does not employ her time in making herself look more advantageously than what she really is; but endeavours to be as much another creature as she possibly can. Whether this happens because they stay so long, and attend their work so diligently, that they forget the faces and persons which they first sat down with, or, whatever it is, they seldom rise from the toilet the same women they appeared when they began to dress. What jewel can the charming Cleora place in her ears that can please beholders so much as her eyes? The cluster of diamonds upon the breast can add no beauty to the fairest of ivory which supports it. It may indeed tempt a man to steal a woman, but never to love her. Let Thalestris change herself into a motley party-coloured animal: she pearl necklace, the flowered stomacher, the artificial nosegay, and shaded furbelone, may be of use to attract the eye of the beholder, and turn it from the imperfections of her features and shape. But if ladies will take my word for it, I thought to come to this particular touches our woman in an agreeable conversation than any thing else.

This, I know, is a kind, who is showy, and other species of the mind. The chief idea is in a third memory of silks, and something else but a chance, come observing, head higher showed a scorn of others. 'What to a girl, until she had a part of mind offered them to be show, however.

Many a lady wig, and be. It is impossible done by the veiled, or to len a sacrifice cere heart be an open wear able head in pany as a person he was asked thought he answered, 'little one.' appeal to the she would not statesman? that I have always had a confess, it troubles of them please and give up trifles.

Mrs. Mary thousand people was desirous fore used all from marriage time of dancing her way. Vage, she felt temper and married him dressed her which she that the love fortieth year very luckily which was in the kept her safe which generated amorous co a colt's too

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

or in their re-awakened
which was en-
P. 153. by it this of it was when the
it was y another serves the appearing imagined

O. 1779.
and
the
to
n. d. 234.

1 89.
the 177

O.
the pro-
employ his
of such as himselves time, and ant, I have her is still is already share, and was trans-furnished

very much
mortality, the wisest inter-
the greatest ne-in time to le worth st exalted thought of s up as a in the rest im. Since my guess opinion shall never he rep-

such as he remained it seemed of secret pines his but it is

un-
sly. I had of objects
about the

here, and heaved up on the steams of his ob-The first he knew was the shade of Elpenor, dash with activity of a spirit above that of is represented as arrived there long before U-retained during the winds and seas had counted their force to hasten his voyage thither.
Upon, to inspire the reader with a just miscon-
and at the same time with a reof doing proper honours to the dead, de-himself as having broken his neck in a deb-wine; and begs Ulysses that for the repossoul, he would build a monument over his perform funeral rites to his memory. Ulysses great sorrow of heart, promises to fulfil his request, immediately directed to an object near-at hand, than the former. The ghost of he-cumen, Anticlea, whom he still thought liv-gives to him among the multitudes of she-selves, and sits down at a small distance by the lake of Hades, without speaking, or knowing who he was. Ulysses was deeply troubled at the sight, and could not speak as he looked upon her; but being allowed as a pattern of consummate wisdom, he gives way to prudent consideration upon his seeing Tiresias, does not consent to his vision, until he had consulted great prophet, who was the occasion of his secret into the empire of the dead. Tires-ias cautioned him to keep himself and his relations free from the guilt of sacrilege, and to be generous to all the gods, promises him a safe return to his kingdom and family, and a happy old age.

The poet, having thus with great art kept curiosity of his reader in suspense, represents man, after the despatch of his business with Ulysses, yielding himself up to the cause of natural and making himself known to his mother. He are no sooner opened, but she cries out in her joy, and enquires into the occasions that led him thither, and the fortune that attended his return.

Ulysses, on the other hand, desires to know the sickness was that had sent her into those and the condition in which she had left his his son, and more particularly his wife. She him, "they were all three irretrievably forlorn." As for myself," says she, "that was the sickness which I died." My impatience for your return anxiety for your welfare, and my fondness dear Ulysses, were the only distempers that upon my life, and separated my soul from my Ulysses was melted with these expressions of ness, and thrice endeavoured to catch the aged father's arms, that he might hold his mother bosom, and weep over her.

This gives the poet occasion to describe the the heathens at that time had of an unbecomin the excuse which the mother makes for to wash her herself from her son's embraces, could," says she, "is composed neither of flesh, nor sinews; but leaves behind her all circumstances of mortality to be consumed funeral pile." As soon as she has thus cast down, she makes her escape, and flies away like a dream.

When this melancholy conversation is at end, the poet draws up to view as charming a vision, who appeared to Ulysses, to have be-shades of the finest women that had ever lived on earth, and who had either been the daughkings, the mistresses of gods, or the mothers of heroes; such as Antiope, Alcmena, Leda, Ariadne, Iphimedia, Eriphyle, and several others, of whom he gives a catalogue, with a short history of their adventures. The beautiful assembly of apparitions were all gathered together about the blood. 'Each of them,' says Ulysses, as a gentle satire upon female vanity, 'giving me an account of her birth and family.' This scene of extraordinary women, seems to have been designed by the poet as a lecture of mortality to the whole sex, and to put them in mind of what they must expect, notwithstanding the greatest perfections, and highest honours, they can arrive at.

The circle of beauties at length disappeared, and was succeeded by the shades of several Grecian heroes, who had been engaged with Ulysses in the siege of Troy. The first that approached was Agamemnon, the generalissimo of that great expedition, who, at the appearance of his old friend, wept bitterly, and, without saying any thing to him, endeavoured to grasp him by the hand. Ulysses, who was much moved at the sight, poured out a flood of tears, and asked him the occasion of his death, which Agamemnon related to him in all its tragical circumstances; how he was murdered at a banquet by the contrivance of his own wife, in confederacy with her adulterer: from whence he takes occasion to reproach the whole sex, after a manner which would be inexcusable in a man who had not been so great a sufferer by them. 'My wife,' says he, 'has disgraced all the women that shall ever be born in the world, even those who hereafter shall be innocent. Take care how you grow too fond of your wife. Never tell her all you know. If you reveal some things to her, be sure you keep others concealed from her. You, indeed, have nothing to fear from your Penelope, she will not use you as my wife has treated me; however, take care how you trust a woman.' The poet, in this and other instances, according to the system of many heathen as well as Christian philosophers, shows how anger, revenge, and other habits which the soul had contracted in the body, subsist, and grow in it under its state of separation.

I am extremely pleased with the companions which the poet in the next description assigns to Achilles. 'Achilles,' says the hero, 'came up to me with Patroclus and Antilochus.' By which we may see that it was Homer's opinion, and probably that of the age he lived in, that the friendships which are made among the living, will likewise continue among the dead. Achilles enquires after the welfare of his son, and of his father, with a fierceness of the same character that Homer has every where expressed in the actions of his life. The passage relating to his son is so extremely beautiful, that I must not omit it. Ulysses, after having described him as wise in council, and active in war, and mentioned the foes whom he had slain in battle, adds an observation that he himself had made of his behaviour, whilst he lay in the wooden horse. 'Most of the generals,' says he, 'that were with us, either wept or trembled; as for your son, I never saw him wipe a tear from his cheek, or change his countenance. On the contrary, he would often lay his hand upon his sword, or grasp his spear, as impatient to employ them against the Trojans.' He then informs his father of the great honour and rewards he had purchased before Troy, and of his return from it without a wound. 'The shade of Achilles,' says the poet, 'was so pleased with the account he no further, nary majest them.'

The last rejoicing in contrived b and made himself.

The desc refusing to spe of Achilles death, is ad Ulysses rel and consider himself with that I had n of so brave his person, to none but condescensio minds, and Ulysses to b the speech v that occasio keep your instructions ha Greeks, by bulwark and lamented an your death t anger to the them: let strain the fi ness of your you.' Ajax back upon h

Ulysses, a those impio crimes they describes un marks of di following the notwithstand the heroes t ghosts began multitudes, that his hear great a scene afraid lest s him, that m therefore wit

I question this descript such a nobl nothing to di the opinions

No. 153.] Bombalio, cl

Rend with tr With gun, dr

From I HAVE heard all the paint are represen joining in a upon such a suitable to h er to him. frequent in this nation than any other; I mean to show bass-viol, which grumbles in the bottom of the with a horn sort, and, with a surly masculine sound, streng-with great the harmony, and tempers the sweetness of an eminent several instruments that play along with it. The the greatest viol is an instrument of a quite different nate touches the trumpet, and may signify men of rough represented and unpolished parts; who do not love to hear of humour selves talk, but sometimes break out with unable bluntness, unexpected wit, and surly pleas-to myself, to the no small diversion of their friends and shadowed nions. In short, I look upon every sensible soft music; born Briton to be naturally a bass-viol.

As for your rural wits, who talk with great consequence and alacrity of foxes, hounds, horses, set hedges, and six bar-gates, double ditch broken necks, I am in doubt, whether I should them a place in the conversable world. Ho-if they will content themselves with being in the dignity of hunting-horns, I shall desire future, that they may be known by that name.

I must not here omit the bagpipe species will entertain you from morning to night with repetition of a few notes, which are played over over, with the perpetual humming of a drone underneath them. These are your dull, tedious story tellers, the load and burden of sations, that set up for men of importance, by ing secret history, and giving an account of tions, that, whether they ever passed in the w-not, doth not signify a halfpenny to its instror its welfare. Some have observed, that the ern parts of this island are more particularly in bagpipes.

There are so very few persons who are masters of every kind of conversation, and can talk on a jects, that I do not know whether we should admit a distinct species of them. Nevertheless, if scheme may not be defective, for the sake of few who are endowed with such extraordina-rents, I shall allow them to be harpsichords, of music which every one knows is a consort by

As for your passing-bells, who look upon m-criminal, and talk of nothing but what is mela-in itself, and mortifying to human nature, I sh-mention them.

I shall likewise pass over in silence all the of mankind, that crowd our streets, coffee feasts, and public tables. I cannot call the course conversation, but rather something practised in imitation of it. For which reason would describe them by any musical instrumshould be by those modern inventions of the b and string, tongs and key, marrow bone and cl

My reader will doubtless observe, that I have touched here upon male instruments, having served my female consort to another occasiohe has a mind to know where these several char-are to be met with, I could direct him to a club of drums; not to mention another of bag which I have before given some account of description of our nightly meetings in Shew The lutes may often be met with in couples up banks of a crystal stream, or in the retire shady woods, and flowery meadows; which, for ferent reasons, are likewise the great resort of hunting-horns. Bass viols are frequently found over a glass of stale beer, and a pipe of tobacco whereas those who set up for violins, seldom make their appearance at Will's once every ing. You may meet with a trumpet any where the other side of Charing-cross.

That we may draw something for our advantage in life out of the foregoing discourse, I must entreat my reader to make a narrow search into his life and conversation, and, upon his leaving any company, to examine himself seriously whether he has behaved himself in it like a drum or a trumpet, a violin or a bass-viol; and, accordingly, endeavour to mend his music for the future. For my own part, I must confess, I was a drum for many years; nay, and a very noisy one, until, having polished myself a little in good company, I threw as much of the trumpet into my conversation, as was possible for a man of an impetuous temper, by which mixture of different musics I look upon myself, during the course of many years, to have resembled a tabor and pipe. I have since very much endeavoured at the sweetness of the lute; but, in spite of all my resolutions, I must confess, with great confusion, that I find myself daily degenerating into a bagpipe; whether it be the effect of my old age, or of the company I keep, I know not. All that I can do, is to keep a watch over my conversation, and to silence the drone as soon as I find it begin to hum in my discourse, being determined rather to hear the notes of others, than to play out of time, and encroach upon their parts in the consort by the noise of so tiresome an instrument.

I shall conclude this paper with a letter which I received last night from a friend of mine, who knows very well my notions upon this subject, and invites me to pass the evening at his house, with a select company of friends, in the following words:

'DEAR ISAAC,

'I intend to have a consort at my house this evening, having by great chance got a harpsichord, which I am sure will entertain you very agreeably. There will be likewise two lutes and a trumpet: let me beg you to put yourself in tune, and believe me,

'Your very faithful servant,

'NICHOLAS HUMDRUM.'

No. 154.] TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1710.

Obscuris vera involvens. Virg. Æn. vi. 100.

Involving truth in terms obscure.

From my own Apartment, April 3.

WE have already examined Homer's description of a future state, and the condition in which he hath placed the souls of the deceased. I shall, in this paper, make some observations on the account which Virgil hath given us of the same subject, who, besides a greatness of genius, had all the lights of philosophy and human learning to assist and guide him in his discoveries.

Æneas is represented as descending into the empire of death, with a prophetess by his side, who instructs him in the secrets of those lower regions.

Upon the confines of the dead, and before the very gates of this infernal world, Virgil describes several inhabitants, whose natures are wonderfully suited to the situation of the place, as being either the occasions or resemblances of death. Of the first kind are the shadows of Sickness, Old Age, Fear, Famine, and Poverty; apparitions very terrible to behold, with several others, as Toil, War, Contention, and Discord, which contribute all of them to people this common receptacle of human souls. As this was likewise a very proper residence for every thing that resembles death, the poet tells us, that Sleep, whom he represents as a near relation to Death, has likewise his habitation in these quarters; and describes which seems and is possessed that hang in then gives us naturally lie as being of the and the mate 'the stuff of the shades of of his brother Centaur and the Harpy with the seven-headed breathes forth animals. These of imagination art after the day very entrance regions, do pre extravagances into when she

Thus far Æ of the descrip according to opinions of the trouble my re gives an acco posed a ferry Charon; but of doctrine w upon in this b unburied, are spective place hundred years probably an in make the peo proper rites a dead. I sha scribblers of t circumstance, priestcraft, bu as a religious an esteem for desire to reco as also to exc the virtues of their thoughts In a word, w opinions relat what hath bee to the rigid o who die with that supposi do no hurt to upon the livi ing such nece

Charon is a headed dog entrance into three kinds of the borders; a stationed ther cause none of to a place am whole thread life that had first of these snatched awa of those who unjust senten weary of the

Virgil adds of the dead, and assigns to the parts mentioned, they them-ion. 'Oh! endure life forbid their surround able.' It is anding self-athens, and test men in esented it as ular he was aster Plato; is placed in proper post, appen, until planted him mic philoso- work of the examining; materialized, cted notions, ceptions of etical repre- at the soul, tracts many come a bene- malicious, red- d with lust, y, brightened sitions: that vice, growing re and gather that the torte, arise prin- us which are a body; and s of virtuous ng employed ions, sociable sion and rap- eatures, and fe, that beautiful walks, which, overs.

great waste of Melancholy,' s, divided into walks, and in- ed away with es. with them is languishing the principal this soft ro- first husband tions another ts of warriors, company, and le there repre- mon soldiers s drawn up in ch of Æneas, ssions of fear h the Trojans, same notions, lived in former agus, amidst a visionary scene of chariots and arms flowery meadows, shining spears, and graceful steeds, which he tells us were their pleasures on earth, and now make up their happiness in Elysium. For the same reason also, he mentions others singing Pæans, and songs of triumph, amidst a beautiful grove of laurel. The chief of the amætes is the poet Musæus; who stood inclosed with a circle of admirers, and rose by the head and shoulders above the throng of shades that surrounded him. The habitations of unhappy spirits, to show the duration of their torments, and the desperate condition they are in, are represented as guarded by fury, moated round with a lake of fire, strength with towers of iron, encompassed with a triple wall, and fortified with pillars of adamant, which all the gods together are not able to heave from their foundations. The noise of stripes, the clank of chains, and the groans of the tortured, strike the poet Æneas with a kind of horror. The poet afterwards divides the criminals into two classes. The first a blackest catalogue consists of such as were guilty of outrages against the gods; and the next, of such who were convicted of injustice between man and man; the greatest number of whom, says the poet, are those who followed the dictates of avarice.

It was an opinion of the Platonists, that the souls of men having contracted in the body great stains and pollutions of vice and ignorance, there were several purgations and cleansings necessary to be passed through, both here and hereafter, in order to refine and purify them.

Virgil, to give this thought likewise a clothing in poetry, describes some spirits as bleaching in winds, others as cleansing under great falls of waters, and others as purging in fire, to recover the primitive beauty and purity of their natures.

It was likewise an opinion of the same old philosophers, that the souls of all men exist in a separate state, long before their union with their bodies; and that upon their immersion into the world they forget every thing which passed in a state of pre-existence; so that what we here call knowledge is nothing else but memory, or the recovery of the things which we knew before.

In pursuance of this scheme, Virgil gives us a view of several souls, who, to prepare themselves for living upon earth, flock about the banks of the river Lethe, and swill themselves with the water of oblivion.

The same scheme gives him an opportunity of making a noble compliment to his country, where Anchises is represented taking a survey of a long train of heroes that are to descend from him, and giving his son Æneas an account of all the glories of his race.

I need not mention the revolution of the Platonic year, which is but just touched upon in this book, and, as I have consulted no author's thought in this explication, shall be very well pleased, if it make the noblest piece of the most accomplished poet more agreeable to my female readers, if they think fit to look into Dryden's translation.

No. 155.] THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1790

—Alieni negotia curat

Excussus propriis.

Her. 3. Sat. 8.

When he had lost all business of his own,

He ran in quest of news thro' all the town.

From my own Apartment, April 5, 1790

There lived some years since, within my cell hood, a very grave person, an upholsterer, who seemed a man of more than ordinary application to business. He was a very early riser, and was often abroad two or three hours before any of his neighbours. He had a particular carefulness in the knitting of his brows, and a kind of impatience in all his motions that plainly discovered he was always intent on matters of importance. Upon my inquiry into his life and conversation, I found him to be the greatest newsmonger in our quarter: that he rose before day to read the Post-man; and that he would take two or three turns to the other end of the town before his neighbours were up to see if there were any Dutch mails come in. He had a wife and several children; but was much more inquisitive to know what passed in Poland than in his own family, and was in greater pain and anxiety of mind for king Augustus's welfare than that of his nearest relations. He looked extremely thin in a dearth of news, and never enjoyed himself in a westerly wind. This indefatigable kind of life was the ruin of his shop; for, about the time that his favourite prince left the crown of Poland, he broke and disappeared.

This man and his affairs had been long out of my mind, until about three days ago, as I was walking in St. James's park, I heard somebody at a distance hemming after me; and who should it be but my old neighbour the upholsterer? I saw he was reduced to extreme poverty, by certain shabby superfluities in his dress: for, notwithstanding that it was a very sultry day for the time of the year, he wore a loose great coat and a muff; with a long campaign wig out of curl; to which he had added the ornament of a pair of black garters buckled under the knee. Upon his coming up to me, I was going to enquire into his present circumstances; but was prevented by his asking me, with a whisper, 'Whether the last letters brought any accounts that one might rely upon from Bender?' I told him, 'None that I heard of;' and asked him, 'whether he had yet married his eldest daughter?' He told me, 'No. But pray,' says he, 'tell me sincerely, what are your thoughts of the king of Sweden?' For though his wife and children were starving, I found his chief concern at present was for this great monarch. I told him, 'that I looked upon him as one of the first heroes of the age.' 'But pray,' says he, 'do you think there is any truth in the story of his wound?' And finding me surprised at the question, 'Nay,' says he, 'I only propose it to you.' I answered, 'that I thought there was no reason to doubt of it.' 'But why in the heel,' says he, 'more than in any other part of the body?' 'Because,' said I, 'the bullet chanced to light there.'

This extraordinary dialogue was no sooner ended, but he began to launch out into a long dissertation upon the affairs of the North; and after having spent some time on them, he told me, 'he was in great perplexity how to reconcile the supplement with the English Post, and had been just now examining what the other papers say upon the same subject. The Daily Courant,' says he, 'has these words, "We have advices from very good hands, that a certain prince has some matters of great importance under consideration." This is very mysterious; but the Post-boy leaves us more in the dark, for he tells us, "That there are private intimations of measures taken by a certain prince, which time will bring to light." Now, the Post-man,' says he, 'who used to be very clear, refers to the same news in these words: "The late conduct of a certain prince affords great matter of speculation." This certain prince are all so cautious. Upon which, he whispered some hear, or think.

We were no where were they gathered upon them politicians that place even them to be our acquaintance.

The chief parser of para concern, 'that from Muscovy, storm gathering time do hurt to this he added to see the Tur believed could manufacture.'

upon those lately happened have risen children much talked.

Menzikoff, and backed his and such a gave ourselves.

The discourse seldom escaped whether, in case would not be unanimously.

One who sat discourse, had 'that it would ants to beat the ever such a good of the last sat at the end of

was the geographer case the Papi those parts of worst, it would Norway and crowns hold stand neuter.

'that there pole, inhabited and of greater dominions in

When we friend the upon the present proposed prince balanced the and impartial.

I at length going away; the upholsterer advancing to to hear some not thought for instead of the him half a statesman; a he was in, give him five him when the stantinople;

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

impossibility Europe now

ar benefit of coffee-house ghts are so hat they for-

8, 1710

squis.

En. ii. 742.

17.

Homer the es, with the we look into many years we may see
expedition, s discoveries ory of Telet of Homer, tion of that n any trans-was written who may one author took y, and partilering upon, pupil. For he misery of in the acl rewards in tanding the author, to Homer, that city running te in several that his fuel Angelo's his boat are dful solem-hrough the of Mercury, of ghosts to the infernal oyage is the bylon, and monies and four slaves he country,

s. The au-most odious
ty, tells us, him after s reproaches ey spurned reed him to re covered,
nd infamy;
in a chain,
nal of the bark, sees ble multi-ashore, immediately vanished. He then puts the palace of Pluto, who is descrihis throne in terrible majesty, with his side. At the foot of his throne hideous spectre, who, by the gla-visage, and the nature of the apparound him, discovers himself to attendants are, Melancholy, Dis-Hatred, Avarice, Despair, Ambiti-piety, with frightful Dreams, and which are all drawn very naturally tions and postures. The author, we places near his frightful dreams phantoms, which are often employ-living, by appearing in the shape the dead.

The young hero, in the next pl-vey of the different kinds of crimitorture, among clouds of sulphur, fire. The first of these were such as of impieties which every one hath, which is added a catalogue of sucscarce appear to be faulty in the cy-Among these, says the author, are that have endeavoured to cast a bla-fections of others; with whom he such as have often hurt the reputacent, by passing a rash judgment o-without knowing the occasion of crimes, says he, are more severely death, because they generally meet upon earth.

Telemachus, after having takseveral other wretches in the same arrives at that region of torments kings are punished. There are ver-imagination in the description whi-this unhappy multitude. He tells oside of them, there stood a revenge-dering in their ears incessant rethe crimes they had committed with the aggravations of ambition, v-of heart, and all those secret affectioenter into the composition of a t-same time, she holds up to them a l-which every one sees himself repre-tural horror and deformity of his char-other side of them stands another fur-insulting derision, repeats to them that their flatterers had bestowed u-they sat upon their respective thron-says the author, presents a mirror bein which every one sees himself ad-those beauties and perfections, in been drawn by the vanity of their othe flattery of others. To punish the tonness of the cruelty which they form they are now delivered up to be treat-the fancy and caprice of several slahere an opportunity of tyrannizing in

The author, having given us a descghastly spectres, who, says he, are alwa-Death, and are placed under the dis-burning vengeance which falls upon drop, and is never to be exhausted. pleasing scene of groves, filled with birds, and the odours of a thousand d-These groves are represented as rising many flowery meadows, and watered that diffuse a perpetual freshness, in eternal day, and a never-fading sprinthe author, was the habitation of tho-who were friends of the gods, and parents of the people. Among these Telemachus converses with the shade of one of his ancestors, who makes a most agreeable relation of the joys of Elysium, and the nature of its inhabitants. The residence of Sesostris among these happy shades, with his character and present employment, is drawn in a very lively manner, and with a great elevation of thought.

The description of that pure and gentle light, which overflows these happy regions, and clothes the spirits of these virtuous persons, hath something in it of that enthusiasm which this author was accused of by his enemies in the church of Rome; but, however it may look in religion, it makes a very beautiful figure in poetry.

The rays of the sun, says he, are darkness in comparison with this light, which rather deserves the name of glory, than that of light. It pierces the thickest bodies in the same manner as the sun-beams pass through crystal. It strengthens the sight instead of dazzling it; and nourishes, in the most inward recesses of the mind, a perpetual serenity that is not to be expressed. It enters and incorporates itself with the very substance of the soul: the spirits of the blessed feel it in all their senses, and in all their perceptions. It produces a certain source of peace and joy that arises in them, for ever running through all the faculties, and refreshing all the desires of the soul. External pleasures and delights, with all their charms and allurements, are regarded with the utmost indifference and neglect by these happy spirits, who have his great principle of pleasure within them, drawing the whole mind to itself, calling off their attention from the most delightful objects, and giving them all the transports of inebriation, without the confusion and folly of it.

I have here only mentioned some master-touches of this admirable piece, because the original itself is understood by the greater part of my readers. I must confess, I take a particular delight in these prospects of fatality, whether grounded upon the probable suggestions of a fine imagination, or the more severe conclusions of philosophy; as a man loves to hear all the discoveries or conjectures relating to a foreign country which he is, at some time, to inhabit. Prospects of this nature lighten the burden of any present evil, and refresh us under the worst and lowest circumstances of mortality. They extinguish in us both the fear and envy of human grandeur. Insolence shrinks its head, power disappears; pain, poverty, and death fly before them. In short, the mind that is habituated to the lively sense of a hereafter, can hope for what is the most terrifying to the generality of mankind, and rejoice in what is the most afflicting.

No. 157.] TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1710.

—Facile est inventis addere.—

It is easy to improve an invention

From my own Apartment, April 10.

I WAS last night in an assembly of very fine women. How I came among them is of no great importance to the reader. I shall only let him know that I was betrayed into so good company by the device of an old friend, who had promised to give some of his female acquaintance a sight of Mr. Bickerstaff. Upon hearing my name mentioned, a lady who sat by me, told me, they had brought together a female consort for my entertainment. "You must know," says she, "that we all of us look upon ourselves to be musical instruments, though we do not yet know of what kind; which we hope to leave to play to general laugh, and flourish in the then struck upon two ground could not but be more soft, and ever heard in a there was not a rests and pause of the other sex full, and no pa long by itself.

I seemed so said, and smile their pretty face word into their they looked upon then told them, so many charms had seen of the in their hands, tossed back her

The consort agree smiles, and appears who beats the time I was no sooner over in my thought assembly; which they are various stand as a sample

The person of instrument, that something exquisite lulls and soothes kind of melody startling it, and between transport of the Flute is a woman, that has the same time,

I must here perfect of the Finess of the sound of notes; though that the Hauteboisichord in the

By the side of so I must call herself a wit, and insipid, and with tart ill nature little turns, which spirit. The Flute the Flute so much the shrillness as however take their own sex are Flutes.

There chance with a great and studied in the rest of the during the who have done upon break out upon "The charming then would have the window to quette, therefore instrument which

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

Fiddle itself, the conversational, and was ravity of her which were of the eye, ss of the content, serious, ashire Horn-country lady, sence, diverted am not mis-otes is a little sic restrained l be improved out the town, fall likewise a Welsh-harp, s in the tunes ating the re-ritish heroes, escribe a cer-istorians that and descents, t or other, to d; for which ery often in due attention consort was a lle-drum, who s of the body, ie fan. Her Every thump ery often set ain romantic ed of nothing ling streams, auties of the ife. This in-ess in it, and f womankind ng divisions; rality of that y a great ges-sses of more y frequent re-an those who y be observed and in your who have no at of talking f music to an man of gale-e believed he t in my con-pe, who lived but upon his rding to ap-t passion was ith at a play; t, not finding ion, he grew he could not y much like s a Dulcimer, who, he found, took great delight in languishing, but would go no farther than of matrimony; so that she would never have any more of her than her heart, having won, he was forced to leave her, as of any further success. I must confess, say I have often considered her with a great miration: and I find her pleasure is so in first step of an amour, that her life will p dream, solitude, and soliloquy, until th charms makes her snatch at the worst me pretended to her. In the next place, say I fell in love with a Kit, who led me s through all the varieties of a familiar, nd indifferent behaviour, that the world be censorious, though without any cause; for son, to recover our reputations, we parted. To mend my hand, says he, I made my next to a Virginal, who gave me great encourag her cautious manner until some malicious told her of my long passion for the Kit, whi turn me off as a scandalous fellow. At despair,' says he, 'I betook myself to a who rejected me with contempt, after ha that my great-grandmother was a brewer.'

I found by the sequel of my friend's dis he had never aspired to a Hawthoy; that I exasperated by a Flageolet; and that, to th he pines away for a Flute.

Upon the whole, having thoroughly how absolutely necessary it is that two u which are to play together for life, should tuned, and go in perfect consort with ea would propose matches between the mu sexes, according to the following Table of

1. Drum and Kettle-drum.
2. Lute and Flute.
3. Harpsichord and Hautboy.
4. Violin and Flageolet.
5. Bass-Viol and Kit.
6. Trumpet and Welsh-Harp.
7. Hunting-horn and Hornpipe.
8. Bagpipe and Castanet.
9. Passing-Bell and Virginal.

Mr. Bickerstaff, in consideration of l friendship and acquaintance with Mr. Bet great esteem for his merit, summons all hi whether dead or living, mad or tame, Toas Dappers, Pretty-fellows, musicians or a make their appearance at the playhouse i market on Thursday next, when there wil acted for the benefit of the said Betterton.

No. 158.] THURSDAY, APRIL 1

Faciant nre intelligendo, ut nihil intelligi

While they pretend to know more if they know nothing in reality.

From my own Apartment, April 1

TOM FOLIO is a broker in learning, s get together good editions, and stock th of great men. There is not a sale of bo until Tom Folio is seen at the door. T an auction where his name is not heard too in the very nick of time, in the critics before the last decisive stroke of the hamp is not a subscription goes forward in wh not privy to the first rough draught of the nor a catalogue printed, that doth not ce wet from the press. He is a universal far as the title page of all authors: kno which they were discovered, the editions which they have passed, with the praises or which they have received from the several of the learned world. He has a greater Aldus and Elzevir, than for Virgil and if you talk of Herodotus, he breaks out eggyric upon Harry Stephens. He thinks an account of an author, when he tells of the subject he treats of, the name of the editor, or the year in which it was printed. Or, if you go into further particulars, he cries up the editor of the paper, extols the diligence of the printer, and is transported with the beauty of the title; he looks upon to be sound learning, and is full of critical criticism. As for those who talk of the style, and the justness of thought, or the brightness of any particular passages; he thinks they themselves write in the genius and the manner of the author they admire; Tom looks upon men of superficial learning, and flashy

THE TATLER.

Yesterday morning a visit from this learned man, that is the light in which I consider every man I discovered in him some little touches of the comb, which I had not before observed. I was full of the figure which he makes in the world of letters, and wonderfully satisfied with the stock of knowledge, he gave me broad information that he did not believe in all points as others had done. He then communicated a thought of a certain author upon a passage in the account of the dead, which I made the subject of a late paper. This thought hath taken root among men of Tom's pitch and understanding universally exploded by all that were to construe Virgil, or have any relish of

Not to trouble my reader with it, I found whole, that Tom did not believe a future reward and punishments, because Eneas, rising the empire of the dead, passed through of ivory, and not through that of horn. That Tom had not sense enough to give up in which he had once received, that I might be angling, I told him, 'that Virgil possibly versights as well as another author.' 'Ah! Bickerstaff,' says he, 'you would have another of him, if you would read him in Daniel's edition. I have perused him myself several times in that edition,' continued he, 'and after the most and most malicious examination, could find two faults in him; one of them is in the where there are two commas instead of a paragraph; and another in the third Georgic, where I find a semicolon turned upside down.' 'said I, 'these were not Virgil's faults, but of the transcriber.' 'I do not design it,' said he, 'as a reflection on Virgil; on the contrary, I know that all the manuscripts declaim against such a punctuation. Oh! Mr. Bickerstaff, what would a man give to see one simile writ in his own hand?' I asked him which simile he meant; but was answered, any in Virgil. He then told me all the secret in the commonwealth of learning; of mistakes that had the names of ancient authors to them; of all the books that were now in printing in the several parts of Europe; of amendments which are made, and not yet published; and a thousand other particulars, which not have my memory burdened with for a length being fully persuaded that I thoroughly admired him, and looked on his learning, he took his leave. I am a class, who are professed at understanding a word of particular, that carries a Pastoral which, I am sure, he is a beauty but the clearness of

There is another kind of Tom Folio's impertinence, in figures and embellishments; he is still more insupportable in the same degree as he is more very often are editors, commentators, scholiasts, and critics; and deep learning without common sense set a greater value upon the meaning of the words upon the author for having allowed the passage itself not at the same time that the greatest men of the world do it. They will look with contempt upon the most beautiful poems that have been written by contemporaries; but will study for a twelvemonth to publish, and expound such a modern author would be the strictest morals, severest professions, will write volumes is originally in Greek or the most immoral authors; upon the various readings that can be said in excellent works sufficiently show the authors; and that what of their great learning, and lasciviousness of temper.

A pedant of this nature is described in six lines of verse to conclude his character:

Un Pedant enyvré de sa Tout herissé Grec, tout b Et qui de mille auteurs n Dans sa tête entasse n Croit qu'un livre fait tou La raison ne voit goutte,

Brim-full of learning see Bristling with horrid Gre A thousand authors he in And with their maxims And thinks that, without Reason is blind, and con

No. 159.] SATURDAY

Nitor in adversum; n Impetus.

I steer against their m Borne back by all the

From my own a

The wits of this island instead of correcting the all they could to inflame one of the common topics a scribbler hath found here there is an occasion for upon matrimony is sure attended with very pernicious a country esquire, upon the town, has gone home

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

hath been life as a do-conversation beds, silent introduced by
s. to stem the te particular ly in counte-s evils out of ost happy or iced in. In ider the wits
re. I have was a man first quality to be a kind riend, compa-
like instance much greater book of let-of turns as r, who writes of that beauural, and is ancient wri-Cicero; who,
e taken out ink it inconners, or the record in his when he was on that then da, as well as edible proofs indefatigable appy a man onstancy, ho-so great dis-ny dear Tul-the sake of a ch reason to little Cicero, an with the happened by dly persuade it is all be-o thought I and did not dship.—At I shall take he benefit of opes we may Italy. If I turn to your I recover you iety very well about selling ia, consider,

four present will become st, that I am uld not will-us take care idone; if we ue will keep e him in the world. Mind your health, and let me know quently what you are doing.—Remember Tulliola and Cicero."

II.

Do not fancy that I write longer letters one than to yourself, unless when I chance to a longer letter from another, which I am imsibly obliged to answer in every particular. truth of it is, I have no subject for a letter sent; and, as my affairs now stand, there is more painful to me than writing. As for your dear Tulliola, I cannot write to you abundance of tears; for I see both of you whom I always wished to be happy, and ought to have made so.—I must acknowlhave done every thing for me with the utmostude, and the utmost affection; nor indeed is than I expected from you; though, at the time, it is a great aggravation of my ill fortune the afflictions I suffer can be relieved only by which you undergo for my sake. For honest rius has written me a letter, which I could not without weeping very bitterly; wherein he givan account of the public procession which you made for me at Rome. Alas! my dearest life then Terentia, the darling of my soul, whose and recommendations have been so often sought others; must my Terentia droop under the weight sorrow, appear in the habit of a mourner, pe-floods of tears, and all this for my sake; I sake, who have undone my family, by consult-safety of others? As for what you write about ing your house, I am very much afflicted, that is laid out upon my account may any way you to misery and want. If we can bring about design, we may indeed recover every thing; fortune persists in persecuting us, how can I of your sacrificing for me the poor remainder possessions? No, my dearest life, let me beto let those bear my expenses who are able, at haps willing to do it; and if you would show love to me, do not injure your health, which ready too much impaired. You present y-before my eyes day and night; I see you amidst innumerable difficulties; I am afraid you should sink under them; but I find in y-the qualifications that are necessary to support be sure therefore to cherish your health, that may compass the end of your hopes and your vours.—Farewell, my Terentia, my heart's farewell."

III.

'Aristocritus hath delivered to me three letters, which I have almost defaced with my Oh! my Terentia, I am consumed with grief feel the weight of your sufferings more than own. I am more miserable than you are, in standing you are very much so; and that I reason, though our calamity is common, it is fault that brought it upon us. I ought to have rather than have been driven out of the city therefore overwhelmed, not only with grief with shame. I am ashamed that I did not utmost for the best of wives, and the dear children. You are ever present before me in your mourning, your affliction, and your Amidst all which, there scarce appears to least glimmering of hope.—However, as I you hope, I will not despair—I will do what yvise me. I have returned my thanks to friends whom you mentioned, and have let know, that you have acquainted me with the offices. I am sensible of Piso's extraordinary zeal and endeavours to serve me. Oh! would the gods grant that you and I might live together in the enjoyment of such a son-in-law, and of our dear children!—As for what you write of your coming to me, if I desire it, I would rather you should be where you are, because I know you are my principal agent at Rome. If you succeed, I shall come to you: if not—But I need say no more. Be careful of your health; and be assured that nothing is, or ever was, so dear to me as yourself. Farewell, my Terentia! I fancy that I see you, and therefore cannot command my weakness so far as to refrain from tears.'

IV.

'I do not write to you as often as I might; because, notwithstanding I am afflicted at all times, I am quite overcome with sorrow whilst I am writing to you, or reading any letters that I receive from you.—If these evils are not to be removed, I must desire to see you, my dearest life, as soon as possible, and to die in your embraces; since neither the gods, whom you always religiously worshipped, nor the men, whose good I always promoted, have rewarded us according to our deserts.—What a distressed wretch am I! Should I ask a weak woman, oppressed with cares and sickness, to come and live with me; or, shall I not ask her? Can I live without you? But I find I must. If there be any hopes of my return, help it forward, and promote it as much as you are able. But if all that is over, as I fear it is, find out some way or other of coming to me. This you may be sure of, that I shall not look upon myself as quite undone whilst you are with me. But what will become of Tulliola? You must look to that; I must confess, I am entirely at a loss about her. Whatever happens we must take care of the reputation and marriage of that dear unfortunate girl. As for Cicero, he shall live in my bosom, and in my arms. I cannot write any further, my sorrows will not let me.—Support yourself, my dear Terentia, as well as you are able. We have lived and flourished together amidst the greatest honours; it is not our crimes, but our virtues, that have distressed us.—Take more than ordinary care of your health; I am more afflicted with your sorrows than my own.—Farewell, my Terentia, thou, dearest, faithfullest, and best of wives!'

Methinks it is a pleasure to see this great man in his family, who makes so different a figure in the Forum, or senate of Rome. Every one admires the orator and the consul; but for my part, I esteem the husband and the father. His private character, with all the little weaknesses of humanity, is as amiable, as the figure he makes in public is awful and majestic. But at the same time that I love to surprise so great an author in his private walks, and to survey him in his most familiar lights, I think it would be barbarous to form to ourselves any idea of mean-spiritedness from these natural openings of his heart, and disburdening of his thoughts to a wife. He has written several other letters to the same person, but none with so great passion as these of which I have given the foregoing extracts.

It would be ill-nature not to acquaint the English reader, that his wife was successful in her solicitations for this great man; and saw her husband return to the honours of which he had been deprived, with all the pomp and acclamation that usually attended the greatest triumph.

No. 160.

Pro

A common draws upon and, if one interpreted by intimacy. About two hours at my door, maid could what was the up word, that very much with me. and by his bed, I fancied upholsterer, James's-par gentleman, that I could thing to say writing.' message, to would stay ring; and his were driven vested.' He which I found

As much of my brave a victory be out of hume sooner recover but I was in upon my voice ask he same time l pose to talk which every hence. I into the room the gentler would rather that I persi any body th answer pres sible for me such unexp my clothes turns about deal of ang politics, tha disquiet of advantage yet it is su species of n than to find of Europe, upon the m cians, and by a states I heard th letter to my hurry, to g awake; wh

'MR. 'I was let you kn conversed Mall, havin of you, to ired me to any would a hundred ast advices than it was will accept

If you re-as we were t has hapmorning, I secret. I position by you at the circumstances
his quarter

good news particulars, which I will have not

will soon
the enemy ying away e we were bid me tell ten among ours of the ill, I hope, propose to you will is the only lice of my clock to-ant, &c. ender.'

th at this and in his uch I have dered my in such a ndisposed, aking my lie, I shall ave lately

nts. The angry at to a Bass-nded from a match-the Kit? thing but

e. Of all you mar-
I should ac, either and die a tion from KIT? shown in g her to wants to as the cked and

My next letter is from Tom Foho, who takes it amiss that I have published a him so much to his disadvantage.

Sir,
I suppose you mean Tom Fool, whom I met Tom Foho in a late trifling paper of I find, it is your design to run down all his learning. The tobacco-paper on your own writings are usually printed, as we correctors of the press, and the scurvy fellows, shew the extent of your knowledge, not but you look upon John Me as great a man as Elzevir; and Aldus is much another as Bernard Lintot. If you me my revenge, I would only desire of me publish an account of your library, which, I say, would furnish out an extraordinary collection.

Tom
It hath always been my way to haif with silence; though I cannot but observe the proceedings of this gentleman, content to asperse my writings, but he through my eyes, these eminent and worth Mr. John Morphew and Mr. Bernard Li

N<sup>o</sup>. 161.] THURSDAY, APRIL 20, — Nunquam libertas gratior existit Quam sub rege pio.

Never does liberty appear more announced the government of a pious and good

From my own Apartment, April 1

I was walking two or three days ago, in a pleasant retirement, and amusing myself with reading of that ancient and beautiful allegory 'The Table of Cebes.' I was at last so weary, that I sat down to rest myself beneath a tree, in the midst of an agreeable solitude. The music of the birds, that filled all the air, made me a-deep before I was aware of it. I was followed by a dream, that I imputed to the foregoing author, who had made an impression upon my imagination, and put his own way of thinking.

I fancied myself among the Alps, and, instead of a dream, seemed every moment to move from one summit to another, until at last, having made thus any progress over the towering mountains, I arrived at the very top of the broken rocks and precipices. I thought, I saw a prodigious circuit of land, I reached above the clouds, and encompassed a space of ground, which I had a great deal to do to get into. I thereupon continued my foot of travelling through a great variety of scenes, until I had gained the top of the mountain, which seemed another Alps of looking down from hence into a spacious plain, which was surrounded on all sides by this mountain, which presented me with the most magnificent prospect I had ever seen. There was a gayety of colours in the embroidery of the mountains, more lively green in the leaves and grass, and more blue in the streams, than what I ever met in any other region. The light itself had a more shining and glorious in it than that of the day is made in other places. I was well astonished at the discovery of such a paradise in the wilderness of those cold, hoary landscapes, which lay about it; but found at length, that this region was inhabited by the goddess of whose presence was softened by the rigours of the climate, enriched the barrenness of the soil, and more than supplied the absence of the sun. The place was covered with a wonderful profusion of flowers, that, without being disposed into regular borders and parterres, grew promiscuously; and had a greater beauty in their natural luxuriance and disorder, than they could have received from the checks and restraints of art. There was a river that arose out of the south side of the mountain, that, by an infinite number of turnings and windings, seemed to visit every plant, and cherish the several beauties of the spring, with which the fields abounded. After having run to and fro in a wonderful variety of meanders, as unwilling to leave so charming a place, it at last throws itself into the hollow of a mountain; from whence it passes under a long range of rocks, and at length rises in that part of the Alps where the inhabitants think is the first source of the Rhone. This river, after having made its progress through those free nations, stagnates in a huge lake at the leaving of them; and no sooner enters into the regions of slavery, but it runs through them with an incredible rapidity, and takes its shortest way to the sea.

I descended into the happy fields that lay beneath me, and, in the midst of them, beheld the goddess sitting upon a throne. She had nothing to enclose her but the bounds of her own dominions, and nothing over her head but the heavens. Every glance of her eye cast a track of light where it fell, that revived the spring, and made all things smile about her. My heart grew cheerful at the sight of her; and, as she looked upon me, I found a certain confidence growing in me, and such an inward resolution as I never felt before that time.

On the left hand of the goddess sat the genius of a commonwealth, with the cap of Liberty on her head, and, in her hand, a wand like that with which a Roman citizen used to give his slaves their freedom. There was something mean and vulgar, but at the same time exceeding bold and daring, in her air; her eyes were full of fire; but had in them such casts of fierceness and cruelty, as made her appear to me rather dreadful than amiable. On her shoulders she wore a mantle, on which there was wrought a great confusion of figures. As it flew in the wind, I could not discern the particular design of them, but saw wounds in the bodies of some, and agonies in the faces of others; and over one part of it could read in letters of blood, 'The Ides of March.'

On the right hand of the goddess was the genius of monarchy. She was clothed in the whitest ermine, and wore a crown of the purest gold upon her head. In her hand, she held a sceptre like that which is born by the British monarchs. A couple of tame lions lay crouching at her feet. Her countenance had in it a very great majesty without any mixture of terror. Her voice was like the voice of an angel, filled with so much sweetness, accompanied with such an air of condescension, as tempered the awfulness of her appearance, and equally inspired love and veneration into the hearts of all that beheld her.

In the train of the goddess of Liberty were the several Arts and Sciences, who all of them flourished underneath her eye. One of them in particular made a greater figure than any of the rest, who held a thunderbolt in her hand, which had the power of melting, piercing, or breaking every thing that stood in its way to the succession.

There was a very great variety in the region. The goddess had every part of the world was in its own power, and other was so with groves in a word, and The name of Commerce, plough, and which she ploughed, and other wore her eyes fixed

I was with this delight was not in until at length and pitched several objects taken notice flowery place which were a continued charmed with declivities outside was forests of fir found in other inhabited flights from thoughts I came of the to which the flocks so high reason have phers to take were soon described two mountains, day and night there were the each of these perpetual alarm vading it.

Tyranny dressed in a hand an iron with the gate norance, with cution holding flowers-de-luce Poverty, Faint appearances Among the racks, wheel struments and miserable.

Before the dressed in a and leading Clamour, with Confusion, heads; Impudence Rapine, with and uproar they disturbed tent with sleep

710. ing. This duty likewise I have end charge, by those wholesome precep 10. given my countrymen in regard to and the severe censures which I ha ragouts and fricassées. There is n formed, a pair of red heels to be miles of London; which I may without vanity, to the becoming pressed in that particular. I must with the petticoat is not so great; b yet done with it, I hope I shall in a effectual stop to that growing evil. ticle of building, I intend hereafter it; having lately observed several private shops, that stand upon C and whole rows of tin pots showing order to their sale, through a sash-w I have likewise followed the exam censors, in punishing offences acco lity of the offender. It was usual a senator, who had been guilty of ties, out of the senate-house, by on when they called over the list of h the same manner, to remove of worthless men who stand possessed I have made frequent draughts of the vicious part of the nobility, and to the new society of upholders, w orders for their interment. As the used to punish the knights or gent by taking away their horses from th the canes of many criminals of fig just reason to animadvert upon. As among the common people of Rom nerally chastised by being thrown tribe, and placed in one which was My reader cannot but think I have this punishment, when I have degr of men into bombs, squibs, and another into drums, bass-violas, and to mention whole packs of delinque shut up in kennels, and the new ho at present erecting for the recepti countrymen, who give me but littl amendment, on the borders of Moc only observe, upon this last partic some late surveys I have taken shall think it necessary to enlarge buildings which I design in this que When my great predecessor, stood for the censorship of Rome, th other competitors who offered the get an interest amongst the people, promises of the mild and gentle they would use towards them in th on the contrary, told them 'he pres a candidate, because he knew the immorality and corruption; and th give him their votes, he would prom use of such a strictness and severit should recover them out of it.' torians, upon this occasion, very the public-spiritedness of that pe Cato for their censor, notwithstanding of recommending himself. I may extol my own countrymen upon th who, without any respect to party, from myself, have made such genu for the Censor of Great Britain, as nificance to my old age, and which than I would any post in Europe o the value. I shall only add, that logue of subscribers, which I intend to print ideally in the front of my lucubrations, I find es of the greatest beauties and wits in the land of Great Britain; which I only mention benefit of any of them who have not yet submitted being my design to close the subscription y short time.

inficet est inficetior rure, poemata attingit; neque idem unquam est beatus, ac poema cum scribit: audet in se, tanque se ipse miratur. am idem omnes fallimur; neque est quisquam non in aliquâ re videre Suffenum nus has no more wit than a mere clown when apt to write verses; and yet he is never happy when he is scribbling: so much does he himself and his compositions. And, indeed, the foible of every one of us; for there is no thing who is not a Sufferus in one thing or YESTERDAY came hither about two hours before company generally make their appearance, with a view to read over all the newspapers; but, upon going down, I was accosted by Ned Softly, who came from a corner in the other end of the room, and found he had been writing something. 'Mr. Staff,' said he, 'I observe by a late paper of that you and I are just of a humour; for you now, of all impertinences, there is nothing so much hate as news. I never read a Gamy life; and never trouble my head about politics, whether they win or lose, or in what part of the world they lie encamped.' Without more time to reply, he drew a paper of verses out of his pocket, telling me, 'that he had something which would entertain me more agreeably; and that he desired my judgment upon every line, for he had time enough before us until the commencing in.'

ling myself unavoidably engaged in such a station, I was resolved to turn my pain into a re, and to divert myself as well as I could with odd a fellow. 'You must understand,' says that the sonnet I am going to read to you written upon a lady, who showed me some of her own making, and is, perhaps, the best of our age. But you shall hear it.' In which he began to read as follows:

L

You seem a sister
Or Phœbus' s

I fancy, when y
(Your song y
Your pen was p
For, ah ! it w

'Why,' says I, 'it ceits, a very lump of thing in it that pique line is certainly as p epigram, for so I t entered into the th Bickerstaff,' says he, body knows you to b to tell you truly, I r tion of 'Horace's A before I sat down to shown you. But y observe every line o pass without your ap

When dress'd in

'That is,' says he, on; when you are wplied, 'I know your same,' said he, and :

And tune you

'Pray observe the scarce a consonant is upon liquids. Give me said I, 'I think it very glad to hear you next.

You seem a

'That is,' says muses; for, if you will find it was the of them.' 'I remem pray proceed.'

Or Phœbe

'Phœbus,' says he little instances, Mr. reading. Then, to t which Phœbus and stanza, you may ob den into the familia

Or Phœbe

'Let us now,' said the stanza; I find the the metaphor.'

I fancy, wh

'It is very right,' turn of words in the hour in adjusting upon me, whether "Your song you sing You shall hear then

I fancy, when (Your song

I fancy, when (You sing y

'Truly,' said I, 'way, that you have
'Dear sir,' said I, 'you have a great you think of the n

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

ing;
ide Cupid
meaning,
gh bit off.
ms up the rt.
not make is looks as ig pricked urt.
'assured
h! than to le indeed ill in one
But as to s but sup-his quills
s going to zen critics
I not like,
and whis-
me again
, 1710.
,
rum,
onestus?
iat. vi. 34.
—Francis.
6. ny packets quarters of countries, nsor; and so great a hat I have office. As ligested it orsements sign, when ged in, to die. ions upon ents. As, sign in the e approbam famous
-bar; and thin the li-
the town.
the same then been otherhithe.
be always
Some of a dream, au when I ight upon strological erly a lufor filling ers desire criticisms

on the dead, and others my censures on the living For this reason, I once resolved, in the new edition of my works, to range my several papers under distinct heads, according as their principal design was to benefit and instruct the different capacities of my readers; and to follow the example of some very great authors, by writing at the head of each the course, Ad Aulam, Ad Academiam, Ad Populum, Ad Clerum.
There is no particular in which my correspondents of all ages, conditions, sexes, and complexions, un-versally agree, except only in their thirst after sen-dal. It is impossible to conceive, how many have recommended their neighbours to me upon this account, or how unmercifully I have been abused by several unknown hands, for not publishing the secret histories of cuckoldom that I have received from most every street in town.
It would indeed be very dangerous for me to re-over the many praises and eulogiums, which come to me from all the corners of the nation, were they mixed with many checks, reprimands, scurrilities and reproaches; which several of my good-natured countrymen cannot forbear sending me, though often costs them twopence or a groat before they can convey them to my hands: so that sometimes when I am put into the best humour in the world, after having read a panegyric upon my performance and looked upon myself as a benefactor to the British nation, the next letter, perhaps, I open, beginning with, 'You old doting scoundrel?—Are not you a sad dog?—Sirrah, you deserve to have your nose slit,' and the like ingenious conceits. These little mortifications are necessary to suppress the pride and vanity which naturally arise in the mind of a received author, and enable me to bear the reputation which my courteous readers bestow upon me, without becoming a coxcomb by it. It was for the same reason, that when a Roman general entered the city in the pomp of a triumph, the commonwealth allowed of several little drawbacks to his reputation, by conniving at such of the rabble as appeared libels and lampoons upon him within hearing; and by that means engaged his thoughts upon his weakness and imperfections, as well as the merits that advanced him to so great honours.
The conqueror, however, was not the less esteemed for being a man in some particulars, because he appeared as a god in others.
There is another circumstance in which my countrymen have dealt very perversely with me; and that is, in searching not only into my life, but into the lives of my ancestors. If there has been blot in my family for these ten generations, it has been discovered by some or other of my correspondents. In short, I find the ancient family of Bickerstaffs has suffered very much through malice and prejudice of my enemies. Some of them twit me in the teeth with the conduct of my aunt Margery. Nay, there are some who have been so disingenuous, as to throw Maud the milkmaid into my dish, notwithstanding I myself was the first who discovered that alliance. I reap however many benefits from the malice of these enemies, as they let me see my own faults, and give me a view of myself in the worst light; as they hinder me from being blown up by flattery and self-conceit; as they make me keep a watchful eye over my own actions and at the same time make me cautious how I treat of others, and particularly of my friends and relations, or value myself upon the antiquity of my family.

But the most formidable part of my correspondents are those, whose letters are filled with threats and menaces. I have been treated so often after this manner, that, not thinking it sufficient to fence well, in which I am now arrived at the utmost perfection, and to carry pistols about me, which I have always tucked within my girdle; I several months since made my will, settled my estate, and took leave of my friends, looking upon myself as no better than a dead man. Nay, I went so far as to write a long letter to the most intimate acquaintance I have in the world, under the character of a departed person, giving him an account of what brought me to that untimely end, and of the fortitude with which I met it. This letter being too long for the present paper, I intend to print it by itself very suddenly; and, at the same time, I must confess, I took my hint of it from the behaviour of an old soldier in the civil wars, who was corporal of a company in a regiment of foot, about the same time that I myself was a cadet in the king's army.

This gentleman was taken by the enemy; and the two parties were upon such terms at that time, that we did not treat each other as prisoners of war, but as traitors and rebels. The poor corporal, being condemned to die, wrote a letter to his wife when under sentence of execution. He writ on the Thursday, and was to be executed on the Friday; but, considering that the letter would not come to his wife's hands until Saturday, the day after execution, and being at that time more scrupulous than ordinary in speaking exact truth, he formed his letter rather according to the posture of his affairs when she read it, than as they stood when he sent it: though, it must be confessed, there is a certain perplexity in the style of it, which the reader will easily pardon, considering his circumstances.

DEAR WIFE,

'Hoping you are in good health, as I am at this present writing; this is to let you know, that yesterday, between the hours of eleven and twelve, I was hanged, drawn, and quartered. I died very penitently, and every body thought my case very hard. Remember me kindly to my poor fatherless children.

'Yours, until death,

'W. B.'

It so happened, that this honest fellow was relieved by a party of his friends, and had the satisfaction to see all the rebels hanged who had been his enemies. I must not omit a circumstance which exposed him to raillery his whole life after. Before the arrival of the next post, that would have set all things clear, his wife was married to a second husband, who lived in the peaceable possession of her; and the corporal, who was a man of plain understanding, did not care to stir in the matter, as knowing that she had the news of his death under his own hand, which she might have produced upon occasion.

No. 165.] SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1710.

From my own Apartment, April 28.

It has always been my endeavour to distinguish between realities and appearances, and to separate true merit from the pretence to it. As it shall ever be my study to make discoveries of this nature in human life, and to settle the proper distinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and those false colours and resemblances of them that shine alike in the eyes of the vulgar; so I shall be more partial to merits and the more general comb another's la while men which is nat such trifling knowledge, and silence. hypocrisy in the power of mon people finds its reward attends it, which it rec

Of this shun, empy is generally in the comm without enthor, has a f instruments, and, as they author perfect set of Easy, Nature he varies, co in every par or meaning. are, an elevated voice, and a out, whether gether in ge lump. He pedantry of when you m Will's. He Horace, and from those o strength so, thing in whi voucher.

With these ments, Sir T demns them and death up It is impossi convulsions, feature of h the reading.

About a w house of m his wife and mirth, Sir T eldest daugh blowing as it He immedi to sit down v him, where l der? He on fell a cursing 'A wicked r there ever s this began to one had hurt talked to him 'in St. Jame shire!' 'Is have been at 'Been,' says the park, in ne such a ughing at now worst

ory. 'In bserved a shirts in ne up at my legs;
e, that the ved a very on a very at a dull in a thou-his foolish new a play as you can t your pit. 'It is a ts here, to ce without ould travel
o an enter-she fancies at a fast-ne she has our simple ears just,
without a she, who I I laughed which you
n,' says he,
efy any one laugh by,
who could e are such and several might.' 'I your great ey there is the sea and dead water.'
continued
him a judg-re vacation edly? 'Many fault;—
'For my-
I think the s to please;
immediately that is my contenance;
re.
been at my ference, to dy, who by ent top, erve, with in, by his ill-himself ca-pains, and on the com-

White's Chocolate-house, May

THE world is so overgrown with its behaviour, and method of living, that sooner laid before mankind the at-species of men, but there starts up to new sort of impertinents that had before tice. This afternoon, as I was talki Mrs. Sprightly's porter, and desirin upon an extraordinary occasion, it was spied by Tom Modely, riding by in his did me the honour to stop, and asked there on a Monday? I answered, 't ness of importance, which I wanted to to the lady of the house.' Tom is one who look upon knowledge of the fashonly liberal science; and was so rough that a well-bred man would as soon ca who keeps a day, at midnight, as on that which she professes being at home rules and accounts,' adds he, 'which be transgressed by those who understa and he who offends in that kind ought ill if he is turned away, even when h son look out at her window whom he Nay,' said he, 'my Lady Dimple is this rule, that she takes it for a piece ing and distinction to deny herself month. Mrs. Comma, the great soup on it, and I myself have heard her lord's porter, or a lady's woman, can lie in that case, because they act by in their words are no more their own t puppet.'

He was going on with his ribaldry sudden he looked on his watch, and twenty visits to make, and drove aw their ceremony. I was then at leisure the tasteless manner of life, which a lows lead in this town, and spend y less spirit than other men do their of expensives in human society, thoug themselves wholly insignificant, but consideration when they are mixed v and very much at a loss how to de-what character, distinction, or den-place them; except you give me le the order of the Jesuits. This order like that of the Jesuits; and you every way of life, and in every pr Modely has long appeared to me at t species. By being habitually in the he knows perfectly well when a coa a periwig well mounted. As soon a place where he is, he tells the next m is your tailor, and judges of you choice of your periwig-maker than dy. His business in this world is to be w the great-st circumstance that is to his annuals is, that he wears twent Thus, without ever speaking reason or passion among the women, he is e received; and, without any one m has every man's indulgence.

This order has produced great n able copiers in painting, good rhyr and harmless projectors in politics. them at first sight grow acquainted insensuch, that one who had not stud did not know the true cause of the harities, would think that they ha intimation of each other, like the Fi other day at Will's I heard Modely, the same order, show their equal talents with great delight. The learned Insipid was commending Racine's turns; the genteel Insipid Devillier's curls.

These creatures, when they are not forced into any particular employment, for want of ideas in their own imaginations, are the constant plagus of all they meet with, by enquiries for news and scandal, which makes them the heroes of visiting-days; where they help the design of the meeting, which is to pass away that odious thing called time, in discourses too trivial to raise any reflections which may put well-bred persons to the trouble of thinking.

From my own Apartment, May 1.

I was looking out of my parlour-window this morning, and receiving the honours which Margery, the milk-maid to our lane, was doing me, by dancing before my door with the plate of half her customers on her head, when Mr. Clayton, the author of Arsinoe, made me a visit, and desired me to insert the following advertisement in my ensuing paper.

The pastoral masque, composed by Mr. Clayton, author of Arsinoe, will be performed on Wednesday, the third instant, in the great room at York-buildings. Tickets to be had at White's Chocolate-house, St. James's Coffee-house, in St. James's-street, and Young Man's Coffee-house.

Note.—The tickets delivered out for the 27th of April, will be then taken.

When I granted his request, I made one to him, which was, that the performers should put their instruments in tune before the audience came in; for that I thought the resentment of the eastern prince, who, according to the old story, took tuning for playing, to be very just and natural. He was so civil, as not only to promise that favour; but also to assure me, that he would order the heels of the performers to be muffled in cotton, that the artists in so polite an age as ours, may not intermix with their harmony, a custom which so nearly resembles the stamping-dances of the West Indians or Hottentots.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

A Bass-viol of Mr. Bickerstaff's acquaintance, whose mind and fortune do not very exactly agree, proposes to set himself to sale by way of lottery. Ten thousand pounds is the sum to be raised, at three-pence a ticket, in consideration that there are more women who are willing to be married, than that can spare a greater sum. He has already made over his person to trustees for the said money to be forthcoming, and ready to take to wife the fortunate woman that wins him.

N. B. Tickets are given out by Mr. Charles Lillie, and by Mr. John Morphew. Each adventurer must be a virgin, and subscribe her name to her ticket.

Whereas the several churchwardens of most of the parishes within the bills of mortality have in an earnest manner applied themselves by way of petition, and have also made a presentment, of the vain and loose deportment during divine service, of persons of too great figure in all their said parishes for their reproof: and whereas it is therein set forth, that by salutations given each other, hints, shrugs, ogles, playing of fans, fooling with canes at their mouths, and other wanton gesticulations, their whole congregation appears rather a theatrical audience, than a house of devotion; it is hereby ordered that all canes, cravats, bosom-laces, muffs, fans, snuff-boxes, and all other instruments made use of to give persons unbecoming airs, shall be immediately forfeited and sold; and of the sum arising from the sale thereof, a ninth part shall be paid to the poor, and the rest to the overseers.

THE TATLER. No. 32.

No. 167

Segnium
Quam

With w
Than v

For

HAVING re
Mr. Better
cloisters ne walk thithe whom I had actions I ha what is grea the argumen
descriptions
As the rudi wrought up lic punishme and educati exercised, wh had arrived ments. Th except it be which cann motion, and bestowed by push the u further off h

Such an a with the san
The greatest
ment, and co ple to all th winning bel to the senti Rome thoug as graceful imagination
great and setting up fo inimitable c

There is for the form theatre. To whom I am perfection o doing. Y receive lect manes. F little relish for the just tragedies.
can leave ne beyond the p are accompl practising;
is what ever
he did.

I have ha tiquity coul any of the our stage.
in, when he kerchief in upon his m mons make and vicissit

to be afraid

st of day-closet this except he re himself,
sentences:
observes, at longer ossible, in passage in ner of win-ed with so e I walked n the same
f a person seen him faint lights ted to the began to assius had was so un-humour of
ave. Nay, distinctions reflections ection and out regret, the neigh-
which my
to dust as n the grave
rch. This luceth,

rooy,
o day,
t fools
ort candle!
player
he stage,

Betterton,
any thing,
e pleasure ay possibly left behind gedian was umstances wife, after a rest amity,
s decay, as nd, in pro-both in her n, added to ave deter-her distress tion of her est defence
s. I dwell ience to a
and has by ome object ncealed.

or exerting
ingenuous fortune, to l as a be-ve thanks;
erved; for owing her lling to be

ADVERTISEMENT.

Whereas it hath been signified to the under the pretence that he has en Moving Picture, and particularly admir ing Statue some persons within the libe minster have venaled walking pictur that the ill pictures have, within fi sales by auction returned to the inhabi first proprietors: that matter has b looked into, and orders are given to P notice of all who are concerned in sucl direction to draw their pictures, that hanged in effigy, in terrorem to all au future.

NO. 168. SATURDAY, MAY

From my own Apartment, Ma

NEVER was man so much teased, or so much uneasiness, as I have done th tween a couple of fellows, with whom I nately engaged to sup, where there wei others in company. One of them is th cibly impudent, and the other as meorr Upon bearing my name, the man of a calls himself, began to assume an aw reserve by way of ridicule upon me as, said, 'he must have a care of his behav would never be writ on all that should man of freedom and ease, for such the himself, asked me, 'whether my siste breeding or not?' After they had d they were impudent to a very smart man; who stood his ground very well company ere they ought, but could n countenance. I look upon such a real good action; for while he receiv there was a modest and worthy young secure by him, and a lady of the family time guarded against the nauseous fam one and the more painful mirth of the conversation, where there were a tho said not worth repeating, made me myself, how it is that men of these disa racters often go great lengths in the w dom fail of out-stripping men of merit; so well, that, with a load of imperfect heads, they go on in opposition to gener while they who are every way the languish away their days, though pos approbation and good-will of all who k

If we would examine into the secr action in the impudent and the absurd, though they bear a great resemblance: vious, that they move upon very differe The impudent are pressing, though the are disagreeable; the absurd are imp cause they think they are acceptable, is a vice, and absurdity a folly. Sir F talks very agreeably upon the subject e He takes notice, that the orator being was the first, second, and third requisi fine speaker, still answered, action.

This, said he, is the very outward for ing; and yet it is what with the genera force than the most consummate abilities is to the rest of mankind of the same use is to orators.

The truth is, the gross of men are go by appearances than realities; and t man in his air and behaviour undertake what he has ability and merit, while th diffident gives himself up as one who is possessed of neither. For this reason, men of front carry things before them with little opposition; and make so skilful a use of their talent, that they can grow out of humour like men of consequence, and be sour, and make their dissatisfaction do them the same service as desert. This way of thinking has often furnished me with an apology for great men who confer favours on the impudent. In carrying on the government of mankind, they are not to consider what men they themselves approve in their closets and private conversation; but what men will extend themselves furthest, and more generally pass upon the world for such as their patrons want in such and such stations, and consequently take so much work off the hands of those who employ them.

Far be it, that I should attempt to lessen the acceptance which men of this character meet with in the world; but I humbly propose only, that they who have merit of a different kind would accomplish themselves in some degree with this quality of which I am now treating. Nay, I allow these gentlemen to press as forward as they please in the advancements of their interests and fortunes, but not to intrude upon others in conversation also. Let them do what they can with the rich and the great, as far as they are suffered; but let them not interrupt the easy and agreeable. They may be useful as servants in ambition, but never as associates in pleasure. However, as I would still drive at something instructive in every lucubration, I must recommend it to all men who feel in themselves an impulse towards attempting laudable actions, to acquire such a degree of assurance, as never to lose the possession of themselves in public or private, so far as to be incapable of acting with a due decorum on any occasion they are called to. It is a mean want of fortitude in a good man, not to be able to do a virtuous action with as much confidence as an impudent fellow does an ill one. There is no way of mending such false modesty, but by laying it down for a rule, that there is nothing shameful but what is criminal.

The Jesuits, an order whose institution is perfectly calculated for making a progress in the world, take care to accomplish their disciples for it, by breaking them of all impertinent bashfulness, and accustoming them to a ready performance of all indifferent things. I remember in my travels, when I was once at a public exercise in one of their schools, a young man made a most admirable speech, with all the beauty of action, cadence of voice, and force of argument imaginable, in defence of the love of glory. We were all enamoured with the grace of the youth, as he came down from the desk where he spoke, to present a copy of his speech to the head of the society. The principal received it in a very obliging manner, and bid him go to the marketplace and fetch a joint of meat, for he should dine with him. He bowed, and in a trice the orator returned, full of the sense of glory in this obedience, and with the best shoulder of mutton in the market.

This treatment capacitates them for every scene of life. I therefore recommend it to the consideration of all who have the instruction of youth, which of the two is the more inexcusable, he who does every thing by the mere force of his impudence, or he who performs nothing through the oppression of his modesty? In a word, it is a weakness not to be able to attempt what a man thinks he ought, and there is no modesty but in self-denial.

P. S. Upon my coming home, I received the following petition and letter:

‘Th

‘She

‘That y who has h general te years, in e

riage, but

‘That s

being above at fifteen y

‘Yo

‘I

‘I

‘I

‘O

‘O

‘MR.

‘Accord way to dis than you the benefit of it I leav

—allow th

Pray accep

wish you n

‘Y

I must be founded since she n mother of being one but as for t project a will surren

No. 169.]

O rus! qua

Nunc veter

Ducere sol

Shall

And v

Seque

In sw

The h

THE sum

our family

two in the more agree consider th

than when am admon visited Sta rate than t not produ the growth since I cou should be sible to ad

sight by t

particular

the variety

produced in that p

have? A destructio

THE TATLER.

170.] THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1710.

Fortuna sævo læta negotio, et Ludum insolentem ludere pertinax, Transmutat incertos honores, Nunc mihi, nunc alio benigna.

Hor. 3. Od. xxix. 49.

But Fortune, ever-changing dame, Indulges her malicious joy,
And constant plays her haughty game, Proud of her office to destroy;
To day to me her bounty flows,
And now to others she the bliss bestows.

Francis.

From my own apartment, May 10.

THIS morning spent some time in reading on the subject of the vicissitude of human life, and aside my book, and began to ruminate on the course which raised in me those reflections. I owed it a very good office to the world, to sit down and show others the road, in which I am exercised by my wanderings and errors. This is Seneca's way of thinking, and he had half convinced me how dangerous it is to our true happiness and tranquility, to fix our minds upon any thing which is the power of fortune. It is excusable only in fools who have not the use of reason, to be seduced by hooks and baits. Wealth, glory, and power, which the ordinary people look up at with admiration, the learned and wise know to be only so many snares laid to enslave them. There is nothing to be sought for with earnestness, than what clothe and feed us. If we pamper ourselves in diet, and give our imaginations a loose in our desires, the body will no longer obey the mind. Let us think no further than to defend ourselves against hunger, thirst, and cold. We are to remember that any thing else is despicable, and not worth our care. To want little is true grandeur, and very few things are great to a great mind. Those who form their thoughts in this manner, and abstract themselves from the world, are out of the way of fortune, and can look with contempt both on her favours and frowns. At the same time, they who separate themselves from the immediate commerce with the busy part of mankind, are still beneficial to it, while, by their studies and writings, they recommend to them the small value which ought to be put upon what they pursue with so much labour and disquiet. Whilst such men are thought to be idle, they are the most usefully employed. They have all things, both human and divine, under consideration. To be perfectly free from the vicissitudes of fortune, we should arm ourselves with these reflections. We should learn, that none but intellectual possessions are what we can properly call our own. All things from without are but borrowed. What fortune gives us, is not ours; and whatever she gives, she can take away.

It is a common imputation to Seneca, that though declaimed with so much strength of reason, and a cold contempt of riches and power, he was at the same time one of the richest and most powerful men in Rome. I know of no instance of his being content in that fortune, and can therefore read his reflections on those subjects with the more deference. He will not give philosophy so poor a look as to say we cannot live in courts; but I am of opinion, that there in the greatest eminence, when, amidst the applause of all the world can bestow, and the addresses of a crowd who follow him for that reason, a man can think of himself, abstracted from the world, a philosopher is a wise matron who, in her innocence, is preferred up from it.

Full of these thoughts, I took a walk to the country in a hurry and busy manner, made me to form prospects of all the different countenances in view; but I perceived a different air. Soberness, some a surly ference; but the

I could not but observe, that all who were conversed at Portico, had wishes, immediately being. Each believed that any other manner of service and merit was the fault of study, too contemplative to serve, that my figure was particular; for which I move a studious countenance, and take a turn to the garden.

When my friend said he, "I know how to make of hard by, where you yourself considered of experience, conciliable Destiny, illustrious mechanisms. The beings which human life, are, the persons of whom you, you will see employment which upon those who will make them happy, as their labours successful to the my answer, he came to the Banquet placed at two long women, in decency up tickets for the ment. There was who presided over seemed an emblem if unconcerned if thing was performed visibly interpose pain at our near prove us when we height, her meagre countenance, had and dignity. She picture of Fortune which made me

"MADAM,

"I am very glad now languish in event of your labours act with so much that have often for want of the honest man be kindness, in w us at the first souls. Indiff only would us our legs or ar but at the hea impotent assi give a man o prevailing for man enjoys ar son, the most sary to mainta common level lation of life r and sacred fr union is of th easily conceiv dition by exp sible, soften h in complianc quite different not mean it an is a sort of sex them, and kno but I must go that of a wom to the employ

The ladies wil have different virtues have r cast. What v prudence I the other. A honour as a w of both are e state any thi weight upon the couple sho are many thi that are pard dered as such the quickest great family, as to execute rality, as wom their duties, a common beha
not more triv in my opini as good an en box.

But, however manner of writing with an intense pernicious, but passion are to more intimate ble to arise, e hours. Occur
rible effects;
cannot but tre ble of being v nature, love, the man who l before he did dictates. Wh part of the his high spheres, and well-wrou fail of striking us only in a

References

ore; never spare him.' With that I took erty to ask him, 'what was the character of stlewoman?' He read the three first verses;

Quis multa gracilis te puer in rosa Perfusus liquidis urget odoribus Grato, Pyrrha, sub antro?

Hor. 1 Od. v. 1.

ry gravely told me, she lived at the sign of e in a cellar. I took care to be very much ed at the lad's improvements; but withal her, as soon as possible, to take him from for he could learn no more there. This very logue was a lively image of the impertinent used in breeding boys without genius or spi-e reading things for which their heads were amed. But this is the natural effect of a vanity in the minds of parents; who are fully delighted with the thought of breeding ildren to accomplishments, which they be-thing, but want of the same care in their hers, prevented them from being masters of is, that the part of life most fit for improve-generally employed in a method against the nature; and a lad of such parts as are fit for pation, where there can be no calls out of the path, is two or three years of his time wholly p in knowing, how well Ovid's mistress be-ch a dress; how such a nymph for her crus changed into such an animal; and how it generous in Æneas to put Turnus to death: nes that can no more come within the occur-of the lives of ordinary men, than they can hed by their imaginations. However, still our goes on from one generation to another; e pastry-cook here in the lane, the other told me, 'he would not yet take away his son's e learning; but has resolved, as soon as he little smattering in the Greek, to put him ape to a soap-boiler.' These wrong beginnings me our success in the world; and when our ts are originally falsely biased, their ability e carry us further out of our way, in proporour speed. But we are half way our journey e have got into the right road. If all our e usefully employed, and we did not set out nently, we should not have so many grotesque ors in all the arts of life; but every man would proper and becoming method of distinguish-entertaining himself, suitably to what nature ed him. As they go on, our parents do not ee us upon what is against our talents, but chers are also as injudicious in what they put arn. I have hardly ever since suffered so y the charms of any beauty, as I did before e sense of passion, for not apprehending that ile of Lalage was what pleased Horace; and y believe, the stripes I suffered about Digito certinacæ has given me that irreconcilable n, which I shall carry to my grave, against tes.

or the elegant writer of whom I am talking, ellences are to be observed as they relate to ferent concerns of his life; and he is always ooked upon as a lover, a courtier, or a man

His admirable Odes have numberless ine of his merit in each of these characters. His es and Satires are full of proper notices for the of life in a court; and what we call good ag, is most agreeably intermixed with his mo-

His addresses to the persons who favoured re so inimitably engaging, that Augustus com-LER. NO. XXXIII.

plained to him for so asked him, 'whether should read their nam generality of men to ings is as pleasant a Whatever the crowd their way of life, or not lead them to a tast write, fifty volumes u were when they began a great painter say, 'c certain painters, as we ain poets.' This is a dies; and no one y thoroughly well, who pany for that author, time. All others are take the sentiments of who report what passe debase every thought the air with which the

No. 174.] SATURDAY

Quem mala stultitia Cœcum agit, insanabile Autumat.

Whom vicious passion
 Are by the stoics held

From my own

THE learned Scotus mankind, gives every he calls a Seity, some-makes him different f world. This particu
 rable or ridiculous, ac which always grow ou virtues. In the offic to observe, that I hav more insignificant an the denomination of degrees towards non-neither be said to liv animals merely dresse each other but as flies tering of their wings.
 fore have chiefly rega species, it remains tha impertinently active these I shall take part custody, and have use up my edifice in Moor

We, who are adep to several causes in th our great city is the re never had, or have lo indeed been, time o fools as well as madm tion of the former who have for that en those parts; as, amou ter, and my ingenious oraculous proficient deep searches, for the tray after their lost g more particularly serv telling the fate of suc lie lottery. Dr. Lan rosity on this occasio for a prediction, eigh out of the prizes; wh

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

adventurer
the whole literati as I ed towards ted with the

ise, that the s born with it falls in oetical fury, but the pre-
ral warmth, ity; and all all be from n the rails a district of his quarter,
dy disposed,
myself from se patients, have awaked tempers are and juleps, to be so; or I shall there-o constant a nd into joy,
same time, ense, though 1. By this n limb, will of being out ut, as reade up the full sion a pro-who are by house, and of my pretty story-tellers, and weighty
, even when er; and by s, make him time to give

nen's minds,
e of ordinary come into re-
th persons of ike shall be nd Will Vo-shall be first he one visits, rain of both id such won-owes that she hat he is elo-

in hearing of ow any quietess of somes a continual er; and her esent and the the first that I has never
red. Call a ny, and she
; say she is
t. With all g, rich, and all those qualities, because she has them in common with others

To make up her misery, she is well-learned; she hears commendations until she is ready to burst in want of venting herself in contradictions. The madness is not expressed by the voice; but it utters in the eyes and features: its first symptom is, upon beholding an agreeable object, a sudden approbation immediately checked with dislike.

This lady I shall take the liberty to conduct into a bed of straw and darkness; and have some hopes that, after long absence from the light, the pleasure of seeing at all, may reconcile her to what she shall see, though it proves to be never so agreeable.

My physical remarks on the distraction of sex in other persons, and particularly in Will Velde, is interrupted by a visit from Mr. Kidney, with advices which will bring matter of new distractions to many possessed with this sort of disorder, while I shall publish to bring out the symptoms more kindly, and lay the distemper more open to view.

St. James's Coffee-house, May 13.

This evening a mail from Holland brought the following advices:

From the Camp before Douay, May 26, N.

On the twenty-third the French assembled the army, and encamped with their right near Bouchain, and their left near Crevecœur. Upon the motion of the enemy, the duke of Marlborough and prince Eugene made a movement with the army on the twenty-fourth, and encamped from Aulx to Vitry and Ises Esquerchien, where they are so advantageously posted, that they not only cover the siege, secure our convoys of provisions, forage, and ammunition, from Lisle and Tournai, and the canals and dikes we have made to turn the waters of the Scarpe and La Cence to Bouchain; they are in readiness, by marching from the right, to possess themselves of the field of battle marked between Vitry and Montigny, or from the left, to gain the lines of circumvallation between Fiericourt and Dechy; so that whatever way the enemy shall choose to attack us, whether by the plains of Lens or by Bouchain and Valenciennes, we have but a very small movement to make, to possess ourselves of the ground on which it will be most advantageous to receive them. The enemy marched this morning from their left, and are encamped with their right at Oisy, and their left towards Arras, and, according to our advices, will pass the Scarpe to-morrow and enter on the plains of Lens, though several regiments of horse, the German and Liege troops, which are destined to compose part of their army, have not yet joined them. If they pass the Scarpe we shall do the like at the same time, to possess ourselves with all possible advantage of the field of battle; but if they continue where they are, we shall not remove, because, in our present station, we sufficiently cover from all insults both our siege and convoys.

Monsieur Villars cannot yet go without crutches, and it is believed will have much difficulty to ride. He and the duke of Berwick are to command the French army, the rest of the marshals being ordered to assist in council.

Last night we entirely perfected four bridges over the avant fossé at both attacks; and our saps were far advanced, that in three or four days, batter will be raised on the glacis, to batter in both both the outworks and ramparts of the town.

Letters from the Hague of the twenty-seventh

THE TATLER.

N. S. say, that the deputies of the states of Holland, who set out for Gertruydenburg on the twenty-third, to renew the conferences with the French ministers, returned on the twenty-sixth, and had communicated to the states-general the new overtures that were made on the part of France, which, it is believed, if they are in earnest, may produce a general treaty.

No. 175.] TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1710.

From my own apartment, May, 22.

IN the distribution of the apartments in the New Bedlam, proper regard is had to the different sexes, and the lodgings accommodated accordingly. Among other necessities, as I have thought fit to appoint story-tellers to soothe the men, so I have allowed tale-bearers to indulge the intervals of my female patients. But, before I enter upon disposing of the main of the great body that wants my assistance, it is necessary to consider the human race abstracted from all other distinctions and considerations except that of sex. This will lead us to a nearer view of their excellences and imperfections, which are to be accounted, the one or the other, as they are suitable to the design for which the person so defective or accomplished came into the world.

To make this enquiry aright, we must speak of the life of people of condition; and the proportionable applications to those below them will be easily made, so as to value the whole species by the same rule. We will begin with the woman, and behold her as a virgin in her father's house. This state of her life is infinitely more delightful than that of her brother at the same age. While she is entertained with learning melodious airs at her spinnet, is led round a room in the most complaisant manner to a fiddle, or is entertained with applauses of her beauty and perfection in the ordinary conversation she meets with; the young man is under the dictates of a rigid school-master or instructor, contradicted in every word he speaks, and curbed in all the inclinations he discovers. Mrs. Elizabeth is the object of desire and admiration, looked upon with delight, courted with all the power of eloquence and address, approached with a certain worship, and defended with a certain loyalty. This is her case as to the world. In her domestic character, she is the companion, the friend and confidant of her mother, and the object of a pleasure, something like the love between angels, to her father. Her youth, her beauty, her air, are by him looked upon with an ineffable transport beyond any other joy in this life, with as much purity as can be met with in the next.

Her brother William, at the same years, is but in the rudiments of those acquisitions which must gain him esteem in the world. His heart beats for applause among men: yet he is fearful of every step towards it. If he purposes to himself to make a figure in the world, his youth is damped with a prospect of difficulties, dangers, and dishonours; and an opposition in all generous attempts, whether they regard his love or his ambition.

In the next stage of life, she has little else to do, but (what she is accomplished for by the mere gifts of nature) to appear lovely and agreeable to her husband, tender to her children, and affable to her servants. But a man, when he enters into this way, is but in the first scene, far from the accomplishment of his design. He is now in all things to act for others as well as himself. He is to have industry and integrity and accuracy. He must add to these other abilities, the execution of his duty, and interest of his own as his own person.

This little sketch gives an idea of the different parts of life, and the terms on which the examination is to be taken.

On the other hand, the examination takes it for a matter of course, to be up the thought-claim to the throne, to reduce the diet, to reduce the diet, to reduce the diet.

On the other hand, the examination takes it for a matter of course, to be up the thought-claim to the throne, to reduce the diet, to reduce the diet, to reduce the diet.

N. B. Mr. the toothach, St. J.

Advices from say, that the ty-ninth in the plains of motion, which the north side Henin-Leitard, proach of the doubts to their the lines of batteries.

It is not believed, that the relief of Douai, tried on with considering the by the inund we made lodge of the second so far advanced obliged to surre

No. 176.]

Nullum nuz

Whoe'er tak Engages ev

From

This evening, pain caused by (under which have broke two reflect with ad in the conduct above the cond the agonies of word or gestur nary behaviour blood and cons self, and the the greatest of

BRITISH ESSAYISTS.

not only the our own de-most amiable inning defemediate imi-
and prevails endued with
I do not except you virtue which e, and in all regular and ack upon all ole life, will
the greatest achas could,
ct otherwise
and humour.
holly giving just and im-
it up, there ion to their good or ill-ing wrought
his temper, he perverse-

t men are in ctions. Eu-ut that natu-
itself; and,
ce, while he he power of elination to so; though,
is a friend ame humour renders him acholy thing t of men in yrannical in m in friend-uted to their d by others, st, though in reason, we l than our ill cit one day
, who set up
I will,' says for he never ry base, but ing off com-carried this ten told me e liked; for to our busi-

ous city, and ed, you find
without the ows himself
in the same
ers by our-is as careful is, that in ry contrary vary traders ey to their

was my im-
at disgrace,

seen an instance of the contrary, carry a degree, that I am out of countenance read Seneca. When I look upon others in such occurrences, as well as equanimity in the general tenor of the much abates the self-love, which is governed by any sort of men, and let authors.

The fortitude of a man, who brings obedience of his reason, is conspicuous with it a dignity in the lowest state Poor Martius, who now lies languishing violent fever, discovers in the faintness his distemper such a greatness of mind stranger, who should now behold him see an object of pity, but at the same was lately an object of veneration. spirit resigns, but resigns with an air resolution which could yield to nothing.
This is conquest in the philosophic empire over ourselves is, methinks, more in common life, where the whole tenor carriage is in subservience to his own in conformity both to the good sense of other men.

Aristæus is, in my opinion, a perfect himself on all circumstances. He has that man can have; and yet is as behaviour as a mere machine. He has every passion, but ruffled by none. he frequently seems to be less knowobliging, and chooses to be on a level rather than oppress with the superiority.
In friendship, he is kind, without business, expeditious without ostentation. the greatest softness and benevolence. he is impartial in spite of all importunities of his own good-nature. He has judgment; but, in complaisance to speaks in doubt; and never shows confident but to support the sense of a such an equality of mind the general all men, how sweet would be the phiversation. He that is loud would think that we ought to call a constable; a spoiling good company is the most distreaching the peace. We should think from those zealots in society, who think to be angry for all the company, and the waiters to show they have no regard body else in the room. To be in a rage is, in a kind, being angry with you. well stand naked before company, familiarities; and to be careless of the most clownish way of being undress-

Sheer-lane, May 24.

When I came home this evening following letters; and because I thought good answer to the other, as well as affair of a young lady, it must be in-missed.

SIR,

'I have a good fortune, partly partly acquired. My younger years I spent but, age coming on, and having no but one daughter, I resolved to be a single and accordingly I have disposed of my my money in the funds, bought a pleasant country, am making a game set up a pack of little beagles. I live of a good many well-bred neighbour-

THE TATLER.

red clergymen. Against a rainy day, I have a library; and against the gout in my stilet the good claret. With all this I am the most contented man in the world; not that I have lost sight of any of these pleasures, but am distracted by the multiplicity of entertaining objects, that are in the variety. I am in such a hurry of business that I do not know with what diversion to employ myself; therefore, sir, I must beg the favour of you, to let me know what more weighty affairs will permit, to put me to the method of doing nothing; for I find there is a great difference betwixt nihil agere and nihil. And I fancy, if you would explain to me, I should do a very great kindness to many in the same situation, as well as to your humble servant, J. B.

closed is written by my father in one of his mours. He bids me seal it up, and send or two from myself; which he would not e until he hears of it from you. Desire he begins his method of doing nothing, thing to do; that is to say, let him marry rther.

'I am your gentle reader, 'S. B.'

[7.] TUESDAY, MAY 27, 1710.

le si palpare, recalcitrant undique tutus.
Hor. I Sat. ii. 20.
 as the flatterer, and his saucy praise.
Francis

Sheer-lane, May 26.

ious Mr. Penkethman, the comedian, has here a paper or ticket, to which is affixed a medal, which is to entitle the bearer to twenty plays at his theatre for a guinea; which is the place where, it seems, he has his house; and his time of action is so fixed, that it is to fall in with going and with the tide. Besides that, the bearer of it may carry down with him a particular set of to the play, striking off for each person one of his twenty-one times of admitting this warrant of his, he has made me a limment in a facetious distich, by way of of his endeavours, and desires I would let them to the world. I must needs say, I have some time seen a properer choice than that of a patron. Who more fit to publish than a novelist? who to recommend it than I? This honour done me, has made me turn upon the nature of dedications in general, as an abuse of that custom, as well by a long list of my predecessors, as the continued folly of temporary authors.

it times, it was the custom to address their me persons eminent for their merit to particular patronage of the writers themselves in the matter of which they under these regards, it was a memorable of parties, and a very agreeable record merce with each other. These applica- never stuffed with impertinent praises, e native product of their esteem; which idly received, or generally known to be patron of the work; but vain flourishes he world, with other barbarous embellish- d the enumeration of titles and great, and the patrons themselves, or their sires, are as foreign to the matter I are in a Gothic building. persons which have no merit for that reason have no other persons justly ridiculous. nature for me to write to 'My lord, because your grandfather before you was an was a baron, and his lord and a rich man: I, Isaac and could not possibly for following treatise.' That position of all I could possibly conscience, yet the silly prevailed, that my lord due be particular friends from I have just room for being my panegyric into a libel still more home; were it indications were proper to authority to commend, or me that he does commend there is no praise valuable Were it otherwise, blame same hands. Were the upon a level among marble bench and the criminal at in their stations; and if on as the other's, their reputation the jury. Pliny, speaking expressed himself with gratitude the honours done him in but, he begins it with an which only made the application in the same epistle says, off doing things which deserve commendation impertinent a just regard to the person wish for; otherwise reputation according to the number of which are not always to be tuous side. But however nice affairs, true glory will but truth; and there is so that the very self-same action cannot merit the same Roman, who was surprised for he had accomplished bare arm into a flaming there were many as detected against sense of danger wrought in the very enemy titude, and a dismission condemned slave who reproached and consumed his arm in the same resolution, did not great idea of his virtue, but in an action no way different Scævola, but in the motive

Thus true glory is inseparable and whatever you call me, what they are in themselves has crept into the minds of men. I never mistake words and appearances.

The simplicity of the an in the address of their v monuments they have left Augustus were much mo when added to occasions appear in, than any appellat since thought of. The latt applications of poetry which rewarded the pity, he generous with some t occasion to ted a piece to e as she has to follow in gyrrical thing ant of better quently being r blame; all o the forego-ood and evil nere words if re to observe, l the rest of address to as stle.

0, 1710.

history of the Mancha, and fe of that re-mire the ex-Michael Cer-s adventurer parts of his ; but also in-conomy and gave of his self a knight old lances, s; his dress, r early, and watchfulness he hardships nothing more re he should into the meag books of sions in him, lly delighted d when they d frequently he unreason-ought, doth i I do justly would pause ntence, and, ble, be loud vens, which ly with the rts that your other such tleman grew ns day and nse.

ed knight is the most in-; it is very gone in as are not observed to be in that condition. As discoveries are sometimes made by small beginnings, I came to the most epidemic ill of this sort, by the coffee-house, where I saw my friend whose crack towards politics I have mentioned. This touch in the brain of a subject, is as certainly owing to the newspapers, as that of the Spaniards was attributed to the reading of works of contemporaries, the novelists, have spinning out paragraphs, and working end of their columns, a most happy unsaying, giving hints of intelligence, interpreting indifferent actions, to the good of the brains of ordinary readers.

ing on in the words, and making no sense, is more particularly the excellent ingenious and renowned fellow-labourer; and it is to this talent, in him the loss of my upholsterer's intelligent tradesman has, for years past, been a great orator in ragged assemblies, and the coffee-houses. He was yesterday an audience of that sort, among whom I passed through the favour of a cloud of tobacco to him with the Postman in his hand, and papers safe under his elbow. He made some remarks, and reading the Parisian thirtyeth, which says, 'That it is good news, an express arrived this day with advice, were so near in the plain of Lens, that they conversed each other.' 'Ay, ay, he says, sport.' 'And that it was highly probable, that an express would bring us an account of the success of the French.' 'They are welcome, as soon as they come.' 'Though some others say, that they will be off until the second or third of June, when Marshal Villars expects some further success from Germany and other parts, he says, 'What a-pox does he put it off for? But let us see what he says further.' 'But let us see what he says further, that Monsieur Albergotti, being in the presence of so great an army, will not be able to give a satisfactory defence.' 'Why then, I find one of those that love to have a great side. Nay, I will say that for this, the most natural inference of them is, that the Elector of Bavaria, being uneasy to be so long in command, has desired leave to come to France, and to communicate a certain project to his majesty. I am sure, ever it be, it is said, that the prince is expected; and then we shall have a new account of his project, if this report is true.' 'Nay, this paper never improves upon sure grounds; for he will not say, that the elector has a project, or that he does come at all; for he doubts, whether the report has any foundation.'

What makes this the more lamentable way of writing falls in with the more cooler and duller part of her majesty. The being kept up with one line and another; and the whole, after many a conjecture, vanishing in a doubt whether there is any thing at all in what the person has said. An ordinary head in a vertigo, and a dulness would have secured him from the labours of the Postman, the use of the coffee-house, and the loss of his elbow honest Leabod, and there, among other speculation on him to say, 'That it is discoursed that be a battle in Flanders before the armies and many will have it to be to-morrow, battle of Ramelies being fought on a Whit-

A gentleman who was a wag in this commenced at the expression, and said, 'By Mr. favour, I warrant you, if we meet them on day or Monday we shall not stand upon the them, whether it be before or after the holi-An admirer of this gentleman stood up, and ighbour at a distant table the conceit; at deed we were all very merry. These reflect-the writers of the transactions of the times, noddles of such as were not born to have their own, and consequently lay a weight ery thing which they read in print. But Mr. concluded his paper with a courteous sen-which was very well taken and applauded by e company. 'We wish,' says he, 'all our s a merry Whitsuntide and many of them.' leahod is as extraordinary a man as any of rity, and as particular. His style is a di-tween the familiarity of talking and writ-d his letter such as you cannot distinguish print or manuscript, which gives us a re-at of the idea from what has been told us press by others. This wishing a good tide fect upon us, and he was commended for ation, as showing as well the capacity of a as an historian. My distempered old ac-ce read, in the next place, the account of rs abroad in the Courant: but the matter so distinctly, that these wanderers thought is no news in it; this paper differing from as a history from a romance. The tautoe contradiction, the doubts, and want of cons, are what keep up imaginary entertain-empty heads, and produce neglect of their irs, poverty, and bankruptcy, in many of p-statesmen; but turn the imaginations of f a little higher orb into deliriums of dissaa, which is seen in a continual fret upon all ches their brains, but more particularly upon vantage obtained by their country, where considered as lunatics, and therefore toleratheir ravings.

I am now warning the people against is, newspapers of this island are as pernicious heads in England, as ever books of chiv-Spain; and therefore shall do all that in me th the utmost care and vigilance imaginable, nt these growing evils. A flaming instance malady appeared in my old acquaintance at e, who, after he had done reading all his paded with a thoughtful air, 'If we should peace, we should then know for certain whe-vas the king of Sweden that lately came to k?' I whispered him, and desired him to ttle aside with me. When I had opportunity ed him into a coach, in order for his more aveyance to Moorfields. The man went very with me; and by that time he had brought de from the defeat by the Czar to the Bor-we were passing by Will's coffee-house, where a of the house beckoned to us. We made a p, and could hear from above a very loud voice g, with some expressions towards treason, subject in France was as free as in England. temper would not let him reflect, that his own se was an argument of the contrary. They m, one would speak with him below. He mmediately to our coach-side. I whispered him, 'that I had an order tile.' He immediately tion: for to this sort of lunacy for the French, the name has a more agreeable so-seat in this their own coun-luckily bringing these immediately fell into a ness of their respective of Sweden, the other France. This gentleman door to the upholsterer, Bedlam, with proper me-Gallant to soothe his im-in France. If therefor ent-garden again, all pe-of him, and deliver him seer. At the same time to forbear discourse with when he begins to fight

'Sir, I hope to see you

No. 179.] SATURDAY

—Oh! quis me ge-Sistat, et ingenti ram-

Some god conduct me Or lift me high to He-

From my own

In this parched season, ing into the country is partaking the joys of it following letter:

SIR,

'I believe you will for-you a very long epistle faction of a country life lead if you could. In to you, that I am one ing; and as I am such pleasures lasting, by fo-innocent and refined, improving. You have concerned to represent mankind, that the whole escaped your observa-fications to be drawn for be recommended. For wish you could visit You would be pleased have made about my improved my estate w-

'As the winter engra-portion of the year, the being crowded almost there is nothing upon much study and expen-soften the severity of lish twelve cheerful
In order to this, the ching and furnishing a thought somewhat ext-whose revenues exceed der, that all men of anclinations to gratify; laid out by the general number of which I al-eating and drinking, in wenching, gaming, re-

ing and sculpture; in a word, the beauties charms of nature and of art, court all my finish the fibres of the brain, and smoothe course of thought? What pleasing meditation agreeable wanderings of the mind, an delicious slumbers, have I enjoyed here? when I turn up some masterly writer to my nation, methinks here his beauties appear most advantageous light, and the rays of his shoot upon me with greater force and brithan ordinary. This place likewise keeps th family in good humour, in a season wherein some of temper prevails universally in this My wife does often touch her lute in one practice, and my daughter sings to it; while times with you, amidst all the diversions of th and in the most affluent fortunes, are fretti supping beneath a louring sky for they kn what. In this green-house we often dine, w here, we dance country-dances; and, what chief pleasure of all, we entertain our neighb it, and by this means contribute very much t the climate five or six miles about us.

I am,

Your most humble servant, T

No. 180.] TUESDAY, JUNE 3, 171

Stultitiam patiuntur opes

Hor. l. Ep. x

Their folly pleads the privilege of wealth

From my own Apartment, June 2

I HAVE received a letter which accuses me of inequality in the administration of the Censorshi says, that I have been free with the lower mankind, but extremely cautious in represent of matters which concern men of condition. correspondent takes upon him also to say, the interest was not undone by turning politician, I became bankrupt by trusting his goods to peri equality; and demands of me that I should do upon such as brought poverty and distress up world below them, while they themselves wei in pleasures and luxury, supported at the exp those very persons whom they treated with gentness, as if they did not know whether the with them or not. This is a very heavy accu both of me, and such as the man aggrieved me of tolerating. For this reason, I resol take this matter into consideration; and upo little meditation, could call to my memory m stances which made this complaint far from groundless. The root of this evil does not proceed from injustice in the men of figur often from a false grandeur which they tak them in being unacquainted with their own bu not considering how mean a part they act, whe names and characters are subjected to the lit of their servants and dependants. The over the poor are a people who have no great rep for the discharge of their trust; but are mu scandalous than the overseers of the rich. young fellow of a great estate, who was that law that spoke to him in a public place? he a 'one that does my business.' It is, with n natural consequence of being a man of fortun they are not to understand the disposal of it they long to come to their estates, only to put selves under new guardianship. Nay, I have a young fellow, who was regularly bred an att and was a very expert one until he had an him. The moment that happened, he, who prove the next land he cast his eye own, and was so sharp, that a man at first ld give him a small sum for a general re-ther he owed him anything or not; such a , have I seen, upon coming to an estate, his diffidence of mankind, and become the ageable thing breathing. He immediately stirring man to take upon him his affairs, and pay, and do every thing which he as now too fine a gentleman to understand. ant to consider, that he who would have ate, had he not come to one, will certainly cause one fell to him; but such contradic-we to ourselves, and any change of life is able to some natures.

mistaken sense of superiority, to believe a equipage, gives men precedence to their rs. Nothing can create respect from man-laying obligations upon them; and it may nably be concluded, that if it were put balance, according to the true state of nt, many who believe themselves in pos-a large share of dignity in the world, must e to their inferiors. The greatest of all as in civil life is that of debtor and credithere needs no great progress in logic to ch, in that case, is the advantageous side. can say to another, 'Pray, master,' or, y lord, give me my own,' can as justly tell is a fantastical distinction you take upon retend to pass upon the world for my mas-I, when, at the same time that I wear your u owe me wages; or, while I wait at your are ashamed to see me until you have paid od old way among the gentry of England, in their pre-eminence over the lower rank, eir bounty, munificence, and hospitality; a very unhappy change, if at present, by s or their agents, the luxury of the gentry ted by the credit of the trader. This is correspondent pretends to prove out of his s, and those of his whole neighbourhood. e confidence to say, that there is a mugr Long-acre, where you may every evening xact account of distresses of this kind. lains that such a lady's finery is the occasion own wife and daughter appear so long e gown. Another, that all the furniture siting apartment are no more hers, than y of a play are the proper goods of the Nay, at the lower end of the same table, near a butcher and a poulterer say, that, proper charge, all that family has been d since they last came to town.

e manner in which people of fashion are on at such meetings, is but a just reproach ailures in this kind; but the melancholy of the great necessities tradesmen are who support their credit in spite of the romises which are made them, and the which they suffer when paid by the extorper servants, is what would stop the most s man in the career of his pleasures, if represented to him.

matter be not very speedily amended, I : fit to print exact lists of all persons who their own disposal, though above the age one; and as the trader is made bankrupt s from his abode, so shall the gentleman at home, if, when Mr. Morphew calls, he moon, as any mark with which a child is born is to be taken away by any future application. Hence it is, that good nature in me is no merit; but having been so frequently overwhelmed with her tears before I knew the cause of any affliction, or could draw defences from my own judgment, I imbibed commiseration, remorse, and an unmanly gentleness of mind, which has since ensnared me into ten thousand calamities; from whence I can reap no advantage, except it be, that, in such a humour as I am now in, I can the better indulge myself in the softnesses of humanity, and enjoy that sweet anxiety which arises from the memory of past afflictions.

We, that are very old, are better able to remember things which befell us in our distant youth, than the passages of later days. For this reason it is, that the companions of my strong and vigorous years present themselves more immediately to me in this office of sorrow. Untimely and unhappy deaths are what we are most apt to lament; so little are we able to make it indifferent when a thing happens, though we know it must happen. Thus we groan under life, and bewail those who are relieved from it. Every object that returns to our imagination raises different passions, according to the circumstance of their departure. Who can have lived in an army, and in a serious hour reflect upon the merry gay and agreeable men that might long have flourished in the arts of peace, and not join with the imprecations of the fatherless and widow on the tyrant to whose ambition they fell sacrifices? But gallant men, who are cut off by the sword, move rather our veneration than our pity; and we gather relief enough from their own contempt of death, to make that no evil, which was approached with so much cheerfulness, and attended with so much honour. But, when we turn our thoughts from the great parts of life on such occasions, and instead of lamenting those who stood ready to give death to those from whom they had the fortune to receive it; I say, when we let our thoughts wander from such noble objects, and consider the havoc which is made among the tender and the innocent, pity enters with an unmixed softness, and possesses all our souls

the little two calle

 Spe
 The Tha

 T nun sigh
 her ling
 we abo nes lam seas lanc
 in t be con obs
 my
 or
 the que
 of
 the
 be ma
 wh
 you
 Ou
 the ha
 the
 the
 an

the habit of death become the pretty trifler ! behold the smiling earth——A large train of us were coming on to my memory, when my knock came at my closet door, and interrupted me with a letter, attended with a hamper of wine, of the sort with that which is to be put to sale on my next, at Garraway's coffee-house. Upon receipt of it, I sent for three of my friends. We were intimate, that we can be company in what state of mind we meet, and can entertain each without expecting always to rejoice. They were found to be generous and warming, but such a heat as moved us rather to be cheerful and rollicksome. It revived the spirits, without the blood. We commended it until two of us left this morning ; and having to-day met before dinner, we found, that though we drank to a man, we had much more reason to re- than forget what had passed the night before.

182.] THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1710.

ut populum ludis attentius ipsis.

Hor. 1 Ep. ii. 197

rowd would more delight the laughing sage, all the farce and follies of the stage. Francis.

Sheer-lane, June 7.

The town grows so very empty, that the greater number of my gay characters are fled out of my sight into the country. My beaux are now shepherds, and my belles wood-nymphs. They are lovers of rivulets, and covered with shades, while we remain in town, hurry through the dust and impertinencies, without knowing the happiness of leisure and retirement. To add to this calamity, even the actors are going to desert us for a season, and we shall not shortly have so much as a landscape or a forest scene to refresh ourselves with amidst our fatigues. This may not, perhaps, be so sensible a loss to any other as to me ; for I consider it is one of my greatest delights to sit unseen and unknown in the gallery, and entertain myself either with what is personated on the stage, or to serve what appearances present themselves in the audience. If there were no other good consequences in a playhouse, than that so many persons of different ranks and conditions are placed there in most pleasing aspects, that prospect only would try far from being below the pleasures of a wise man.

There is not one person you can see, in the playhouse, if you look with an inclination to be pleased, that may not behold something worthy or agreeable. Thoughts are in our features ; and the visage of every man in whom love, rage, anger, jealousy, or envy, is visible. Their frequent mansions, carries the traces of passions wherever the amorous, the choleric, the jealous, or the envious, are pleased to make their appearance. However, the assembly at a play is not made up of such as have a sense of some pleasure in pleasure ; by which means the audience is generally composed of those who have gentle affections, or at least of such, as at that time, are in the best humour you can ever find them. This has a sensible good effect upon our spirits ; and the theatrical airs which are played to us, put the whole assembly into a participation of the same pleasure, by consequence, for that time, equal in humour, tune, and in quality. Thus far we gain only by coming into an audience ; but if we find, added to this, the beauties of proper action, the force of the enunciation, and the gaiety of well-placed lights and

...
wells, think never the worse of themselves for being guilty of their respective frauds towards the public.
This evil is come to such a fantastical height, that there is a man of a public spirit, and heroically affected to his country, who can go so far as even to turn treasurer with all he has in her funds. There is not a citizen in whose imagination such a one does not appear in the same light of glory, as Codrus, Scævola, or any other great name in old Rome. Were not for the heroes of so much per cent. as have regard enough for themselves and their nation to trade with her with their wealth, the very notion of public love would long before now have vanished from among us. But however general custom may hurry us away in the stream of a common error, there is no evil, no crime, so great as that of being cold in matters which relate to the common good. This is in nothing more conspicuous than in a certain willingness to receive any thing that tends to the diminution of such as have been conspicuous instruments in our service. Such inclinations proceed from the most low and vile corruption, of which the soul of man is capable. This effaces not only the practice, but the very approbation of honour and virtue: and has had such an effect, that, to speak freely, the very sense of public good has no longer a part even of our conversations. Can then the most generous motive of life, the good of others, be so easily banished the breast of man? Is it possible to draw all our passions inward? Shall the boiling heat of youth be sunk in pleasures, the ambition of manhood in selfish intrigues? Shall all that is glorious, all that is worth the pursuit of great minds, be so easily rooted out? When the universal bent of a people seems diverted from the sense of their common good and common glory, it looks like a fatality, and crisis of impending misfortune.

The generous nations we just now mentioned understood this so well, that there was hardly an occasion ever made, which did not turn upon this general sense, 'That the love of their country was the first and most essential quality in an honest mind.' Demosthenes, in a cause wherein his fame, as well as a private man, and by that means them from their common sense, into an aver- or receiving any thing in its true light. But Demosthenes had awakened his audience with one hint of judging by the general tenor of his words towards them, his services bore down his opposers before him, who fled to the covert of his mean until some more favourable occasion should against the superior merit of Demosthenes.

were to be wished, that love of their country the first principle of action in men of business, for their own sakes; for, when the world be- to examine into their conduct, the generality, have no share in, or hopes of any part in power ches, but what is the effect of their own labour property, will judge of them by no other method, that of how profitable their administration has to the whole? They who are out of the in- ace of men's fortune or favour, will let them d or fall by this one only rule; and men who bear being tried by it, are always popular in r fall. Those, who cannot suffer such a scrutiny, contemptible in their advancement but I am here running into shreds of maxims a reading Tacitus this morning, that has driven from my recommendation of public spirit, which the intended purpose of this lucubration. There ot a more glorious instance of it, than in the racter of Regulus. This same Regulus was taken over by the Carthaginians, and was sent by them home, in order to demand some Punic noblemen, were prisoners, in exchange for himself; and bound by an oath, that he would return to Car- ge if he failed in his commission. He proposes to the senate, who were in suspense upon it, ch Regulus observing, without having the least on of putting the care of his own life in compe- n with the public good, desired them to consider, he was old, and almost useless; that those de- ded in exchange were men of daring temper, great merit in military affairs; and wondered would make any doubt of permitting him to go k to the short tortures prepared for him at Car- ge, where he should have the advantage of end- a long life both gloriously and usefully. This erous advice was consented to; and he took his e of his country and his weeping friends, to go certain death, with that cheerful composure, as a t, after the fatigue of business in a court or a , retires to the next village for the air.

No. 184.] TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1710.

Una de multis face nuptiali Digna— Hor. 11 Od. iii. 33.

Yet worthy of the nuptial flame—

Of many, one untainted maid. Francis.

From my own Apartment, June 12.

'HERE are certain occasions of life which give itious omens of the future good conduct of it, as l as others which explain our present inward s, according to our behaviour in them. Of the r sort are funerals; of the former, weddings. : manner of our carriage when we lose a friend, s very much our temper, in the humility of our ds and actions, and a general sense of our desti- condition, which runs through all our deport- it. This gives a solemn testimony of the erous affection we bore our friends, when we n to disrelish every thing now we can no more y them, or see them partake in our enjoyments of a worthy English gentleman; her, that ble and deserving wife.

No. 185.] THURSDAY, JUNE 15,

Notitiam primosque gradus vicinia fecit, Tempore crevit amor, tædæ quoque jure Sed retuere patres. Quod non potuere Ex æquo capitis ardebant mentibus ambo Orid, de Pyr. et Thisb. Me

Their neighbourhood acquaintance early Acquaintance love, and love in time had The happy couple to the nuptial bed, Their fathers stopt them. But in vain o Their mutual passion, source of all their

From my own Apartment, June 14

As soon as I was up this morning, my r ame the following letter; which, since it le subject that may prove of common use to t I shall take notice of with as much expediti fair petitioner could desire.

'MR. BICKERSTAFF,

' Since you have so often declared y patron of the distressed, I must acquaint y am daughter to a country gentleman of go and may expect three or four thousand p my fortune. I love and am beloved by P a young gentleman who has an estate of five pounds per annum, and is our next neig the country every summer. My father, th has been a long time acquainted with it, c refuses to comply with our mutual inclinati what most of all torments me is, that if eve no commendation of my lover, he is much his praises than myself; and professes, tha of pure love and esteem for Philander, a his daughter, that he can never consent w marry each other; when, as he terms it, both do so much better. It must indeed fessed, that two gentlemen of considerable made their addresses to me last winter, and der, as I have since learned, was offered betroth with fifteen thousand pounds; bu we could neither of us think, that accepti matches would be doing better than remain stant to our first passion. Your thoughts, whole, may perhaps have some weight. father, who is one of your admirers, as humble servant,

' P.S. You are desired to be speedy, I father daily presses me to accept of, what an advantageous offer.'

There is no calamity in life that falls upon human nature than a disappointment especially when it happens between two whose hearts are mutually engaged to ea It is this distress which has given occasio of the finest tragedies that were ever wri daily fills the world with melancholy, d frenzy, sickness, despair, and death. I h admired at the barbarity of parents, wh quently interpose their authority in th article of life. I would fain ask Sylvia whether he thinks he can bestow a greater his daughter, than to put her in a way to pily? Whether a man of Philander's c with five hundred pounds per annum, is likely to contribute to that end, than many fellow whom he may have in his thought many thousands? Whether he can make daughter by any increase of riches, for the great happiness she proposes to herself in her father? Or, whether a father should compound with his daughter to be miserable, though she were worth twenty thousand pounds by the bargain? I think he would have her reflect with esteem on his misery after his death: and does he think this a good method to make her do so, when, as often happens on the loss of her Philander, she must some time remember him as the cruel cause of her misery? Any transient ill-humour is soon forgotten; but reflection of such a cruelty must continue to her resentments as long as life itself; and, by this piece of barbarity, an indulgent father loses the benefit of all his past kindnesses. It is not impossible she may deceive herself in the happiness she proposes from Philander; but, as in such cases she can have no one to blame but herself, she must bear the disappointment with greater patience; she never makes the experiment, however, for she may be with another, she will still be the same as she might have been happier with Philander. There is a kind of sympathy in souls, that fits them to one another; and we may be assured, when we see persons engaged in the warmth of a mutual passion, that there are certain qualities in both minds which bear a resemblance to one another. A generous and constant passion in an amiable lover, where there is not too great a display in other circumstances, is the greatest blessing that can befall the person beloved; and, if overdone in one, may perhaps never be found in another. I shall conclude this with a celebrated piece of a father's indulgence in this particular; though carried to an extravagance, has something in it so tender and amiable, as may justly remove the harshness of temper that is to be met in many a British father.

Antiochus, a prince of great hopes, fell passionately in love with the young queen Stratonice, who was his mother-in-law, and had bore a son to the king, Seleucus, his father. The prince, finding it impossible to extinguish his passion, fell sick; refused all manner of nourishment, being determined to put an end to that life which was become insupportable.

Erasistratus, the physician, soon found that love was distemper; and observing the alteration in her face and countenance, whensoever Stratonice paid him a visit, was soon satisfied that he was dying for his young mother-in-law. Knowing the old king's tenderness for his son, when he one morning perceived of his health, he told him, that the prince's disorder was love; but that it was incurable, because it was impossible for him to possess the person he loved. The king, surprised at his account, desired to know how his son's passion could be cured? 'Why, sir,' replied Erasistratus, 'because he is in love with the person I am married to.' The old king immediately conjured him by all his favours, to save the life of his son and successor. 'Sir,' said Erasistratus, 'would your majesty but fancy yourself in my place, you would perceive the unreasonableness of what you desire.' 'Even is my witness,' said Seleucus, 'I could give even my Stratonice to save my Antiochus.' At these words, the tears ran down his cheeks; which, when the physician saw, taking him by the hand, 'Sir,' he said, 'if these are your real sentiments, the prince's life is out of danger; it is Stratonice for whom he dies.' Seleucus immediately gave orders for solemnizing the marriage; and the young queen, letters; otherwise the intended pleasure which is designed for Mr. Bickerstaff, will be disappointed.

No. 187.] TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1

—Pudet hæc approbia nobis, Et dici potuisse, et non potuisse refeci.
Ovid, Met.

To hear an open slander is a curse:
But not to find an answer is a worse.

From my own Apartment, June 19.

JASQUIN OF ROME TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF.
LONDON.

His Holiness is gone to Castel Gandolfo, much discomposed at some late accounts of missionaries in your island; for a committee of cardinals, which lately sat for the reviving the some obsolete doctrines, and drawing up them's to certain points of faith, have reproached the church of Rome to be in great danger of heresy written by a learned Englishman, and that spiritual power much higher than we have dared to have attempted even here. I have called, "An Epistolary Discourse, proving the Scriptures, and the first Fathers, that the principle is naturally mortal. Wherein is shown that none have the power of giving this immortalizing spirit, since the apostles, &c. &c. By Henry Dodwell, M.A." This has appeared to our literati so short and efficient method of subjecting the laity, that it is feared that confession and absolution will not be of keeping the clergy of Rome in any degree of greatness, in competition with such teachers. I think I shall receive this opinion. What gives greater jealousy here is, that in the catalogues of treatises which have been lately burnt within British territories, there is no mention made of this learned work; which circumstance is a sort of attestation, that the tenet is not held erroneous; that the doctrine is received among you as orthodox. The youth of this place are very much divided in opinion, whether a very memorable quotation from the author repeats out of Tertullian, be not in the style and manner of Meursius? In illa impietatis ultima æstu, quo genitale virus ex sanguine aliquid de animâ quoque sentimus cæci adeo marcescimus et divigescimus cum luci moriturus. This piece of Latin goes no farther than to tell us how our fathers begot us; so that I shall be at a loss how we afterwards commence. Et crescendo infunditer, et infundendo creatus. As mentioned soon after, may allude only to flood, as well as the former. Your readers may, some of whom have very much approved of the warmth with which you have attacked free-thinkers, and other enemies to religion and piety, are very much disturbed, that you have given no account of this remarkable dissertation, employed by them to desire you would, with your expedition, send me over the ceremony of transubstantiation of souls, as well as a list of all the good and immortal men within the dominions of Britain. When you have done me this favour, I must trouble you for other tokens of your kindness, and particularly I desire you would let me have a handkerchief, which is of late scarce in England, for I have promised to present of it to a courtesan of a French mine.

ers from the frontiers of France inform us, a young gentleman, who was to have been cardinal on the next promotion, has put off his coming to Rome so soon as was intended, as it is said, received letters from Britain, wherein several virtuosi of that age desired him to suspend his resolutions of a monastic life, until the British grammarians publish their explication of the words independence and revolution. According as these terms are made to fit the mouths of the people, the gentleman takes his measures for his journey

Mr New Bedlam has been read and considered of by your countrymen among us; and one gentleman, who is now here as a traveller, says your plan is impracticable; for that there can be no large enough to contain the number of your patients. He advises you therefore to name the North Sea for the boundary of your hospital. If he says be true, I do not see how you can afford any other inclosure: for, according to his sense, the whole people are taken with a vertigo: and proper actions are received with coldness and discontent; ill news hoped for with impatience; in your service are treated with calumny, criminals pass through your towns with actions.

The Englishman went on to say, you seemed at first to flag under a satiety of success, as if you mistook misfortune as a necessary vicissitude. Yet, though men have but a cold relish of prosperity, quick is the anguish of the contrary fortune. He proceeded to make comparisons of times, seasons and great incidents. After which he grew too bold for my understanding, and talked of Hanno the Carthaginian, and his irreconcilable hatred to the famous commander Hannibal. Hannibal, said he, was able to march to Rome itself, and brought down the ambitious people, who designed no less than to empire of the world, to sue for peace in the most humble and servile manner; when faction at home deprived him from the glory of his actions, and, after various artifices, at last prevailed with the senate to withdraw him from the midst of his victories, in the instant when he was to reap the benefit of all, by reducing the then common enemy of all, which had liberty, to reason. When Hannibal heard the message of the Carthaginian senators were sent to recall him, he was moved with generous and disdainful sorrow; and is reported to have said, "Hannibal then must be content not by the arms of the Romans, whom he had put to flight, but by the envy and detraction of his countrymen. Nor shall Scipio triumph in his fall, as Hanno, who will smile to behold the ruin of Hannibal, though at the fall of Carthage."

'I am, sir, &c.

'PASQUIN.'

Will's Coffee-house, June 19.

There is a sensible satisfaction in observing the chance and action of the people on some occasions. To gratify myself in this pleasure, I came with all speed this evening with an account of the surrender of Douay. As soon as the battle was heard of, they immediately drew some conclusions that it must have cost us a great number of men; that others were so negligent of the glory of their country; that they went on in their discourse on the use which is to be at Othello on Thursday, with curiosity they should go with, to see Wilks.

How moving is his sorrow, when he cries Sillows:

I ha! been happy, if the gen'ral camp, Pioneers and all, had tasted her sweet breath So I had nothing known. Oh now! for Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell care!
Farewell the plumed troops, and the big That make ambition virtue! Oh farewell Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing The royal banner, and all quality, Pride, pomp, and circumstance, of glorious And, oh ye mortal engines! whose rude Th' immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone.

I believe I may venture to say, there is any other part of Shakspeare's works more and lively pictures of nature than in this. therefore steal incognito to see it, out of curiosity observe how Wilks and Cibber touch those where Betterton and Sandford so very high celebrated. But now I am got into discourse with which I am so professedly pleased, I close this paper with a note I have just from the two ingenious friends, Mr. Pen and Mr. Bullock.

SIR,

Finding by your paper, No. 182, that drawing parallels between the greatest actors; as you have already begun with Mr. and Mr. Cibber, we desire you would do justice to your humble servants,

WM. BULLOCK AND WM. PENKETHMAN

For the information of posterity, I shall with this letter, and set these two great men as light as Sallust has placed his Cato and C.

Mr. William Bullock and Mr. William Penman are of the same age, profession, and se-larity distinguish themselves in a very pro-manner under the discipline of the crab-tree. this only difference, that Mr. Bullock has the agreeable squall, and Mr. Penkethman the graceful shrug. Penkethman devours a crowd with great applause; Bullock's talent lies in soporific. Penkethman is very dexterous weaving himself under a table; Bullock is active at jumping over a stick. Mr. Pen-has a great deal of money; but Mr. Bullock rather man.

No. 189.] SATURDAY, JUNE 24,

Est in juvenis, est in equis patrum Virtus; nec imbellem feroces Progenerant aquilæ columbam.

Hor. 4 O.

In steers laborious, and in generous steers We trace their sires, nor can the bird Intrepid, fierce, beget th' unwarlike dove

From my own Apartment, June 23

HAVING lately turned my thoughts upon moderations of the behaviour of parents to children the great affair of marriage, I took much turning over a bundle of letters, which a man's steward in the country had sent me time ago. This parcel is a collection of written by the children of the family, to belongs, to their father; and contains all passages of their lives, and the new ideas s their years advanced. There is in them ant of their diversions as well as their exerund what I thought very remarkable is, that s of the family, who now make considerable in the world, gave omens of that sort of er which they now bear, in the first rudi-of thought which they show in their letters. ne to point out a method of education, one ot, methinks, frame one more pleasing or ing than this; where the children get a habit nunicating their thoughts and inclinations to est friend with so much freedom, that he can schemes for their future life and conduct from ervation of their tempers; and by that means ly enough in choosing their way of life, to hem forward in some art or science at an age others have not determined what profession ow. As to the persons concerned in this I am speaking of, they have given great of the force of this conduct of their father in ect it has upon their lives and manners. The who is a scholar, showed from his infancy a isity to polite studies, and has made a suitable ss in literature; but his learning is so well into his mind, that from the impression of it, ms rather to have contracted a habit of life, nanner of discourse. To his books he seems e a good economy in his affairs, and a com-icy in his manners, though in others that way cation has commonly a quite different effect pistles of the other son are full of accounts of he thought most remarkable in his reading. nds his father for news the last noble story he read. I observe, he is particularly touched the conduct of Codrus, who plotted his own , because the oracle had said, if he were not , the enemy should prevail over his country. other incidents in his little letter give omens soul capable of generous undertakings; and makes it the more particular is, that this genn had, in the present war, the honour and haps of doing an action, for which only it was coming into the world. Their father is the intimate friend they have; and they always lt him rather than any other, when any error uppened in their conduct through youth and ertercy. The behaviour of this gentleman to s has made his life pass away with the pleaof a second youth; for, as the vexations men receive from their children hasten the ch of age, and double the force of years; so nforts, which they reap from them, are balm other sorrows, and disappoint the injuries of Parents of children repeat their lives in their ng; and their concern for them is so near, ey feel all their sufferings and enjoyments as as if they regarded their own proper persons. t is generally so far otherwise, that the com-ace of esquires in this kingdom use their sons sons that are waiting only for their funerals, ies upon their health and happiness; as in-hey are, by their own making them such. In where a man takes the liberty after this manreprehend others, it is commonly said, let him at home. I am sorry to own it; but there is ranch of the house of the Bickerstaffs, who been as erroneous in their conduct this way as other family whatsoever. The head of this is now in town, and has brought up with his son and daughter, who are all the children a, in order to be put some way into the world, ee fashions. They are both very ill-bred cubs;

the days of my youth and vanity, when, like my interpretation was with the Gentiles, that th of Babel, which is Babylon, ever sided unto th of Carthage, for tranquillity, as thou dost Neither was Hamiel; the son of Hamiel, hamed by his countrymen, until these saw the of their enemies at their gates; and then was time for him, thinkest thou, to return? It app therefore that thou dost prophecy backwards; dost row one way, and look another; and ind all things art thou too much a time-server toment thou not to consider what a day may brack. Think of this, and take tobacco.

friend.

AMINAD.

If the zealous writer of the above letter be meaning, it is of too high a nature to be the of any lucubrations. I shall therefore wave high points, and be as useful as I can to pers less moment than any he hints at. When I runs into a little fame in the world, as he with a great deal of reproach which he does a serve, so does he also a great deal of este which he has in himself no pretensions. W otherwise, I am sure no one would offer to low-ness to me: but because I am an ad gliphar and astrology, they will needs persue that I am no less a proficient in all other sci However, the point mentioned in the foll letter is no plain one, that I think I nee trouble myself to cast a figure to be able to solve it.

— MR. DICKERSTAFF.

It is some time ago since the entail of the of our family was altered, by passing a fine in 1 of me, who now am in possession of it, after others deceased. The heirs-general, who live young men, were excluded by this settlement, as whole estate is to pass in a new channel aft and my heirs. But several tenants of the lo guarantee me to let them hereafter hold their of me according to the old customs of the be and not oblige them to act by the limitations that settlement. This, they say, will make me popular among my dependants, and the a wants of the estate, to whom any deviation fro line of succession is always invidious.

Yours, I

SIR, Sheer-lane, June

You have by the fine a plain right, in mine else of your family can be your compe for which reason, by all means demand vas upon that title. The contrary advice can be fit no other purpose in nature but to betray and favour other pretenders, by making you p right which is in you only, upon a level with a which you have in common with others.

I am, sir,

Your most faithful servant, until death

I.

There is nothing so dangerous or so pleasi compliments made to us by our enemies: an correspondent tells me, that though he know all of those persons who give him this course at first against passing the fine in favour of yet he is so touched with their homage to him he can hardly believe they have a mind to add, in order to introduce the heirs-general his estate.

These are great evils; but since there is n dealing with success in this world without ce the with the arts of it, I shall use the same in to my correspondent's wishes did with him, in one whom I never had a kindness for; but notwithstanding, presume to give him my

ROBERT STAFF, ESQUIRE, OF GREAT BRITAIN; LEWIS THE FOURTEENTH OF FRANCE.

is,
 if majesty will pardon me while I take the to acquaint you, that some passages written our side of the water do very much obstruct interest. We take it very unkindly that the of Paris are so very partial in favour of one men among us, and treat the others as irre-able to your interests. Your writers are very recounting any thing which relates to the power of one party, but are dumb when should represent the actions of the other. This circumstance which many here are apt to stress upon; and therefore I thought fit to your consideration before you despatch courier.

‘I. B.’

1.] THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1710.

‘propter vitam vivendi perdere causas.

Juv. Sat. viii. 84.

Basely they cred cause for which they're born, betray, give up virtue for a worthless life.

R. Wymse.

From my own Apartment, June 28.

the evils under the sun, that of making mendable is the greatest; for it seems to asis of society, that applause and contempt e always given to proper objects. But in we behold things, for which we ought to abhorrence, not only received without dis-at even valued as motives of emulation. naturally the destruction of simplicity of s, openness of heart, and generosity of tem-When a person gives himself the liberty to nd run over in his thoughts the different gefmen, which he meets in the world, one can-observe, that most of the indirection and which is used among men, does not proceed h from a degeneracy in nature, as an affectaappearing men of consequence by such prac-by this means it is, that a cunning man is so far ring ashamed of being esteemed such, that he re-joices in it. It has been a sort of maxim, e greatest art is to conceal art; but I know not nong some people we meet with, their greatest g is to appear cunning. There is Polypragmakes it the whole business of his life to be t a cunning fellow, and thinks it a much character to be terrible than agreeable. it has once entered into a man's head to have sition to be thought crafty, all other evils are ry consequences. To deceive is the imme-ndeavour of him who is proud of the capacity g it. It is certain, Polypragmon does all the ossibly can, but pretends to much more than urns. He is contented in his own thoughts, igs himself in his closet, that though he is up there and doing nothing, the world does ow but that he is doing mischief. To favour spicion, he gives half-looks and shrugs in his l behaviour, to give you to understand that not know what he means. He is also won-y advertial in his expressions, and breaks off ‘perhaps’ and a nod of the head upon mat-the most indifferent nature. It is a mighty the first day; every one endeavouring to recompense himself by his good humour and complaisance towards the company. This good correspondence did not last long; one of our party was soured very first evening by a plate of butter which he found melted to his mind, and which spoiled his pear to such a degree, that he continued upon this to the end of our journey. A second fell off his good humour the next morning, for no other reason, that I could imagine, but because I chance stepped into the coach before him, and placed myself on the shady side. This however, was but my private guess; for he did not mention a word nor indeed of any thing else, for three days following. The rest of our company held out very half the way, when, on a sudden, Mr. Sprightly slept; and instead of endeavouring to divert us, as he had hitherto done, carried his with an unconcerned, careless, drowsy behaviour until we came to our last stage. There were of us who still held up our heads, and did could to make our journey agreeable; but, I shall be it spoken, about three miles on this journey, I was taken with an unaccountable sickness, that hung upon me for above three miles; whether it were for want of respect, or an accidental tread upon my foot, or from a fiend's calling me 'The old gentleman,' I can-tell. In short, there was but one who kept his humour to the Land's End.

There was another coach that went along with us which I likewise observed that there were secret jealousies, heart-burnings, and animosities when we joined companies at night, I could then take notice, that the passengers neglected their company, and studied how to make themselves comfortable by us, who were altogether strange to them; until at length they grew so well acquainted with us, that they liked us as little as they did another. When I reflect upon this journey, I think it to be a picture of human life, in respect of the several friendships, contracts, and alliances made and dissolved in the several periods of life. The most delightful and most lasting engagements are generally those which pass between man and woman; and yet upon what trifles are they ended, or entirely broken! Sometimes the partinership even in the midst of courtship, and times grow cool in the very honey-moon. I separate before the first child, and some after fifth; others continue good until thirty, others sixty; while some few, whose souls are of a harmonious, and better fitted to one another, travel to the end of their journey in a constant intercourse of kind offices, and mutual endearments.

When we therefore choose our companion for life, if we hope to keep both them and ourselves in good humour to the last stage of it, we must be extremely careful in the choice we make, as well the conduct on our own part. When the persons whom we join ourselves can stand an examination and bear the scrutiny; when they intend upon acquaintance with them, and discover new beauties the more we search into their characters; our will naturally rise in proportion to their perfect-

But because there are very few possessed of accomplishments of body and mind, we ought look after those qualifications both in ourselves others, which are indispensably necessary to this happy union, and which are in the power every man to acquire, or at least to cultivate and improve. These, in my opinion, are cheerfulness

A cheerful temper, joined with innocence, make beauty attractive, knowledge decent, and wit good-natured. It will lighten sickness, and affliction; convert ignorance into simplicity; and render deformity itself easy is natural to persons of even temper and firm dispositions; and may be acquired by the greatest fickleness, violence, and passion. I consider seriously the terms of union upon which they come together, the mutual interest in which they are engaged, with all the motives that ought to excite their tenderness and compassion towards each other, to have their dependance upon them, and to be linked with them for life in the same state of happiness or misery. Constancy, when it grows in the heart, upon considerations of this nature, becomes a moral virtue, and a kind of good-nature, not subject to any change of health, age, or any of those accidents which are apt to shake the best dispositions that are founded rather in affection than in reason. Where such a constancy is wanting, the most inflamed passion soon wears away into coldness and indifference, and the melting tenderness degenerates into hatred and rancour. I shall conclude this paper with a story which is very well known in the north of England. Thirty years ago, a packet-boat that had several passengers on board was cast away upon a rock, and in so great danger of sinking, that all who were on board it endeavoured to save themselves as well as they could; though only those who could swim well had any possibility of doing it. Among the passengers there were two women of fashion, who, seeing themselves in such a disconsolate condition, begged of their husbands not to leave them. One of them chose rather to die with his wife than to live without her; the other, though he was moved with great compassion for his wife, told her, 'that he could do nothing for her, but that he would do good of their children, it was better one of them should live, than both perish.' By a great deal of good luck, next to a miracle, when one of the men had taken the last and long farewell to his wife, and she was about to save herself, and the other held in his arms the person that was dearer to him than life, he was preserved. It is with a secret sorrow and pain of mind that I must tell the sequel of the story, and let my reader know, that this faithful pair were ready to have died in each other's arms, three years after their escape, upon some trifling disgust, grew to a coldness at first, and at last fell out to such a degree, that they left one another, and parted for ever. The other couple continued together in an uninterrupted friendship and affection; and, what was remarkable, the husband, who the shipwreck had like to have separated from his wife, died a few months after her, not being able to survive the loss of her.

I must confess, there is something in the changeableness and inconstancy of human nature, that often both dejects and terrifies me. Whatever I am at present, I tremble to think what I may become. If I find this principle in me, how can I assure myself that I shall be always true to my God, my friends, or myself? In short, without constancy there is neither love, friendship, nor virtue, in the

I desire your opinion, whether you think it expedient for me to undertake to prompt my soldiers, though I can slash swords when they battle, and have yet lungs enough left to breathe, I question, if I should prompt whether they would act accordingly.

‘ I am your honour’s most humble

‘ P. S. Sir, since I writ this, I am informed, that they design a new house in the fields, near the Popish chapel, to be built Michaelmas next; which indeed is but an old one that has already failed. Your honest man who kept the office is gone

No. 194.] THURSDAY, JULY

Militat omnis amans.

Ovid. Amor. l.

The toils of love require a warrior;
And every lover plays the soldier.

From my own Apartment, July

I was this morning reading the tenth book of Spenser, in which Sir Galahad relates the progress of his courtship to a very beautiful allegory, which is one of the most natural and unmix’d of any in that author. I shall transcribe it, to use for the benefit of many English gentlemen, who by frequent letters, desired me some rules for the conduct of their virtue, and shall only premise, that by the Shield is meant a generous, constant passion for a beloved.

‘ When the fame,’ says he, ‘ of thy beauty first flew abroad, I went in pursuit to the Temple of Love. This temple,’ he said, ‘ bore the name of the goddess Venus, and was seated in a most fruitful island, wall’d against all invaders. There was a path that led into the island, and before it was guarded by twenty knights. Near the open plain, and in the midst of it a pillar was hung the Shield of Love; and under it in letters of gold, was this inscription:

‘ Happy the man who well can use it, Whose ever be the shield, fair Amor

‘ My heart panted upon reading this. I struck upon the shield with my spear, and immediately issued forth a knight well mounted, completely armed, who, without speaking, came to me. I received him as well as I could. Good fortune threw him out of the way, and he counter’d the whole twenty successive knights, and they all extended on the plain, and the shield in token of victory. Having thus vanquish’d my rivals, I pass’d on without impediment to the utmost gate of the temple, but found it locked and barred. I knock’d, but could get no answer. At last I saw on the other side of the gate, who stood peering through a small crevice. This was the porter, whose double face resembled a Janus, and who was looking about him, as if he mistrusted danger. His name, as I afterwards learned, was Doubt. Over against him sat Delay, who tam’d passengers with some idle stories, but such opportunities as were never to be lost. As soon as the porter saw my shield, he out, upon my entering, De-lay caught hold of me, I would fain have made me listen to her fool. However, I shook her off, and passed forward came to the second gate, "The Gate of Good," which always stood wide open, but in the was a hideous giant, that stopped the entrance; he was Danger. Many warriors of good renown, not able to bear the sternness of his look, back again. Cowards fled at the first sight of except some few, who watching their opportunity by him unobserved. I prepared to assault but, upon the first sight of my shield, he immediately gave way. Looking back upon him, I his hinder parts much more deformed and e than his face; Hatred, Murder, Treason, and Detraction, lying in ambush behind him, upon the heedless and unwary.

now entered the "Island of Love," which red in all the beauties of art and nature, and d every sense with the most agreeable objects. At a pleasing variety of walks and alleys, shady and flowery banks, sunny hills and gloomy s, were thousands of lovers sitting, or walking er in pairs, and singing hymns to the deity of lace.

could not forbear envying this happy people, were already in possession of all they could de-

While I went forward to the temple, the ture was beautiful beyond imagination. The stood open. In the entrance sat a most amiable n whose name was Concord.

On either side of her stood two young men, both gly armed, as if afraid of each other. As I af-rds learned, they were both her sons, but be-n of her by two different fathers; their names and Hatred.

The lady so well tempered and reconciled them that she forced them to join hands; though I not but observe, that Hatred turned aside his as not able to endure the sight of his younger er.

At length entered the inmost temple, the roof ich was raised upon a hundred marble pillars, d with crowns, chains, and garlands. The id was strewed with flowers. A hundred altars, ch of which stood a virgin priestess clothed in y, blazed all at once with the sacrifice of lovers, were perpetually sending up their vows to hea-n clouds of incense.

At the midst stood the goddess herself upon an whose substance was neither gold nor stone, ninitely more precious than either. About her flew numberless flocks of little Loves, Joys, rances; and all about her altar lay scattered of lovers, complaining of the disdain, pride, eachery of their mistresses. One among the no longer able to contain his griefs, broke out he following prayer:

"O Venus, queen of grace and beauty, joy of gods men, who, with a smile becalmest the seas, and rest all nature; goddess, whom all the different s in the universe obey with joy and pleasure, I may at last obtain the object of my vows."

The impatient lover pronounced this with great aence; but I, in a soft murmur, besought the as to lend me her assistance. While I was raying, I chanced to cast my eye on a company lies, who were assembled together in a corner e temple, waiting for the anthem.

The foremost seemed something elder and of a composed countenance than the rest, who all red to be under her direction. Her name was selves, and yet administer physic beyond gums. These advices I shall reserve for future leisure; but have now taken a rededicate the remaining part of this instar to the service of the fair sex, and have almost a scheme for settling the whole remaining sex who are unmarried, and above the age five.

In order to this good and public service, I must first administer the passion of Love in its full effect, is attended both with joys and inquietude down, for the conduct of my lovers, such shall banish the cares, and heighten the which flow from that amiable spring of happiness. There is no less than absolute that some provision be made to take of stock of women in city, town, and country, there happen but the least disorder in the same, in an instant you see the inequality of numbers of males and females. Besides the immense crowd on such occasions is more in the open way, you may observe them also garrists huddled together, four at least at a time. Add to this, that by an exact calculation, there come to town by stage-coach or by town twelve-month past, three times in four persons have been males. This overstock for which there are so few bidders, calls for immediate supply of lovers and husbands: the studious knight-errant, who have such eternal contemplations to find out metrelief of all British females, who at present are devoted to involuntary virginity. Upon which I design to act, I have chosen to love but a beautiful young lady, who some time left the town, in the following

TO AMANDA, IN KENT.

'MADAM,

I send, with this, my discourse of means for encouraging marriage, and the island. You will soon observe, that in these rules, the mean considerations of vanity and merit cease to be the objects of pursuit, will be fully exploded. I have only proved, that jointures and settlements are of happiness; and not only so, but even of their fortunes who enter into the world, you therefore to come to town upon the first, where, I promise you, you shall have more as basters; for there needed not take men's interests fall in with their interest. I tender you the most courted of you, early as love you will now be willing to hasten then, and be the honourable husband. Cassander, and many other "The gate of good desert" to receive you.

I am, Madam,

Your most obedient, most humble servant
'ISAAC BICKS

No. 196.] TUESDAY, JULY 1

Dulcis inexperto cultura potentis a Expertus metuit. — Hor. 2 E

I'try'd, how sweet a court attendant When try'd, how dreadful the depend

From my own Apartment, July 1

Two intended course of my studies Evening by a visit from an old ac explained to me, mentioning one upon whom long depended, that he found his labour and chance in his patron's service and interests ineffectual; and he thought now, after his years were spent in a professed adherence to his fortunes, he should in the end be forced to with him, and give over all further expectations from him. He sighed and ended his discourse, saying, 'You, Mr. Censor, some time ago, gave thoughts of the behaviour of great men to editors. This sort of demand upon them, for they invite men to expect, is a debt of honour; according to custom, they ought to be most of paying, and would be a worthy subject for censure.'

All men living, I think, I am the most proper of this matter; because, in the character of Censor, I have had encouragement infinitely above my desert, that what I say possibly be supposed to arise from peevishness or any disappointment in that kind, which I have met with. When we consider Patrons or Clients, those who receive addresses, and who are addressed to, it must not be understood that the dependants are such as are worthless creatures, abandoned to any vice or dishonour, but as without a call thrust themselves upon power; nor when we say Patrons, do we mean such as have it not in their power, or have no intention, to assist their friends; but we speak of those where there are power and obligation on the one part, and merit and expectation on the other. We must be very particular on this subject, I think, that the division of patron and client may be a third part of our nation. The want of mind and real worth will strike out about ninety of the hundred of these; and want of ability in the patron will dispose of as many of that order. He, out of mere vanity to be applied to, will purchase another's time and fortune in his service, though he has no prospect of returning it, is as much unjust, as those who took up my friend the upper's goods without paying him for them; I say, is much more unjust, as our life and time is more valuable than our goods and moveables. I know many whom you see about the great, there is a contented well pleased set, who seem to like the chance for its own sake, and are early at the service of the powerful, out of mere fashion. This vanity is as well grounded as if a man should dress in his own plain suit, and dress himself up in the livery of another.

There are many of this species who exclude others from expectations, and make those proper dependants appear impatient, because they are not so useful as those who expect nothing. I have made out the penny-post for the instruction of these necessary slaves, and informed them, that they will be provided for; but they double their diligence upon admonition. Will Afterday has told his story, that he was to have the next thing, these are; and Harry Linger has been fourteen, or a month of a considerable office. However, the fantastic complaisance which is paid to them, blinds the great from seeing themselves in a just light, they must needs, if they in the least reflect, sometimes, have a sense of the injustice they do in giving to others a false expectation. But this is a common practice in all the stages of power, that are not more cripples come out of the wars, from the attendance of patrons. You see in the settled melancholy, in another a bridled rage; and when he was hedged in by logical false appearances, you must have ~~be~~ convinced before you could then have ~~be~~ and the shame of his triumph had ~~be~~ the pain of his impertinence.

There is a sort of littleness in the mind of wrong sense, which makes them much more miserable than mere fools, and has the convenience of being attended by an eccentricity. For which reason, it would be a work, if some well-wisher to human society considered the terms upon which people may be placed, in order to prevent the unseasonable relations which we meet with there. In my youth, it was a humour at the university fellow pretended to be more eloquent than he was, and had formed to himself a plot to gain admiration, or triumph over us with an advantage of which he had no manner of care. In either of these cases, it was the humour of the age. This whimsical way of taking not notice of absurdity, has prevented many a man from a coxcomb. If amongst us, on such a subject, each man offered a voluntary rhetorician, it would probably produce the same effect. The matter now stands, whether a man will be obliged to be informed in whatever manner to entertain him with; though the pretence of these advances out of vanity, and not to insult him.

There is no man will allow him who is not able to be called a soldier; but men of good sense, are very frequently not only able to be scholars, but esteemed for being so. At the same time it must be granted, that as common sense is a natural part of a soldier, so is a good understanding a part of a scholar. Such little minds as these, are collected in the volume to which the honour to be patron, are the instruments of artful men to work with; and become part of the unthinking part of mankind. In the same manner, they make transparent flatterers; in camps, bullies; in colleges, unintelligible pedants; their faculties are used accordingly by those who lead them.

When a man who wants judgment enters into the conversation of reasonable men, he must remember such improper circumstances as he has drawn such groundless conclusions from their conversation, and that with such colour of sense, as will make the best set of company that can be got. It is just thus with a fool who has a family library: he shall quote and recite one author after another, in such a manner as shall puzzle the understanding to refute him; though the narrow capacity may observe that it is only the intricacy that makes the display. All the true use we call learning is to ennobel and improve our natural faculties, and not to disguise our ignorance. It is therefore in vain for folly to attempt to do itself, by the refuge of learned language. Nature does but make a man more eminent in the science which nature made him; and Polyglot studied less than he has, and writ only in a bad style, had been known only in Great Britain as a pedant.

Mr. Bickerstaff thanks Dorinda, and answers her letter, and takes her advice.

28.] SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1710.

Id quod amas celeri circumspice mente, Assuro substrahe colla iugo.

Ovid. Rem. Amor. i. 89.

choice deliberate, nor rashly yield your neck to Hymen's galling yoke.

From my own Apartment, July 14.

THE HISTORY OF CÆLIA.

It is not necessary to look back into the first years of this young lady, whose story is of consequence as her life has lately met with passages uncommon. She is now in the twentieth year, and owes a strict, but cheerful education, to the care of an aunt; to whom she was recommended by her dying father, whose decease was attended by an inconsolable affliction for the loss of her. As Cælia is the offspring of the most ardent passion that has been known in our age, she is adorned with as much beauty and grace as is celebrated of her sex possesses; but her life, moderate fortune, and religious education have given her but little opportunity, and less inclination to be admired in public assemblies. Her father had been for some years at a convenient distance from the cathedral of St. Paul's; where her mother chose to reside, for the advantage of her pious way of devotion, which gives ecstasy and assurances of innocence, and, in some measure, the immediate possession of those heavenly pleasures for which they are addressed.

It may trace the usual thoughts of men in various circumstances, there appeared in the face of Cælia a cheerfulness, the constant companion of virtue, and a gladness, which is inseparable from true piety. Her every look and motion was peaceful, mild, resigning, humble and animated her beautiful body. Her air gave her body a mere machine of her mind, and her thoughts were employed in study and attractions for her person. Such was she when she was first seen by Palamede at her place of worship. Palamede is a young man about twenty, well fashioned, learned, genteel, and the son and heir of a gentleman of a good estate, and himself possessed of a plentiful gift of an uncle. He became acquainted with Cælia, and after having learned her name, had address enough to communicate his particular circumstances with such an air of good integrity, as soon obtained permission to profess his inclinations towards her. Palamede's present fortune and future expectations were prejudicial to his addresses; but after he had passed some time in the agreeable entertainment of a successful courtship, Cælia one day began to interrupt Palamede, in the midst of his pleasing discourse of the happiness he proposed in so accomplished a companion; taking a serious air, told him, there was no heart to be won before he gained hers, and that of his father. Palamede seemed surprised at the overture; and lamented to his father that he was one of those too provident fathers who only place their thoughts upon bringing into their families by marriages, and are insensible of all other considerations. But the excess of Cælia's rules of life made her insist on demand; and the son, at a proper hour, related to his father the circumstances of his love, the merit of the object. The next day heard him declaim upon this subject, and a that the marriage settlements, which are used, have grown fashionable even within memory.'

When the theatre, in some late reigns, owed chief support to those scenes which were writ put matrimony out of countenance, and rendered state terrible, then was it that pin-money first railed; and all the other articles were introduced which create a diffidence, and intimate to the people, that they are very soon to be in a state war with each other; though this had seldom opened, except the fear of it had been expressed.
Coupler will tell you also, 'that jointures never frequent until the age before his own the women were contented with the third part estate the law allotted them, and scorned to with men whom they thought capable of abusing their children.' He has also informed me, those who are the oldest benchers when he came the Temple, told him, the first marriage settlement of considerable length was the invention of a sergeant; who took the opportunity of two fathers, who were ever squabbling, to bring an alliance between their children. These fathers knew each other to be knaves; and the sergeant held of their mutual diffidence, for the benefit of the law, to extend the settlement to three shilling garbment.'

To this great benefactor to the profession ing the present price current of lines and This is tenderness thrown out of the question the great care is, what the young couple shall when they come to hate each other. I do not question but from this one humour of settling might very fairly be deduced, not only our pro-defection in point of morals, but also our want people. This has given way to such unreason-gallantries, that a man is hardly reproachable deceives an innocent woman, though she has con-much merit, if she is below him in fortune. man has no dishonour following his treachery, her own sex are so debased by force of custom to say in the case of the woman, 'How could expect he would marry her?'

By this means the good offices, the pleasures graces of life, are not put into the balance. bridegroom has given his estate out of himself; he has no more left but to follow the blind de-his fate, whether he shall be succeeded by a son man of merit in his fortune. On the other the woman, who has also a fortune, is set ray of auction; her first lover has ten shillings against him. The very hour after he has sold his heart and his rent-roll, he is made no other if but to raise her price. She and her friends on opportunity of publishing it, to call in new bidders. While the poor lover very innocently until the plenipotentiaries at the inns of coun-debated about the alliance, all the partisans sides throw difficulties in the way, until others come in; and the man who came first is not possession, until she has been refused by him down. If an abhorrence to such mercenary proposals were well settled in the minds of men readers, those of merit would have a way open their advancement; nay, those who about wealth only would in reality find their account.
It would not be in the power of their private acquaintance, their waiters, their nurses, cousin whisperers, to persuade them, that there are above twenty men in a kingdom, and those they may never set eyes on, whom they can with discretion. As the case stands now, one consider, how the great heiresses, and whom they were offered, for no other reason that they could make them suitable settle together. What can be more insipid, if some, than for two persons to be at the a crowd, who have as little regard for them for each other; and behold one another in ted sense of prosperity, without the least that exquisite gladness at meeting, that quietude at parting, together with the of voice, look, gesture, and that general bece between well-chosen lovers, which makes as please, and leaves not the least trifle in-

I am diverted from these sketches for future n behalf of my numerous clients of the fair notice sent to my office in Sheer-lane, 'That ing widow, in the third year of her widow- and twenty-sixth of her age, designs to take a of twenty-eight.' The parties request I draw up their terms of coming together, as a regard to my opinion against long and t settlements; and I have sent them the fol- indenture:

I, John ——— and Mary ———, having for life, resolve to take each other. I John nture my life to enrich thee Mary; and I will consult my health to nurse thee John. ch we have interchangeably set our hands, and seals, this 17th of July, 1710.

200.] THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1710.

From my own Apartment, July 19.

ING devoted the greater part of my time to vice of the fair sex; I must ask pardon of my correspondents, if I postpone their commands, I have any from the ladies which lie unan- . That which follows is of importance.

Sir,
ou cannot think it strange if I, who know of the world, apply to you for advice in the y affair of matrimony; since you yourself often declared it to be of that consequence as ure the utmost deliberation. Without fur- reface, therefore, give me leave to tell you, y father at his death left me a fortune suffi- to make me a match for any gentleman. My r, for she is still alive, is very pressing with marry; and I am apt to think, to gratify her, I venture upon one of two gentlemen, who at me make their addresses to me. My request t you would direct me in my choice; which, ou may the better do, I shall give you their ters; and, to avoid confusion, desire you to rem by the names of Philander and Silvius. der is young, and has a good estate; Silvius young, and has a better. The former has had ral education, has seen the town, is retired hence to his estate in the country, is a man words, and much given to books. The latter rought up under his father's eye, who gave st learning enough to enable him to keep his nts; but made him withal very expert in ry business, such as ploughing, sowing, buy- elling, and the like. They are both very sober neither of their persons is disagreeable, nor know which to prefer until I had heard them rse; when the conversation of Philander so prevailed, as to give him the advantage with are damped with pain and anguish at all that is laudable, lovely, or happy. They are touched with commiseration towards the disagreeable, and the wretched. Those who betray the innocent of their own solicitation the lewd of ours. There are those abandoned the very memory, not only of but shame. There are those who never nor could ever bear being forgiven. There also who visit the beds of the sick, lull the sorrowful, and double the joys of Such is the destroying fiend, such the angel, woman.

The way to have a greater number of the part of womankind, and lessen the cro other sort, is to contribute what we can cess of well grounded passions; and to comply with the request of an enamoured inserting the following billet:

'MADAM,

'Mr. Bickerstaff you always read, though will never hear. I am obliged therefore passion for the opportunity of imploring nigh for the most accomplished of her sex so just a distinction of her, to whom I the owning I think so is no distinction c write. Your good qualities are peculiar t admiration is common with thousands. present when you read this; but fear eve will take it for her character, sooner she deserves it.'

If the next letter, which presents its come from the mistress of this modest k make them break through the oppressive passions, I shall expect gloves at their nu

'MR. BICKERSTAFF,

'You, that are a philosopher, know ver make of the mind of women, and can be me in the conduct of an affair which highl me. I never can admit my lover to spea love; yet think him impertinent when h talk of any thing else. What shall I do v that always believes me? It is a strai this distance in men of sense! why do a'ways urge their fate? If we are sinc severity, you lose nothing by attempting. hypocrites, you certainly succeed.'

From my own Apartment, July 21

Before I withdraw from business for th is my custom to receive all addresses to others may go to rest as well as myself, far as I can contribute to it. When I know if any would speak with me, I was that Mr. Mills, the player, desired to be He was so; and with much modesty acqui as he did other people of note, 'that Han be acted on Wednesday next for his benef long wanted to speak with this person; thought I could admonish him of man which would tend to his improvement. In ral I observed to him, that though actio business, the way to that action was not gesture; for the behaviour would follow ments of the mind.

Action to the player is what speech is t ur. If the matter be well conceived, w flow with ease: and if the actor is well po the nature of his part, a proper action w easily follow. He informed me, that Wil act Hamlet: I desired him to request of h name, that he would wholly forget Mr. E at he failed in no part of Othello, but where I him in view. An actor's forming himself by marriage of another is like the trick among the w, who lament their husbands as their neighbours did theirs, and not according to their own sentiments of the deceased.

There is a fault also in the audience, which intercepts their satisfaction very much; that is, the acting to themselves the actor in some part in they formerly particularly liked him, and tending to the part he is at that time performing. Thus, whatever Wilks, who is the strictest critic of nature, is acting, the vulgar spectators direct their thoughts upon Sir Harry Wildair.

When I had indulged the loquacity of an old man some time, in such loose hints, I took my leave of Mr. Mills; and was told, Mr. Elliot of St. James's coffee-house would speak with me. His business was to desire I would, as I am an astrologer, inform him before-hand, who were to have the most tickets in the ensuing lottery; which knowing, he was of opinion, he could turn to great account, as he was concerned in news.

I granted his request, upon an oath of secrecy, and he would only make his own use of it, and not let it be publicly known until after they were drawn.

Not done speaking, when he produced to me a list in which he had formed of keeping books, with the names of all such adventurers, and the numbers of their tickets, as should come to him; in order to give an hourly account of what tickets shall come up during the whole time of the lottery, the drawing of which is to begin on Wednesday next. I liked his method of disguising the secret I had told him; and pronounced him a thriving man, who could so well direct the motion of things, and profit by a prevailing humour and impatience so aptly, as to make his industry agreeable to his customers, as it is the messenger of their good fortune.

ADVERTISEMENT.

From the Trumpet in Sheer-lane, July 20.

I observed, that for the improvement of the pleasures of society, a member of this house, one of the most useful of the soporific assembly beyond Smithfield, and one of the order of story-tellers in Holmay meet and exchange stale matter and rehearse the same to their principals.

3. No man is to tell above one story in the evening; but has liberty to tell the same the following.

Bickerstaff desires his love correspondents to be names they shall assume in their future letters; for that he is overstocked with Philanders.

No. 202.] TUESDAY, JULY 25, 1710.

—Est hic

Et Ulubria, animus si te non deficit æquus.

Hor. Ep. xi. ver. ult.

True happiness is to no spot confin'd, You preserve a firm and equal mind, Here, 'tis there, and every where.—

From my own Apartment, July 21.

This afternoon I went to visit a gentleman of my acquaintance at Mile-end; and passing through a church-yard, I could not forbear entertaining myself with the inscriptions on the tombs and monuments. Among others, I observed one with this memorial:

'Here lies the body of T. B.'

2 P

Old Bukt, of Saint James's coffee-house, called alone before me, and signified to me, not not only prepared his books, but had a very great subscription already. His duty to advertise his subscribers at their respective offices, within an hour after their numbers were drawn, whether it was a blank or benefit, if venturer lives within the bills of mortality, shall in the country, by the next post. I praised the man in his industry, and told I surely path to good fortune was to believe the same such thing.

No. 203.] THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1711

Ut tu fortunatus, sic nos te, Celse, ferem Hoc. l. Ep. viii.

As Celsus bears this change of fortune, So will his friends bear him. R.

From my own Apartment, July 26.

It is natural for the imaginations of men, & their lives in too solitary a manner, to pre-occupies themselves, and form from their own conceits things and things which have no place in This often makes an adept as much at a loss he comes into the world, as a mere savage avoid therefore that ineptitude for society, frequently the fault of us scholars, and has,
of understanding and breeding, something more shocking and untractable than rusticity I take care to visit all public solemnities; into assemblies as often as my studies will This being therefore the first day of the draw-the lottery, I did not neglect spending a considerable time in the crowd: but as much a philosopher I pretend to be, I could not but look with a veneration upon the two boys who receive tickets from the wheel, as the impartial and dispensers of the fortunes which were to be divided among the crowd, who all stood expect-some chance. It seems at first thought ve-distant, that one passion should so universal the pre-eminence of another in the possession of minds, so that in this case all in genera-a secret hope of the great ticket: and yet another instance, as in going into battle, shew as little influence as that, though each man thinks will be many thousands slain, each is or he himself shall escape. This certainly proceeds from our vanity; for every man sees abundhimself that deserves reward, and nothing should meet with mortification. But of all venturers that filled the hall, there was one noticed by me, who I could not but fancy expect thousand pounds per annum, as a mere juhis parts and industry. He had his pencil as book; and was, at the drawing of each lot, considering much a man with seven tickets was now the great prize, by the striking out another another competitor. This man was of the particular constitution I had ever observed passions were so active that he worked in the stretch of hope and fear. When one rival saw him, you might see a short gleam of tri-his countenance, which immediately vanished approach of another. What added to the vanity of this man was, that he every moment look either upon the commissioners, the wheel the boys. I gently whispered him, and asked, he thought the thousand pounds would con-"Fugh!" says he, "who knows that?" At upon a little list of his own tickets; which pretty high in their numbers, and said it would me this ten days. This fellow will have a chance, though not that which he has put his on. The man is mechanically turned; and for getting. The simplicity and eagerness he is in, argues an attention to this point; what he is labouring at does not in the least suite to it. Were it not for such honest fellows as, the men who govern the rest of their specialty should have no tools to work with: for the out-how of the world is carried on by such as find out that they are doing nothing. I left on with great reluctance, seeing the care he to observe the whole conduct of the persons need, and compute the inequality of the as with his own hands and eyes. 'Dear sir,'

 'they must rise early that cheat you.' 'Ay,' 'there is nothing like a man's minding his as himself.' 'It is very true,' said I; 'the 's eye makes the horse fat.' much the greater number are to go without it is but very expedient to turn our lecture forming just sentiments on the subject of . One said this morning, 'that the chief was confident, would fall upon some puppy;' is gentleman is one of those wrong tempers prove only the unhappy, and have a natural ice to the fortunate. But, as it is certain ere is a great meanness in being attached to purely for his fortune, there is no less a mean-1 disliking him for his happiness. It is the perverseness under different colours; and both resentments arise from mere pride.

the greatness of mind consists in valuing men from their circumstances, or according to their iour in them. Wealth is a distinction only in ; but it must not be allowed as a recommenin any other particular, but only just as it is d. It was very prettily said, 'That we may the little value of fortune by the persons on heaven is pleased to bestow it.' However, is not a harder part in human life than beg wealth and greatness. He must be very tocked with merit, who is not willing to draw superiority over his friends from his fortune; is not every man that can entertain with the a guest, and do good offices with the mien of at receives them.

ust confess, I cannot conceive how a man can himself in a figure wherein he can so much his own soul, and, that greatest of pleasures, ist approbation of his own actions, as an ad-rer, on this occasion, to sit and see the lots go thout hope or fear; perfectly concerned as to lf, but taking part in the good fortune of
 .
 ill believe there are happy tempers in being, om all the good that arrives to any of their -creatures gives a pleasure. These live in a of lasting and substantial happiness, and the satisfaction to see all men endeavour to r them. This state of mind not only lets a nto certain enjoyments, but relieves him from tain anxieties. If you will not rejoice with men, you must repine at them. Dick Rep-futed to this when he said, 'he would hate no out of pure idleness.' As for my own part, I t Fortune quite in another view than the rest world; and, by my knowledge in futurity, le at the approaching prize, which I see g to a young lady for whom I have much ten-off; and we had a report, that his Excellency

I humbly presume that it flatters the only his Excellency in a case which is extinct; except you would infer what is inferred, to wit, that the author designed wherein he excelled others was departed

Were distinctions used according to reason and sense, those additions to it would be, as they were first intended, a claim worth, and not their persons; so much it might be proper to say, 'the M but his Excellency will never die.' It is very unjust to laugh at a Quaker, because he has taken up a resolution to treat you with most expressive of complaisance that can be, and with an air of good-nature and your Friend. I say, it is very unjust for this term to a stranger, when you use your phrases of distinction, confound phirases into no use at all.

Tom Courtly, who is the pink of conscience, of how little moment an undi-stinction of sounds of honour are to the discontent themselves. Tom never fails his obedience to every man he sees, who efforts to make him conspicuous; but he is wholly given to outward consideration know him, can tell him within half an hour how long one man has more than another know to him. Title is all he knows of civility of friendship: for this reason, cares for no man living, he is religious performing, what he calls, his respects this end he is very learned in pedigree what something in the ceremony of his the a man, if he is in any doubt about the his coat of arms. What is the most pleas-character is, that he acts with a sort of these impertinences; and though he is many solid kindnesses, he is wonderfully just and not to wrong his quality. But as very scarce in the world, I cannot forbear respect for the impertinent: it is sometimes wound by any thing. Tom and I are good terms, for the respect he has for the Buckingham. Though one cannot but be serious consideration of things so little one must have a value even for a firm conscience.

No. 206.] TUESDAY, AUGUST :

Feels! not to know how far an humble Exceeds abundance by injustice got;
How health and temperance bless the rus While luxury destroys her pamper'd trai Hesiod, by R.

From my own Apartment, July 2

NATURE has implanted in us two very strong; hunger, for the preservation of the flesh; and lust, for the support of the we speak more intelligibly, the former our own persons, and the latter to introduce the world. According as men behave with regard to those appetites, they be below the beasts of the field, which by them without choice or reflection. I think creatures collect these incentives, as that into elegant motives of friendship a from this timely foundation

ider the necessity of seeking for the agreeable union, and the honourable mistress. By this action of art and reason, our wants are moderated; and the gratification of our desires, under restrictions, a work no way below our noblest ideas. The wisest man may maintain his character, and yet consider in what manner he shall entertain his friend or divert his mistress. Nay, so far from being a derogation to him, that he has no instances shew so true a taste of his life, and fortune. What concerns one of the above-mentioned appetites, as it is elevated into love, I have abundant occasion to discourse of, before we provide for the numberless crowd of damsels I have proposed to take care of. The subject, therefore, of the present paper shall be that part of it, which owes its beginning to the common necessity of Hunger. When this is considered as the sort of our being, we may take in under the head Thirst also; otherwise, when we are punishing the glutton, the drunkard may make his escape. The true choice of our diet, and our compass at it, seems to consist in that which contributes to cheerfulness and refreshment: and these mainly are best consulted by simplicity in the food, and sincerity in the company. By this rule, in the first place, excluded from pretence to fineness all meals of state and ceremony, which performed in dumb-show, and greedy sullenness. The boards of the great, they say, you shall have number attending with as good habits and countenances as the guests, which only circumstance must destroy the whole pleasure of the repast: for if suchendants are introduced for the dignity of their appearance, modest minds are shocked by considering them as spectators; or else look upon them as slaves, for whose servitude they are in a kind of being. It may be here added, that the sumptuous board, to an ingenuous eye, has often more the appearance of an altar than a table. The next absurd way of enjoying ourselves at meals is, where the bottle is plied without being called for, where humour takes place of appetite, and the good company are dull, or too merry, to know any enjoyment in their senses.

Though this part of time is absolutely necessary to sustain life, it must be also considered, that life itself is to the endless being of man but what a meal is to this life, not valuable for itself but for the purpose of it. If there be any truth in this, the expense of many hours this way is somewhat unaccountable: and placing much thought either in too great sumptuousness and elegance in this matter, or in giving in noise and riot at it, are both, though equally, unaccountable. I have often considered the different people with very great attention, and they speak of them with the distinction of the Eaters and the Swallowers. The Eaters sacrifice all their senses and understanding to this appetite. The Swallowers hurry themselves out of both, without giving this or any other appetite at all. The latter improved brutes, the former, degenerated men. I have sometimes thought it would not be improper to add to my dead and living men, persons in an intermediate state of humanity, under the appellation of Dozers. The Dozers are a sect, who, instead of giving their appetites in subjection, live in subjection to them; nay, they are so truly slaves to them, that they keep at too great distance ever to come near their presence. Within my own acquaintance, now those that I dare say have forgot that they were hungry, and are no less utter strangers to figure he pleases, he still dwells in the idea of all who know him but as Jack such-and-such makes Jack brighten up the room where he sits, and change the severity of the countenance that gaiety and good humour, into which conversation generally leads them. It is not to observe even this sort of creature good character, to check himself sometimes for civilities, and pretend so awkwardly at praising himself more esteem than he finds he meets with the other day walking with Jack Gainly in Lincoln's-inn-walks: we met a fellow who called out where Jack is in the direction. Jack said to him, 'So, how is it, Mr. —?' He said, 'Mr. Gainly, I am glad to see you well.' A perception of equality gave my friend a pleasant expression in the flash of his countenance. 'Jack,' says I, 'do not be angry at the man what you will, the man can only love you treated with the image the man has of the character of the subject, it must be hateful to him.' I went on, and told him, 'Look you I have heard thee sometimes talk like an old man half an hour, with the sentiments of a schoolboy, and the integrity of a schoolman; but then, Jack, while I admired thee upon topics which did not concern thyself, where the greatness of the subject, and being personally unconcerned in it, creates a great interest in thy discourse.' I did not mind a little out of humour; but comforted him, and told him several instances of men of our age who had no one quality in any eminence, and were much more esteemed than he was with us. 'But the thing is, if your character is so sure, men will consider you only in that light, not in those acts which turn to esteem and reputation.'

When I think of Jack Gainly, I cannot direct also upon his sister Gatty. She is witty, pleasant, innocent. This is her natural character; but when she observes any one and what they call a fine woman, she is all the womanly, prudent, observing, and virtuous every moment asked in her prudential habit whether she is not well? Upon which she answers in a fret, 'Do people think one always romping, always a jack-pudding?' I fail to inquire of her, if my lady such-and-such a beauty, was not at the play last night knows the connexion between that question change of humour, and says, 'It would well if some people would examine into it as much as they do into others.' Or, 'So is nothing in the world so ridiculous as an old man.'

As I was saying, there is a class which is in by his post in nature, from which it is possible for him to withdraw to another, and therefore it is necessary that each should contented with it, and not endeavour at any out of that tract. To follow nature is the agreeable course, which is what I would direct to these jarring companions, Flavia and her mamma, has all the charms and desires still about her, and is not much turned. Lucia is blooming and amorous, and but above fifteen. The mother looks very younger than she is, the girl very much older were possible to fix the girl to her sick bed, serve the portion, the use of which the mother the good widow Flavia would certainly do it. For fear of Lucia's escape, the mother is forced constantly attended with a rival that explains, and draws off the eyes of her admirers. As, they can never be together in strangers' way, but Lucy is eternally reprimanded for being very particular in her behaviour; for she has the malice to say, 'she hopes she always obey her parents.' She carried her of jealousy to that height the other day, coming suddenly into the room, and surprising Lofly speaking rapture on one knee to her she clapped down by him, and asked her not know whether it is so proper to tell family secrets of this nature; but we every day see the thing happen in public conversation of the Men cannot be contented with what is laudable, but they must have all that is laudable. This is what decoys the familiar man into error to take state upon him, and the contrary to the folly of aiming at being winning and pleasant. But in these cases men may easily do what they are, but can never arrive at what they are not.

In the pursuits after affection and esteem, the sexes are happy in this particular, that with them love is much more nearly related to the other than in men. The love of a woman is inseparable from some esteem of her; and as she is naturally the object of affection, the woman who has your esteem has also some degree of your love. A man who votes on a woman for her beauty, will whisper to his friend, 'that creature has a great deal of wit; you are well acquainted with her.' And if you examine the bottom of your esteem for a woman you will find you have a greater opinion of her than any body else. As to us men, I devote most of my time with the facetious William Bickerstaff; but William Bickerstaff, the prudent man of our family, shall be my example.

[207.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1710.

From my own Apartment, August 4.

HAVING yesterday morning received a paper of verses, written with much elegance in honour of these my papers, and being informed at the same time, that they were composed by a youth unacquainted with me, I read them with much delight, as an instance of his improvement. There is not a greater security to old age, than seeing young people enter themselves in such a manner as that we can take of their enjoyments. On such occasions we treat ourselves, that we are not quite laid aside in the world; but that we are either used with gratitude for what we were, or honoured for what we are. A well-inclined young man, and whose good-breeding is founded upon the principles of nature and true, must needs take delight in being agreeable to his elders, as we are truly delighted when we are the jest of them. When I say this, I must confess I cannot but think it a very lamentable thing, that there should be a necessity for making that a rule of life, which should be, methinks, a mere instinct of nature. If reflection upon a man in poverty, whom we once knew in riches, is an argument of commiseration with generous minds; sure old age, which is a decay from that vigour which the young possess, and must certainly, if not prevented against their will, arrive at, should be more forcibly any other a long discourse, to felicitate me upon my present and easy state; and mentioned how much I had to thank for, who at our time a man, walk freely, eat heartily, and converse freely, he had kept up my pleasure in myself. of such mankind, there are none so shocking as insignificant civil people. They ordinarily suppose something that they know must be a flattery; but then, for fear of the imputation flattery, they follow it with the last thing it would of which you would be reminded. It is flattery to please civil persons. The reason that we seek a general censure among us against flattery, these are very few good ones. It is the most useful life, and is a part of eloquence which must want the preparation that is necessary either parts of it, that your audience should be well-pleased; for praise from an enemy is the following of all commendations.

It is generally to be observed, that the pmost agreeable to a man for a constancy is to have no shining qualities, but is a certain d-above great imperfections; whom he can live on his inferior, and who will either overlook, remove his little defects. Such an easy compas this, either now and then throws out a little to let a man silently flatter himself in his industry to him. If you take notice, the really a rich man in the world, who has not a kind of small consideration, who is a distr. his insignificance. It is a great ease to make our own shape a species below us, and without being listed in our service, is by not ourselves. These dependants are of excellen-a company day, or when a man has not a mi-to be, or to exclude solitude, when one has no to that or to company. There are of well-mannered order, who are so kind as to themselves, and do these good offices to many. of them visit a whole quarter of the out-include the spleen, without fees, from the for they frequent. If they do not prescribe p-they can be company when you take it. Very benefactors to the rich, or those whom the people at their ease, are your persons of no persons. I have known some of them, by the of a little cunning, make delicious flatterers. know the course of the town, and the generamatters of persons; by this means they will times tell the most agreeable falsehoods imagin-They will acquaint you, that such a one of a company party said, 'That though you were en-in different interests, yet he had the greatest refor your good sense and address. When there has a little cunning, he passes his time in utmost satisfaction to himself and his friend his position is never to report or speak a displeathing to his friend. As for letting him go on error, he knows, advice against them is the of persons of greater talents and less discretion.

The Latin word for a flatterer, assinator, is no more than a person that barely consents indeed such a one, if a man were able to pay or maintain him, cannot be bought too dear. a one never contradicts you; but gains upon not by a false way of commending you in terms, but liking whatever you propose or wish the same time, is ready to beg your pardon gaining you, if you chance to speak ill of you.
 An old lady is very odious without such a man as this, who can trade the names of idlery and the station of flattery by her in the guided such vanities, as she is pleased to, though she so much approves the mention of it. It is to be noted, that a woman's flatterer is older than herself; her years serving to recommend her patroness's age, and to add her complaisance in all other particulars. Gentlemen of small fortunes are extremely so in this particular. I have indeed one who comes with me often; but his parts are so low, the incense he does me is to fill his pipe and to be out at just as many whiffs as I breathe; his is all the praise or assent that he is able to give; yet there are more hours when I would be in his company than in that of the brightest I know. It would be a hard matter to give vent to this inclination to be flattered; but if we get to the bottom of it, we shall find, that the reason in it is something like that of receiving a bribe which we lay out. Every man thinks he is in the state of reputation, and is glad to see one bring any of it home to him. It is no matter how dirty a bag it is conveyed to him in, or by what means a messenger, so the money be good. The man we want, to be pleased with flattery, is to be that the man is sincere who gives it us. It is only one accident, that absurd creatures often are the most skilful in this art. Their want of wit is here an advantage; and their bluntness, the seeming effect of sincerity, is the best artifice.

He introduces a flatterer talking to a coxcomb whom he cheats out of a livelihood; and a clown on the stage makes on him this pleasurable mark, 'This fellow has an art of making fools of us.' The love of flattery is, indeed, the weakness of a great mind; but you see it in persons, who otherwise discover no relish of anything above mere sensuality. It sometimes improves; but always degenerates. A fool is in himself the object of flattery. By the force of that, his vanity is raised into affectation, and he becomes ridiculous enough to be ridiculous. I remember a man upon one's saying, 'The times are so that there must great care be taken what is said in conversation;' answered, with an air of candour and honesty, 'If people will be free, let me say so in the manner that I am, who never man but to his face.' He had no reputation for saying dangerous truths; therefore when it was said, 'You abuse a man but to his face?' he says he, 'I flatter him.'

Indeed the greatest of injuries to flatter any man is to be unhappy, or such as are displeased with themselves for some infirmity. In this latter case I remember a member of our club, who, when Sir Jeffery was asleep, wakens him with snoring. This Sir Jeffery held up for some moments the example to see there are men younger than himself who are more lethargic than he is. Flattery is practised upon any other consideration, it is the most abject thing in nature; nay, I think of any character below the flatterer, I think that envies him. You meet with fellows who pretend to be as mean as possible in their concessions and expressions; but they want persons to rise up to such a baseness. As a coxcomb is a fool of parts, so is a flatterer a knave of best of this order, that I know, is one who is it under a spirit of contradiction or revenge. He told an arrant driveller the other day,

No. 210.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 12, 1

Sheer-lane, August 10.

I took myself the honour this day to make a lady of quality, who is one of those that are talking at the vices of the age, but mean only vice, because it is the only vice they are not of. She went so far as to fall foul on a young woman, who has had imputations; but whether true or not, no one knows but herself.
That is, she is in her present behaviour mis-troubled, pious, and discreet. I thought it became bringing this censorious lady to reason, at least, she was a much more vicious woman to person she spoke of.

'Madam,' said I, 'you are very severe to be young woman for a trespass which I believe has forgiven her, and for which, you see, she is set out of countenance.' 'Nay, Mr. Bickett,' she interrupted, 'if you at this time of your life are a people of virtue, and stand up for them.' 'No, no, madam,' said I, 'not so highly reclaimed, and I fear you never will be.
Madam, do not be in a passion; but let me tell you that you are. You are indeed as good as a hypocrite; but that is being very bad. You stand at the head of a family, and lead a peculiar life. You go on your own way, without anything but your glass. What impudence indeed you see there, you immediately rebuke as you can. You may do the same by those I tell you of; for they are much more in need of correction.'

'You are to know, then, that you visiting liberty carry your virtue from house to house with you, and are a pestle in each other's applause, and triumphant over people's faults, I grant you, have but the reputation of vice in your own conversations; but the practice of it in all others you have none.'

'I am for you, madam, your time passes away in eating, sleeping, and praying. When it is a morning, I grant you an hour spent in dressing; but you come out to dress in so froward a manner, that the poor girl who attends you, curse the day being in that she is your servant, for the things you say to her; when this creature is put into a way, that good or evil arrived at as they relieve her from the hours and must pass with you. The next you have with is your coachman and footmen. They carry your ladyship to church. While you are there, they are cursing, swearing, and drinking in an ale-house. During the time also which your ladyship sets apart for heaven, you are to know that your cook is sweating and fretting in preparation for your dinner. Soon after your meal make visits, and the whole world that belong to you speaks all the ill of you which you are repeating of others. You see, madam, whatever way you go about you are in a very broad one. The mischief of these people it is your proper business to reform; and until you reform them, you best let your equals alone; otherwise, if I see you are not vicious, you must allow me you are vicious.'

I took my leave, and received at my door
the following letter:

MR. BICKETSTAFF,

I have lived a pure and undefiled virgin, towenty-seven years; and I assure you, it is a great grief and sorrow of heart I tell you, that and impatient of the derision of the our sex; who call me, old maid, and tell lead apes. If you are truly a patron of ad, and an adept in astrology, you will per I shall, or ought to be prevailed upon rtinence of my own sex, to give way to nities of yours. I assure you, I am sur- h both, though at present a forlorn.

I am, &c.

fer my answer to this lady out of a point gy. She says, she has been twenty- a maid; but I fear, according to a com- she dates her virginity from her birth, very erroneous method; for a woman of o more to be thought chaste so many a man of that age can be said to have g valiant. We must not allow people of a virtue, until they have been under tion to the contrary. A woman is not a t her birth-day, as we call it, of her fif- t. My plaintiff is therefore desired to in- whether she is at present in her twenty- forty-third year, and she shall be des- cordingly.

James's Coffee-house, August 11.

hant came hither this morning, and read on a correspondent of his at Milan. It the 7th instant, N. S. The following is t of it:—On the 25th of the last month, and men were on their march in the Lam- under the command of general Wesell, eived orders from his catholic majesty to n his camp with all possible expedition. of Anjou soon had intelligence of their d took a resolution to decamp, in order pt them within a day's march of our army. of Spain was apprehensive the enemy ke such a movement, and commanded ge- nhepe with a body of horse, consisting of squadrons, to observe their course, and their passage over the rivers Segra and between Lerida and Balaguer. It hap- be the first day that officer had appeared ter a dangerous and violent fever; but he the king's commands on this occasion with ch surmounted his present weakness, and wenty-seventh of last month came up with y on the plains of Balaguer. The duke u's rear-guard consisting of twenty-six is, that general sent intelligence of their o the king, and desired his majesty's orders t them. During the time which he waited instructions, he made his disposition for the which was to divide themselves into three one to be commanded by himself in the a body on the right by count Maurice of and the third on the left by the earl of d. Upon the receipt of his majesty's di- to attack the enemy, the general himself with the utmost vigour and resolution, e earl of Rochford and count Maurice ex- themselves on his right and left, to prevent antage the enemy might make of the supe- of their numbers. What appears to have the enemy's general in this affair was, that ot supposed practicable that the confederates attack him till they had received a reinforce- For this reason, he pursued his march with- ng about till w ment. General ra- ticable to do

... To boast of virtue; is a most ridiculous way of disappointing the merit of it, but as that of being ashamed of it. He is the wretch, who makes the most independent motive of action the cause of vanity and inconstancy. How different a character Caricolo make with all who know him! His great and superior mind, frequently exalts in the raptures of heavenly meditation, is to him of the same use, as if an angel were present at the decision of their disputes. The well understand, he is as much disinterested as such a being. He considers all addresses made to him, as those addresses will be his own application to heaven. All his decisions are delivered with a beautiful humility he pronounces his decisions with the air of one more frequently a suppliant than a judge. Thus humble, and thus great, is the man moved by piety, and exalted by devotion. For this recommended by the masterly hand of divine I have heretofore made bold with.

It is such a pleasure as can never cloy or weary the mind; a delight that grows and improves with thought and reflection; and while it does also endear itself to the mind. All pleasures that affect the body must needs weary, be very transport; and all transportation is a violent one violence can be lasting; but determine the falling of the spirits, which are not to keep up that height of motion that the pleasure of the senses raises them to. And therefore inevitably does an immoderate laughter ensue, which is only nature's recovering itself; done to it: but the religious pleasure well disposed mind moves gently, and the constantly. It does not affect by rapture violently, but is like the pleasure of health, grounded stronger than those that call up the senses; deeper and more affecting impressions. No body is as strong as his appetites; but heaven corrected the boundlessness of his voluptuous desires, stinting his strength, and contracting his capacity. The pleasure of the religious man is as a portable pleasure, such a one as he can carry in his bosom, without alarming either the envy of the world. A man putting pleasures into this one, is like a traveller putting goods into one jewel; the value is the same convenience greater.

No. 212.] THURSDAY, AUGUST 17, 1

From my own Apartment, August 16.

I HAVE had much importunity to answer the following letter:

MR. BICKERSTAFF,

Reading over a volume of yours, I find words simplex munditiis mentioned as a description of a very well-dressed woman. I beg of you, for the sake of the sex, to explain these terms. I do not comprehend what my brother means when he tells me, they signify my own name, which is,

Sir, your humble servant,
PLAIN ENGLISH

I think the lady's brother has given us a good idea of that elegant expression; it being the greatest beauty of speech to be close and intelligible. To this end, nothing is to be more carefully sought than plainness. In a lady's attire this is the single excellence; for to be, what some people same vice in that case, as to be florid, is speaking. I have studied and writ on ant subject, until I almost despair of eformation in the females of this island; ave more beauty than in any spot in the we did not disguise it by false garniture, t from it by impertinent improvements. me a treatise concerning pinners, which, ie hopes, will contribute to the amend-present head-dresses, to which I have solid werable objections. But most of the iat, and other particulars of adorning the rept into the world from the ignorance of ewomen; for it is come to that pass, that d creature in the first year of her appreniat can hardly stick a pin, shall take upon is a woman of the first quality. However, n, that there requires in a good tirewoman skill in optics; for all the force of ornao contribute to the intension of the eyes. who has a mind to look killing, must ace accordingly, and not leave her eyes as undressed. There is Araminta, who is e of this, that she never will see even her sand, without a hood on. Can any one ar to see Miss Gruel, lean as she is, with tied back after the modern way? But e folly of our ladies, that because one who ty, out of ostentation of her being such, re to wear something that she knows e of any consequence to her complexion; I women run on so heedlessly in the fashion, igh it is the interest of some to hide as their faces as possible, yet because a lead-appeared with a backward head-dress, the ll follow the mode, without observing that ior of the fashion assumed it because it come no one but herself.

is ever well dressed, and always the gen-woman you meet: but the make of her mind ch contributes to the ornament of her body. the greatest simplicity of manners of any sex. This makes everything look native er, and her clothes are so exactly fitted, ey appear, as it were, part of her person. ne that sees her knows her to be of quality; distinction is owing to her manner, and not habit. Her beauty is full of attraction, but allurements. There is such a composure in aks, and propriety in her dress, that you think it impossible she could change the ou one day see her in, for any thing so be-, until you next day see her in another. is no other mystery in this, but that however apparelled, she is herself the same; for there immediate a relation between our thoughts stures, that a woman must think well to look this weighty subject I must put off for some matters, in which my correspondents are t for answers; which I shall do where I can, ppeal to the judgment of others where I

 t.

MR. BICKERSTAFF, August 15, 1710. asking the air the other day on horse-back in een lane that leads to Southgate, I discovered ig towards me a person well mounted in a
 ; and I accordingly expected, as any one to have been robbed. But when we came th each other, the spark, to my greater sur-very peaceably gave me the way; which me take courage enough to ask him, if he

Mr. Trueman was no less tender. Trueman was be-stimated with his master's affairs than his da-ter; and secretly lamented that each day brought him, by many miscarriages, nearer bankruptcy than the former. This unhappy posture of their affairs youth suspected, was owing to the ill management of a factor in whom his master had an entire confidence. Trueman took a proper occasion, when his master was ruminating on his decaying fortune, to address him for leave to spend the remainder of his time with his foreign correspondent. During his two years' stay in that employment, he became acquainted with all that concerned his master, and by his great address in the management of his knowledge, saved him ten thousand pounds. So after this accident, Trueman's uncle left him a considerable estate. Upon receiving that advice, he returned to England, and demanded Almira of his father. The father, overjoyed at the match, offered him the ten thousand pounds he had saved, and with the further proposal of resigning to him all his business. Trueman refused both; and retired to the country with his bride, contented with his fortune, though perfectly skilled in all the methods of improving it.

It is to be noted, that Trueman refused two thousand pounds with another young lady; so that observing both his self-denials, he is to have your court the merit of having given thirty thousand pounds for the woman he loved. This gentleman defers your justice to; and hope you will be convinced that some of us have larger views than a weak Debtor, per contra Creditor.

Yours, RICHARD TRAFFICK

Mr. Thomas Trueman of Lime-street is entertaining the heroes of domestic life.

CHARLES LILLIE

Ms. A. 214.] TUESDAY, AUGUST 22, 1716

Salus et aperta serena Prospicere et certis poteris cognoscere signis Virg. Georg. l. i.

'Tis easy to decry Returning suns, and a serenest sky. Dry

From my own Apartment, August 21.

IN every party there are two sorts of men, rigid and the supple. The rigid are an intractable sort of mortals, who act upon principle, and never, however, fall into any measures that are inconsistent with their received notions of honor.
 These are persons of a stubborn unpliant morality, who sulkily adhere to their friends when they are disgraced, and to their principles, though they are exposed. I shall therefore give up this stiff-necked conversation to their own obstinacy, and turn thoughts to the advantage of the supple, who make homage to places, and not persons; who without enslaving themselves to any particular system of opinions, are as ready to change their conduct in point of sentiment as of fashion. A well-disciplined part of a court are generally so that at their exercise, that you may see a whole assembly, from front to rear, face about at once: new men of power, though at the same time, they turn their backs upon him that brought them thither. The great hardship these complain members of society and under, seems to be the of warning upon any approaching change or revolution; so that they are obliged in a hurry to be about with every wind, and stop short in the m-ser, to the great surprise and derision of lars.

man foresees a decaying ministry, he to grow a malcontent, reflect upon the duct, and, by gradual murmurs, fall off ends into a new party, by just steps and

For want of such notices, I have for-rn a very well-bred person refuse to reof a man whom he thought in disgrace, next day made secretary of state; and ho, after a long neglect of a minister, s levee, and made professions of zeal for the very day before he was turned out. duces also unavoidable confusions and n the descriptions of great men's parts . That ancient Lyric M. D'Urfe, some write a dedication to a certain lord, in celebrated him for the greatest poet and at age, upon a misinformation in Dyer's at his noble patron was made lord cham-In short, innumerable votes, speeches, and have been thrown away, and turned to no sereely for want of due and timely intellilay, it has been known, that a panegyric half printed off, when the poet, upon the f the minister, has been forced to alter it re.

conduct therefore of such useful persons, why to do their country service upon all

I have an engine in my study, which is a ditical barometer, or, to speak more intel-state weather-glass, that by the rising and a certain magical liquor, presages all nd revolutions in government, as the coms does those of the weather. This weather-aid to have been invented by Cardan, and him as a present to his great countryman emporary, Machiaval; which, by the way, e to rectify a received error in chronology, e one of these some years after the other. when it came into my hands, I shall be excused, if I keep to myself; but so it have walked by it for the better part of a o my safety at least, if not to my advand have among my papers a register of all ges that have happened in it from the queen Elizabeth's reign.

time of that princess it stood long at set-

At the latter end of king James the First, cloudy. It held several years after at insomuch, that at last, despairing of seeing r weather at home, I followed the royal d some time after, finding my glass rise, to my native country, with the rest of the

I was then in hopes to pass the remainder ays in settled fair: but, alas! during the part of that reign, the English nation lay calm, which, as it is usual, was followed winds and tempests, until of late years; in rith unspeakable joy and satisfaction, I. n our political weather returned to settled must only observe, that for all this last my glass has pointed at changeable. Upon s, I often apply to Fortune, Æneas's speech by! —

———Non ulla laborum o, novo mi facies mopinave surgit: pœcepti, etque animo mecum ante peregi.
Virg. Æn. vi. 103.

———No terror to my view, ghful face of danger can be new:

'Sir,

'My eldest sister buried her husband about months ago; and at his funeral, a gentleman more art than honesty, on the night of his interment, while she was not herself, but in the agony of her grief, spoke to her of the subject. In that weakness and distraction which sister was in, as one ready to fall is apt to learn any body, he obtained her promise of marriage which was accordingly consummated eleven weeks after. There is no affliction comes alone, but brings another. My sister is now ready to live. She humbly asks of you, as you are a friend to sex, to let her know, who is the lawful father of child, or whether she may not be relieved from second marriage; considering it was promised her such circumstances as one may very well suppose she did not what she did voluntarily, but because she was helpless otherwise. She is advising something about engagements made in gaol, where she thinks the same, as to the reason of the thing. But, dear sir, she relies upon your advice, and gives you her service; as does your humble servant,

'REBECCA MIDRIF

The case is very hard; and I fear the plea she advised to make, from the similitude of a man in durese, will not prevail. But though I desire of remedy as to the mother, the law gives the child choice of his father where the birth is thus gally ambiguous.

'TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQUIRE.

'The Humble Petition of the Company of Linen drapers, residing within the liberty of Westminster,

'SHewETH,

'That there has of late prevailed among ladies so great an affectation of nakedness, that they have not only left the bosom wholly bare, but lowered their stays some inches below the former mode.

'That in particular, Mrs. Arabella Overdone, without the least appearance of linen; and our customers show but little above the small of their backs.

'That by these means your Petitioners are in danger of losing the advantage of covering a nice part of every woman of quality in Great Britain.

'Your Petitioners humbly offer the premises to your Indulgence's consideration, and shall ever be,

Before I answer this Petition, I am inclined to examine the offenders myself.

No. 216.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 26, 1710

Nugis addere pondus.

Hor. l Ep. i.

Weight and importance some to trifles give.

R. Wyl

From my own Apartment, August 25.

NATURE is full of wonders; every atom is a standing miracle, and endowed with such qualities as could not be impressed on it by a power and wisdom less than infinite. For this reason, I would not discourage any searches that are made into the most minute and trivial parts of the creation. However since the world abounds in the noblest field of speculation, it is, methinks, the mark of a little genius, to be wholly conversant among insects, reptiles, animalcules, and those trifling rarities that flourish out the apartment of a virtuoso.

There are some men whose heads are so odd.
LATINA.—NOS. 39 & 40.

in way, that though they are utter strangers among occurrences of life, they are able to name the sex of a cockle, or describe the gony of a mite, in all its circumstances. They are conversed in the world, that they scarce know from an ox; but at the same time will tell of a great deal of gravity, that a flea is a king, and a snail a hermaphrodite. I have known one of these whimsical philosophers, who has more value upon a collection of spiders than upon a flock of sheep, and has sold his back to purchase a tarantula.

He would not have a scholar wholly unacquainted with the secrets and curiosities of nature; but the mind of man, that is capable of so many higher exertions, should not be altogether employed on such mean and disproportioned objects. Divertions of this kind are apt to alienate us too from the knowledge of the world, and to make us busy upon trifles; by which means they exalt philosophy to the ridicule of the witty and contempt of the ignorant. In short, studies of this kind should be the diversions, relaxations, and amusements; not the care, business, and concern of indeed wonderful to consider, that there is a sort of learned men, who are wholly employed in gathering together the refuse of nature. I may call it so, and hoarding up in their cabinets such creatures as others industriously avoid the sight of. One does not know how soon some of the most precious parts of their collection will be lost, without a kind of an apology for it. I have seen shown a beetle valued at twenty crowns, and sold at a hundred; but we must take this for a general rule, 'That whatever appears trivial or common in the common notions of the world, looks profound and philosophical in the eye of a virtuoso.' Now to show this humour in its perfection, I shall present my reader with the legacy of a certain virtuoso, who laid out a considerable estate in natural history and curiosities, which upon his death-bed he bequeathed to his relations and friends, in the following words:—

The Will of a Virtuoso.

Nicholas Gimcrack, being in sound health of mind but in great weakness of body, do by this my last will and testament bestow my worldly goods and chattels in manner following:—

First, To my dear wife,

A box of butterflies,

A drawer of shells,

A female skeleton,

A dried cockatrice.

To my daughter Elisabeth,

A receipt for preserving dead caterpillars,

Also my preparations of winter May-dew,

And embryo-pickle.

To my little daughter Fanny,

One crocodile's eggs,

Upon the birth of her first child if she marry,

With her mother's consent,

A nest of a humming-bird.

To my eldest brother, as an acknowledgment

Of the lands he has vested in my son Charles,

My

My last year's collection of grasshoppers.

To his daughter Susanna, being his only Bequeath my

My glish weeds pasted on royal paper,

With my large folio of Indian cabbage.

To my learned and worthy friend Doctor

Besides, what harm had I ever done him, th should design me any? Was I to have her ways at your side, I might as well have conti these, and been but your rib still; but if I w weak a creature as you thought me, why did not interpose your sage authority more absolu You denied me going as faintly as you say sated the serpent. Had you not been too easy that you nor I had now transgressed.' Adam plead. 'Why, Eve, hast thou the impudence to brand me as the cause of thy transgression for indulgence to thee? Thus will it ever be with who trusts too much to woman. At the same that she refuses to be governed, if she suffers b obstinacy, she will accuse the man that shall her to herself.' And a long passion he w

Thus they in mutual accusation spent

The fruitless hours, but neither self-condemn And left their vain contest appear'd no end.

This, to the moderns, will appear but a very piece of conjugal civility: but you are to con sider that they were not yet begun to be angry, and would use words for expressing their new sins; but by accusing him of letting her go, making him how good a speaker, and how fi gentleman the devil was, we must reckon, altho for the improvements at time, that she knew the same provocation as if she had called cockold. The passionate and familiar terms, which the same case repeated daily for so thousand years has furnished the present ge neration, were not then in use; but the foundatio dispute has ever been the same, a contention about merit and wisdom. Our general mothe in society; and hearing there was another ne the world, could not forbear, as Adam tells allowing herself, though to the devil, by whom sins vanity made her liable to be betrayed.

I cannot, with all the help of science and a Raggy, find any other remedy for this evil, but what was the medicine in this first quarrel; which appears in the next book, that they were winded of their being both weak, but the one w than the other.

If it were possible that the beauties could raise a little before a glass, and see their p complexions grow wild, it is not to be doubt would have a very good effect: but that wou quarrel temper; for lady Firebrand, upon observ her features swell when her maid vexed her other day, stamped her dressing-glass under foot. In this case, when one of this temp moved, she is like a witch in an operation, and u all things turn round with her. The very h in a vertigo when she begins to charm. In a moment, whatever was the occasion that mov them, she has such intolerable servants, Betty oppressed, Tom cannot carry a message, an husband has so little respect for her, that she woman, is weary of this life, and was born wrong.

Desunt multa.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The season now coming on at which the tow to Mr. Richardson gives notice, That the first of October next he will be much w than in his hitherto been.

8.] THURSDAY, AUGUST 31, 1710.

um chorus omnis amat nemus, et fugit urbes.
Her. 2 Ep. ii. 77.

a tribe of writers, to a man, admire a peaceful grove, and from the town retire.

France.

From my own Apartments, August 30.

WASNED to rise very early one particular of this summer, and took a walk into the to divert myself among the fields and mea-hile the green was new, and the flowers in oom. As at this season of the year every a beautiful walk, and every hedge full of s; I lost myself with a great deal of pleasure several thickets and bushes, that were filled great variety of birds, and an agreeable com-of notes, which formed the pleasantest scene world to one who had passed a whole winter and smoke. The freshness of the dews that n every thing about me, with the cool breath morning, which inspired the birds with so elightful instincts, created in me the same animal pleasure, and made my heart over-h such secret emotions of joy and satisfaction not to be described or accounted for. On asion, I could not but reflect upon a beautiful n Milton:

he who long in populous city pent, re houses thick and sewers annoy the air, h issuing on a summer's morn, to breathe ng the pleasant villages and farms in'd, from each thing met conceives delight:
 smell of grain, or tedded grass, or kine, airy, each rural sight, each rural sound.

se who are conversant in the writings of authors, receive an additional entertainment he country, as it revives in their memories harming descriptions, with which such authors uently abound.

a thinking of the foregoing beautiful simile in , and applying it to myself, when I observed windward of me a black cloud falling to the a long trails of rain, which made me betake for shelter to a house I saw at a little dis-from the place where I was walking. As I the porch, I heard the voices of two or three s, who seemed very earnest in discourse. riosity was raised when I heard the names of der the Great and Artaxerxes; and as their seemed to run on ancient heroes, I concluded could not be any secret in it; for which reason ght I might very fairly listen to what they r several parallels between great men, which ed to me altogether groundless and chimeriwas surprised to hear one say, that he valued ock Prince more than the duke of Vendôme. he duke of Vendôme should become a rival Black Prince, I could not conceive: and was tartled when I heard a second affirm with great ence, that if the Emperor of Germany was ing off, he should like him better than either n. He added, that though the person was so able, the duke of Marlborough was in blooming . I was wondering to myself from whence ad received this odd intelligence; especially I heard them mention the names of several great generals, as the prince of Hesse, and of Sweden, who, they said, were both runaway. To which they added, what I entirely of our being which is generally esteemed to be important. From hence it is, that from long experience I have made it a maxim. That how many pretend to take satisfaction in straight and high jollity, there is no great pleasure in company where the basis of the society is not good-will. When this is in the room, every circumstance, the most minute accident, the al of a servant, the repetition of an old story, of a man when he is telling it, the most in and most ordinary occurrences, are matter produce mirth and good-humour. I went to an hour after this manner with some friend enjoy it in perfection whenever they meet these destroyers above-mentioned came in. There is not a man among them who has any of distinction of superiority to one another in their fortunes or their talents, when they company. Or if any reflection to the contrary in their thoughts, it only strikes a delight upon minds, that so much wisdom and power is in sion of one whom they love and esteem.

In these my lucubrations, I have frequent upon this one topic. The above maxim would short work for us reformers; for it is only making this a position that renders some ch bad, which would otherwise be good. Tom means no man ill, but does ill to every body; ambition is to be witty; and to carry on that he breaks through all things that other people sacred. If he thought that wit was no way used but to the advantage of society, that a pass would have a new turn; and we should what he is going to say with satisfaction in fear. It is no excuse for being mischievous a man is mischievous without malice; nor would thought an atonement, that the ill was done injure the party concerned, but to divert the ferent.

It is, methinks, a very great error, that we not profess honesty in conversation, as much commerce. If we consider, that there is no misfortune than to be ill received; where this turning a man to ridicule among his friends him of greater enjoyments than he could purchased by his wealth; yet he that laughs would, perhaps, be the last man who would him this case of less consequence. It has been the history of Don Quixote utterly destroyed spirit of gallantry in the Spanish nation. Believe we may say much more truly, that honour of ridicule has done as much injury to the of company in England.

Such satisfactions as arise from the comparison of ourselves to others, with relation to superior fortunes or merit, are mean and un The true and high state of conversation is, to communicate their thoughts to each other upon subjects, and in such a manner, as would be if there were no such thing as folly in the world it is but a low condition of wit in one man depends upon folly in another.

P.S. I was here interrupted by the receipt of letters, among which is one from a lady, who is a little offended at my translation of the dialogue between Adam and Eve. She pretends to my own, as she calls it, and quotes several in my works, which tend to the utter disunion and wife. Her epistle will best express her. I made an extract of it, and shall insert the principal passages.

I suppose you know, we women are not give: for which reason, before you concern If any further with our sex I would advise you were what is said against you by those of your I enclose to you business enough, until you ready for your promise of being witty. You not expect to say what you please, without ling others to take the same liberty. Marry up! you a Censor? Pray read over all these slets, and these notes upon your lucubrations; t time you shall hear further. It is, I suppose, such as you, that people learn to be censorious; ick I and all our sex have an utter aversion; once people come to take the liberty to wound tions——.

s is the main body of the letter; but she bids rn over, and there I find——

Mr. BICKERSTAFF,
 you will draw Mrs. Cicely Trippet, according inclosed description, I will forgive you all.

‘ TO ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQ.

The humble Petition of Joshua Fairlove of Step-

SHREWETH,

hat your petitioner is a general lover, who for months last past has made it his whole business quent the by-paths and roads near his dwelling, o other purpose but to hand such of the fair sex e obliged to pass through them.

hat he has been at great expense for clean s to offer his hand with.

hat towards the evening he approaches near lon, and employs himself as a convoy towards ‘ Your petitioner therefore most humbly prays, that for such his humble services he may be allowed the title of an Esquire.’

r. Morphew has orders to carry the proper innents; and the petitioner is hereafter to be writ on gilt paper, by the title of Joshua Fairlove, Esquire.

220.] THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1710.

sani sapiens nomen ferat, æquus iniqui, tra quam satis est, virtutem si petat ipsam.
Hor. l. Ep. vi. 15.

‘en virtue, when pursu’d with warmth extreme, rns into vice, and fools the sage’s fame.

Francis.

From my own Apartment, September 4.

‘HAVING received many letters filled with comments and acknowledgments for my late useful ery of the political barometer, I shall here unicate to the public some account of my iastical thermometer, the latter giving as est prognostications of the changes and revos in the Church, as the former does of those te: and both of them being absolutely necesor every prudent subject who is resolved to what he has, and get what he can. church-thermometer, which I am now to treat supposed to have been invented in the reign Henry the Eighth, about the time when that res prince put some to death for owning the supremacy, and others for denying transubation. I do not find, however, any great use of this instrument, until it fell into the hands earned and vigilant priest or minister, for he only wrote himself both one and the other.

attention, the influence which the opinions of great national sects have upon their practice do look upon it as one of the unaccountable of our times, that multitudes of honest gentl who entirely agree in their lives, should take their heads to differ in their religion.

No. 221.] THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7,

Sicut meus est mos, Nescio quid meditans nugarum, et totus in Hor. l Sat.

Musing, as wont, on this and that,
Such trifles, as I know not what. Fr

From my own Apartment, September 6.

As I was this morning going out of my hot little boy in a black coat delivered me the folle letter. Upon asking who he was, he told me, he belonged to my lady Gimcrack. I did not a recollect the name; but, upon inquiry, I found her the widow of sir Nicholas, whose legacy I gave some account of to the world. The letter thus:

MR. BICKERSTAFF,

'I hope you will not be surprised to receive a from the widow Gimcrack. You know, Sir, I have lately lost a very whimsical husband, who, by one of your last week's papers, was not altogether stranger to you. When I married this gentleman had a very handsome estate; but upon buying a microscope, he was chosen a Fellow of the Society; from which time I do not remember I have heard him speak as other people did, or tal manner that any of his family could understand. He used, however, to pass away his time very evenly in conversation with several members of learned body: for which reason, I never advised against their company for several years, until a I found his brain quite turned with their discourse. The first symptom which he discovered of his l a virtuous, as you call him, poor man! was a fifteen years ago; when he gave me positive o to turn off an old weeding woman, that had employed in the family for some years. He told at the same time, that there was no such thin nature as a weed, and that it was his design t his garden produce what it pleased; so that, you be sure, it makes a very pleasant show as it now. About the same time he took a humour to ramb and down the country, and would often bring I with him his pockets full of moss and pet. This, you may be sure, gave me a heavy heart; th at the same time I must needs say, he had the character of a very honest man, notwithstanding he weakened a little weak, until he began to se estate, and buy those strange baubles that you taken notice of. Upon Midsummer-day last, s was walking with me in the fields, he saw a very coloured butterfly just before us. I observed th immediately changed colour, like a man that is graced with a piece of good luck; and telling that it was what he had looked for above twelve years, he threw off his coat and follow. I lost sight of them both in less than a quarter hour; but my husband continued the chase hedge and ditch until about sunset; at which I was afterwards told, he caught the butterfly as rested herself upon a cabbage, near five miles the place where he first put her up. He was lifted from the ground by some passengers in a fainting condition, and brought home to me a

His violent exercise threw him into a rich grew upon him by degrees, and at last him off. In one of the intervals of his disease called to me, and, after having excused for running out his estate, he told me, that I always been more industrious to improve his estate than his fortune, and that his family must raise themselves upon his memory as he was a rich man, than a rich one. He then told me, that it was the custom among the Romans for a man to give his slaves their liberty when he lay upon his death-bed. I could not imagine what this meant, but as he was having a little composed himself, he ordered me to bring him a flea which he had kept for months in a chain, with a design, as he said, to give it its manumission. This was done accordingly. He then made the will, which I have since copied in your works word for word. Only I took notice, that you have omitted the codicil, in which he left a large Concha Venetia, as it is called, to a Member of the Royal Society, who often with him in his sickness, and assisted him in his will. And now, sir, I come to the chief business of my letter, which is to desire your advice and assistance in the disposal of those rarities and curiosities which lie upon my hands. If you know any one that has an occasion for a parcel of dried spiders, I will sell them a penny a dozen. I could likewise let any one have a barrel of cockle shells. I would also desire your advice whether I had best sell my beetles in a gross or by retail. The gentleman above-mentioned, who was my husband's friend, would have had an auction of all his goods, and is now setting up a catalogue of every particular for that purpose, with the two following words in great letters at the head of them, Auctio Gimcrackiana. When talking with him, I begin to suspect he was not as poor as sir Nicholas was. Your advice upon these particulars will be a great piece of charity.

‘Your most humble servant,
‘ELIZABETH GIMCRACK.’

I will answer the foregoing letter, and give the lady my best advice, as soon as I can find out the price for the wares which she has to put off. In the meantime, I shall give my reader the sight of a letter which I have received from another female correspondent by the same post.

GOOD MR. BICKERSTAFF, I am convinced by a late paper of yours, that a scold is a rare woman, who among the common people bears the name of a scold, is one of the most portable creatures in the world. But, alas! what can we do? I have made a thousand vows and resolutions every morning, to guard myself against this frailty; but have generally broken before dinner, and could never in my life hold till the second course was set upon the table. My greatest trouble is, that my husband is as good-natured as your own worship, or as a living, can be. Pray give me some directions, for I would observe the strictest and severest rules you can think of to cure myself of this temper, which is apt to fall into my tongue every day.

‘I am, sir,
‘Your most humble servant, &c.’

In answer to this most unfortunate lady, I must tell her, that there is now in town an ingenious physician of my acquaintance, who undertakes to cure all the vices and defects of the mind by im-

Or wager laid at six and seven.
To pass themselves away, and turn Their children's tenants ere they're born.

Hud.

From my own Apartment, September 11.

I have been very much solicited by Clarinda, Fanny, and Lysetta, to re-assume my discourse concerning the methods of disposing honourably the unmarried part of the world, and taking off those burrs to it, jointures and settlements; which are not only the greatest impediments towards entering into that state, but also the frequent causes of distrust and animosity in it after it is consummated. I have with very much attention considered this matter; and, among all the observations that I have made through a long course of years, I have thought the cobliness of wives to their husbands, as much as disrespect from children to parents, to arise from this one source. This trade for mind and body in the lump, without regard to either, but as they are accompanied with such sums of money, and such parcels of land, cannot but produce a quarrel between the parties concerned, suitable to the mean motives upon which they at first came together. I have heretofore given an account, that this method of making settlements was first invented by a griping lawyer, who made use of the covetous tempers of the parents of each side, to force two young people into these vile measures of diffidence, under no other end but to increase the skins of parchment, by which they were put into each other's possession out of each other's power. The law of our country has given an ample and generous provision for the wife, even the third of her husband's estate, and left to her good-humour and his gratitude, the expectation of further provision; but the statistical method of going further, with relation to their heirs, has a foundation in nothing but pride and folly: for as all men wish their children as like themselves, and as much better as they can possibly, it seems monstrous that we should give out of ourselves the opportunities of rewarding and dis-

from
gethe is por
He

them
daugl make as m poun benc has t

It: take
not:
they:
enter reme fortu for t
that the s

If ought which little,
the b restor four he co all b unde:

It

strai shoul sunk the c
that ment fixed natio possi selve
I, t
made

chase only to each of my younger children they shall be brave or beautiful, honourable, from the time of the date hereof, resign my senses, and hereby promise to my judgment no further in the distribution of worldly goods from the day of the date hereby further confessing and covenanting, and from henceforth married, and dead in

is no man that is conversant in modern law, but knows this is an exact translation of what is inserted in these instruments. Men's passions only make them submit to such terms; before all unreasonable bargains in marriage ought to be set aside, as well as deeds extorted under force, or in prison, who are almost all masters of their actions, as he that is seduced with a violent passion.

strangely men are sometimes partial to women, appears by the rapine of him that has a woman's beauty under his direction. He will scruple of using it to force from her lover a portion of his estate as is worth ten thousand pounds, and, at the same time, as a justice on the villain spare no pains to get a man hanged that has stolen a horse from him.

to be hoped the legislature will in due time bring this kind of robbery into consideration, and deter men to prey upon each other when they are about making the most solemn league, and entering into the strictest bonds. The only sure way is to fix a certain rate on every woman's price; one price for that of a maid, and another for that of a widow: for it is of infinite advantage, there should be no frauds or uncertainties in the price of our women.

any man should exceed the settled rate, he shall be at liberty after seven years are over, by which time his love may be supposed to abate a little. It is not founded upon reason, to renounce gain, and be freed from the settlement upon receiving the portion; as a youth married under twenty years old may be off, if he pleases, when he is to age, and as a man is discharged from pains but that of marriage, made when he is twenty-one.

believes me, when I consider that these regulations upon matrimony take away the advantage we otherwise have over other countries, which are checked by those great checks upon propagation, the rents. It is thought chiefly owing to these, that Italy and Spain want above half their complement of people. Were the price of wives always settled, it would contribute to filling the more than all the encouragements that can be given to foreigners to transplant themselves.

therefore, as censor of Britain, until a law is still lay down rules which shall be observed, the penalty of degrading all that break them, into Fellows, Smarts, Squibs, Hunting-horns, and Bagpipes.

females that are guilty of breaking my orders shall respectively pronounce to be Kitties, Dulcimers, and Kettle-drums. Such as wear the spoils of one husband, I will they attempt to rob another.

sain, That no woman ever demand one shilling be paid after her husband's death, more than the sum she brings him, or an equivalent for the same.

no settlement be made, in which the man a physician or astrologer, he must change his tune frequently; and, though he never body in them besides his own family, give notice of it, for the information of the and gentry. Since I am thus usefully engaged in writing criticisms on the works of these five authors, I must not pass over in silent advertisement, which has lately made its appearance, and is written altogether in a Cle-manner. It was sent to me, with five shillings inserted among my advertisements; but in a pattern of good writing in this way. I shall find a place in the body of my paper.

The highest compounded spirit of lavender most glorious, if the expression may be using the scent and flavour that can possibly so raptures the spirits, delights the general such airs to the countenance, as are no imagined but by those that have tried it.
The best sort of the thing is admired by men and ladies; but this far more, as by exceeds it, to the gaining among all a moderate esteem. It is sold, in neat flint bottles for the pocket, only at the Golden Key, in St. James's-court, near Holborn-bars, for three shillings and sixpence, with directions.

At the same time that I recommend the flowers in which this spirit of lavender is wrapped up, if the expression may be used, I cannot my fellow-labourers for admitting into their several uncleanly advertisements, not at all to appear in the works of polite writers.
These I must reckon the 'Carminative winding pills.' If the doctor had called them carminative pills, he had been as cleanly could have wished; but the second word destroys the decency of the first. There are absurdities of this nature so very gross, that I need not mention them; and shall therefore dismiss the subject with a public admonition to Michael That he do not presume any more to mention certain worms he knows of, which, by the way, grown seven feet in my memory; for, if I am much mistaken, it is the same that was but seven long about six months ago.

By the remarks I have here made, it plainly appears, that a collection of advertisements is a miscellany, the writers of which, contrary to authors, except men of quality, give money to booksellers who publish their copies. The of the bookseller is chiefly shown in his method of arranging and digesting these little tracts. The paper I took up in my hand places them in the following order:—

- The true Spanish blacking for shoes, &c.
- The beautifying cream for the face, &c.
- Pease and plaisters, &c.
- Nectar and ambrosia, &c.
- Four freehold tenements of fifteen pounds annum, &c.
- Annotations upon the Tatler, &c.
- The present state of England, &c.
- A commission of bankruptcy being against B. L., bookseller, &c.

SURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1710.

—Si quid novisti rectius istis, Imperti; si non, his utere mecum.

Hor. 1 Ep. vi. 67.

— If a better system's thine, frankly; or make use of mine.

Francis.

own Apartment, September 15.

which we spend in conversation are the of any which we enjoy: yet, methinks, little care taken to improve ourselves & repetition of them. The common is that of growing too intimate, and pleasing familiarities: for it is a very for men to make no other use of a unce with each other's affairs, but to ser with unacceptable allusions. Once er patiently such as converse like salute each other with bangs on the raps with canes, or other robust acted by the rural gentry of this ven among those who should have as of things, you see a set of people design of conversation, and make on of ungrateful subjects; nay, men-ause they are ungrateful; as if the of society were in knowing how to ie part, and how to bear an offence on all parts of this populous town, you world made up of an active and panion; one who has good-nature r all his friend shall think fit to say, s resolved to make the most of his show his parts. In the trading part have ever observed the jest went of purses, and the ridicule is made ns that arise from it. Thus the he clothier to say what he pleases; has his countenance ready to laugh ant, though the abuse is to fall on he knows that, as a go-between, he count in being in the good graces of h. Among these just and punctual st man is ever the better jester; and ich a thing as a person who shall preior laugh at a man, who does not ids by opportunities of advantage in but among people of a different way, ned distinction in company is only rom sense and understanding, it is carry on a rough raillery so far, as discourse should turn upon each es, follies, or misfortunes.

ning with a set of wags of this class. generally by two and two; and what dinary, is, that those very persons gether appear least of a mind when company. This evil proceeds from niliarity, whereby a man is allowed grating thing imaginable to another, recounted weakness to show an impa-unkindness. But this and all other the design of pleasing each other are derived from interlopers in soci-capacity to put in a stock among ons, and therefore supply their wants sly observations, and rude hints, the conduct of others. All cobabirun into this unhappy fault; men break into reflections, which are rabie to the rest of the company; young woman, who lived with her in good reputation, and made her the father of a very pretty girl. But this part of her happiness was soon after destroyed, by a distemper, which was too hard for our physician, and carried off his first wife. The doctor had not been a widow long before he married his second lady, with whom he also lived in very good understanding. It so happened, that the doctor was with child at the same time that his lady was; but the little ones coming both together, they passed for twins. The doctor having entirely established the reputation of his manhood, especially by the birth of the boy of whom he had been lately delivered, and who very much resembles him, grew into good business, and was particularly famous for the cure of venereal distempers; but would have had much more practice among his own sex, had not some of them been so unreasonable as to demand certain proofs of their cure, which the doctor was not able to give them. The florid blooming look, which gave the doctor some uneasiness at first, instead of betraying his person, only recommended his physic.— Upon this occasion I cannot forbear mentioning what I thought a very agreeable surprise: in one of Moliere's plays, where a young woman applies herself to a sick person in the habit of a quack, and speaks to her patient, who was something scandalized at the youth of his physician, to the following purpose:—I began to practise in the reign of Francis the First, and am now in the hundred and fiftieth year of my age: but, by the virtue of my medicines, have maintained myself in the same beauty and freshness I had at fifteen. For this reason Hippocrates lays it down as a rule, that a student in physic should have a sound constitution, and a healthy look; which indeed seem as necessary qualifications for a physician, as a good life and virtuous behaviour for a divine. But to return to our subject.

 About two years ago the doctor was very much afflicted with the vapours, which grew upon him to such a degree, that about six weeks since they made an end of him. His death discovered the disguise he had acted under, and brought him back again to

It is sooth
 them by the would nation
 preven
 ments have n commu
 the mc stance
 that w
 ' Mr. I
 tleman
 have a self.
 'highes and so envy w the mo take n blasted against when I
 he is co accomy
 of you, as I k ble, to tormen whom
 The dour a hopes c the pe sensibl knowle hopeful afflicted pretenc are tax envious

ly, as I always do when I subscribe
'Sir, yours, &c.'

Is a postscript to this letter, that I am amous Saltero, who sells coffee in his dca, has by him a curiosity, which as to carry on his imposture, and wil faction to the curious inquirer.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1710.

Ideas, Zoile, nemo tibi. Martial. all; but no man envies thee.

R. Wynne. own Apartment, September 20.

ness of reason and philosophy to the passions of the mind, or turn ous prosecution of what is dictated nding. In order to this good end, I atchful eye upon the growing incli-th, and be particularly careful to ndulging themselves in such senti-mbitter their more advanced age. I cure a young gentleman, who lately o me, that he was of all men living bly envious. I desired the circum-listemper; upon which, with a sigh e moved the most inhuman breast, ff,' said he, 'I am nephew to a gen-ry great estate, to whose favour I hat has equal pretensions with my-man of mine is a young man of the aginable, and has a mind so tender, s, that I can observe he returns my

He makes me, upon all occasions, g condescensions: and I cannot but be concern he is in, to see my life is racking passion, though it is In the presence of my uncle, he room, he never speaks so well as ; but always lowers his talents and s out of regard to me. What I beg is to instruct me how to love him, es me: and I beseech you, if possi-eart right; that it may no longer be it should be pleased, or hate a man but approve.'

gave me this account with such can-ness, that I conceived immediate e; because, in diseases of the mind, cted is half recovered when he is distemper. 'Sir,' said I, 'the ac-of your kinsman's merit is a very m; for it is the nature of persons is evil, when they are incurable, to empt of the person envied, if they hat weakness. A man who is really allow he is so; but, upon such an mented with the reflection, that to o allow him your superior. But in you examine the bottom of your t to think it is avarice, which you t. Were it not that you have both m the same man, you would look n's accomplishments with pleasure. consider him an obstacle to your in-en behold him as an ornament to observed my patient upon this oc-himself in some measure; and he at 'he hoped it was as I imagined; laces, but where he was his rival, he his company.' This was the first thought of a project which may turn both to account and mine. It came into my head writing that learned and useful paper of your concerning advertisements. You must understand I have made myself master in the whole art of writing, both as to the style and the letter. if you and I could so manage it, that nobody's wrote advertisements besides myself, or print any where but in your paper, we might both get estates in a little time. For this end I propose, that you should enlarge the sign of advertisements, and have sent you three samples of my work in this kind, which have made for particular friends, and intend to shop with. The first is for a gentleman, who willingly marry, if he could find a wife to liking; the second is for a poor whig, who is turned out of his post; and the third for a person of a contrary party, who is willing to get into it. Whereas A. B., next door to the Pestle Mortar, being about thirty years old, of a make, with dark-coloured hair, bright eye, a long nose, has occasion for a good-humoured, fair, young woman, of about £3,000 fortune; now to give notice, that if any such young woman has a mind to dispose of herself in marriage to a person as the above-mentioned, she may be served with a husband, a coach and horses, and portionable settlement.

C. D. designing to quit his place, has quantities of paper, parchment, ink, wax, and silk, to dispose of, which will be sold at very reasonable rates.

E. F. a person of good behaviour, six feet off a black complexion, and sound principles, is in employ. He is an excellent penman and accountant, and speaks French.

229.] TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1

Quæsitum meritis sume superbiam.

Hor. 3 Od. xx.

With conscious pride—

Assume the honours justly thine. Fr

From my own Apartment, September 25.

The whole creation preys upon itself. I think creature is inhabited. A flea has a thousand of invisible insects that tease him as he jumps place to place, and revenge our quarrels upon him. A very ordinary microscope shows us, that a louse is a very lousy creature. A whale, between several seas and oceans in the several of his body, which are filled with innumerable of little animals, carries about him a whole of inhabitants; insomuch that, if we believe calculations some have made, there are more creatures, which are too small for the naked eye to behold, about the leviathan, than there are of the creatures upon the face of the whole earth. Thus every noble creature is, as it were, the support of multitudes that are his inferior.

This consideration very much comforts me, I think on those numberless vermin that feed upon this paper, and find their sustenance out of me. The small wits and scribbles, that ever turn a penny by nibbling at my lucubrations. has been so advantageous to this little speck of mine, that, if they do me justice, I may expect to have my statue erected in Grub-street, as becomes a common benefactor to that quarter.

They say, when a fox is very much troubled with hunger, he goes into the next pool with a little k

Ah, and keeps his body under water in get into it; after which he quits living, leaves his tormentors to shift and get their livelihood where they live these gentlemen take care that I them after the same manner; for hitherto kept my temper pretty well, ble but I may some time or other what will then become of them?
 When my paper, what a famine would the hawkers, printers, booksellers, It would be like Dr. Burgess's drop-with the whole congregation hang-kirts of it. To enumerate some of my antagonists; I was threatened to ekly Tit for Tat; I was undermined or; haunted by Tom Brown's Ghost; Female Tatler; and slandered by same character, under the title of have been annotated, retitled, ex-doled; but it being my standing to speak ill of the dead, I shall let rest in peace; and take great pleasure, that I have sometimes been the getting a belly-full. When I see surrounded by such formidable enemies of the Knight of the Red Cross 'Ben of Error,' who, after he has cut his head, and left it wallowing in a sea a thousand monstrous reptiles attempts upon him, one with many with none, and all of them without ore annoyed has the knight, gh choked with the deadly stink il, he can no longer fight; age when the fiend perceiv'd to with out of her hellish sink cursed spawn of serpents small, msters, foul, and black as ink; ning all about his legs did crawl, bred sore, but could not hurt at all.

 pher'd in sweet even tide, Phœbus gins to welk in west, H, his flock to viewen wide, do bite their hasty supper best; mbrous gnats do him molest, o infix their feeble stings, air noyance he no where can rest; clownish hands their tender wings , and oft doth mar their murmurings.

Spenser's 'Fairy Queen.'

I would want such a fry of little authors I shall think my paper in a very den. They are like ivy about an oak, ie tree at the same time that it eats e a great man's equipage, that do erson on whom they feed. For my ee myself thus attacked, I do not antagonists as malicious, but hungry: in resolved never to take any notice who detract from my labours, without to it by an empty stomach; in re-ensures, I shall take pains to excel, to persuade myself, that their en-but their envy or ignorance. e to conclude, like an old man, and a fable.

 is, and several other birds of night, ot together in a thick shade, where invented by some pretty fellows, such as luncheon, country put, and kidney, as it is applied; some of which are now struggling for vague, and others are in possession of it. I have done my utmost for some years past to stop the progress of mob and banter, but have been overcome down by numbers, and betrayed by those promised to assist me.

In the last place, you are to take notice of the choice phrases scattered through the letter, so common tolerable enough, until they were worn to the servile imitators. You might easily find enough they were not in a different print, and here I need not disturb them.

These are the false refinements in our style you ought to correct: first, by argument and reason; but, if those fail, I think you are to make use of your authority as Censor, and by an annual Expurgatorium expunge all words and phrases are offensive to good sense, and condemn those barbarous mutilations of vowels and syllables. I must point the usual pretence is, that they speak. A noble standard for language depend upon the caprice of every coxcomb, because words are the clothing of our thoughts; he who takes them out and shapes them as he pleases, and clothes them oftener than his dress. I believe all reasonable people would be content that such refiners were sparing in their words, and liberal in their syllables; and upon this head I should be glad you would show some advice upon several young readers in churches, who, coming up from the University fraught with admiration of our town politeness, needs correct the style of their prayer-books; reading the Absolution, they are very careful to pardon and absolves; and in the prayer for royal family, it must be endue'um, enrich'um, per'um, and bring'um. Then in their sermons use all the modern terms of art, sham, banter, bubble, bully, cutting, shuffling, and palming, which, and many more of the like stamp, as I find them often in the pulpit from such sophisters, so I have read them in some of "sermons that have made most noise of late." design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry; to show us that they know the understand men and manners, and have not peering upon old unfashionable books in the university.

I should be glad to see you the instrument introducing into our style that simplicity which is the best and truest ornament of most things in which the politer ages always aimed at in building and dress, simpler munditius, as well as productions of wit. It is manifest that all affected modes of speech, whether borrowed from the court, the town, or the theatre, are the perishing parts of any language; and, as I prove by many hundred instances, have been so. The writings of Hooker, who was a clergyman, and of Parsons the Jesuit, both in the reign of queen Elizabeth, are in a style that, with very few allowances, would not offend any reader, and are much more clear and intelligent than those of sir Harry Wootton, sir Robert Nau, Osborn, Daniel the historian, and several other writers later; but being men of the court, and affected the phrases then in fashion, they are often not so to be understood, or appear perfectly ridiculous.

What remedies are to be applied to these I have not room to consider, having, I fear, already taken up most of your paper. Besides, I think only to represent abuses, and yours to no m. I am, with great respect, Sir,

 'Yours, &c.'

] SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1710.

scriptis abata—Ovid. Rem. Amor. ver. 91.

vent the growing evil— R. Wynne.

from my own Apartment, September 29.

are very many ill habits that might with so have been prevented, which, after we have l ourselves in them, become incorrigible.— s a sort of proverbial expression, of 'Taking n down in her wedding shoes,' if you will r to reason. An early behaviour of this sort very remarkable good effect in a family
 .I was several years an intimate acquaintance. ntleman in Lincolnshire had four daughters, which were early married very happily; but rth, though no way inferior to any of her either in person or accomplishments, had, r infancy, discovered so imperious a temper, called a high spirit, that it continually made meanness in the family, became her known er in the neighbourhood, and deterred all her from declaring themselves. However, in of time, a gentleman of a plentiful fortune, g acquaintance, having observed the quick-her spirit to be her only fault, made his es, and obtained her consent in due form. yers finished the writings, in which, by the ere was no pin-money; and they were mar-After a decent time spent in the father's the bridegroom went to prepare his seat for option. During the whole course of his courtough a man of the most equal temper, he had ally lamented to her that he was the most nate creature breathing. By this one intima-e at once made her understand warmth of to be what he ought to pardon in her, as well he alarmed her against that constitution in . She at the same time thought herself highly by the composed behaviour which he main-in her presence. Thus far he, with great soothed her from being guilty of violence, l resolved to give her such a terrible apprehen-his fiery spirit, that she should never dream ng way to her own. He returned on the day ted for carrying her home; but, instead of a nd six horses, together with the gay equipage s to the occasion, he appeared without a serounted on the skeleton of a horse, which his an had, the day before, brought in to feast his n the arrival of their new mistress, with a fixed behind, and a case of pistols before him, d only by a favourite hound. Thus equipped, a very obliging but somewhat positive manner, his lady to seat herself on the cushion; done, away they crawled. The road being ted by a gate, the dog was commanded to : the poor cur looked up and wagged his tail; master, to show the impatience of his temper, pistol, and shot him dead. He had no sooner but he fell into a thousand apologies for his y rashness, and begged as many pardons for eses before one for whom he had so profound ct. Soon after, their steed stumbled, but me difficulty recovered; however, the bride-took occasion to swear, if he frightened his again he would run him through! and alas! r animal being now almost tired, made a second not see crowds very little above his circus from the same cause—a passion to politics.

It is no unpleasant entertainment to converse with women even of the sexes interrupted by women in state affairs. A wench and her partner last week upon the words undiminished and side: and there is such a jargon of terms and the mouths of the very silliest of the women you cannot come into a room, even among the young, you find them divided into Whig and Tory. Heightens the humour is, that all the hard words they know, they certainly suppose to be terrible in the disputes of the parties. I came once where two were in very hot debate; and when I proposed to me to explain to them the difference between circumcision and circumcision. You may be sure I was at a loss; I was too angry at each other to wait for my explanation, and proceeded to lay open the whole affair, instead of the usual topics of dress, gait and scandal.

I have often wondered how it should be that this turn to politics should so universally prevail, to the exclusion of every other subject of conversation; and, upon mature consideration it is for want of discourse. Look round you all the young fellows you meet, and you see who have the least relish for books, company, pleasure, though they have no manner or means to make them succeed in those pursuits, who are very passable politicians. Thus the most ingenious shall find enough to say to make appear an able man in the best coffee-houses. Adding a certain vehemence in uttering you the thing you say be never so flat, and you thought a very sensible man, if you were not. As love and honour are the noblest of life; so the pretensions to them, without assistance by them, are the most contemptible sorts of pretensions. The unjust affectation of things that is laudable is ignominious in proportion to the worth of the thing we affect: thus, our country is the most glorious of all places; the most ordinary tools in a nation give themselves airs that way, without any one good in their own life, has something in it more not so ridiculous as odious.

ADVERTISEMENT.

Mr. Bickenstaff has received Sylvia's letter to the Bath, and his sister is set out thither to-day, who is one of the guides for the desired to bring her into company, and of which a mention in his next burlesque.

No. 233.] THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1

Sunt certa piacula, quæ te Ter purè lecto poterunt recreare libello

Hor. 1.]

And, like a charm, to th' upright mind:
If thrice read o'er will yield a certain end

E

From my own Apartment, October

When the mind has been perplexed with sins and passions, the best method of bringing to the usual state of tranquillity is, as much possibly can, to turn our thoughts to the of persons of higher consideration in vision than ourselves. By this means all passions of our own lives, if they are unjust, will be the effect of justice upon our sitions. When those whom we know to be merited, and deserving of a better fate, are placed, we cannot but resign ourselves, when we know to merit a much worse state than we are placed in. For such, and many other reasons, there is one admirable relation which one recommends for certain periods of one's life, health, comfort, and improve the heart of man. says somewhere, 'the pleasures of a husband-are next to those of a philosopher.' In like or one may say, for they bear the same proportion to another, the pleasures of humanity next to those of devotion. In both these latter relations, there is a certain humiliation which elevates the soul above its ordinary state. At the time that it lessens our value of ourselves, it raises our estimation of others. The history I am going to speak of, is that of Joseph in Egypt which is related with such majestic simplicity, that all the parts of it strike us with strong touch-of nature and compassion; and he must be a stranger to both who can read it with attention, and is not overwhelmed with the vicissitudes of joy and sorrow. I hope it will not be a profanation, to tell in his own way here, that they, who may be naturing enough to be more frequently readers of profane papers than of sacred writ, may be reminded, that the greatest pleasures the imagination can be entertained with are to be found there, that even the style of the scriptures is more human.

Joseph, a beloved child of Israel, became invisible to his elder brethren, for no other reason but his superior beauty, and excellence of body and mind, insomuch, that they could not bear his growing virtue, and let him live. They therefore considered his death; but nature pleaded so strongly for him in the heart of one of them, that by his persuasion they determined rather to bury him in a tomb than to be his immediate executioners with their hands. When thus much was obtained for him, their minds still softened towards him, and he took the opportunity of some passengers to sell him into Egypt. Israel was persuaded by the artifice of his sons, that the youth was torn to pieces by wild beasts: but Joseph was sold to slavery, and exposed to new misfortunes, from the same cause, his beauty and his virtue. By a false accusation he was committed to prison; but in process of time delivered from it, in consideration of his wisdom and knowledge, and made the governor of Pharaoh's house. In this elevation of his fortune, his brothers were sent into Egypt to buy necessaries of life, in a famine. As soon as they are brought into his presence, he beholds, but he believes with compassion, the men who had sold him into slavery, approaching him with awe and reverence. While he was looking over his brethren, he takes a resolution to indulge himself in the pleasure of stirring their and his own affections, by speaking himself concealed, and examining into the circumstances of their family. For this end, with an air of severity, as a watchful minister to Pharaoh, he accuses them as spies, who are come into Egypt with designs against the state. This led him into the account which he wanted of them, the condition of their ancient father and little brothers whom they had left behind them. When he learned that his brother was living, he demands bringing him to Egypt, as a proof of their veracity.

But it would be a vain and empty endeavour to ther of common grammar; which is a consequence of our mismanagement in winter.

"For can any thing be more absurd than proceeding in this part of literature under wits into the intricate mazes of such a Latin grammar? to learn an unknown tongue? to carry them a double way to let them in at a back door? by teaching them first the grammar of the tongue, so easy to be learned, their advanced grammars of Latin and Greek would be so easy; but our precipitate way of hurrying over such a gulf, before we have built them to it, is a shock to their weak understanding; they seldom, or very late, recover. In time we wrong nature, and slander infants; we want neither capacity nor will to learn put them upon service beyond their strength; then indeed we baulk them.

"The liberal arts and sciences are all but the graces; nor has Grammar, the severe art, so frightful a face of her own; it is put upon it that scares children. She is put upon hard words, that to them sound jarring. Let her talk intelligibly, and then listen to her.

"In this, I think, as on other accounts ourselves true Britons, always overlooking rural advantages. It has been the proudest wisest nations to learn their own language rules, to avoid the confusion that would follow leaving it to vulgar use. Our English to a learned man, is the most determinate instruction, and reducible to the fewest rules; every language has less grammar in it, is more variable; and whatever has more, all that it is superfluous; for which reason he would make the foundation of learning Latin and Languages.

"To speak and write without absurdity of one's country is commendable; of all stations, and to some indispensably need to this purpose. I would recommend, things, the having a grammar of our mother first taught in our schools, which would save youths learning their Latin and Greek, with spare time for arithmetic, a cosmography, history, &c. that would improve the spring of their life with profit and that is now miserably spent in grammatical complexities.

"But here, methinks, I see the reader ready to ask me, as the lawyer did sexton his bequeathing rich legacies to the poor parish. Where are these mighty sums to be? Where is there such a grammar to be had? not answer as he did, "Even where you please." No, it is our good fortune to have a grammar, with notes, now in the press, published next term.

"I hear it is a chargeable work, and publishers to have customers of all that of such a book; yet fancy that he cannot suffer, if it is only bought by all that need for it than they think they have.

"A certain author brought a poem to Mr. for his personal and judgment of the poem which he demanded at the next visit with author's assurance, and Mr. Cowley, with modesty, desired that he would be pleased little to the grammar of it. "To the g at do you mean, sir, would you send me to again?" "Why, Mr. H——, would it do y harm?"

is put me on considering how this voyage of are may be made with more safety and profit, tion and delight; and at last, for completing d a service, to request your directions in sh able a case; hoping that, as you have had asion on our overgrown coxcombs in concerns ; consequence, you will exert your charity to innocents, and vouchsafe to be guardian to ildren and youth of Great Britain in this im- at affair of education, wherein mistakes and ; measures have so often occasioned their on to books, that had otherwise proved the ornament and pleasure of their life. I am, sincerest respect, sir,

Yours, &c.

Mr. BICKERSTAFF, St. Clements, Oct. 5. observe, as the season begins to grow cold, so people's devotion; insomuch, that instead of g the churches, that united zeal might keep one there, one is left to freeze in almost bare walls ose who in hot weather are troublesome the ary way. This, sir, needs a regulation that but you can give to it, by causing those who at themselves on account of weather only winter-time, to pay the apothecaries' bills occa- sed by coughs, catarrhs, and other distempers, racted by sitting in empty seats. Therefore, to I apply myself for redress, having gotten such d on Sunday was sevennight, that has brought almost to your worship's age from sixty, within than a fortnight. I am,

Your worship's in all obedience,

W. E.

235.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1710.

Cit Genius, natale comes qui temperat astrum.

Hor. 2 Ep. ii. 187.

whence these turns of inclination rose, Genius this, the God of Nature, knows:
That mystic power, which our actions guides, Orders our stars, and o'er our life presides.

Francis,

From my own Apartment, October 9.

ONG those inclinations which are common to em, there is none more unaccountable than unequal love by which parents distinguish their ren from each other. Sometimes vanity and ove appear to have a share towards this effect; n other instances I have been apt to attribute it re instinct: but, however that is, we frequently he child, that has been beholden to neither of : impulses in his parents, in spite of being neg- d, snubbed, and thwarted at home, acquire a viour which makes him as agresable to all the of the world, as that of every one else of their ly is to each other. I fell into this way of think- from an intimacy which I have with a very good e in our neighbourhood, where there are three ghters of a very different character and genius. eldest has a great deal of wit and cunning; the nd has good sense, but no artifice; the third much vivacity, but little understanding. The is a fine, but scornful woman; the second is charming, but very winning; the third is no commendable, but very desirable. The father these young creatures was ever a great pretender wit, the mother a woman of as much coquetry. is turn in the parents has biassed their affecwith those inhabitants.

When the arts began to flourish in the reign of King Charles II. and that great monarch had placed himself at the head of the Royal Society, to lead them forward into the discoveries of nature, it is said, that several proposals were laid before his majesty, for the importing of frogs into Ireland. In order to it, a virtuoso of known abilities was unanimously selected by the society, and intrusted with the whole management of that affair. For this end he took along with him a sound able-bodied frog, of a strong hale constitution, that had given proofs of his vigour by several leaps that he made before that learned body. They took ship, and sailed together until they came within sight of the hill of Howth, before the frog discovered any symptoms of being indisposed by his voyage: but, as the wind chopped about, and began to blow from the Irish coast, he grew sea-sick, or rather land-sick; for his learned companion ascribed it to the particles of the soil with which the wind was impregnated. He was confirmed in his conjecture, when, upon the wind's turning about, his fellow-traveller sensibly recovered, and continued in good health until his arrival upon the shore, where he suddenly relapsed, and expired upon a Ring's-end car in his way to Dublin. The same experiment was repeated several times in that reign, but to no purpose. A frog was never known to take three leaps upon Irish turf, before he stretched himself out, and died.

Whether it were that the philosophers on this side the water despaired of stocking the island with this useful animal, or whether, in the following reign, it was not thought proper to undo the miracle of a popish saint; I do not hear of any further progress made in this affair until about two years after the battle of the Boyne.

It was then that an ingenious physician, to the honour as well as improvement of his native country, performed what the English had been so long attempting in vain. This learned man, with the hazard of his life, made a voyage to Liverpool, where he filled several barrels with the choicest spawn of frogs that could be found in these parts. This cargo he so hop from Dublin to Wexford; though, as I am informed, not one of them has yet passed the straits of Wicklow.

I am further informed, that several graziers of the county of Cork have entered into a project of forming a colony in those parts, at the instance of French Protestants; and I know not but the design may be on foot in other parts of the kingdom, if the wisdom of the British nation do not see fit to prohibit the further importation of English frogs.

'I am, Sir,

'Your most humble servant,

'T. B.'

There is no study more becoming a rational creature than that of natural philosophy; but, as several of our modern virtuosi manage it, their speculations do not so much tend to open and enlarge the mind, as to contract and fix it upon trifles.

This, in England, is in a great measure owing to the worthy elections that are so frequently made to the Royal Society. They seem to be in a conspiracy against men of polite genius, noble thought, diffusive learning; and choose into their assemblies such as have no pretence to wisdom, but want wit; or to natural knowledge, but ignorance of every thing else. I have made observations in this matter so long, that when I meet with a young fellow who is an humble admirer of these sciences, but is duller than the rest of the company, I conclude him to be a Fellow of the Royal Society.

x. 237.] SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1710.

In nova fert animus mutatos dicere, formas Corpora.

Ovid.

Of bodies chang'd to various forms I sing.

Dryden.

From my own Apartment, October 13.

Coming home last night before my usual hour, I took a book in my hand, in order to divert myself until bed-time. Milton chanced to be my choice, whose admirable poem of 'Paradise Lost' presents at once to fill the mind with pleasing ideas with good thoughts, and was therefore the most proper book for my purpose. I was amusing myself with that beautiful passage in which the poet represents Eve sleeping by Adam's side, with the devil whispering at her ear, and inspiring evil thoughts, under the shape of a toad. Ithuriel, one of the guardian angels of the place, walking his nightly rounds, saw the great enemy of mankind hid in this loathsome animal, which he touched with his spear. This spear, of a celestial temper, had such a secret virtue, that whatever it was applied to, immediately took off all disguise, and appeared in its natural form. I am afraid the reader will not pardon me, if I content myself with explaining the passage in my own words, without giving it in the author's own inimitable language.

On he led his radiant files, ascending the morn. These to the bower direct, in search of whom they sought. Him there they found,

just like a toad, close by the ear of Eve; saying by his devilish art to reach the organ of her fancy, and with them forge illusions as he list, phantasms and dreams; if, inspiring venom, he might taint the animal spirits—that from pure blood arise like gentle breaths from rivers pure—thence rises tempests in this kind, and is indeed so naturally down, that one who has made a voyage can assure read it without being sea-sick. Land-showers are no less frequent among the poets than the former, but I remember none of them which have not fallen in the country; for which reason they are generally flack with the lowings of ewen, and the bleatings of sheep, and very often embellished with a rainbow.

Winds's land-shower is likewise the best in its kind. It is indeed a shower of consequence, and contributes to the main design of the poem, by cutting off a tedious ceremonial, and bringing matters to a speedy conclusion between two potentates of different sexes. My ingenious kinsman, Mr. Humphrey Wagstaff, who treats of every subject after a manner that no author has done, and better than any other can do, has sent me the description of a city-shower. I do not question but the reader remember my cousin's description of the morning as it breaks in town, which is printed in the ninth Tenth, and is another exquisite piece of this local poetry.

Careful observers may foretell the hour (By sure prognostics), when to dread a shower; While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er Her frolics, and pursues her tail no more.
 Returning home at night, you'll find the sink Strike your offended nose with double stink, If you be wise, then go not far to dine,
 For 'tis spend in coach-hire more than save in wine.
 A coming shower your shooting corns preface, Old aches will thro', your hollow tooth will rage.
 Sneezing in coffee-house is Dulman seen;
 His damns the climate, and complains of spleen.
 Meanwhile the south, rising with dabbled wings, A sable cloud athwart the walkin flings, That swill'd more liquor than it could contain,
 And, like a drunkard, gives it up again.
 Brisk Susan whips her linen from the rope, Whilst the first drizzling shower is borne alope: Such is that sprinkling which some careless quean Flings on you from her mop, but not so clean.
 You fly, invoke the gods; then, turning, stop To rail; she singing, still whirle on her mop.
 Not yet the dust had shunn'd th' unequal strife, But, aided by the wind, fought still for life, And, washed with its foe by violent gust,
 'Twas doubtful which was rain, and which was dust.
 Ah! where must needy post seek for aid, When dust and rain at once his coat invade?
 His only coat, where dust, confus'd with rain, Blaughtens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain?
 Now in contiguous drops the flood comes down, Threatening with deluge this devoted town.
 To shops in crowds the daggled females fly, Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy.
 The tumbler spruce, while every spout's abroad, Stays till 'tis fair, yet seems to call a coach.

n struck the outside with his spray, ch imprison'd hero quak'd for fear om all parts the swelling kennels flow; ar their trophies with them as they go: f all hues and odours seem to tell street they sail'd from, by their sight and nell.
 as each torrent drives, with rapid force, Smithfield or St. 'Pulchre's shape their urse, a huge confluent join'd at Snow-hill ridge, sem the conduit, prone to Holborn-bridge; sings from butchers stalls, dung, guts, and lood, n'd puppies, stinking sprats, all dranch'd in aud, cats and turnip-tops come tumbling down he flood.

9.] THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1710.

————— Mecum certasse feretur?

Ovid, Met. xiii. 20.

Shall he contend with me to get a name?

R. Wynn.

From my own Apartment, October 18.

ridiculous for any man to criticise on the of another, who has not distinguished himself own performances. A judge would make but ifferent figure who had never been known at Cicero was reputed the greatest orator of and country, before he wrote a book, 'De e;' and Horace the greatest poet, before he sed his 'Art of Poetry.' This observation naturally in any one who casts his eye upon st-mentioned author, where he will find the ms placed in the latter end of his book, that er the finest odes and satires in the Latin odern, whose name I shall not mention, bef would not make a silly paper sell, was born e and an Examiner, and, like one of the race serpent's teeth, came into the world with a in his hand. His works put me in mind of ry that is told of the German monk, who was a catalogue of a friend's library, and, meet-th a Hebrew book in it, entered it under the f, 'A book that has the beginning where the ould be.' This author, in the last of his es, has amassed together a heap of quotations, re that Horace and Virgil were both of them ter men than myself; and if his works were as long as mine, they might possibly give ity a notion, that Isaac Bickerstaff was a very ted old fellow, and as vain a man as either or Sir Francis Bacon. Had this serious writer upon me only, I could have overlooked it; see Cicero abused in, I must confess, what I t bear. The censure he passes upon this man runs thus: 'The itch of being very aba-s almost inseparable from vain-glory. Tully ee two faults in so high a degree, that nothing e being the best writer in the world can make s for them.' The scurrilous wretch goes on that I am as bad as Tully. His words are 'And yet the Tatler, in his paper of Sep-r the twenty-sixth, has outdone him in both. eaks of himself with more arrogance, and ore insolence of others.' I am afraid, by his ree, this gentleman has no more read Plu- than he has Tully. If he had, he would have red a passage in that historian, wherein he

I have touched upon that useful science of medicine, notwithstanding I have declared myself no more than once a professor of it. I have indeed applied the study of astrology with it, because I never saw a physician recommend himself to the public, and not a sister art to embellish his knowledge of medicine. It has been commonly observed, in all times, that the ingenious of our profession, that was god of verse as well as physic; and, indeed, the most celebrated practitioners of our art were the particular favourites of the muses. Poetry to physic is indeed like the gilding to a pill; it makes the art shine, and covers the severity of the doctor with the agreeableness of the companion. The very foundation of poetry is good sense, if we allow Horace to be a judge of the art.

Abendi recte sapere est et principium et fons.

Hor. Ars. Poet. 309.

His judgment is the ground of writing well.

Roscommon.

If so, we have reason to believe, that the man who writes well can prescribe well, if he applied himself to the study of both. Besides, we see a man making profession of two different sciences, it is natural for us to believe he is a tender in that which we are not judges of, and we find him skilful in that which we understand.

Many quacks and charlatans are thoroughly sensible how necessary it is to support themselves with collateral assistances, and therefore always make claims to some supernumerary accomplishment, which are wholly foreign to their profession. Not twenty years ago it was impossible to walk about without having an advertisement thrust into your hand, of a doctor, 'who had arrived at the verge of the green and red dragon, and had sown the female fern seed.' Nobody ever understood what this meant; but the green and red dragon so amused the people, that the doctor lived comfortably upon them. About the same time was posted a very hard word upon every corner of the streets. This, to the best of my remembrance, was,

TETRACHYMAGOGON,

It drew great shoals of spectators about it, who were so much taken with the bill that it introduced with unspeakable popularity; and, when they were sick, would have called in this learned man for their physician.

He received an advertisement of one 'who had died thirty years by candle-light for the good of his countrymen.' He might have studied twice as long by day-light, and never have been taken with it. But lucubrations cannot be over-valued. There are some who have gained themselves great reputation for physic by their birth, as the 'seventh son'; and others by not being born as the unborn doctor, who, I hear, is lately the way of his patients; having died worth several pounds per annum, though he was not worth a halfpenny.

An ingenious friend doctor Saffold succeeded my temporary doctor Lilly in the studies both of medicine and astrology, to which he added that of sign-post, as was to be seen both upon the sign where he lived, and in the bills which he distributed. He was succeeded by doctor Case, who erased the verses of his predecessor out of the sign-post, and substituted in their place two of his own, which were as

With
Livy

He is said to have said that Mr. Dryden did by no end of enumerations, and unaccustomed tribe of men ensnared by gain crowds of admirers from a mountebank, other, faced with great seals, by which they have testified their preference of the doctor. Every patient has been his patient. Mountebanks that I have seen in Muscovy. The great elector was a very good patient.

This great candour of him much good will do to one but, if any of his teeth, his ambition drawn by a person who kings, and emperors,

I must not leave it that as physicians are carried endeavour to tory, and are therefore most eloquent person I would not willingly especially that of which but I must confess, country, I could wish of physic for some years has been so much to have leave to recruit.

As for myself, the same safe to almost the scribe to all my friends, certainly the best physician the most effectual against short, my recipe is, 'Were the body of particular persons, I should after the same manner whole island was shaven years ago, there was a sold pills, which, as he very good against perhaps, he thought as the allaying popular humours. But I am very a case a whole people abstinence, and eat for fortnight, it would abate parties, and not a little distracted nation. Such tendency to the procuring a fast is usually procured mind to enter on such might not be improper Pythagoras in particular from beans: that is, not with elections; but by the voters among the magistrates.

No. 241.] TUESDAY

From my own Ap

A METHOD of spending so little studied, t

Within this place Lives doctor Cass.

said to have got more by this distich, than den did by all his works. There would be of enumerating the several imaginary per-and unaccountable artifices, by which this men ensnare the minds of the vulgar, and reds of admirers. I have seen the whole a mountebank's stage, from one end to the iced with patents, certificates, medals, and als, by which the several princes of Europe tified their particular respect and esteem for or. Every great man with a sounding title his patient. I believe I have seen twenty banks that have given physic to the ear of
y. The great duke of Tuscany escapes no The elector of Brandenburg was likewise a od patient.

great condescension of the doctor draws upon ch good will from his audience; and it is ten out, if any of them be troubled with an ach-th, his ambition will prompt him to get it by a person who has had so many princes, and emperors, under his hands.

et not leave this subject without observing, physicians are apt to deal in poetry, apothé-endeavour to recommend themselves by ora-und are therefore, without controversy, the loquent persons in the whole British nation. d not willingly discourage any of the arts, lly that of which I am an humble professor; must confess, for the good of my native y, I could wish there might be a suspension sie for some years, that our kingdom, which en so much exhausted by the wars, might ave to recruit itself.

or myself, the only physic which has brought to almost the age of man, and which I pre-o all my friends, is abstinence. This is cerhe best physic for prevention, and very often effectual against a present distemper. In recipe is, 'take nothing.'

he body politic to be physicked like partisons, I should venture to prescribe to it same manner. I remember when our nd was shaken with an earthquake some , there was an impudent mountebank who , which, as he told the country people, were od against an earthquake.' It may, per-thought us absurd to prescribe a diet for ing popular commotions, and national fer-But I am verily persuaded, that if in such whole people were to enter into a course of ce, and eat nothing but water-gruel for a , it would abate the rage and animosity of and not a little contribute to the cure of a d nation. Such a fast would have a natural r to the procuring of those ends for which usually proclaimed. If any man has a enter on such a voluntary abstinence, it ot be improper to give him the caution of ras in particular; Abstine d fabis, 'Abstain ans,' that is, say the interpreters, 'Meddle elections;' beans having been made use of oters among the Athenians in the choice of ates.

41.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1710.

From my own Apartment, October 23.

THOUGHT of spending one's time agreeably is a little studied, that the common amusement cause me to interrupt; but perhaps a new to into his bywords (as they call a sentence a ma-ticularly affects) may cure him. I therefore resolution to apply to you, who, I dare sa-easily persuade this gentleman, whom I believe an enemy to the union, to mend his and be hereafter the wisest of any man in Britain. I am Sir, your most humble servan Scoto-Bri:

ADVERTISEMENT.

Whereas, Mr. Humphrey Trelooby, wear-own hair, a pair of buck-skin breeches, a hu-whip, with a new pair of spurs, has complain-the Censor, that on Thursday last he was def-of half-a-crown, under pretence of a duty action for seeing the cathedral of St. Paul, La-it is hereby ordered, that none hereafter above sixpence of any country gentleman be age of twenty-five for that liberty; and t which shall be received above the said sum, person, for beholding the inside of that edifice, be forthwith paid to Mr. John M for the use of Mr. Bickerstaff, under pain of amercement on the above-mentioned extortion.

No. 242.] THURSDAY, OCTOBER 26,

Quis iniquus

Tam patiens urbis, tam ferreus ut teneat Juv. Sat

To view so lewd a town, and to refrain, What hoops of iron could my spleen con-
I

From my own Apartment, October 25.

It was with very great displeasure I heard a man say of a companion of his, with an approbation, 'You know Tom never fails of a spiteful thing. He has a great deal of w nature is his particular talent. Did you mix has put the young fellow out of countenance pretended to talk to him?' Such impertine pleasures, which one meets with every day, I upon considering, what true raillery and satir on themselves; and this, methought, occurred from reflection upon the great and excellent that were admired for talents this way. When run over several such in my thoughts, I consi-however unaccountable the assertion might at first sight, that good-nature was an es-quality in a satirist, and that all the sent which are beautiful in this way of writing proceed from that quality in the author. Good-produces a disdain of all baseness, vice, and which prompts them to express themselves smartness against the errors of men, without meas towards their persons. This quality kee mind in equanimity, and never lets an offer reasonably throw a man out of his cha-When Virgil said, 'he that did not hate might love Mævius,' he was in perfect good huand was not so much moved at their absurdi-passionately to call them sots or blockhe-a direct invective, but laughed at them with cory of scorn, without any mixture of anger.

The best good man with the worst-natur'd was the character among us of a gentlem famous for his humanity as his wit.

The ordinary subjects for satire are such as the greatest indignation in the best temper consequently men of such a make are the best speaking of the offences in human life. I can behold vice and folly, when they come to whom they are wholly unacquainted, with the same severity as others resent the ill of themselves. A good-natured man cannot bear a fellow put a bashful man of merit to shew, or out-strip him in the pursuit of fame, but he is on fire to succour the oppressed, to produce the merit of the one, and confront the envious of the other.

One of the greatest character in this kind of satire is Juvenal. There is not, that I know, one ill-natured expression in all their works, nor one sentence of severity which does not proceed from the contrary disposition. If you read them, will, I believe, be of this mind: If they were read with this view, it might persuade our young fellows, that they may be good men without speaking ill of any but those who are not. But, in the perusal of these writers, it is unnecessary to consider, that they lived in different times. Horace was intimate with the emperor, and of the greatest goodness and humanity of his age, and his court was formed after his example; therefore the faults that poet falls upon were consistencies in behaviour, false pretences to modesty, or impertinent affectations of what men thought fit for. Vices of a coarser sort could not enter his consideration, or enter the palace of Augustus. Juvenal, on the other hand, lived under a tyrant, in whose reign every thing that was great and noble was banished the habitations of the men of his age. Therefore he attacks vice as it passes in triumph, not as it breaks into conversation. Vices of empire, contempt of glory, and a general decay of manners, are before his eyes in all ages. In the days of Augustus, to have been like Juvenal had been madness; or in those times, like Horace. Morality and virtue were where recommended in Horace, as became a polite court, from the beauty, the propriety, and convenience of pursuing them. Vice and corruption are attacked by Juvenal in a style which, he fears he shall not be heard without he hears them in their own language with a barefaced attack of the villanies and obscenities of his country.

An accidental talk of these two great men carries on my design, which was to tell some coxcombs in about this town with the name of smart men and fellows, that they are by no means qualified characters they pretend to, of being severe and sharp men; for they want good-nature. There is no foundation in them for arriving at what they wish; and they may as well pretend to flatter as to praise, without being good-natured.

There is a certain impartiality necessary to make man's words bear any weight with those he speaks to. A man's quality, with respect to men's errors and faults, is never seen but in good-natured men. They possess such a frankness of mind, and benevolence of heart, that they cannot receive impressions of blame without mature deliberation; and without speaking ill of a man upon personal consideration is so irreparable and mean an injury, that a man possessed of this quality is capable of doing it in all ages there have been interpreters to the faults of the living, of the same genius with the statues into whose hands they fall when dead. I say it is impossible for any man of more wit than we of these to take any of the four-and-twenty names and form out of them a name to describe the making a heroic upon the ensuing peace.

It was towards morning, an hour when spirits, witches, and conjurers, are obliged to retire to their own apartments, and, feeling the influence of it, I was hastening home, when I saw a man had got half way into a neighbour's house. I immediately called to him, and turning my ring, appeared in my proper person. There is something magisterial in the aspect of the Bickerstaffs, which made him run away in confusion.

As I took a turn or two in my own lodging, I was thinking that, old as I was, I need not go to bed alone, but that it was in my power to marry the finest lady in this kingdom, if I would wed her with this ring. For what a figure would she that should leave it make at a visit, with so perfect a knowledge as this would give her of all the scandal of the town? But, instead of endeavouring to dispose of myself in matrimony, I resolved to lend it to my former friend the author of the 'Atalantis,' to furnish a new 'Secret History of Secret Memoirs.'

244.] TUESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1710.

Quid voveat dulci nutricula majus alumno,

Quam sapere, et fari ut possit que sentiat?—

Hor. l Ep. iv. 8.

What can the fondest mother wish for more,

Ev'n for her darling son, than solid sense,

Perceptions clear, and flowing eloquence?

R. Wymse.

Will's Coffee-house, October 30.

It is no easy matter, when people are advancing any thing, to prevent their going too fast for want of patience. This happens in nothing more frequently than in the prosecution of studies. Hence it is, that we meet crowds who attempt to be eloquent before they can speak. They affect the flowers of rhetoric before they understand the parts of speech. In the ordinary conversation of this town, there are many who can, as they call it, talk well, that there is not one in twenty that talks to be understood. This proceeds from an ambition to excel, or, as the

you see copious stomach to with;
more th gence.

takes p capacity running your co show y

With
into thi a perso the pec of conv laboure dily an patience good se essentia
When I milier I clothing

Urban
with wh improve:
a contra be guilt has pro his disc sense of by some often ob made h another of, I me as any sanded;
there is pression
You sha
but you
himself

man as inexperienced scholastic, who begins before they speak, or who speaks when it is necessary. They had half-pardon to the tavern the other night, but a man whispered me, 'Pr'ythee, Isaac, go in; Tom Varnish will be there, and he talks as well as any man in England.' See, when a man expresses himself well in conversation, and his falling into an account of trifles from a desire to oblige the company fulness of the circumstance itself, so that saying of it at large is occasioned only by the company; I say, in such a case it is not only pardonable, but agreeable, and makes the discourse to himself; but when we now watch for opportunities for being excessively troublesome. A man that has understanding, is to be attended to and good-nature; but he that speaks needs, has no right to such an indulgence; a man who has a defect in his speech to come to you, while a man of weak fluency of speech, triumphs in out-

The stammerer strives to be fit for you; the loquacious man endeavours to be fit for his.

Of this kind do I always enter a man's company who is recommended as one that talks well; but if I were to choose with whom I would spend my hours, they should be certainly such as farther than to make themselves rarely apprehended, and would have curiosity to understand me. To have the ability to express it, are the most necessary qualities in companions.

It is not in us fit to utter, among friends there needs but very little care in

I take it, a man one might live alone, and enjoy all the freedom and imagination, and yet be insensible of it to you, in all the mistakes you can

His great good-will to his friends in him such a general deference in that if he differs from you in his thing, he introduces his own thoughts in a feeble circumlocution; or, 'he has such and such a circumstance that is another opinion.' Again, where I am apt to say, 'this I am confident I intend to judge of this matter as well' Urbanus says, 'I am verily persuaded one may conclude.' In a word, he is more clear in his thoughts and expression, or speaks with greater diffidence. I find one man of any consideration, observe one of less consequence form him. This happens to Urbanus; but he steals from him almost every sentiment in a whole work, disguises the theft with a quite different air. Umbratilis's doubtful way of speaking proceeds from want of care and good-breeding, and not from his opinions. Umbratilis, therefore, do than repeat the thoughts of Urbanus in a doubtful manner, and appear to the undiscerning man than the person from whom he steals. At those who know him, can see the stammerer's habit; and the more he struts, the more he appears his own.

Urbanus, the medium is, neither to affect counters--to wit, lockets with the hair of dead living lovers, seals with arms, emblems, and dev out in cornelian, agate, and onyx, with cu hearts, darts, akers, flames, rocks, pickaxes, r thorns, and sun-flowers; as also a variety of i mious French mottos; together with gold ety quills, scissors, needles, thimbles, and a spo clipped in Hungary water, left but the night be by a young lady going upon a frolic in cog. Tl was also a bundle of letters, dated between years one thousand six hundred and seventy, one thousand six hundred and eighty-two, mo them signed Philander, the rest Strephon, Amy Corydon, and Adonis; together with a collectio receipts to make pastes for the hands, pomatums, anises, whipsots, beautifying creams, water of t and frog spawn water; decoctions for clearing complexion, and an improved medicine to pro abortion.

Whoever can discover the aforesaid goods, so they may be had again, shall have fifty guineas the whole, or proportionably for any part.

M.B. Her ladyship is pleased to promise pounds for the packet of letters over and above five for Philander's only, being her first love. 'H lady bestows those of Strephon to the finder, be so written, that they may serve to any woman reads them.'

P.S. As I am a patron of persons who have other friend to apply to, I cannot suppress the having complaint:

'Sir,

'I am a blackmoor boy, and have, by my la stler, been christened by the chaplain. The g man has gone further with me, and told me a g deal of good news; as, that I am as good as lady herself, as I am a Christian, and many ot things: but for all this, the parrot, who came o with me from our country, is as much esteemed her as I am. Besides this, the shock-dog ha collar that cost almost as much as mine. I de alive to know, whether, now I am a Christian, I obliged to dress like a Turk, and wear a turban.

'I am, sir,

'Your most humble servant,

'POMF'

No. 246.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 17

— Vitis nemo sine nascitur! optimus ille Qui minimus urgetur. Hor. l Sat. iii.

— We have all our vices, and the best Is he, who with the fewest is oppress. Pres

From my own Apartment, November 3.

When one considers the turn which convers tation in almost every set of acquaintance, club naturally, in this town or kingdom, one cannot observe, that in spite of what I am every day say and all the moral writers since the beginning of would have said, the subject of discourse is gener ally one another's faults. This in a great mea proceeds from self-conceit, which were to be end for one or other individual person; but the folly extends itself over almost all the species; and content only say, Tom, Jack, or Will, but in g nally that man is a cockcomb.' From this sour in, that any excellence is faintly received, any goodness unmercifully exposed. But if thi subject in a true light, and we would take tim consider, that man, in his very nature, is an im that being, our sense of this matter would be im tered; and the word imperfection would not be a kinder idea than the word humanity. The pleasant story that we, forsooth, who are the perfect creatures in the universe, are the beings that will not allow of imperfection. Nature has taken notice, that we stand in the midst of existences, and are by this one circumstance the most unhappy of all others. The brutes are guided by instinct, and know no sorrow; the angels have knowledge, and they are happy; but we are governed by opinion, which is I know not the mixture of instinct and knowledge, and are indolent nor happy. It is very observable, that critics are a people between the learned and the ignorant, and by that situation enjoy the tranquillity of neither. As critics stand among men, so they stand in general between brutes and angels. Every man, as he is a critic and a coxcomb, is proved by reason and speculation, is ever judging himself, and laying open the faults of at the same time that I am talking of the cruelty of judging people's faults with severity, I cannot help mentioning some which men are guilty of for want of attention. These are such as they can easily avoid if nobody tells them of, for which reason I make use of the penny-post (as I have written to several young ladies about turning their heads holding up their heads) to certain gentlemen I remark habitually guilty of what they commit in a moment. There is a fat fellow, who has long remarked wearing his breast in the midst of winter, out of an affection for it. I have therefore sent him just now this letter in my physical capacity.

At the twentieth instant to the first of May, this day inclusive, I beg of you to button up your coat from your collar to your waistband. I am your most humble servant,

'ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, Philomath.'

He is a very handsome well-shaped youth that frequents the coffee-houses about Charing-cross, and wears a very pretty ribbon with a cross of jewels in the middle. This being something new, and a thing which the gentleman may offend the Heretic, I have addressed myself to him as I am

TO MY COUNTRYMAN,

that ensign of honour which you wear bestowed by a prince, or a lady, that you have

If you bear it as an absent lover, please to tie it on a black ribbon; if as a rewarded soldier, you may have my license to continue the use of your faithful servant,

'BICKERSTAFF, Censor.'

Little intimations do great service, and are useful, not only to the persons themselves, but to others how to conduct themselves towards

One of this honest private method, or a plain face to face, of acquainting people with their power to explain or amend, the usual way of people is to take no notice of things you say, and nevertheless expose you for those you

Jesus and Lewis are constantly in each other's company: they would, if they took proper notice, be very agreeable companions; but they arrogantly aim at what they are unfit for, and condemn the other so much in the wrong banisholy thing; that in this circumstance of which is the most important of all others in the life, we women, who are, they say, always weak and ill-winded. The true way of valuing a man is to consider his reputation among the men. want of this necessary rule towards our conduct when it is too late, we find ourselves married to a contrast of that sex; and it is generally from this disagreeable among men, that fellows endeavour to make themselves pleasing to us. The little accomplishments of coming into a room with a fair, and telling, while they are with us, who cannot bear among ourselves, usually make up the whole of a woman's man's merit. But if we, we began to reflect upon our lovers, in the place, considered what figures they make in the street, at the bar, on the exchange, in their court or at court, we should behold them in quite another light than at present.

Woe we to behave ourselves according to rule, we should not have the just imputation of raising the silliest of mortals, to the great esteem of the wisest, who value our favour as it advances their pleasure, not their reputation. In a word, madam, if you would judge right in love, you must look upon it as in a case of friendship. Were a gentleman treating with you for any thing but yourself, when you had consented to his offer, if he off, you would call him a cheat and an impostor. There is, therefore, nothing left for you to do but to despise him, and yourself for doing it with regret.

I am madam, &c. I have heard it often argued in conversation, that this evil practice is owing to the perverted taste of the wits in the last generation. A libertine on the throne could very easily make the language and fashion turn his own way. Hence it is that woman is treated as a mistress, and not a wife. It is from the writings of those times, and the traditional accounts of the debauches of their men of pleasure, that the coxcombs now-a-days take upon them, to smooth, to be false swains, and perjured lovers. I think I feel all the woman rise in me, when I direct upon the nauseous rogues that pretend to deceive us. Wretches, that can never have it in their power to overreach any thing living but their own senses! In the name of goodness, if we are assigned by nature as suitable companions to the other sex, why are we not treated accordingly? we have merit, as some allow, why is it not as it is in men to injure us, as one another? If we are insignificant that others call us, where is the triumph in deceiving us? But, when I look at the bottom of this disaster, and recollect the many my acquaintance whom I have known in the same condition with the 'Northern Lass' that occasioned this discourse, I must own I have ever found the perfidiousness of men has been generally owing to ourselves, and we have contributed to our own ruin. The truth is, we do not conduct ourselves when we are courted, but as we are inclined. When our imaginations take this unbridled swing, we must be that acts best is most lovely, but he the most lovely acts best. When our humble servants make their addresses, we do not keep ourselves sufficiently disengaged to be judges of their merit; we seldom give our judgment of our lover, until we have lost our judgment for him.

While Clarinda was passionately attended to, she was addressed to by Strephon, who is a man of sense and knowledge in the world, and Cassio, who has a pleasant fortune, and an excellent understand-in love with Damon at a ball. From that she that was before the most reasonable of all my acquaintance, cannot hear Strakak, but it is something 'so out of the way' conversation : ' and Cassio has never since his mouth before us, but she whispers me, seldom do riches and sense go together ! ' of all this is, that for the love of Damon, she neither experience, understanding, nor she despises those advantages in the other which she finds wanting in her lover; or else she has them for no other reason but because of her lover. This, and many other instances, given in this town; but I hope this much will suffice to prevent the growth of such evils at length.

[ ] THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1710.

— Mediâ sese tulit obvia silvâ, virginis os habitumque gerens. Virg. Æn. i. 318.

! in the deep recesses of the wood before my eyes a beauteous form appears, the virgin's dress and modest looks she wears.
R. Wyna.

BY ISAAC BICKERSTAFF, ESQUIRE.

from my own Apartment, November 8.

It may perhaps appear ridiculous, but I must confess last summer, as I was riding in Enfield, I met a young lady whom I could hardly get my head, and for ought I know, my heart, to conceive. She was mounted on a palfrey, with a very commodious furniture: She set her horse with a cheerful air; and, when I saluted her with my bow, she bowed to me so obligingly that, whether it was civility or beauty that touched me so much, I do not know; but I am sure I shall never forget her. She fills in my imagination in a figure so much to my advantage, that if I were to draw a picture of her, health, beauty, or modesty, I should represent any, or all of them, in the person of that woman.

I cannot find that there are any descriptions in ancient poets so beautiful as those they draw of her in their pastoral dresses and exercises. She gives Venus the habit of a Spartan huntress, and is to put Æneas in his way, and relieve his mind with the most agreeable object imaginable. Her train are always described as inhabiting the woods, and followers of the chase. To be diverted, is the safest guard to innocence; and I think, it should be one of the first things to be attended among people of condition, to find out amusements for young ladies. I cannot but think of riding might easily be revived among them when they consider how much it must contribute to their beauty. This would lay up the best treasure they could bring into a family, a good stock of health, to transmit to their posterity. Such a bloom as this gives to the countenance, is much preferable to the real or affected feebleness, which appears in the faces of our beauties.

A comedy, called, 'The Ladies Cure,' represents the affectation of wan looks and languid glances, and an entertaining extravagance. There is, as I have seen in the play complains, something so robust in the health, that it is with her a point of delicacy to appear in public with a sickly countenance. The natural gaiety and spirit which shine and. The apothecary gave me to an herb-woman, the herb-woman to a butcher, the butcher to a brewer, and the brewer to his wife, who made a present of me to a nonconformist preacher. After this manner I made my way merrily through the world, for, as I told you before, we shillings love nothing so much as travelling. I sometimes fetched in a shoulder of mutton, sometimes a play-book, and often had the satisfaction to treat a templer at a twelve-penny ordinary, or carry him with three friends to Westminster-hall.

In the midst of this pleasant progress which I made from place to place, I was arrested by a superstitious old woman, who shut me up in a greasy rum, in pursuance of a foolish saying, "that while she kept a queen Elizabeth's shilling about her she should never be without money." I continued here prisoner for many months, until at last I was exchanged for eight-and-forty farthings.

I thus rambled from pocket to pocket until the beginning of the civil wars, when, to my shame be it spoken, I was employed in raising soldiers against the king: for, being of a very tempting breadth, a sergeant made use of me to inveigle country fellows, and list them into the service of the parliament.

As soon as he had made one man sure, his way was, to oblige him to take a shilling of a more homely game, and then practise the same trick upon another. Thus I continued doing great mischief to the crown, until my officers chancing one morning to walk abroad earlier than ordinary, sacrificed me to his pleasures, and made use of me to seduce a milk-maid. This wench bent me, and gave me to her sweetheart, applying, more properly than she intended, the usual form of, "to my love, and from my love." The ungenerous gallant marrying her within a few days after, pawned me for a dram of brandy; and drinking me out, next day I was beaten flat with a hammer, and again set a-running.

After many adventures, which it would be tedious to relate, I was sent to a young spendthrift, in company with the will of his deceased father. The young fellow, who I found was very extravagant, gave great demonstrations of joy at receiving the master's shro

I
mom fell i unde
shear my al short, leave fusion figure my he duced few th midst
thoug desper and, s fire, a we con
to me shall t mean
being ing ev
The fi
so tak pearar poem
The s I must
when I but inc me hav
a penr

No. 25
Scis
Anc
Kne

happier in my retirement than I thought, happily by that means escaped wearing a pair of breeches.

now of great credit and antiquity, I was set upon as a medal than an ordinary coin; reason a gamester laid hold of me, and me to a counter, having got together none of us for that use. We led a melan- in his possession, being busy at those rein current coin is at rest, and partaking of our master; being in a few moments a crown, a pound, or a sixpence, according to the variation in which the fortune of the cards

I had at length the good luck to see my weak, by which means I was again sent down my primitive denomination of a shilling. I pass over many other accidents of less and hasten to that fatal catastrophe when I the hands of an artist, who conveyed me round, and with an unmerciful pair of scissors off my titles, clipped my brims, retracted, rubbed me to my inmost ring; and, in spoiled and pillaged me, that he did not worth a groat. You may think what contrivance in to see myself thus curtailed and disabled. I should have been ashamed to have shown had not all my old acquaintance been reduced to the same shameful figure, excepting some were punched through the belly. In the midst of this general calamity, when every body our misfortune irretrievable, and our case, we were thrown into the furnace together, which often happens with cities rising out of a vale sared with greater beauty and lustre than ever boast of before. What has happened since this change of sex which you now see, I leave to some other opportunity to relate. In the sequel, I shall only repeat two adventures, as very extraordinary, and neither of them having happened to me above once in my life. The first was, my being in a poet's pocket, who was with the brightness and novelty of my appearance, that it gave occasion to the finest burlesque in the British language, intitled, from me, the Mad Shilling. The second adventure, which I do not omit, happened to me in the year 1703, when I was given away in charity to a blind man; and this was by mistake, the person who gave me being thrown me heedlessly into the hat among the worth of farthings.'

] TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1710.

nam justum geminâ suspendere lance in æquis libræ? Pers. Sat. iv. 10.

'st thou, with equal hand to hold the scale?
Dryden.

from my own Apartment, November 13.

I have since winter erected a court of justice for the redress of several enormities in dress and behaviour, which are not cognizable in any other courts or realm; the vintner's case, which I there still fresh in every man's memory. That court also gave a general satisfaction: I mention the more important points of the proceedings in perspective; in which, if I did not give laws and decrees according to the strictest equity and justice, I can safely say, I acted as to the best of my understanding. But as to the proceedings of that court, I shall refer you to an account of them, written by my

Did we consider that the mind of a man man himself, we should think it the most un-most of self-murder to sacrifice the sometimes and to gratify the appetites of the body. It is possible that, when the necessities of supplied, a man would flatter to be rich, or want to be powerful! When we meet a poor waged with hunger and cold, asking an almost apt to think this a state we could rather than submit to: but yet how much more does his condition, who is above necessity, a sufferer resign his reason and his integrity to p-superfluities! Both these are abject and c-degrading; but sure it is less despicable to be-gaily to a man's hunger than his vanity. But and general propensities have so far prevail an unthinking world, that those necessitous themselves, who cannot relish life without applithemselves, and equipage, are so far from macontemptible figure, that distressed virtue outworn than successful vice. But if a man usual, in cases that regard his honour, were his own soul, there would be a basis and st-marks for our conduct, and we should always rather to be, than appear honourable Collier, in his 'Essay on Fortitude,' has treat-subject with great wit and magnanimity. says he, 'can be more honourable than to ha-rage enough to execute the commands of rea-conscience? to maintain the dignity of our and the station assigned us? to be proof poverty, pain, and death itself—I mean ex-not to do any thing that is scandalous or disonal them. To stand adversity under all with decency and resolution! To do this, great above title and fortune. This argues of a heavenly extraction, and is worthy the of of the Deity.'

What a generous ambition has this man to us! When men have settled in them-conviction, by such noble precepts, that t-nothing honourable which is not accompaniinnocence; nothing mean but what has gail I say, when they have attained thus much, poverty, pain, and death, may still retain th-ness; yet riches, pleasures, and honours, will lose their charms, if they stand between us integrity.

What is here said with allusion to fortu-time may be as justly applied to wit and l-for these latter are as adventitious as the oth-as little concern the essence of the soul. Tall laudable in the man who possesses them, the just application of them. A bright imagiwhile it is subservient to an honest and nob-as a faculty which makes a man justly admi-ranked, and furnishes him with reflection his own actions which add delicates to the a good conscience; but when wit descends upon sensual pleasures, or promote the base pand ambition, it is then to be condemned in pro-its excellence. If a man will not rea-the foundation of happiness in his own is a bewildered and unhappy state, inco-ness or tranquillity. For to such a one, the splendours of valour, wit, nay of honesty its-give him but a very feeble comfort; since liable of being interrupted by any one who either understanding or good-nature to see knowledge such excellencies. This rule is so easy, that one may very safely say, it is im-to know any true relish of our being widout you in common life among the ordinary mankind, and you will find merit in every allowed only to those who are in particular or sets of company; but, since man can find pleasure in these faculties which denominate persons of distinction, let them give up empty pursuit, and think nothing essential but what is in their own power—the joy of reflecting with pleasure on their own, however they are interpreted.

so evident a truth, that it is only in our own we are to search for any thing to make us that it is, methinks, a disgrace to our nature of taking our measures from thence only, as if of fortitude. When all is well there, the shades and distinctions of life are the mere of a drama; and he will never act his part who has his thoughts more fixed upon the approval of the audience than the design of his part.

life of a man who acts with a steady intention without valuing the interpretation of his actions has but one uniform regular path to move in, he cannot meet opposition, or fear ambuscade. On other side, the least deviation from the rules our introduces a train of numberless evils, involves him in inexplicable mazes. He that strayed into guilt has bid adieu to rest; and criminal has his share of the misery expressed pathetically in the tragedian, Macbeth shall sleep no more!

was with detestation of every other grandeur the calm command of his own passions, that the great Mr. Cowley cries out with so much justice:

For ambition did my fancy cheat With any thought so mean as to be great, Continue, heaven, still from me to remove My humble blessings of that life I love!

[2.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1710.

Erratur et prisci Catonis pe mero caluise virtus. Hor. 3 Od. xxi. 11.

of old,
to's virtue, we are told, ten with a bumper glow'd and with social raptures flow'd. Francis.

From my own Apartment, November 17.

following letter, and several others to the purpose, accuse me of a rigour of which I am now being guilty, to wit, the disallowing the use of wine

From my Country house, MR. BICKERSTAFF, October 25.

ur discourse against drinking, in Tuesday's I like well enough in the main; but, in my opinion, you are become too rigid, where you this effect: "Were there only this single erration, that we are the less masters of ourselves if we drink the least proportion beyond the use of thirst." I hope no one drinks wine to his appetite. This seems to be designed for an indulgence of nature; for it were hard to say that the Author of Nature, who imposed on her her necessities and pains, does not allow her proper pleasures; and we may reckon among these the moderate use of the grape. Though I much against excess, or whatever approaches yourself; yet I conceive one may safely go rather than the bounds you there prescribe, not

Mr. Franchetto immediately drew his sword, and, holding it with the point towards his own body, presented it to the Censor. Mr. Dickersstaff received it; and, after having surveyed the breadth of the blade, and sharpness of the point, with more than ordinary attention, returned it to the foreman in a very graceful manner. The rest of the jury, upon the delivery of the sword to their foreman, drew all of them together as one man, and saluted the bench with such an air, as signified the most resigned submission to those who commanded them, and the greatest magnanimity to execute what they should command.

Mr. Dickersstaff, after having received the compliments on his right hand, cast his eye upon the left, where the whole female jury paid their respects by a low courtesy, and by laying their hands upon their mouths. Their forewoman was a professed Episcopist, and had spent much of her time in exhorting the sex to set a just value upon their persons, and to make the men know themselves.

There followed a profound silence, when at length, after some recollection, the Censor, who continued hitherto uncovered, put on his hat with great dignity; and, after having composed the brims of it in a manner suitable to the gravity of his character, he gave the following charge; which was received with silence and attention, that being the only applause which he admits of, or is ever given in his presence:

‘The nature of my office, and the solemnity of this occasion, requiring that I should open my first session with a speech, I shall cast what I have to say under two principal heads.

‘Under the first I shall endeavour to show the necessity and usefulness of this new-erected court; and under the second, I shall give a word of advice and instruction to every constituent part of it.

‘As for the first, it is well observed by Phædrus, a heathen poet:

Nisi utile est quod facimus, frustra est gloria.

‘Which is the same, ladies, as if I should say, it would be of no reputation for me to be president of a court which is of no benefit to the public.

don
he poo upo
my froi bro
be
int
my rod is t blis
‘
fir
of cog sax
the tha
not any circ big befo
‘
ord litt une gen bec plau over
to frie hav han ask
‘
whi
the shal
‘
and a most pernicious circumstance in this at the man who suffers the injury must f upon the same foot of danger with him & before he can have his just revenge; an mishment is altogether accidental, and s well upon the innocent as the guilty. I only mention a case which happens frequently among the more polite nations of the world, [the rather mention, because both sexes are in it, and which, therefore, you gentle-you ladies of the jury, will the rather of; I mean, that great and known case om. Supposing the person who has suffered in his dearer and better half; supposing this person should resent the injuries his tender wife; what is the reparation expected? Why, to be used worse than his -run through the body, and left breathless bed of honour. What then, will you on hand say, must the man do that is affected? Must our sides be elbowed, our shins Must the wall, or perhaps our mistress, ruin us? May a man knit his forehead on, toss up his arm, or pish at what we must the villain live after it? Is there no injured honour? Yes, gentlemen, that of the judicature we have here esta-of conscience, we very well know, was ted for the determining of several points /, that were too little and trivial for the of higher courts of justice. In the er, our court of honour is appointed for ation of several niceties and punctilios, to pass for wrongs in the eye of our com-

But notwithstanding no legislators of have taken into consideration these little ces, they are such as often lead to crimes for their inspection, though they come too late for their redress.

I appeal to you, ladies, (here Mr. Black-ed to his left hand) if these are not the s and thorns in life, that make it more a its most substantial evils? Confess in-did you never lose a morning's devotion could not offer them up from the highest be pew? Have you not been in pain wall, because another has been taken out before you? Do you love any of your such as those who are below you? Or, ny favourites that walk on your right a have answered me in your looks; I do.

Now to the second part of my discourse, per me to address myself in particular to five members of the court, in which I y brief

You, gentlemen and ladies, my assistants uries, I have made choice of you on my because I know you very jealous of your d you on my left, because I know you concerned for the reputation of others: reason I expect great exactness and im-your verdicts and judgments.

In the next place, address myself to you, of the council: you all know that I have you for your knowledge in the litigious law; but because you have all of you right duels, of which I have reason to be repented, as being now settled in the into of bochers. My advice to you is your pleadings you will be short and Et timide verba intus habet

Out

'And try'd his tongue, his silence :

'At about half-a-mile's distance from heard the groanings of a bear, which : as ; but, upon inquiry, we were inform our company that he was dead, and not having been killed upon that very spot night before, in the time of the frost. the same place, we were likewise and some posthumous snarls and barkings

'We at length arrived at the little ment ; and, upon entering the room, with sighs that smelt of brandy, and unsavoury sounds, that were altogether My valet, who was an Irishman, fell in rage at what he heard, that he drew his not knowing where to lay the blame, again. We were stunned with these cries but did not hear a single word until about after ; which I ascribed to the harsh sounds of that language, which wanted then ours to melt and become audible.

'After having here met with a very scene, we went to the cabin of the French make amends for their three weeks' : talking and disputing with greater raptidation than I ever heard in an assembly, nation. Their language, as I found, giving of the weather, fell asunder and was here convinced of an error into which I fell : for I fancied, that for the first second, it was necessary for it to be wrong as it were, preserved in breath : but I felt take when I heard the sound of a kit play over our heads. I asked the occasion which one of the company told me that there above a week longer ; "for," saying ourselves bereft of speech, we prevailed of the company, who had his musick about him, to play to us from morning which time we employed in dancing, in spite our chagrin, et tunc le temps."

Here Sir John gives very good philosophy as to why the kit could not be heard but, as they are something prolix, I pass in silence, and shall only observe, that his author seems, by his quotations, to be versed in the ancient poets, which gives his fancy above the ordinary pitch of his very much contributed to the embellish writings.

No. 255.] SATURDAY, NOVEMBER

— Nec te tua plurima, Panthen, Labentem pietas, nec Apollinis insu-

Virg. A

Guess course the last, the red'ning Slides off reluctant, with his meaning Dress, letters, wit, and merit, plead :
For bear he must, indignity and pain

From my own Apartment, November

'To the Censor of Great Britain

'Sir,

'I am at present under very great which it is not in the power of any one, I suff, to redress. Whether or no you sh proper case to come before your court not tell; but thus it is: I am chaplain to an honourable family, very regular at the hours of devotion, and, I hope, of an unblameable life; but for offering to rise at the second course, I found my patron and his lady very sullen and out of humour, though at first I did not know the reason of it. At length, when I happened to help myself to a jelly, the lady of the house, otherwise a devout woman, told me that it did not become a man of my cloth to delight in such frivolous food: but as I still continued to sit out the last course, I was yesterday informed by the butler that his lordship had no further occasion for my service. All which is humbly submitted to your consideration by,

'Sir, your most humble servant, &c.'

The case of this gentleman deserves pity, especially as he loves sweetmeats, to which, if I may guess by his letter, he is no enemy. In the mean time, I have often wondered at the indecency of discharging the ablest man from the table as soon as the most delicious parts of the entertainment are served up, and could never conceive a reason for so absurd a custom. Is it because a liquorish palate, or a sweet tooth, as they call it, is not consistent with the sanctity of his character? This is but a trifling pretence. No man, of the most rigid virtue, gives offence by any excesses in plum-pudding or plum-porridge, and that because they are the first parts of the dinner. Is there anything that tends to incitation in sweetmeats more than in ordinary dishes? Certainly not. Sugar-plums are a very innocent diet, and conserves of a much colder nature than your common pickles. I have sometimes thought that the ceremony of the chaplain's flying away from the dessert was typical and figurative, to mark out to the company how they ought to retire from all the luscious baits of temptation, and deny their appetites the gratifications that are most pleasing to them; or, at least, to signify that we ought to stint ourselves in our most lawful satisfactions, and not make our pleasure, but our support, the end of eating. But most certainly, if such a lesson of temperance had been necessary at a table, our clergy would have recommended it to all the laymasters of families, and not have disturbed other men's tables with such unreasonable examples of abstinence. The original, therefore, of this barbarous custom, I take to have been merely accidental. The chaplain retired, out of pure complaisance, to make room for the removal of the dishes, or possibly for arranging of the dessert. This by degrees grew to a duty, until at length, as the fashion improved, a good man found himself cut off from the third part of the entertainment; and, if the arrogance of his patron goes on, it is not impossible but, in the next generation, he may see himself reduced to the eleventh, or tenth dish of the table; a sufficient caution not to part with any privilege we are once possessed of.

It was usual for the priest in old times to feast upon the sacrifice, nay the honey-cake, while the hungry laity looked upon him with great devotion; or, as the late lord Rochester describes it, in a very lively manner,

And while the priest did eat, the people star'd.
The present custom is inverted; the laity feast, while the priest stands by as an humble spectator. This necessarily puts a good man upon making great ravages on all the dishes that stand near him; and distinguishing himself by voraciousness of appetite, knowing that his time is short. I would fain ask these stiff-necked patrons, whether they would not like it ill of a chaplain that in his grace after meat should return thanks for the whole entertainment,

'that the prosecutor was bound in his the sun shine through the criminal,' or, wards explained themselves, 'to whip the lungs.'

The Censor, knitting his brows into looking very sternly upon the jury, pause, gave them to know, 'that it erected for the finding out of penalties fences, and to restrain the outrages of tice, and that he expected they should in verdict.' The jury therefore retired, a king to comply with the advices of the an hour's conversation, delivered the follows:

'That, in consideration this was P first offence, and that there did not appe propens in it—as also that he lived in tion among his neighbours, and that h wall was only se defendendo, the prose let him escape with life, and content him slitting of his nose and the cutting off b Mr. Bickerstaff, smiling upon the court 'that he thought the punishment, even u sent mitigation, too severe; and that a might be of ill consequence in a trading therefore pronounced sentence against in the following manner: 'that his he the instrument of offence, should be for court; that the criminal should go to th from whence he came, and thence, as occ require, proceed to the Exchange, or coffee-house, in what manner he pleas neither he, nor any of the family of t should hereafter appear in the streets of of their coaches, that so the foot-way m open and undisturbed for their betters.'

Dathan, a peddling Jew, and T. R—man, were indicted by the keeper of an Westminster, for breaking the peace and ea mugs, in a dispute about the antiqui families, to the great detriment of the disturbance of the whole neighbourhood said for himself, 'that he was provoked Welshman, who pretended that the We ancienter people than the Jews; where 'I can show by this genealogy in my h am the son of Meshech, that was the son that was the son of Shalem that was the s The Welshman here interrupted him, ar 'that he could produce shennalogy as v self;' for 'that he was John ap Rice, a ap Shones.' He then turned himself to and told him in the same broken accen much warmth, 'that the Jew would ne that king Cadwallader was younger than Mr. Bickerstaff seemed very much inclin sentence against Dathan, as being a Jew ing reasons, by some expressions which t man set fall in asserting the antiquity of to suspect that the said Welshman was a l ite, he suffered the jury to go out, witho vious admonition. After some time they and gave their verdict, 'that it appeari sons at the bar did neither of them we and that consequently they had no right upon a point of honour; to prevent suc appeals for the future, they should both o tomed in the same blanket, and there adj teriority as they could agree on it betw selves.' The Censor confirmed the verdict.

Richard Newman was indicted by maj for having used the words, 'perhaps it is dispute with the said major. The major urged, the word perhaps was questioning his veracity; that it was an indirect manner of giving 'may be.' Richard Newman had nothing more to say himself, than that 'he intended no such thing!' threw himself upon the mercy of the court. The jury brought in their verdict special.

 Mr. Bickerstaff stood up, and, after having cast eyes over the whole assembly, hemmed thrice. Then acquainted them, 'that he had laid down a rule to himself, which he was resolved never to depart from, and which, as he conceived, would very much conduce to the shortening the business of the court: I mean,' says he, 'never to allow of the liberty given by construction, implication, or induction, but by the sole use of the word itself.' He then proceeded to show the great mischiefs that had arisen to the English nation from that pernicious monosyllable; that it had bred the most fatal quarrels between the dearest friends; that it had frequently misled the guards, and made great havoc in the army; that it sometimes weakened the city trained-bands; and, in a word, had destroyed many of the best men in the isle of Great Britain. For the prevention of which evils for the future, he instructed the jury to present the word itself as a nuisance in the English tongue; and further promised them, that he would, upon such their preferment, publish the verdict of the court, for the entire banishment and exclusion of it out of the discourses and conversation of all civil societies.

This is a true copy.

CHARLES LILLER.

Monday next is set apart for the trial of several male causes.

J.B. The case of the hassock will come on between the hours of nine and ten.

. 257.] THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1710.

n nova fert animus mutatas dicere formas Corpora: Dii, coëptis, nam vos mutastis et illas.

aspire meis!— Ovid. Met. i. l.

If bodies changed to various forms I sing:

O ye gods, from whom these miracles did spring, Assist me in this arduous task!—

From my own Apartment, November 29.

EVERY nation is distinguished by productions that are peculiar to it. Great Britain is particularly fruitful in religions, that shoot up and flourish in this climate more than in any other. We are so famous abroad for our great variety of sects and opinions, that an ingenious friend of mine, who is lately returned from his travels, assures me, there is now at this time carried up and down in Germany, which represents all the religions of Great Britain in wax-work. Notwithstanding that the artifice of the matter, in which the images are wrought, makes it capable of being moulded into all shapes and figures; my friend tells me, that he did think it possible for it to be twisted and tortured into so many screwed faces, and wry features, as appeared in several of the figures that composed the work. I was indeed so pleased with the design of the German artist, that I begged my friend to give me an account of it in all its particulars, which he did after the following manner.

'I have often,' says he, 'been present at a show of elephants, camels, dromedaries, and other strange creatures, but I never saw so great an assembly of talents as were met together at the opening of will, Christian names, to almost every thing I replaced the book in the hand of the I without admiring the simplicity of its garb and behaviour.

Just opposite to this row of religions, a statue dressed in a fool's coat with a cap upon his head, laughing and pointing at that stood before him. This idiot is supposed in his heart what David's fool did some thousands years ago, and was therefore designed as representative of those among us who Atheists and Infidels by others, and Freethinkers themselves.

There were many other groups of figures I did not know the meaning of; but seeing that of both sexes turning their backs to company, and laying their heads very close together I inquired after their religion, and found called themselves the Philadelphians, or Friends of Love.

In the opposite corner there sat another congregation of strange figures, open mouths as wide as they could gape, and distended by the title of the sweet singers of Israel.

I must not omit, that in this assembly there were several pieces that moved by clockwork and gave great satisfaction to the spectators. In the midst of the crowd stood one of the most beautiful figures, which, as the people were each of them the genius of the thing they attended. That behind Popery represented persecution, and the other moderation. These moved by secret springs towards a group of dead bodies that lay piled upon one another at a considerable distance behind the principal figures. There were written on the foreheads of the men, several hard words, as, Pro-Adamites, Serpents, Cameronians, Muggletonians, Brownists, Comenians, and the like. At the sound of persecution, it was so contrived, that as up her bloody flag, the whole assembly upon, like those in the "Rehearsal," started drew their swords. This was followed by clashing and noise, when, in the midst of the tumult, the figure of moderation moved gently through this new army, which, upon her holding up in her hand, inscribed "Liberty of conscience" immediately fell into a heap of carcasses, resuming the same quiet posture, in which they lay.

No. 268.] SATURDAY, DECEMBER

Occidit miseros crumbe repetita—

Juv. Sat.

The same stale viands, serv'd up o'er The stomach nauseates—

From my own Apartment, December

WHEN a man keeps a constant table, I allowed sometimes to serve up a cold dish or toss up the fragments of a feast in a room. I have sometimes, in a scarcity of provisions, been obliged to take the same kind of liberty, to entertain my reader with the leavings of a feast. I must this day have recourse to the same, and beg my guests to sit down to a kind of frugal dinner. To let the metaphor rest; I intersperse this paper with a bundle of letters, on subjects on which I have formerly treated; I ordered my bookseller to print, at the end of the letter, the minutes with which I intended the first perusal of it.

'To Isaac Bickerstaff, Esquire.

SIR,

Nov. 22, 1710.

sing yesterday with Mr. South-British and Mr. North-Briton, two gentlemen, who, before I was, were known by the name of English, and Mr. William Scott; among things, the maid of the house, who, in her I believe may have been a North-British ag-pan, brought us up a dish of North-British s. We liked our entertainment very well; we observed the table-cloth, being not so fine as could have wished, was North-British cloth. The worst of it was, we were disturbed all dinner-time by the noise of the children, who were playing in the paved court at North-British hoppers; we paid our North-Briton sooner than we desired, and took coach to North-Briton Yard, which place most of us live. We had indeed a-foot, only we were under some apprehensions North-British mist should wet a South-British to the skin.

We think this matter properly expressed, according to the accuracy of the new style, settled by you in your late papers. You will please to give opinion upon it to,

'Sir, your most humble Servants,

'J. S.

'M. P.

'N. R.'

so if this letter be conformable to the directions in the Tatler above-mentioned.

'To Isaac Bickerstaff, Esquire.

SIR,

Kent, Nov. 22, 1710.

A gentleman in my neighbourhood, who happens to be brother to a lord, though neither his nor grandfather were so, is perpetually making use of this phrase, "a person of my quality," has it in his mouth fifty times a-day, to his lazers, his servants, his children, his tenants, and neighbours. Wet or dry, at home or abroad, sick or sober, angry or pleased, it is the constant tenor of his style. Sir, as you are Censor of Great Britain, as you value the repose of a loyal subject, and the reputation of my neighbour, I beg you will take this cruel grievance into your consideration; else, for my own particular, I am resolved to give up my farms, sell my stock, and remove my wife and seven children next spring to the south or Berwick, if my strength will permit being brought into a very weak condition. I am, with great respect, sir, your most obedient and longing servant, &c.'

that this be referred to the Court of Honour.

'MR. BICKERSTAFF,

I am a young lady of a good fortune, and at present invested by several lovers, who lay close to me, and carry on their attacks with all possible diligence. I know which of them has the first claim in my own heart, but would freely cross my inclinations to make choice of the man who loves me best; which it is impossible for me to know, for them pretending to an equal passion for me. I therefore beg of you, dear Mr. Bickerstaff, lend me your Ithuriel's spear, in order to touch the troop of rivals; after which I will most faithfully return it to you again, with the greatest gratitude.

'I am, Sir, &c.'

very I. What figure doth this lady think her say for himself, but 'that he talked only in trade, and meant no hurt by what he said; jury, however, found him guilty, and repressed their forewoman, that such discourses were silly the imagination; and that, by a conceit of ideas, the word liars implied many things were not proper to be stirred up in the woman who was of the prosecutor's quality. therefore gave it as their verdict, 'that the draper should lose his tongue.' Mr. Bicker he thought the prosecutor's ears were as blame as the prisoner's tongue, and therefore sentence as follows: 'that they should both lie over-against one another in the midst of the there to remain for the space of one quarter hour, during which time the linen-draper was gagged, and the lady to hold her hands close both her ears;' which was executed accordingly.

Edward Callicot was indicted as an accessary to Charles Cambric, for that he, the said Callicot, did, by his silence and smiles, see prove and abet the said Charles Cambric thing he said. It appeared, that the prisoner foreman of the shop to the aforesaid Charles Cambric, and, by this post, obliged to smile thing that the other should be pleased to say which he was acquitted.

Joseph Shallow was indicted in the name Winifred, sole relict of Richard Dainty, etc. having said several times in company, and hearing of several persons there present, was extremely obliged to the widow Dainty, he should never be able sufficiently to express gratitude.' The prosecutor urged, that the last her reputation, and that it was in boasting of favours which he had never seen. The prisoner seemed to be much astonished construction which was put upon his words said, 'that he meant nothing by them, but widow had befriended him in a lease, and was kind to his younger sister.' The jury find a little weak in his understanding, without out of the court, brought in their verdict guilty.

Urrula Goodenough was accused by Betty Wou'dbe, for having said, that she, Betty Wou'dbe, was painted. The prisoner several persons of good credit to witness reputation, and proved, by undeniable evidence she was never at the place where the words said to have been uttered. The Censor, on the behaviour of the prosecutor, found reasonable, that she had indicted the prisoner for reason, but to make her complexion be taken of; which indeed was very fresh and beautiful therefore asked the offender, with a very steady how she could presume to spread so groundless port? and whether she saw any colours in Wou'dbe's face that could procure credit to falsehood? 'Do you see,' says he, 'any roses in her cheeks, any bloom, any prob? The prosecutor, not able to bear such length longer, told him, 'that he talked like a fool, and that she was ashamed to have on any opinion of his wisdom: but she was hence, and sentenced 'to wear her mask muffled, and not to presume to show her face the court shall be empty.'

Benjamin Bunker, esquire, was indicted for seducing the Miss Everbloom at a public house the Miss Everbloom, well for a woman of her years, and for denying the fact, and persisting rt that he looked upon it as a compliment, brought him in non compos mentis. ourt then adjourned to Monday, the eleventh vera.

CHARLES LILLIE.

1.] THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1710.

cuicumque datum est habere nasum. Mart.

ie, 'tis said, shows both our scorn and pride;
: that feature is to some deny'd. R. Wynn.

From my own Apartment, December 6.

have a very learned and elaborate dissertation umbs in Montaigne's essays, and another urs in the 'Tale of a Tub.' I am here going one upon noses, having chosen for my text owing verses out of Hudibras:

So learned Taliacotius from The brawny part of porter's bum Cut supplemental noses, which Lasted as long as parent breech;
But when the date of nock was out, Off dropp'd the sympathetic snout.

Hudibras, part i. canto i. line 281.

withstanding that there is nothing obscene in I knowledge, and that I intend to give as litence as may be to readers of a well-bred imane; I must, for my own quiet, desire the who in all things have been famous for good to refrain from the lecture of this curious

These gentlemen were formerly marked out istinguished by the little rhinocercal nose, was always looked upon as an instrument of n; and which they were used to cock, toss, or up in a contemptuous manner, upon reading rks of their ingenious contemporaries. It is erefore, for this generation of men that I he present transaction, —Minus aptus acutis ibus horum hominum—

Hor.

Unfit

the brisk petulance of modern wit: Francis.

the sake of some of my philosophical friends Royal Society who peruse discourses of this with a becoming gravity, and a desire of img by them.

ly are the opinions of learned men concerning e of that fatal distemper, which has always particular pleasure in venting its spite upon

I have seen a little burlesque poem in that gives a very pleasant account of this

The fable of it runs thus: Mars, the god having served during the siege of Naples in e of a French colonel, received a visit one rom Venus, the goddess of love, who had ways his professed mistress and admirer. The ys, she came to him in the disguise of a sutench, with a bottle of brandy under her arm. t be as it will, he managed matters so well, e went away big-bellied, and was at length t to bed of a little Cupid. This boy, whether y reason of any bad food that his father had uring the siege, or of any particular maligthe stars that reigned at his nativity, came in-world with a very sickly look, and crazy conn. As soon as he was able to handle his bow de discoveries of a most perverse disposition. ped all his arrows in poison that rotted every hey touched; and, what was more particular, all his shafts at the nose, quite contrary to bible medicines of doctors useful in their generation, though much below the character of the renowned Talmacotins. But, upon a nice calculation of the successes of such adepts, I find their labours tend mostly to the enriching only one sort of men, that is to say, the society of upholders. From this observation, and many others which occur to me when I am numbering the good people of Great Britain, I cannot but favour any proposal which tends to repairing the losses we sustain by eminent cures. The best I have met with in this kind, has been offered to my consideration, and recommended, in a letter subscribed Thomas Clement. The title to his printed articles runs thus: 'By the profitable society at the Wheat-sheaf, over against Tom's coffee-house, in Russell-street, Covent-Garden, new proposals for promoting a contribution towards raising two hundred and fifty pounds, to be made on the baptizing of any infant born in wedlock.' The plan is laid with such proper regulations, as serve, to such as fall in with it for the sake of their posterity, all the uses, without any of the inconveniencies of settlements. By this means, such whose fortunes depend upon their own industry or personal qualifications, need not be deterred, by fear of poverty, from that state which nature and reason prescribe to us, as the fountain of the greatest happiness in human life. The Censors of Rome had power vested in them to lay taxes on the unmarried; and I think I cannot show my impartiality better, than in inquiring into the extravagant privileges my brother bachelors enjoy, and fining them accordingly. I shall not allow a single life in one sex to be reproached, and held in esteem in the other. It would not, methinks, be amiss, if an old bachelor, who lives in contempt of matrimony, were obliged to give a portion to an old maid who is willing to enter into it. At the same time I must allow, that those who can plead courtship, and were unjustly rejected, shall not be liable to the pains and penalties of celibacy. But such as pretend an aversion to the whole sex, because they were ill-treated by a particular female, and cover their sense of disappointment in women under a contempt of their favour, shall be proceeded against as bachelors convict. I am not with-

the or m not s

It
of a retai their useft Wer
know want appe cient used to de duce laid
nion crim delici
when they facto boun ther zard suspe
their ing t dent all t men netis of m
the here mucl whol
and life-t

I was going on in the consideration of this good which Mr. Clement proposes to do his country, I received the following letter, which seems to be moved by a like modest and public spirit, that makes me also in its design of obliging mankind:

MR. HICKERSTAFF,

I have the royal lottery for a million and a half, I have the good fortune of obtaining a prize. From before the drawing I had devoted a fifth of whatever I might arise to me for charitable uses. Accordingly, I have troubled you with my request and commission of placing half-a-dozen youths with Mr. More, wig-master, in Castle-street, to whom, it is said, we have all the fine devices, flourishes, and the comings of all the plates, for the drawing and paying skits. Be pleased, therefore, good sir, to find me leisure for complying therewith, for I would appear concerned in this small matter.

'I am very much,

'Your humble servant, &c.'

It is no small pleasure to observe that, in the midst of every degenerate age, there are still spirits which preserve their natural dignity, and pursue the good of fellow-creatures: some in making themselves useful by professed service, some by secret generosity.

I am at liberty to discover even all the good of many men living at this time, there would be nothing but a suitable historian, to make them as illustrious as any of the noblest of the ancients, the Greeks or Romans. The cunning some have to do handsome and worthy actions, the address men services, and escape their notice, has produced so many surprising incidents, which have been before me during my censorship, as, in the opinion of posterity, would absolve this age of all its faults and follies. I know no way to deal with such minds as these, but by assuring them that, if they cease to do good, I shall tell all the good they have done already. Let, therefore, the benefactors to the youths above-mentioned continue such as, upon pain of being publicly praised. But there is no probability of his running into that hazard for a strong habit of virtue can make men shun the receiving the acknowledgments due to merit, until they are out of a capacity of receiving them. I am so very much charmed with success of this kind, that I have made a collection of memorable handsome things done by private persons in my time. As a specimen of my manner of such actions, take the following fragment, out of a more, which is written in my year-book, on a remarkable will of a gentleman, whom I shall call Celamico.

It is today died that plain and excellent man, my honoured friend, Celamico, who bequeathed his estate to a gentleman no way related to him, whom he had given no such expectation in his lifetime.

He was a person of a very enlarged soul, and that the nearest relation among men to be the resonance of their minds and sentiments. He was mistaken in the worth of his successor, who received the news of his unexpected good fortune with that showed him less moved with the benefit than the loss of the benefactor.

ADVERTISEMENT.

Notice is hereby given, that on Monday, the 14th instant, the case of the visit comes on, before the hours of ten and eleven, at the Court of King's Bench; where both persons are to attend, the matter is not being to be understood as a visit, and

No. 263.] THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1710.

Minima contenes nocte Britannos.

Juv. Sat. ii. 161.

Britons contented with the shortest night.

From my own Apartment, December 13.

AN old friend of mine being lately come to town, I went to see him on Tuesday last about eight o'clock in the evening, with a design to sit with him an hour or two, and talk over old stories; but, upon enquiry after him, I found he was gone to bed. The next morning, as soon as I was up and dressed, and had despatched a little business, I came again to my friend's house about eleven o'clock, with a design to renew my visit; but upon asking for him, his servant told me he was just sat down to dinner. In short, I found that my old-fashioned friend religiously adhered to the example of his forefathers, and observed the same hours that had been kept in the family ever since the conquest.

It is very plain, that the night was much longer formerly in this island than it is at present. By the night, I mean that portion of time which nature has thrown into darkness, and which the wisdom of mankind had formerly dedicated to rest and silence. This used to begin at eight o'clock in the evening, and conclude at six in the morning. The curfew, or eight o'clock bell, was the signal throughout the nation for putting out their candles and going to bed.

Our grandmothers, though they were wont to sit up the last in the family, were all of them fast asleep at the same hours that their daughters are busy at crimp and basset. Modern statesmen are concerting schemes, and engaged in the depth of politics, at the time when their forefathers were laid down quietly to rest, and had nothing in their heads but dreams. As we have thus thrown business and pleasure into the hours of rest, and by that means made the natural night but half as long as it should be, we are forced to piece it out with a great part of the morning; so that near two-thirds of the nation lie fast asleep for

are at when business father plants afraid congr in th memo o'clock
I b
in th forth, croac far up of se his h into is no lost i
and upon the sa memo
been
from in co and t distan
have child
This
thers, at pr verted polite candl morn and d health possil into s whole perse

early as he did formerly; and whether the agins to crow at his usual hour. My friend wered me, 'that his poultry are as regular as nd that all the birds and beasts of his neigh- od keep the same hours that they have ob- in the memory of man; and the same which, robability, they have kept for these five thou- ars.'

ou will see the innovations that have been among us in this particular, you may only look e hours of colleges, where they still dine at , and sup at six, which were doubtless the hours whole nation at the time when those places ounded. But at present, the courts of justice arce opened in Westminster-hall at the time William Rufus used to go to dinner in it. All as is driven forward. The landmarks of our a, if I may so call them, are removed, and d further up into the day; insomuch, that I am our clergy will be obliged, if they expect full regations, not to look anymore upon ten o'clock e morning as a canonical hour. In my own ory, the dinner has crept by degrees from twelve ck to three, and where it will fix nobody knows. have sometimes thought to draw up a memorial e behalf of Supper against Dinner—setting , that the said Dinner has made several en- chments upon the said Supper, and entered very pon his frontiers; that he has banished him out veral families, and in all has driven him from ead-quarters, and forced him to make his retreat e hours of midnight; and, in short, that he w in danger of being entirely confounded and in a breakfast. Those who have read Lucian, een the complaints of the letter T against S, account of many injuries and usurpations of ame nature, will not, I believe, think such a orial forced and unnatural. If dinner has thus postponed, or, if you please, kept back time to time, you may be sure that it has been mpliance with the other business of the day, hat supper has still observed a proportionable ice. There is a venerable proverb, which we all of us heard in our infancy, of 'putting the ren to-bed, and laying the goose to the fire.' as one of the jocular sayings of our forefa-, but may be properly used in the literal sense resent. Who would not wonder at this per- d relish of those who are reckoned the most e part of mankind, that prefer sea-coals and les to the sun, and exchange so many cheerful ing hours, for the pleasures of midnight revels ebauches? If a man was only to consult his h, he would choose to live his whole time, if ble, in daylight; and to retire out of the world silence and sleep, while the raw damps and un- esome vapours fly abroad, without a sun to dis-, moderate, or controul them. For my own I value an hour in the morning as much as non libertines do an hour at midnight. When d myself awaked into being, and perceive my enewed within me, and at the same time see the e face of nature recovered out of the dark un- ortable state in which it lay for several hours, eart overflows with such secret sentiments of nd gratitude, as are a kind of implicit praise to great Author of Nature. The mind, in these seasons of the day, is so refreshed in all its ties, and borne up with such new supplies of al spirits, that she finds herself in a state of h, especially when she is entertained with the h of flowers, the melody of birds, the dewa that he exceeds that time, it shall be lawful for any of the company to look upon the watch, or to call him down to order.

Provided, however, that if any one can make appear he is turned of threescore, he may take two or, if he pleases, three rounds of the watch without giving offence. Provided, also, that this rule be not construed to extend to the fair sex, who shall be at liberty to talk by the ordinary watch that is now in use. I would likewise earnestly recommend this little automaton, which may be easily carried in the pocket without any incumbrance, to all such as are troubled with this infirmity of speech—that upon pulling out their watches, they may have frequent occasion to consider what they are doing, and by this means cut the thread of the story short, and hurry to a conclusion. I shall only add, that this watch with a paper of directions how to use it, is sold at Charles Lillie's.

I am afraid a Tatler will be thought a very improper paper to censure this humour of being talkative; but I would have my readers know, that there is a great difference between tattle and loquacity, as I shall show at large in a following lucubration; it being my design to throw away a candle upon that subject, in order to explain the whole art of tattling in all its branches and subdivisions.

No. 265.] TUESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1710

Arbiter hic igitur factus de lite jocosa.

Ovid. Met. iii. 331.

——— Him therefore they create

The sov'reign umpire of their droll debate.

Continuation of the Journal of the Court of Honour, &c.

As soon as the court was sat, the ladies of the bench presented, according to order, a table of all the laws now in force relating to visits and visiting days, methodically digested under their respective heads, which the Censor ordered to be laid upon the table, and afterwards proceeded upon the business of the day.

Henry Headless, esquire, was indicted by colonel Touchy, of her majesty's trained-bands, upon an ac-

; and that every touch of it, with anything made in the fashion of a cane, was to be interpreted as a violation of the person's honour in that part, and a violation of the person's honour who received it. Mr. Heedless replied, 'that what he had done was out of kindness to the prosecutor, as not thinking it proper for him to appear at the head of the trained-bands with a feather upon his forehead;' and further added, 'that the stick he had in use of on this occasion was so very small, that the prosecutor could not have felt it had he broken it on his shoulders.' The censor hereupon directed the jury to examine into the nature of the staff, for a great deal would depend upon that particular. On which he explained to them the different degrees of offence that might be given by the touch of a holly-tree from that of cane, and by the touch of cane from that of a plain hazel stick. The jury, after a short perusal of the staff, declared their opinion by the mouth of their foreman, 'that the substance of the staff was British oak.' The censor then observed; that there was some dust on the skirts of the criminal's coat, ordered the prosecutor to beat it off with the aforesaid oaken plant; 'and thus,' said the censor, 'I shall decide this cause by the law of retaliation. If Mr. Heedless did the colonel a good office, the colonel will by this means return it in kind; if Mr. Heedless should at any time boast that he had cudgelled the colonel, or laid his staff over his shoulders, the colonel might boast, in his turn, that he had brushed Mr. Heedless's jacket, or, to use the phrase of an ingenious author, that he has rubbed it down with an oaken towel.'

Benjamin Busy, of London, merchant, was indicted by Jasper Tattle, esquire, for having pulled out his watch, and looked upon it thrice while the said esquire Tattle was giving him an account of the funeral of the said esquire Tattle's first wife. The prisoner alleged in his defence, that he was going to buy clocks at the time when he met the prosecutor; and that, during the story of the prosecutor, the said clocks rose above two per cent. to the great detriment of the prisoner. The prisoner further brought several witnesses to prove that the said Jasper Tattle, esquire, was a most notorious story-teller; that, before he met the prisoner, he had hindered one of the prisoner's acquaintances from the pursuit of his lawful business, with the account of his second marriage; that he had detained another by the button of his coat that very morning, until he had heard several sayings and contrivances of the prosecutor's eldest son, who was a boy about five years of age. On the whole matter, Mr. Bickerstaff dismissed the prosecution as frivolous, and sentenced the prosecutor to pay damages to the prisoner, for what the prisoner lost by giving him so long and patient a hearing. The judge further reprimanded the prosecutor very severely, and told him 'that if he proceeded in his usual manner to interrupt the business of mankind, he had set a fine upon him for every quarter of an hour's impertinence, and regulate the said fine according as the time of the person so injured should be more or less precious.'

For Paul Swash, knight, was indicted by Peter Double, gentleman, for not returning the bow which he received of the said Peter Double, on Wednesday sixteenth instant, at the playhouse in the Hay-market.

The prisoner denied the receipt of any such bow, and alleged in his defence, that, the prosecutor had oftentimes look full in his face, but that when he looked to the said prosecutor, he would take notice of it, or bow to somebody else that sat quite on the other side of him. He likewise alleged that severe-you believe it, Isaac, was now reading a romance with spectacles on. The first compliments over, as she was industriously endeavouring to enter upon conversation, a violent fit of coughing seized her. This awaked Shock, and in a trice the whole room was in an uproar; for the dog barked, the squirrel squealed, the monkey chattered, the parrot screamed, and Ursula, to appease them, was more clamorous than all the rest. You, Isaac, who know how any harsh noise affects my head, may guess what I suffered from the hideous din of these discordant sounds. At length all was appeased, and quiet restored: a chair was drawn for me; where I was no sooner seated, but the parrot fixed his horny beak, as sharp as a pair of sheers, in one of my heels, just above the shoe. I sprung from the place with an unusual agility, and so, being within the monkey's reach, he snatches off my new bob-wig, and throws it upon two apples that were roasting by a sullen sea-coal fire. I was nimble enough to save it from any further damage than singing the fore-top. I put it on; and composing myself as well as I could, I drew my chair towards the other side of the chimney. The good lady, as soon as she had recovered breath, employed it in making a thousand apologies, and, with great eloquence, and a numerous train of words, lamented my misfortune. In the middle of her harangue, I felt something scratching near my knee, and feeling what it should be, found the squirrel had got into my coat pocket. As I endeavoured to remove him from his burrow, he made his teeth meet through the fleshy part of my fore-finger. This gave me inexpressible pain. The Hungary water was immediately brought to bathe it, and gold-beater's skin applied to stop the blood. The lady renewed her excuses; but being now out of all patience, I abruptly took my leave, and hobbling down with needless haste, I set my foot full in a pail of water, and down we came to the bottom together.' Here my friend concluded his narrative, and, with a composed countenance, I began to make him compliments of condolence; but he started from his chair, and said, 'Isaac, you may spare your speeches, I expect no reply. When I told you this, I knew you would laugh at me; but of several orders in the Romish church to shut themselves up at a certain time of the year, not only the world in general, but from the members of their own fraternity; and to pass away several days of themselves in settling accounts between their consciences and their own souls, in cancelling unrepented sins, and renewing their contracts of obedience for the future. Such stated times for particular devotion, or the exercise of certain religious duties, have been enjoined in all civil governments, wherever deity they worshipped, or whatever religion they professed. That which may be done at times, is often totally neglected and forgotten, and is fixed and determined to some time more than once; and therefore, though several duties may be suitable to every day of our lives, they are mostly to be performed, if some days are more particularly set apart for the practice of them. Our church has accordingly instituted several seasons of devotion, when time, custom, prescription, and, if I so say, the fashion itself, call upon a man to be serious, and attentive to the great end of his being. I have hinted in some former papers, that the best and wisest of men in all ages and countries, particularly in Rome and Greece, were renowned for piety and virtue. It is now my intention to shew, how those in our own nation that have been unquestionably the most eminent for learning and industry were likewise the most eminent for their reverence to the religion of their country.

It might produce very shining examples from among the clergy; but because priestcraft is the common sin of every cavilling, empty scribbler, I shall show all the laymen who have exerted a more than ordinary genius in their writings, and were the glory of their times, were men whose hopes were filled with immortality and the prospect of future rewards, and men who lived in a dutiful submission to the doctrines of revealed religion.

I shall, in this paper, only instance sir Francis Bacon, a man who, for greatness of genius, and vastness of knowledge, did honour to his age and country; I could almost say to human nature itself. He possessed at once all those extraordinary talents, which were divided amongst the greatest authors of antiquity. He had the sound, distinct, comprehensive knowledge of Aristotle, with all the beautiful expressions, graces, and embellishments of Cicero. One does not know which to admire most in his writings; the strength of reason, force of style, or brightness of imagination.

His author has remarked in several parts of his works, that a thorough insight into philosophy makes a true believer, and that a smattering in it naturally produces such a race of despicable infidels as the profligate writers of the present age, whom, I confess, I have always accused to myself, not so much for their want of faith, as their want of reasoning.

He was infinitely pleased to find, among the works of his extraordinary man, a prayer of his own composing, which, for the elevation of thought and greatness of expression, seems rather the devotion of an angel than a man. His principal fault was to have been the excess of that virtue which produces a multitude of faults. This betrayed him to treat an indulgence towards his servants, who made a corrupt use of it, that it stripped him of all his riches and honours which a long series of misdeeds had heaped upon him. But in this prayer, at the same time that we find him prostrating himself before the great mercy-seat, and humbled under af-tedious harangues and dissertations which I utter in private circles, to the 'breaking honest tradesmen, the seducing of several citizens, the making of numberless males and to the great detriment and disquiet of josty's subjects.'

I do heartily concur with my ingenious fr the above-mentioned coffee-house in these proposals: and, because I apprehend there means to put an immediate stop to the grievous plained of, it is my intention, that, until such the aforesaid pulpits can be erected, every place himself within the bar, and from thence whatsoever he shall think necessary for the good.

And further, because I am very desir proper ways and means should be found out suppressing of story-tellers and fine talkers ordinary conversations whatsoever, I do insist every private club, company, or meeting over the, there be always an elbow-chair placed a ble; and that as soon as any one begins a le or extends his discourse beyond the space minute, he be forthwith thrust into the said chair, unless upon any of the company's call 'to the chair,' he breaks off abruptly, and 'tongue.

There are two species of men, notwithstanding thing that has been here said, whom I would from the disgrace of the elbow-chair. The these buffoons that have a talent of mimic speech and behaviour of other persons, and all their patrons, friends, and acquaintance, dicula. I look upon your pantomime as a l a man, or at least to be, like Virgil's monster a hundred mouths and as many tongues.'

— Lingua centum sunt, oraque cent
And, therefore, would give him as much time in, as would be allowed to the whole body of he represents, were they actually in the c which they divert by proxy. Provided, h that the said pantomime do not, upon any l whatsoever, utter any thing in his own p opinion, language, or character.

I would likewise, in the second place, g exemption from the elbow-chair to any per treats the company, and by that means be s to pay for his audience. A guest cannot ta if he be not allowed to talk in his turn by who puts his mouth to a better employm stops it with good beef and mutton. In this guest is very agreeably silenced, and seems his tongue under that kind of bribery which cients called bee in lingua.

If I can once extirpate the race of solid stantial handrums, I hope, by my whole repeated advices, quickly to reduce the insi tittle-tattles, and matter-of-fact-men, that at every quarter of this great city.

Epictetus, in his little system of morali scribes the following rule with that beauti plicity which shines through all his precept ware that thou never tell thy dreams in ce for, notwithstanding thou mayest take a pl telling thy dreams, the company will take sure in hearing them.'

This rule is conformable to a maxim whic laid down in a late paper, and must always i into those of my readers who find in them inclination to be very talkative and jump 'that they should not speak to please the but those that hear them.'

as been often observed by witty essay writers; the deepest waters are always the most silent; empty vessels make the greatest sound; and the cymbals the worst music. The marquis of x, in his admirable 'Advice to a Daughter,' says, 'that good-sense has always something in it:' but as sullenness does not imply at all an ill-natured silence, I wish his lordship given a softer name to it. Since I am engaged in quotations, I must not omit the satire Horace has written against this impertinent idle companion; and which, I think, is fuller of humour than any other satire he has written. A great author, who had the nicest taste of condition, and was himself a most agreeable companion, had so strong an antipathy to a great talker, he was afraid some time or other it would be done to him; as he has very humorously described his conversation with an impertinent fellow, who is like to have been the death of him.

perpellandi locus hic erat! Est tibi mater, gnati, quies te salvo est opus? Haud mihi quisquam.

anes composui. Felices! nunc ego resto; office; namque instat fatum mihi triste, Sabel iod puero cecinit divina motâ anus urnâ. unc neque dira venena, nec hosticus auferit ensis, ec laterum dolor, aut tussis, nec tarda podagra. urulus hunc quando consumet cunque; loquaces sapiat, vitet, simul atque adoleverit ætas.

Hor. l Sat. ix. 20.

ave you no mother, sister, friends, whose welfare on your health depends?—

Not one; I saw them all by turns securely settled in their urns.'

Once happy they, secure from pain!

And I thy victim now remain;

Watch me; for my goody nurse has presaged this heavy curse.

conn'd it by the sieva and shears, now it falls upon my ears——

For poison fell with ruin stor'd, horrid point of hostile sword, pleurisy, nor asthma-cough, cripple-gout shall cut him off;

His tongue and babbling breath shall tease, and talk my child to death.

him avoid, as he would hanging,

For folks long-winded in haranguing.'

Francis.

19.] THURSDAY, DECEMBER, 28, 1710.

———Hæ nugæ seria ducunt

In mala——— Hor. Ars. Poet. 451.

———Trifles such as these

To serious mischiefs lead. Francis.

From my own Apartment, December 27.

AND my correspondents are universally offended at me for taking notice so seldom of their letters, and I fear people have taken the advantage of silence to go on in their errors; for which I shall hereafter be more careful to answer useful questions and just complaints, as soon as come to my hands. The two following epistles are to very great mischiefs in the most important parts of life—love, and friendship:

'MR. BICKERSTAFF, Dorsetshire, Dec. 20.
It is my misfortune to be enamoured of a lady, who is neither very beautiful, very witty, nor at all

“ You have up and down in your mouths, and I have justly remarked, that it is not this or the fashion or quality among men, that gives us esteem, but the well or ill behaving of these characters. It is, therefore, with concern, that I behold in coffee-house places my brethren; the tradesmen of all off the smooth, even, and ancient decorating citizens; for a fantastical dress and proper for their persons and characters, destruction of that order and distinction right ought to be between St. James's and the Camp and Cheapside.

“ I have given myself some time to distinguishing the frays in a lot of mauling up a regiment of thread laces, or mauling on pieces of sagathy or Scotch p outside a man to a hood hat or sword, a with ribbands; or an embroidered coat. say, this enormity proceeds from a sort in the brain, which makes it break out the head, and, for want of timely remedy the left thigh, and from thence, in little windings, run over the whole body, as pretty ornaments on the buttons, button terings, sides of the breeches, and the I the favour of you to give us a discourse the subject of habits, which will contril better government of conversation among particular oblige, Sir, your affectionate

“ FELIX TRA

“ To Isaac Bickerstaff, Esq., Censor of Gr

“ The humble Petition of Ralph Nab, E of Hats, and many other poor Suffis same Trade;

“ SKEWETH,

“ That for some years last past the use silver galloon upon hats has been almost being undistinguishably worn by soldier lords, footmen, beaux, sportsmen, trad prigs, smarta, cullies, pretty fellows, and

“ That the said use and custom has been very prejudicial to your petitioners. For it has induced men, to the great damage tizens, to wear their hats upon their which means the said hats last much lo than they would do if worn under their econdly, in that very often a new dressing lace supply the place of a new hat, which we are chiefly sensible of in the spring the company is leaving the town; it so commonly, that a hat shall frequent, all finest and best assemblies without any o all, and in May shall be tricked up with ver, to keep company with rustics, and rain. All which premises your petition pray you to take into your consideration to appoint a day in your Court of Honor pretend to the galloon may enter ti and have them approved or rejected, o each other relief as to your great wisdom meet.

And your peti

Order my friend near Temple-bar, t the hunting-cock, to assist the court wh tion is read, of which Mr. Lillie to give

“ To Isaac Bickerstaff, Esq., Censor of G

“ The humble Petition of Elizabeth Slend

“ SKEWETH,

That on the twentieth of this instant end, Rebecca Hive, and your petitioner, walking the Strand, saw a gentleman before us in whose periwig was so long, and so much powdered, that your petitioner took notice of it, and she wondered that lawyer would so spoil his gown with powder." To which it was answered that he was no lawyer, but a clergyman." Upon the offer of a pot of coffee we overtook him, and your petitioner was soon convinced she had lost. Your petitioner therefore desires your worship to present the clergymen before you, and to settle a standard length of canonical periwigs, and a quantity of powder to be made use of in them, and give such other directions as you shall think fit. 'And your petitioner, &c. queries, whether this gentleman be not chaplain to a regiment, and, in such case, allow powder accordingly.

After all that can be thought on these subjects, I must confess, that the men who dress with a certain ostentation to appear more than they are, are more excusable than those who betray, in the adorning of their persons, a secret vanity and inclination to shine in things wherein, if they did succeed, would rather lessen than advance their character. For this reason I am more provoked at the allegations relating to the clergyman, than any other mentioned in these complaints. I have indeed a long acquaintance, with much concern, observed abundance of pretty fellows in sacred orders, and shall in due time let them know, that I pretend to give ecclesiastical as well as civil censures. A man well-bred and well-dressed in that habit, adds to the sacredness of his function an agreeableness not to be met with among the laity. I own I have spent some evenings among these men of wit of that profession with an inexpressible delight. Their habitual care of their character is such a chastisement to their fancy, that much they utter in company is as much above what we meet with in other conversation, as the character of modest, are superior to those of a light, woman. We therefore earnestly desire our young missionaries in the universities to consider where they are, and how they dress, and look, and move, like young officers. It is no disadvantage to have a very handsome woman; but, were I to preach repentance to a galled lady, I would, methinks, keep my gloves on. I have an unfeigned affection to the class of mankind pointed to serve at the altar, therefore am in danger of running out of my way, and growing too tedious on this occasion; for which reason I shall close with the following epistle, which, by my interest from Trot, the penny-post, I procured a copy of:

'To the Rev. Mr. Ralph Incense, Chaplain to the countess dowager of Brompton.

'SIR,

'I heard and saw you preach last Sunday. I am an ignorant young woman, and understood not but what you said; but ah! your manner, when you held your hands towards our pew! Did you design to vote me to heaven or yourself? Your humble servant,

'PENITENCE GENTLE.

No. 271.] TUESDAY, JANUARY 2, 1710

The printer having informed me, that there are as many of these papers printed as will make four volumes, I am now concerned in this matter, and have the world under the c

